Proceedings in PARLIAMENT againſt James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, upon an Impeachment for High-Treaſon, Febr. 9. 1715. 2 GEO. I.

THE above-named Lords having excited a Rebellion, and levied War againſt his Majeſty, and being taken Priſoners, whilſt in actual Hoſtilities, the Parliament at that time ſitting, it was moved in the Houſe of Commons, January 9. that they ſhould not be left to the ordinary method of Proſecutions, but be proceeded againſt by way of Impeachment: Upon which Occaſion Mr. Lechmere ſpake as follows,

After the general Aſſurances this Houſe has given to his Majeſty, one Moment ought not to be loſt without taking ſome effectual Step towards making them good. The firſt and great Concern is to put an End to this Rebellion, not only to quiet the preſent Commotions, but to extinguiſh the very poſſibility of their being renewed: For theſe Ends every Gentleman will agree to ſtrengthen the Hands of the King, in ſuch manner as will enable him ſpeedily and effectually to complete this Work: You will do this with abſolute Cheerfulneſs, from the certain Knowledge and Experience we have had of the Wiſdom and Juſtice of his Majeſty, who will make no other Uſe of any Confidence his Parliament ſhall repoſe in him, than to promote the common Welfare of his People; and whatever extraordinary Aſſiſtance the preſent Juncture of Affairs ſhall require, will be continu'd no longer than the publick Neceſſity calls for. The next uſeful and neceſſary Step is the National Juſtice, which is incumbent on this Houſe, in Duty to the King, as well as in Juſtice to the People; and as ungrateful and diſagreeable a Part as this muſt be, yet when the Deſign of the Enemy is become ſo deſperate and ſo avowed, as to ſtrike at the Crown upon the King's Head, and to involve the Nation in the Calamities of a Civil War, the Houſe cannot exert themſelves too early, nor with too much Vigour; and as the Houſe ſhall acquit themſelves on this Occaſion, I dare promiſe my ſelf the Effect will be anſwerable. The Spirit which ſhall be ſhewn in this Inſtance, will animate the Friends of the Government both at Home and Abroad; and the Terror it muſt ſtrike on our Enemies, will be equal at leaſt, and contribute as much to the Common Safety, as any other Preparation that has or can be made. I wiſh I could ſay or think that this Rebellion is the Project of thoſe only, who appear to head it; or that it is the Reſult of the weak or raſh Counſels of thoſe who publickly avow it; I wiſh I could ſay, that it is the Work of Papiſts only, or of thoſe few Proteſtants, who are wicked or weak enough openly to join in it. I wiſh I could ſay, that it was a Plot but of Yeſterday, and that it has taken no deeper Root, than ordinary Appearance will lead to ſuſpect: But I think it plain, that it is the Effect of many Years Labour, of the joint and united Labour of great Numbers both Proteſtants and Papiſts, the plain and neceſſary Conſequence of the Meaſures which have been carrying on for ſome Years laſt: To frame a right Judgment of the Nature of this Rebellion, I think it neceſſary for us to look back and conſider, the natural Tendency of the Publick Proceedings of late Years, and the Connection they bear with the preſent unfortunate State of Things; when Men in ſacred Functions ſuffer'd themſelves to become State Inſtruments, and the great Merit of ſuch Men was under the Pretence of aſſerting the Doctrines of the Church of England, to condemn the Revolution, I could never underſtand any other Deſign or Tendency from thoſe Practices, than to undermine the Foundation of the Proteſtant Succeſſion. I remember 'twas ſaid upon a very ſolemn Occaſion, by a very honourable Gentleman, That the condemning the late happy Revolution, could have no other Meaning than to make Way for another. However wicked and dangerous theſe Practices were, they made too great an Impreſſion, and contributed a great deal to the preſent Calamity; for as the Deſigns of the Enemy grew more avow'd, State Principles of another Kind were advanc'd, which ſtill conduced to the ſame End. 'Twas well known what Induſtry was uſed to inculcate the Notions of Hereditary Right to the Crown, in Oppoſition to the Settlement which had been made of it in the Houſe of Hanover by the Authority of Parliament, and with no other View than to weaken that Settlement: Every one remembers what extraordinary Pains were taken to poiſon the People with this dangerous Notion; and that thoſe who made the beſt Court to Men in Power, were ſuch who eſpouſed this Opinion in the moſt notorious manner. I cannot forget with what Tenderneſs a certain Divine * of the Church of England was treated below Stairs, whilſt under Proſecution, for the moſt impudent [a] Libel that ever was publiſhed againſt any Government, that had either Will or Power to maintain it ſelf. I think the Puniſhment that was inflicted on that Gentleman light enough, but I cannot avoid taking Notice of a remarkable Paſſage, which then alarm'd every thinking Man, and will, one time or other, deſerve the Conſideration of this Houſe, viz. The Order from the Government, counterſign'd by a Secretary of State, to the Judges of the Queen's-Bench, after the Judgment paſs'd, to ſuperſede the ignominious Part of the Puniſhment, by Reaſon of the Sacred Function of the Criminal: By which the moſt unexampled and dangerous Diſtinction was introduced; and which Proceeding could bear no other Conſtruction, than as a Licenſe and Protection, even from the Government, to Men in Holy Orders, to propagate that deſtructive Poſition with Impunity; and the Character of the Perſon, which ought in Juſtice to have aggravated his Guilt and heightned the Puniſhment, became his Indemnity againſt the Reproach of it, even by the Authority of the Government it ſelf. I remember very well in what Manner every Thing of that Nature was treated in Weſtminſter-Hall; what Severities were exerciſed againſt thoſe Perſons who had Courage enough to aſſert the Intereſt of their Country, and of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, at the ſame Time that the Patrons of Hereditary Right enjoy'd all Indulgences. I mention theſe Things on no Uncertainties, having been an Eye-witneſs of them my ſelf, and it having fallen to my Share to bear ſome Part in them: This was one of the moſt ſucceſsful Parts of the Scheme of thoſe who had fix'd their Eyes on the Pretender: The Houſe need not be told how far it has operated, to the Prejudice of the Proteſtant Succeſſion. I could give many other Inſtances of this Kind, all which promoted the ſame End: The groſs Diſtinctions that were coin'd to elude the Oaths that had been made for the Security of the Government: The Endeavours that were uſed to poſſeſs the People with falſe Fears of the Danger of the Church; and the little Care that was taken, to ſay no worſe of it, to inſtill into the Youth of the Kingdom, ſuch Principles as were conſiſtent with the true Intereſt either of Church or State. I look upon theſe Things to be the Foundation of the Scheme that is now, by this Rebellion, carrying on into Execution; and I own that in this Reſpect the Authors of it were wiſe in their Generation, for by theſe Arts the very Principle on which the Proteſtant Succeſſion is founded, was ſhaken; and tho' the Methods of doing it were baſe and vile, yet the Diſſatisfaction and Uneaſineſs that was created by them in the Minds of the People, made Way for the Change that was deſired. I muſt crave leave to put you in Mind of other Parts of this Scheme that were carrying on at the ſame Time. The Enemies to the preſent Government judging aright for their own Purpoſe, by all Methods to attack the Conſciences of the People, as to the Legality and Juſtice of the Settlement of the Crown in the Houſe of Hanover, thought it neceſſary at the ſame time to diſable, as far as they could, thoſe Perſons who had been moſt remarkable for their Services in the Support of it: The great Effort was made at that great [b] Man, who is not only the Honour and Ornament of his Country, but the Glory of the Age he lives in. I think I ſhall not be ſuſpected of Flattery at this Time, nor, I believe, at any Time, with Reſpect to that Great Man. Many who now hear me, remember the Part I took in Vindication of that Great Man, whilſt his Character was under Debate in this Houſe. I cannot forget the Rage and Inveteracy with which he was purſued; nor how much Streſs was laid upon obtaining the Cenſures of Parliament upon him: The Aſperſions then thrown upon him, did not hurt that Great Man; and whatever Endeavours may at any Time be uſed to leſſen him, will hurt none but thoſe that ſhall promote them: But yet thoſe vain Endeavours were a very uſeful Part of the Scheme then carrying on. 'Twas a neceſſary Step for thoſe Men to put him out of the Way, whoſe very Name and Appearance, at that Time, would have been ſufficient to raiſe Armies in Favour of the Proteſtant Succeſſion and the Liberties of his Country:

Country: But I cannot but obſerve, That as ſerviceable as it was for the Meaſures of thoſe Men to wound his Character, it is now a Reproach to the Kingdom, that thoſe groundleſs Aſperſions, which have been caſt upon him, ſhould remain upon the Journals of Parliament. Another great [c] Lord fell under the Violence of thoſe Times, (I mean the Lord who was Miniſter in the Low-Countries, and was chiefly inſtrumental in procuring the Treaty of Barrier and Succeſſion) whoſe Proſecution was attended with uncommon Fury. My ſelf had ſome Share in juſtifying that Great Man in this Houſe, when he was voted an Enemy to his Country. I obſerved at that Time, and the Event has made it evident, that the Barrier was but the Pretence, and that the great Services he had done to the Proteſtant Succeſſion was the true Provocation, which drew that Rage upon him. Two other honourable [d] Gentlemen, now ſitting near me, felt the Severity of thoſe Times: They had diſtinguiſhed themſelves by their Zeal and Firmneſs to the true Intereſt of their Country, and were too conſiderable to eſcape the Malice of thoſe who had other Views. Thoſe Proceedings, how uncertain ſoever the Deſign of them might appear while they were tranſacting, have been ſufficiently explain'd by what has follow'd. The Name of that General, [e] for whoſe immediate Service the Great Man firſt mentioned was blemiſhed, and for whom there was Vanity enough to make him his Rival, is now become the Reproach of his Family and Country; he avows the Service of the Pretender, and e'er long we may hear of him at the Head of an Expedition for eſtabliſhing Popery and Arbitrary Power. The Secretary of State, [f] who diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the Purſuit of the other great Lord, has ſufficiently explain'd his Deſigns to the whole World; and the next Tidings that we may expect from abroad is, that he has taken upon him the Character of a Miniſter to the Pretender. I look upon this (namely the diſabling the great Aſſertors of the Proteſtant Intereſt) to be a ſecond, and no ſmall Part of the Scheme; and while theſe things were carrying on, their little Engines and Tools were carrying on their Work [g] below-ſtairs. Every Man who favour'd the Hanoverian Succeſſion was to be worried, and all open and ſcandalous Aſſertors of contrary Principles were treated with all the Care and Tenderneſs of Friends. Charters of Corporations were attack'd in a more unprecedented and dangerous manner than in any former Times, when Practices of that kind were moſt juſtly complain'd of; and no Stone was left unturn'd, to ſtrengthen themſelves in that Reſpect. I will not now trouble you any more upon that Head, having ſome Thoughts e'er long to preſent you with a ſmall Collection of Things of that kind for your ſerious Conſideration. The Maſter Strokes of this grand Scheme are yet behind: The ſureſt Way to deſtroy the Government has been always thought to be by its own Hands; that is, by the Authority and Power of Parliament. For this Purpoſe, a Confederacy, by which the Liberties of Europe had been ſo long ſuſtained againſt the Power of France, was broke to Pieces, by Votes that were obtained in this Houſe, in the moſt extraordinary Manner. The Honour of the Nation, the Ballance of Power, and the Proteſtant Intereſt in Europe, were effectually given up in the Negotiations and Concluſion of the Peace, by which France was reſtored to its ancient and formidable State: And every Body remembers how near we were by the ſame Influences, to have given up the whole Trade of the Nation to the Intereſt of the French King, who after that had no ſuitable Return left for him to make for ſuch Services, but to beſtow upon us a Pretender bred up in his own Faith, and in his own Politicks. Nothing could have obſtructed this, but the many miraculous Providences that immediately followed, when his Power throughout Europe was unconteſtable; and, by the Meaſures that had been taken, the Proteſtant Succeſſion had ſcarce a Friend left in the World. The King's Acceſſion to the Throne, accompanied by ſo many providential Circumſtances, as it diſappointed the immediate Execution of the Scheme, ſo it quieted the Spirit of thoſe Men for ſome time. If we would make a right Judgment of the preſent Rebellion, we muſt compare the Steps that immediately preceded, with thoſe which were taken in the laſt Reign, when the Hope was to have brought about the ſame End without a Stroke. The ſame Endeavours ſoon appear'd to propagate the ſame Principles both in Church and State: And thoſe Endeavours, tho' at firſt not ſo open, were yet as reſtleſs to create Diſſatisfaction againſt his Majeſty's Government, as they had been before to prevent its taking place. As the Encouragement grew ſtronger, Tumults and Riots were univerſally fomented; and 'tis well known from what Quarter they roſe, and againſt whom they were levelled: But yet no one Inſtance has been aſſign'd throughout his Adminiſtration, that could offend or provoke any but a Jacobite Spirit. His Majeſty has done more for the Honour of the Church, and the true Intereſt of his Kingdom, than any of his Predeceſſors in three times the Number of Years. His Perſonal Virtues, and the Wiſdom and Steddineſs of his Government, have retrieved the Honour and Reputation of his Kingdoms, which had been ſo ſhamefully loſt: His Weight and Influence Abroad, and the Credit he has obtain'd in all the known Parts of the World, has already procured the Settlement of the Matters in Difference between the two chief Powers of Europe, from whom alone we can expect Aſſiſtance in Times of Danger. No ſingle Inſtance can be aſſign'd of Hardſhip or Oppreſſion to any one of his Subjects, or that can give a juſt Reaſon of Diſſatisfaction; but on the contrary, thoſe who have ſhewn the greateſt Averſion to his Government, have received the kindeſt Invitations, and enjoy'd the higheſt Indulgencies from him. If any Errors may have been committed in any Parts of the Adminiſtration, during the preſent Diſorders, every honeſt Man ought to judge of them by this one Rule, that is, the plain Deſign for which all Meaſures are calculated, which every Body muſt admit to be, the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Succeſſion: All Incidents of ſuch an Adminiſtration, ought to be covered or juſtified by the Intereſt that ſhall appear to be carrying on throughout the whole; by the ſame Rule of Juſtice, when the Deſtruction of the Common Intereſt was the plain Intention of the late Adminiſtration, the greateſt Weight ought to be laid on every little Circumſtance that attended, in order to obtain a publick Satisfaction: By taking in all theſe

Conſiderations, I think we ſhall make a full and right Judgment of the Nature of this Rebellion; from whence it took its Riſe; how deep it has taken Root; to what Influences it is owing, and how far it extends. The Part the Lord Derwentwater, and others, have taken in it, are to be conſider'd as the firſt Symptoms of that general Diſorder, for which ſo much Foundation was laid; for which Reaſon I think, that we cannot conſider this otherwiſe than as the Cauſe of the Nation, in the ſtrongeſt manner. In Juſtice to the King, as well as to the People, we ought to take this into our own Hands, and not to entruſt the Proſecution of it with any Body but our ſelves. Every Body knows to what Hazards Proſecutions in the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice are liable, though they are never ſo well concerted by thoſe, whoſe Buſineſs it is to carry them on; but how ſure ſoever the Succeſs may be, in a Caſe ſo notorious as this, yet it is obvious to every Body, of what different Weight and Influence the Proſecutions of Parliament are from thoſe in the ordinary Forms. I own I am ſurprized, that any Meaſures have been taken of that kind, againſt the Peers who have been taken in open Rebellion, during the ſitting of a Parliament which has ſhewn ſo much Zeal, and has contributed ſo much to the Preſervation of the Government, eſpecially at a time when the Crown on the King's Head is fighting for. I very well know, that tho' the Houſe of Commons Right of Impeaching Criminals is unlimited, yet they will exerciſe that Power by the Rules of Wiſdom and Diſcretion, and not engage in trivial Matters, but in ſuch only where the Offenders are not within the reach of the Ordinary Juſtice; or the Nature of their Crimes ſuch, as are not fit to be meddled with by the Ordinary Juriſdictions: The Caſe of the Lords taken in Rebellion is indeed notorious, and of which the Proof will be eaſy, but tho' not from the Difficulty of the Proſecution, but from the Weight and Conſequence of it, I think I need ſay little more to convince you, and make it our Proſecution, by which we engage every Commoner in Great-Britain, as an immediate Party, againſt thoſe who have carried a War into the Bowels of the Kingdom. No Inſtance ever has riſen in the Engliſh Hiſtory, where our Anceſtors have permitted a Proſecution againſt the chief Actors, to be carried any where but in full Parliament. The five Popiſh Lords were purſued by the loud Voice and Weight of the Commons of England: And tho' at that time the Nation was in Peace, they would not permit the Fate of thoſe Proſecutions to depend on the Care or Skill of thoſe who are verſed in the ordinary Forms of Juſtice, and their Succeſs was anſwerable. I own my Deſire upon all Occaſions to raiſe the Honour and Authority of Parliaments, which I think the greateſt Support of the Honour and the Prerogatives of the Crown. For which Reaſon, I take this Occaſion to ſpeak more fully to the Nature of Impeachments, and the rather, becauſe I apprehend ſome Gentlemen have miſtaken Notions concerning them. The Power of Impeachments is the moſt valuable and uſeful Privilege that belongs to the Body of the Commons, at leaſt, equal to that of giving Money, which belongs ſolely to them. Gentlemen need not be apprehenſive of any Intricacies in thoſe Proceedings, eſpecially at a Time and upon an Occaſion, when there is no Doubt of the Concurrence of both Houſes. Impeachments are in themſelves more plain, regular, and diſintangled, than any other Forms of Juſtice: They are particularly excepted out of the late Statute of Treaſons, which has very much fetter'd the ordinary courſe of Proceedings. Impeachments were never made difficult, but when they were carried on againſt the Inclination of the Crown, or at a Time when there was no good Underſtanding between the two Houſes; when little Occaſions might be ſought to raiſe Diſputes, and interrupt them; or elſe when they are undertaken before they are well conſidered, which cannot be the preſent caſe. There is another Reaſon, which upon this Occaſion ſhould determine Gentlemen into this Method; I mean the Conſequences of the Judgment that ſhall be obtain'd againſt theſe Lords: 'Tis my clear Opinion, and what I think I can maintain, That no Pardon under the Great Seal can diſcharge a Judgment obtain'd upon the Impeachment of the Commons: This Opinion has been ſtrenuouſly aſſerted in this Houſe in former Reigns; and I think it not weaken'd by the Declaration in the Act of Settlement of the Crown upon the Houſe of Hanover. I have heard of a very low Diſtinction that has been coin'd without Doors, to avoid this Opinion, viz. That the Pardon is not pleadable in bar of the Impeachment, to prevent the Commons from examining into the Offence; but that it is pleadable after Judgment, and in bar of Execution. Whenever that Queſtion ſhall come properly before you, I will undertake to ſhew the Idleneſs and Abſurdity of that Diſtinction: If that Diſtinction be framed to make Court to the Prerogative, I think it the moſt falſe and deſtructive Piece of Flattery of the kind that ever has been raiſed. It is the greateſt Eaſe, Security, and Support of the Crown, in my Opinion, inſtead of any Diminution of it, that no ſuch Power ſhould be lodg'd there, to be exerciſed on any Occaſion, to prevent the Poſſibility of the Crown's being wrought upon by any Influences to defeat the Judgment given in full Parliament, with the Concurrence of both Houſes, againſt the higheſt Offenders, which muſt inevitably create the greateſt Jealouſy, and cauſe the higheſt Diſſatisfactions between the Crown and the People: For this Reaſon, I take it to be the greateſt Advantage to the Crown, that the Conſtitution of the Kingdom has not, as I think, inveſted it with any ſuch Power: And on t'other ſide, it will clearly appear, that ſuch a Power is utterly inconſiſtent with the fundamental Rights of Parliament. I own I am ſurpriz'd to hear, that any ſuch Diſtinction ſhould be ſtarted at this time: But if the Law be, as I apprehend it is, it is the ſtrongeſt Reaſon for the Commons to interpoſe in this Proſecution to defend the Crown from the many Importunities to which it will be ſubject, in the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice: The Weight of this Proſecution, and the Conſequences of it, will be borne by the Commons, as it ought to be in a Caſe ſo National as this. If Gentlemen want any other Motives, to induce them to make this Proſecution their own, I have a Paper in my Hand which will fire the Thoughts of every Gentleman here, it is the Pretender's Declaration, which no Body can read without the utmoſt Indignation; conſidering the perſonal Indignities which are therein caſt upon the beſt of Princes, whoſe Title to the Crown we are bound by all the Ties of Duty, Affection, and Intereſt, to maintain. We can do no leſs than reſent this ſo far, as to make our ſelves the Proſecutors of thoſe who avow this Cauſe of the Pretender, and ſet themſelves at the Head of Armies, in the Heart of the King's Dominions. In this Paper we ſhall ſee how we are treated ourſelves: We are repreſented as the moſt illegal and infamous Aſſembly of Men that ever met together. Theſe Conſiderations ought, in Juſtice, to animate and invigorate our Proceedings in every Reſpect, till the Inveteracy and Inſolence of the Enemy are entirely ſubdued: I do not think that the Proceedings of this Houſe ought in any Caſe to be govern'd by Vindictive Conſiderations, but by ſuch Circumſtances only as from their real Weight and Conſequence call'd for the Interpoſition of the Commons. I am ſenſible that the Commons have a great Work upon their Hands, from other Impeachments, which they have thought fit to enter upon, and which are ſtill depending; I know alſo what Situation theſe Impeachments are in; and hope they will be reſum'd and carried on, in due Seaſon, with the ſame Vigour with which they were undertaken. I likewiſe believe, that the Nation expects, that our Inquiries upon this Head ſhall be extended and appear to be impartial, it not being poſſible, that a greater Diſhonour can be brought, or an heavier Imputation caſt upon our Proceedings, than that of Partiality, which cannot fail to ſink our Credit, and to prevent all the good Effects that are hoped and expected from them: However, every Gentleman will agree with me, that the preſent Situation and Conjuncture of Affairs make it neceſſary to give the Preference to thoſe Lords who have been taken in open Rebellion. And therefore I now Impeach James Earl of Derwentwater of High-Treaſon; which Impeachment I undertake to make Good.

The Conſequence of this Speech was, that the Houſe came to a Reſolution to impeach James Earl of Derwentwater of High-Treaſon. Upon the like Motions they reſolved the ſame with regard to William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn; accordingly they were impeached at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, and the ſame Night the Articles of Impeachment were carried up to the Lords; and the next Day the impeached Lords were brought to the Bar of the Houſe, and charged with the ſaid Articles, and order'd to put in their Anſwer by the 16th, and that not only Counſel, but any other Perſons, whom they ſhould name, ſhould have Liberty to aſſiſt them. They had afterwards Leave till the 19th to put in their Anſwers, when they ſeverally pleaded Guilty (except the Earl of Wintoun, who had further Time allowed him) and the 9th of February was appointed to paſs Sentence on them.

On Thurſday February the 9th, about one o' Clock, the Lords came from their own Houſe into the Court erected in Weſtminſter-Hall, to paſs Sentence upon James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, in the Manner following.

The Lord High-Stward's Gentlemen Attendants, two and two.

The Clerks Aſſiſtant to the Houſe of Lords, and the Clerk of the Parliament, with the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of Chancery; the Clerk of the Parliament bearing the King's Commiſſion to the Lord High-Steward.

The Maſters in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges.

The Peers Eldeſt Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

The Yeoman Uſhers of the Houſe.

Then the Peers, two and two, beginning with the youngeſt Barons.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces.

The Serjeant at Arms attending the Great-Seal, and Purſe-Bearer.

Then Garter King at Arms; and the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black Rod, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High-Steward.

The Lord High-Steward alone, his Train borne. William Lord Cowper.

When the Lords were placed in their proper Seats, and the Lord High-Steward upon the Wool-Pack.

The Clerk of the Crown, in the Court of Chancery, ſtanding before the Clerk's Table, with his Face towards the State, having his Majeſty's Commiſſion to the Lord High-Steward in his Hand, made three Reverences towards the Lord High-Steward; and, on his Knee, preſented the Commiſſion to the Lord High-Steward; after which, and uſual Reverences, the ſame was carried down to the Table: And then Proclamation for Silence was made in this manner:

O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Then the Lord High-Steward ſtood up, and ſpoke to the Peers.

Lord High-Steward. His Majeſty's Commiſſion is going to be read; your Lordſhips are deſired to attend.

All the Peers uncovered themſelves, and they and all others ſtood up uncovered while the Commiſſion was reading.

Serjeant at Arms. God ſave the King.

Then the Herald and Gentleman Uſher, of the Black Rod, after three Reverences, kneeling, preſented the White Staff to his Grace; and then his Grace, attended by the Herald, Black Rod and Seal-Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne) removed from the Wool-Pack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermoſt Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that purpoſe, and then ſeated himſelf in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Seal-Bearer holding the Purſe on the Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Then another Proclamation was made, as follows.

O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London bring forth your Priſoners to the Bar, according to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

Then James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, were all brought to the Bar by the Deputy Governour of the Tower, having the Ax carried before them by the Gentleman Jaylor, who ſtood with it on the Left Hand of the Priſoners, with the Edge turned from him. The Priſoners when they approached the Bar (after kneeling) bowed to his Grace the Lord High-Steward, and to the Houſe of Peers; which Complement was returned them by his Grace, and the Houſe of Peers.

Lord High-Steward. Read the Articles of Impeachment.

ARTICLES of Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn.

WHEREAS for many Years laſt a moſt wicked Deſign and Contrivance has been formed and carried on, to ſubvert the ancient and eſtabliſhed Government, and the good Laws of theſe Kingdoms, to extirpate the true Proteſtant Religion therein eſtabliſhed, and to deſtroy its Profeſſors; and inſtead thereof, to introduce and ſettle Popery and Arbitrary Power; in which unnatural and horrid Conſpiracy great Numbers of Perſons of different Degrees and Qualities have concerned themſelves and acted; and many Proteſtants, pretending an uncommon Zeal for the Church of England, have joined themſelves with profeſſed Papiſts, uniting their Endeavours to accompliſh and execute the aforeſaid wicked and traiterous Deſigns:

And whereas it pleaſed Almighty God in his good Providence, and in his great Mercy and Goodneſs to theſe Nations, to crown the unwearied Endeavours of his late Majeſty King William the Third of ever-glorious Memory, by making him the Inſtrument to procure the Settlement of the Crown of theſe Realms in the Illuſtrious Houſe of Hanover, as the only Means under God to preſerve our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and to ſecure the Proteſtant Intereſt of Europe; ſince which happy Eſtabliſhment the ſaid Conſpirators have been indefatigable in their Endeavours to deſtroy the ſame, and to make Way for the vain and groundleſs Hopes of a ſpurious Impoſtor and Popiſh Pretender to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms.

And to accompliſh theſe Ends, the moſt immoral, irreligious and unchriſtian-like Methods have been taken, but more particularly in the laſt Years of the Reign of the late Queen Anne, during which Time all imaginable Endeavours were uſed by the ſaid Conſpirators to prejudice the Minds of the Subjects of this Realm againſt the Legality and Juſtice of the ſaid Settlement of the Crown: And for that purpoſe the Holy Scriptures were wreſted, and the moſt wholſome Doctrines of the Church of England perverted and abuſed by Men in Holy Orders, in the moſt publick and ſcandalous Manner, in order to condemn the Juſtice of the late happy Revolution; and thereby to ſap and undermine the Foundation of the ſaid happy Eſtabliſhment; and the moſt notorious Inſtruments of theſe wicked Purpoſes were countenanced by particular Marks of publick Favour and Diſtinction; falſe and dangerous Notions of a ſole Hereditary Right to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms were propagated and encouraged by Perſons in the higheſt Truſt and Employments, contrary to the ancient, undoubted and eſtabliſhed Laws of theſe Kingdoms; jeſuitical and ſcandalous Diſtinctions were invented and publickly inculcated, to enervate the Force and Obligation of thoſe Oaths which had been contrived in the plaineſt and ſtrongeſt Terms by the Wiſdom of Parliament for the Security of the ſaid Eſtabliſhment; and to conceal their Deſigns, and thereby the better to enable them to carry on the ſame, great Numbers of the ſaid Conſpirators of all Ranks and Conditions, pretending a Zeal for the Proteſtant Succeſſion, openly and voluntarily took the ſaid Oaths; groundleſs Fears of the Danger of the Church of England were fomented throughout theſe Kingdoms, to diſorder the Minds of well-diſpoſed Proteſtants.

By all which and many other ſuch ungodly Practices of the ſaid Conſpirators, the moſt cauſeleſs and dangerous Jealouſies and Diſſatisfactions were created in the Minds of the good People of this Kingdom, and great Numbers of well-meaning, but deluded Proteſtants were much diſquieted.

But nevertheleſs theſe diſhoneſt Methods were purſued by the ſaid Conſpirators with indefatigable Induſtry, as the only Means to weaken the Foundations of the ſaid happy Eſtabliſhment.

And whereas the Diſſolution of the late glorious Confederacy againſt France, and the Loſs of the Ballance of Power in Europe, were further Steps neceſſary to compleat the Deſigns of the ſaid Conſpirators; and the ſame being effected by the late ignominious Peace with France, the French King was render'd formidable, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion was thereby brought into the moſt imminent Danger; and by theſe and other pernicious Meaſures, the Deſtruction ſo long intended by the ſaid Conſpirators, for theſe poor Nations, ſeemed near at Hand.

At which Time, and under which moſt deplorable Circumſtances, it pleaſed Almighty God in his infinite Wiſdom to call to himſelf the late Queen Anne, and by a Concurrence of many moſt wonderful Providences to give a quiet and peaceable Acceſſion to his preſent moſt Gracious Majeſty to the Throne of his Anceſtors, to which he was received with one full Voice and Conſent of Tongue and Heart, and the united Joy of every good Subject and good Proteſtant, as their only lawful and rightful Liege Lord; and altho' from the Moment his Majeſty aſcended the Throne to this Day, his Reign has been one Series of Wiſdom, Juſtice and Clemency; his Labours conſtant, unwearied and ſucceſsful to retrieve the Honour and Reputation of theſe Nations; to re-eſtabliſh the Trade and recover the Wealth of his Kingdoms; and although all imaginable Encouragement has been given to the Church of England, and all Tenderneſs ſhewn even to his Popiſh Subjects, and his conſtant Care has been to procure the univerſal Good of his People; nevertheleſs the ſaid Conſpirators have, by the moſt vile and impious Methods, renewed their Endeavours to throw theſe Kingdoms into the utmoſt Confuſion, and to entail endleſs Miſeries on us and our Poſterities: For theſe Ends many of the abovementioned moſt wicked and dangerous Practices have been repeated with the utmoſt Induſtry and Inveteracy, to delude, diſorder and corrupt the Minds of his Majeſty's good Subjects; the moſt groundleſs Jealouſies have been fomented againſt his wiſe and happy Adminiſtration, and in many Parts of his Kingdoms the moſt unnatural, unexampled Riots and Tumults, by the ſecret and malicious Endeavours of the ſaid Conſpirators, have been procured, ſtirred up, and encouraged againſt his peaceable Proteſtant Subjects, under falſe Pretences of Zeal for the Church of England, and thereby more effectually to delude his good Subjects, and ſeduce them from their Allegiance, and prepare them for an open Rebellion.

And the ſaid Conſpirators having at length reſolved to deprive theſe Nations of the invaluable Bleſſings which they now enjoy under the wiſe and gentle Reign of his preſent moſt gracious Majeſty King George, and of the certain Proſpect of Happineſs which they have for their Poſterity, in a Succeſſion of Princes derived from himſelf; did contrive, confederate, and reſolve to put their moſt malicious, wicked, and traiterous Deſigns into immediate Execution; for which purpoſe, James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Winton, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, together with Thomas Forſter, Jun. the Lord Charles Murray, Edward Howard, Thomas Errington, John Clavering, William Shaftoe, Sir Francis Anderton, Ralph Standiſh, Richard Townly, Thomas Butler, Thomas Walton, Gabriel Haſkel, Richard Gaſcoigne, and divers other Perſons, as falſe Traitors to his preſent moſt ſacred Majeſty King George, the only lawful and undoubted Sovereign of theſe Kingdoms, having withdrawn their Allegiance, and cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which they as good and faithful Subjects owed to his ſaid Majeſty, did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November, 1715. moſt wickedly, maliciouſly, falſely and traiterouſly imagine and compaſs the Death of his ſaid moſt ſacred Majeſty.

And for the accompliſhing and executing their ſaid traiterous Purpoſe, they the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, did, in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of them, and at divers other Times, and in divers Places within this Kingdom, wickedly and traiterouſly agree, confederate, conſpire, and reſolve, together with many other evil-diſpoſed Perſons, to raiſe, excite, and levy within the Counties of Teviotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and the County Palatine of Lancaſter, and elſewhere within this Kingdom, a moſt cruel, bloody, and deſtructive War, againſt his Majeſty, in order to depoſe and murther his ſacred Majeſty, and to deprive him of his Royal State, Crown and Dignity.

And the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, their Accomplices and Confederates, in or about the Months aforeſaid, in the Counties aforeſaid, or ſome of them, did gather together great Numbers of his Majeſty's Subjects, and with them did aſſemble in a warlike and traiterous Manner, in order to raiſe Tumults and Rebellion within this Kingdom, and having procured great Quantities of Arms, Ammunition and warlike Inſtruments, at the Times and Places aforeſaid, or ſome of them, did form and compoſe, or did aſſiſt in the forming and compoſing an Army of Men, conſiſting of his Majeſty's Liege Subjects, in order to wage War againſt his ſaid Majeſty, for and in behalf and in favour of the ſaid Pre-tender to the Crown of theſe Realms; and the ſaid laſt mentioned Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, at the Time and Times and Places aforeſaid, and at divers other Times and Places within this Kingdom, did maliciouſly and traiterouſly make, levy, and raiſe War and Rebellion againſt his moſt ſacred Majeſty, and in a warlike and hoſtile Manner did march thro' and invade ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom, and did unlawfully take and ſeize the Horſes and other the Goods and Chattels of many of the peaceable and good Subjects of his Majeſty, and in other Places did take and ſeize, from his Majeſty's faithful Subjects, Guns, and other warlike Inſtruments, for the carrying on their traiterous Purpoſes.

And the ſaid laſt mentioned Conſpirators, their Complices and Confederates, during their March and Invaſion aforeſaid, in open Defiance of his moſt ſacred Majeſty's juſt and undoubted Title to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, did wickedly and traiterouſly cauſe and procure the ſaid Pretender to be proclaimed, in the moſt publick and ſolemn Manner, as King of theſe Realms; and in ſeveral Places in the Counties aforeſaid, or ſome of them, did unlawfully take and ſeize from his Majeſty's Officers of the Revenue the publick Money, for the Uſe and Service of the ſaid Pretender; and tho' many of the Conſpirators are avowed Profeſſors of the Popiſh Religion, yet the more effectually to cover and diſguiſe their moſt wicked and traiterous Deſigns, and to delude his Majeſty's Subjects, they did prevail on and procure ſeveral Men in Holy Orders, Miniſters of the Church of England, and who had before that Time abjured the ſaid Pretender, to accompany, countenance and abet the ſaid moſt traiterous Enterprize, and in ſeveral Places in the Counties aforeſaid, where the ſaid Conſpirators, their Complices and Confederates then were, to pray for the ſaid Pretender in the publick Churches, as King of theſe Realms.

That the ſaid laſt mentioned Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, did, on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth or Thirteenth of November aforeſaid, traiterouſly ſeize and poſſeſs themſelves of the Town of Preſton in the County Palatine of Lancaſter againſt his Majeſty, and did then and there in a warlike and hoſtile Manner levy War, oppoſe, engage, and fight againſt his Majeſty's Forces; and did then and there cauſe and procure a miſerable and horrid Slaughter and Murther of many of his Majeſty's faithful Subjects.

All which Treaſons and Crimes abovementioned were contrived, committed, perpetrated, acted and done, by the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and other the Conſpirators aforeſaid, againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity; and contrary to the Duty of their Allegiance, and againſt the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom.

Of all which Treaſons and Crimes, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, do, in the Name of themſelves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and every of them.

And the ſaid Commons by Proteſtation ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Accuſations or Impeachments againſt the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them; and alſo of replying to the Anſwers which the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them, ſhall make to the Premiſſes, or any of them, or to any Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be by them exhibited according to the Courſe and Proceedings of Parliament; and do pray, that the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, be put to anſwer all and every the Premiſſes: And that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments may be upon them and every of them had and uſed as ſhall be agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

Lord High-Steward. Clerk of the Parliament, read the Record of the Anſwers and Pleas of the Lords the Priſoners at the Bar to the Impeachments.

Die Jovis 19 Januarii, 1715.

THE Order of the Day being read, for bringing James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, to this Houſe, in order to their putting in their ſeveral Anſwers to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt them by the Houſe of Commons.

The ſaid Earl of Derwentwater was brought to the Bar by the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, where he kneeled until the Lord Chancellor directed him to riſe; and his Lordſhip acquainted him with the abovementioned Order, and demanded of him if he was ready to put in his Anſwer, which he ſaid he was, and deliver'd the ſame at the Bar.

Which Anſwer of the ſaid Earl of Derwentwater, was read, and is as follows.

The Anſwer of James Earl of Derwentwater, to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt him by the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of Great Britain in Parliament Aſſembled.

TO a Charge of ſo high and heinous a Nature the ſaid Earl cannot Anſwer without the deepeſt Concern and Affliction, which becomes more weighty from the Share the Honourable Houſe of Commons have been pleaſed to take in the Accuſation: He aſſures himſelf however, that Great Aſſembly doth not engage in the Proſecution of an Offence, ſo open to Conviction in the ordinary Courſe of Law, with deſign to intercept that Mercy which the Earl, from the Report of his Majeſty's natural Goodneſs, had reaſon to expect. It would be a Thought unworthy any Member of that Auguſt Body, to imagine he could have the leaſt deſire of ſpilling the Blood of any of his Fellow-Subjects, whom his Majeſty's great Wiſdom ſhould think a fit Object of his Mercy; the ſaid Earl therefore hopes that his Proſecution is taken out of the common Courſe of Juſtice, with Intention, that if in his particular Caſe there ſhall appear any Circumſtances inducing Favour or Compaſſion, both your Lordſhips and the Commons may be Interceſſors with his Majeſty for Grace towards him; whereby the Exerciſe of the Royal Mercy, upon which the Earl depended (which amongſt all the Virtues of the Crown moſt endears a Monarch to the Love and Affection of his People) may be extended in ſuch Manner as may demonſtrate that Clemency for which his Majeſty is ſo greatly renowned, and not encourage any to offend upon the Preſumption of it for the future. The ſaid Earl acknowledges, with a real Sorrow, that at the time in the Articles mentioned he was in Arms, and with others did march through and invade ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom; and confeſſes he is thereby guilty of the Offence wherewith he is charged in the ſaid Articles. But if any Offence of that kind was ever attended with Circumſtances which might move Compaſſion, the ſaid Earl hopes he may be intitled to it: He begs Leave to inform your Lordſhips, That his Temper and Inclination diſpoſed him to live peaceably under his Majeſty's Government, and he never had the leaſt Prejudice or Malice againſt his Perſon, nor was he ever heretofore concerned in or privy to any Deſign or Contrivance to ſubvert or diſturb the eſtabliſhed Government, the Laws or Religion of this Kingdom; and if any Methods were taken by others to accompliſh any of thoſe Ends, he was abſolutely a Stranger to them; nor did he now ingage in this unhappy Undertaking upon any previous Concert or Contrivance for any ſuch purpoſe; but being young and unexperienc'd, he raſhly, and without any Deliberation, engaged himſelf to meet at Plainfield in Northumberland, on Aſſurance that many of his Relations and Acquaintance would appear there; that his Undertaking was ſudden, appears in that he engaged in it without any previous Preparation of Men, Horſes, Arms, or other Warlike Accoutrements; and as the ſaid Earl cannot be juſtly reproached with any cruel, ſevere, or harſh Action during the Continuance in Arms, ſo he took the firſt Opportunity that offered of ſubmitting to the King's Mercy. After the ſudden Skirmiſhes at Preſton, the ſaid Earl, with others, was ſollicitous to prevent any farther Deſtruction of the Lives of his Majeſty's Subjects, and inſtrumental to induce all in Arms to ſubmit themſelves to the King, provided they might be ſecured of their Lives. One of his Majeſty's Officers, ſent from the General, gave them Encouragement to believe, that the Surrender of themſelves would be the ready way to obtain the King's Mercy: In Confidence whereof, when a Ceſſation was agreed on, the ſaid Earl offer'd himſelf to become one of the Hoſtages for them till the next Morning, in which time he received further Aſſurances from the Officers, that the King was a Prince of known Clemency; that this was a diſtinguiſhing part of his Character, and that the free Surrender to Mercy would be the moſt proper means to obtain it. The ſaid Earl believes his Majeſty's Officers were very ſenſible, and will be ſo juſt as to acknowledge, that it had not been impracticable for many of thoſe at Preſton to make their way through his Majeſty's Forces; but this Attempt muſt have occaſioned the loſs of many Lives, and might have been productive of ill Conſequences to the Government, which the ſaid Earl was deſirous to prevent; and when the time agreed on for the Ceſſation was near expired, and General Wills ſeemed uneaſy in not having received any Meſſage from thoſe in the Town, the ſaid Earl writ a Letter to exhort them to ſurrender to the King's Mercy; and at the ſame time declared to the ſaid General, and other Officers, that whatever happened, he was determined to continue with them, and rely entirely on his Majeſty's Clemency and Goodneſs, which he had Encouragement to expect; and in ſuch Circumſtances the ſaid Earl cannot diſtruſt your Lordſhips or the Commons readineſs, to uſe their Mediation for Mercy on his Behalf, which will lay him under the higheſt Obligations of Duty and Affection to his Majeſty, and perpetual Gratitude to both Houſes of Parliament.

Derwentwater.

The material Words of which Anſwer appearing not to be ſufficiently expreſs and clear, the Lord Chancellor aſked the ſaid Earl if he meant by the ſaid Anſwer to plead guilty to the High-Treaſon in the ſaid Articles of Impeachment contain'd.

He ſaid he did, and ſubmitted to the King's Mercy, and humbly deſir'd their Lordſhip's Interceſſion to his Majeſty; and his ſaid Anſwer and Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Lord Widdrington was brought to the Bar, and having there alſo kneeled, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the aforementioned Order, and aſk'd the ſame Queſtion as the Earl of Derwentwater; and he likewiſe delivered in his Anſwer, which was read as follows:

The Anſwer of William Lord Widdrington to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon Exhibited againſt him by the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of Great Britain in Parliament aſſembled.

IT is with inexpreſſible Concern and Affliction the ſaid Lord appears before this Auguſt Aſſembly charged with Crimes of the moſt heinous Nature; and though it is natural to Mankind to endeavour to conceal their Guilt, and make uſe of all manner of Defence, eſpecially in the caſe of Life, yet as he ſurrendred himſelf at Preſton, intirely relying on his Majeſty's Mercy, ſo he is now reſolved not to take any Meaſures which may argue the leaſt Diffidence of that Mercy, or of your Lordſhip's Goodneſs; and therefore the ſaid Lord confeſſes he is guilty of the Treaſon wherewith he is charged in the ſaid Articles; and after having thus freely acknowledged his Offence, he begs leave to lay his Caſe before your Lordſhips, and humbly hopes, when the particular Circumſtances are conſidered, it will not be thought to merit the moſt rigorous Puniſhment, but that both your Lordſhips, and the Honourable Houſe of Commons, will look upon him as a proper Object of his Majeſty's Clemency; and he humbly hopes he may not be thought the leſs unworthy of Favour, in that he never before offended, nor was at any time privy to, or acquainted with any Deſign or Contrivance to deſtroy or diſturb the eſtabliſhed Government, the Laws or Religion of this Kingdom, but came unawares into this ſudden and unpremeditated Action; for although he had met with publick Rumours and Reports of intended Invaſions from Abroad, and Inſurrections at Home, yet he never knew, or any other way heard of any formed Deſign againſt the Government, till he was told the Night before of a Meeting intended at Plainfield in Northumberland on the ſixth of October laſt; and being ſoon after informed, that almoſt all his Neighbours and Acquaintance had there met in Arms, he took a haſty and inconſiderate Reſolution of joining them; nor was he in any ſort prepared for ſuch an Undertaking, having only ſome of his own Family with him, no Arms but his common Fowling-Pieces and wearing Swords, and fewer Horſes than he had conſtantly kept for ſeveral Years before; and nothing but the Report of ſo many of his Friends being engaged could have hurried him on to an Enterprize ſo unaccountably raſh and unjuſtifiable; and he is willing to hope your Lordſhips will eſteem it ſome Alleviation of his Crime, that in a Commotion of that Nature there was ſo little Violation of the Rights and Properties of thoſe who oppoſed them; for he believes few Inſtances can be found, where ſuch a Multitude continued ſo long in Arms without doing greater Acts of Violence and Injuſtice. The ſaid Lord cannot charge himſelf with any injurious Acts to the Property of his Fellow-Subjects, and endeavoured to prevent them in others; and hopes it was thence owing in ſome Meaſure, that there was ſhewn all along greater Marks of Moderation and Humanity, than is common in ſuch a warlike and hoſtile Proceeding. The Suddenneſs of the Attack at Preſton, without any previous Summons, admitted no time for mediating a Submiſſion before the loſs of that Blood which was there unfortunately ſpilt; but after the Heat and Surprize of the firſt Action was over, a Ceſſation of Arms was deſired, and upon the mutual Meſſages which then paſſed, the Officers ſent from the General encouraged them to believe the ſurrendring themſelves would be the ready way to obtain the King's Mercy, and gave them repeated Aſſurances, that they ſubmitted to a Prince of the greateſt Clemency in the World: Upon theſe Hopes and Aſſurances they made a general Surrender of themſelves to the King; and the ſaid Lord may juſtly take notice to your Lordſhips, that as he was the laſt who took up Arms, ſo he was the firſt who procured a Meeting of the chief Perſons among them, in order to lay them down; and cannot doubt but your Lordſhips, and the Honourable Houſe of Commons, will think it equitable to make ſome Diſtinction between an obſtinate Reſiſtance and an early and humble Submiſſion, whereby the Peace and Tranquillity of this part of his Majeſty's Dominions was intirely reſtored. Nature muſt have ſtarted at yielding themſelves up to a certain and ignominious Death, when it muſt be acknowledged that it was not impracticable for many of them to have eſcaped; and it was poſſible ſo great a Number grown deſperate might have obtained further Succeſs, and thereby prevented the ſo ſpeedy ſuppreſſing that Inſurrection; but the ſaid Lord, and the reſt, having with the utmoſt Confidence relied on the Aſſurances of his Majeſty's great Clemency, and the hopes of Mercy, which had been given them from the Officers who commanded the Royal Forces, he is encouraged with great Earneſtneſs to implore the Interceſſion of your Lordſhips, and the Honourable Houſe of Commons, with his Majeſty, for that Mercy on which they wholly depended; and as he doth not know where Mercy was refuſed to thoſe who ſo early and with ſo much Reſignation ſubmitted to it, ſo he humbly hopes your Lordſhips may be induced to think, that the Exerciſe of this Divine Virtue by his Majeſty towards thoſe who caſt themſelves at his Royal Feet upon the ſole Proſpect and Expectation of it, will appear no leſs glorious to his Majeſty, and prove no leſs advantageous to the future Quiet and Tranquillity of his Government, than any Examples of Juſtice in ſuch a Caſe can be likely to do: And whatever Marks of Goodneſs and Favour his Majeſty ſhall vouchſafe to the ſaid Lord, will not fail to engage him by the ſtrongeſt Tyes of Gratitude, to demonſtrate in the future Courſe of his Life the moſt conſtant inviolable Duty to his Majeſty, and the moſt real Eſteem and Veneration for your Lordſhips and the Honourable Houſe of Commons.

Widdrington.

And the ſaid Lord Widdrington being aſked if he had any thing farther to ſay, he begg'd to be excuſed all Imperfections in his ſaid Anſwer, ſaid he had been indiſpoſed with the Gout in his Stomach, and was not able to employ himſelf in preparing his Anſwer till laſt Night, and finiſhed it but this Morning, and humbly implored their Lordſhips Interceſſion to his Majeſty for Favour and Mercy; and his Anſwer and Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Earl of Nithiſdale was brought to the Bar, and having there likewiſe kneeled, was acquainted with the forementioned Order, and aſked the ſame Queſtion as the Earl of Derwentwater, and he alſo delivered in his Anſwer, which was read as follows.

The Anſwer of William Earl of Nithiſdale, to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon Exhibited againſt him by the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of Great Britain in Parliament Aſſembled.

IT is with the utmoſt Confuſion the ſaid Earl appears at your Lordſhip's Bar, under the Weight of an Impeachment by the Commons of Great Britain for High-Treaſon; he humbly begs Leave, in Extenuation of his Crime, to aſſure your Lordſhips, that he was always a zealous Aſſerter of the Liberties of his Country, and never engaged in forming or carrying on any Deſign to ſubvert the ancient eſtabliſhed Government, and the good Laws of this Kingdom; but being Summoned by thoſe entruſted with the Adminiſtration of the Government in Scotland land to appear at Edinburgh, and being aſſured if he went thither he ſhould be made cloſe Priſoner, he did not obey the Summons; but in all humble Manner applied for their Indulgence in diſpenſing with his being committed to Goal, offering to give any Bail for his peaceable and quiet Behaviour; which being refus'd, and being at that time in ſo ill a State of Health, that a Confinement in Edinburgh Caſtle would have endangered his Life, he was forced to abſcond, and kept private till ſeveral of the Perſons mentioned in the ſaid Impeachment, with many other of his Neighbours, appeared in Arms very near the Place where the ſaid Earl lay concealed; and then he inconſiderately and unfortunately (with four of his Domeſticks, and no other Perſon whatſoever) joined them, and proceeded in their Company to the Places in the ſaid Articles of Impeachment mentioned; but he knew nothing of the intended Inſurrection till they were actually in Arms. The ſaid Earl is deeply ſenſible of his great Offence, and not affecting Delay, nor being willing to give your Lordſhips, or the Honourable Houſe of Commons, any unneceſſary Trouble; he does with a Sorrow, equal to his Crime, confeſs that he is guilty of the Treaſon in the ſaid Articles of Impeachment contained, and throws himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet, imploring his Royal Mercy; and to incline his Majeſty thereto, and induce your Lordſhips to recommend him as an Object thereof, he begs Leave to inform your Lordſhips, that when he, and the reſt that were with him at Preſton, had engaged in a Battle, a Ceſſation of Arms being agreed to, they had Intimations from his Majeſty's Officers, that if they ſubmitted, they might expect the King's Mercy; and Hiſtory abounding with Inſtances of Conditions ſtipulated with Generals, even with Rebels, and afterwards agreed to, and confirmed by their Sovereigns, they were prevailed on by ſuch Encouragement, together with the Conſideration of his Majeſty's known Clemency, to ſurrender themſelves Priſoners, whereby the Lives of great Numbers of his Majeſty's good Subjects were ſaved, which by an obſtinate Reſiſtance would inevitably have been deſtroyed; and therefore he moſt humbly begs your Lordſhips would be pleaſed to repreſent his Caſe to his Majeſty in the moſt favourable Manner; not doubting but by your Lordſhips powerful Interceſſion, he ſhall find, that as he performed the Duty of a good Chriſtian, in concurring to prevent the Effuſion of Blood; ſo he acted the Part of a wiſe Man in relying upon a Mercy ſo extenſive as that of his Majeſty: And he preſumes, when the Honourable Houſe of Commons are apprized of the Nature of his Caſe, they will not interpoſe to prevent him from having a Share in the Benefit of that Mercy.

Nithiſdale.

And the ſaid Earl of Nithiſdale being aſk'd if he had any thing further to ſay, he ſaid he had nothing, but to implore the King's Mercy; and his Anſwer and Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Earl of Carnwath was brought to the Bar, and having there likewiſe kneeled, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the forementioned Order, and aſked the ſame Queſtion as the Earl of Derwentwater.

He ſaid he had no Anſwer in Writing, but deſired to throw himſelf on the King's Mercy, and humbly implored their Lordſhip's Interceſſion to his Majeſty on his behalf; and aſſured the Houſe, if the ſame were granted, he ſhould think himſelf obliged to live under the ſtricteſt Tyes of Loyalty to his Majeſty; and as to the ſaid Articles, he ſaid he was guilty of the High-Treaſon contained in the ſaid Articles of Impeachment againſt him; and the ſaid Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Viſcount Kenmure was brought to the Bar, and having there kneeled alſo, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the forementioned Order, and aſked the ſame Queſtion as the Earl of Derwentwater.

He ſaid he had no Anſwer in Writing, but was guilty of the Charge of High-Treaſon contained in the Articles of Impeachment againſt him, and begged the Houſe would intercede with his Majeſty for Mercy; and his Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Lord Nairn was brought to the Bar, and having there alſo kneeled, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the forementioned Order, and aſk'd the ſame Queſtion as the Earl of Derwentwater.

He ſaid he threw himſelf upon the King's Mercy, and begged the Interceſſion of this Houſe to his Majeſty; and as to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him, he ſaid he was guilty of the High-Treaſon contained in the ſaid Articles; and his Plea was recorded accordingly.

Then he delivered in a Petition at the Bar, and the ſame was read as follows.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Aſſembled.

The humble Petition of William Lord Nairn,

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner was educated, and hath always continued a Proteſtant, according to the Diſcipline of the Church of England; and tho', by reaſon of ſome miſtaken Principles he unwarily imbibed in his tender Years, he did not in all reſpects conform to the late Revolution, lying under the leſs Neceſſity, for that he had married an Heireſs, in whom all the Right of your Petitioners Eſtate is inveſted; and tho he never took the Oaths, yet he always peaceably ſubmitted to, and lived quietly under the Government as by Law Eſtabliſhed, until the breaking out of this Rebellion, in which your Petitioner was inadvertently involv'd, but not before the Lord Mar, and his Adherents, had for a conſiderable time made themſelves Maſters of Perth and Dunkeld, and thereby ſurrounded your Petitioner's whole Eſtate, and came to your Petitioner's Houſe, lying in the middle between thoſe places.

Your Petitioner heartily repents of this raſh Undertaking, and ſolemnly declares he knew nothing of any previous Conſultations, or Conſpiracies, in Favour of the Pretender, before he actually appear'd in Arms; not knew any thing about croſſing the Forth, until the Morning he was ſent over under Macintoch's Command; and then was ſo far from approving of that Expedition, that tho' to avoid the Imputation of Cowardice he wou'd hazard his own Perſon therein, your Petitioner ordered back all his Dependants, and was only attended by his Son, and four Servants, who wou'd not leave him in a Time of Danger, tho' often deſired; nor was your Petitioner privy to any Deſigns of marching into England, for having been bred a Seaman, he had no Pretenſions to Knowledge in the Land Service.

Your Petitioner being now ſenſible of his Errors, hath pleaded guilty to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt him by the Honourable Houſe of Commons, and thrown himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet; humbly beſeeching your Lordſhips, in Commiſeration of the deplorable Circumſtances of your Petitioner, and his twelve Children, to recommend him to his Majeſty for that Mercy, which at the Time of his Surrender he was made to believe he might reaſonably expect.

This will lay your Petitioner and his Poſterity under the greateſt Obligations of Duty and Gratitude to his Majeſty, and bind them for ever to bleſs your Lordſhips as the merciful Inſtruments of procuring ſuch a gracious Deliverance.

And your Petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c.

NAIRN.

And being asked if he had any thing further to ſay, he ſaid he had not, and withdrew.

Lord High-Steward. My Lords that are the Priſoners at the Bar, I am to acquaint your Lordſhips, that upon any Occaſion which ſhall be offered you to ſpeak for yourſelves, you are to direct your Speech to the Lords in general; and ſo is any other Perſon that ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak to this Court.

Lord High-Steward. James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, You ſtand impeached of High-Treaſon by the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament aſſembled; which Treaſon is contain'd in the Articles that have been lately read; to this you have ſeverally pleaded guilty, and are thereby convicted. What ſay you, James Earl of Derwentwater, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you according to Law?

Earl of Derwentwater. I Only humbly beg leave of my Noble Peers to repeat a few Circumſtances mentioned in my Anſwer to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt me by the honourable Houſe of Commons.

But the Terrors of your Lordſhips juſt Sentence, which at once deprive me of my Life and Eſtate, and compleat the Misfortunes of my Wife and innocent Children, are ſo heavy upon my Mind, together with my Unexperience, that I am ſcarce able to alledge what may extenuate my Offence, if any thing can do it. I have confeſs'd myſelf guilty; but, my Lords, that Guilt was raſhly incurred without any Premeditation, as I hope your Lordſhips will be convinced by one Particular: I beg leave to obſerve, I was wholly unprovided with Men, Horſes, Arms, and other Neceſſaries, which in my Situation I could not have wanted, had I been privy to any formed Deſign: As my Offence was ſudden, ſo my Submiſſion was early; when his Majeſty's Generals thought fit to demand Hoſtages for ſecuring the Terms of the Ceſſation, I voluntarily offered myſelf, without which the Ceſſation might poſſibly have proved ineffectual: And whilſt I continued Hoſtage, the great Character of his Majeſty's Clemency, and the repeated Encouragement I had to hope for Mercy, by ſurrendering to it, ſoon determined me; and I accordingly declared my Reſolution to remain with his Majeſty's Forces, and from that Time ſubmitted myſelf to his Goodneſs, on which I ſtill entirely depend. I humbly hope to obtain the Mediation of your Lordſhips, and of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, in my behalf; ſolemnly proteſting my future Conduct ſhall ſhew me not altogether unworthy your generous Compaſſion for my Life, which is all I can beg of his Majeſty.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord Derwentwater, your Lordſhip's Voice hath not been perfectly heard to this end of the Court, therefore I ask you whether you have pleaded any thing in Arreſt of Judgment.

Lord Derwentwater. No, my Lords.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Widdrington, what have you to ſay for your ſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you according to Law?

Lord Widdrington. MY Lords, I have abandoned all manner of Defence ever ſince I firſt ſurrendered my ſelf to his Majeſty's Royal Clemency, and only now beg leave to repeat to your Lordſhips ſome Circumſtances of my unhappy Caſe, which I have already ſet forth in my Anſwer.

Your Lordſhips ſee before you an unfortunate Man, who after leading a private and retired Life for many Years, has by one raſh and inconſiderate Action expoſed himſelf and his Family to the greateſt Calamities and Miſery, and is now upon the Point of receiving the ſevereſt Sentence directed by any of our Engliſh Laws.

I do proteſt to your Lordſhips, that I was never privy to any concerted Meaſures againſt his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, or the eſtabliſhed Government: As to the Inſurrection in Northumberland, I only heard of it accidentally the Night before it happen'd, and being ſoon after informed that all my Neighbours and Acquaintance had met in Arms, a crowd of confuſed and miſtaken Notions hurried me at once into a precipitate Reſolution of joining them; a Reſolution, which, I muſt own, I could never ſince calmly reflect upon without part of that Confuſion I find my ſelf under in the publick Acknowledgment of ſo much Raſhneſs and Folly. After thus plunging out of my Depth, as unprepared for ſuch an Enterprize as the Action was unpremeditated, I cannot, for my own Particular, upon the ſtricteſt Recollection, charge myſelf with any Violation of the Properties of my Fellow-Subjects: But on the contrary, I always endeavour'd to encourage Humanity and Moderation during the whole courſe courſe of our miſerable Expedition; and in order to make the beſt Atonement in my Power for the great Fault I had been guilty of, I can juſtly ſay, that I was in no ſmall Degree inſtrumental in procuring a general Submiſſion to his Majeſty. But, my Lords, however willing or deſirous, either I or any others might be to put a ſpeedy End to thoſe unfortunate Troubles; Self-preſervation, the firſt and moſt powerful Law of Nature, would have render'd the Propoſal vain and fruitleſs, had not the Officers who commanded the Royal Forces given us Hopes of Mercy, and aſſured us we ſubmitted to a Prince of the greateſt Clemency in the World. Theſe Hopes, and this Aſſurance, anſwered the ſtrongeſt Objections, overcame all remaining Difficulties, and gave the finiſhing Stroke to a general Surrender, whereby the further Effuſion of Britiſh Blood was prevented, and a perfect Tranquillity reſtored to theſe Parts of his Majeſty's Dominions.

My Lords, as this my firſt Attempt was raſh and unpremeditated, as I always uſed and promoted Moderation and Humanity towards my Fellow-Subjects, and as I did not obſtinately perſiſt in my Fault, but was the firſt who propoſed an early Submiſſion to his Majeſty, I humbly hope my unhappy Caſe, and the deplorable Condition of my unfortunate Children, already deprived of their tender Mother, will raiſe a generous Compaſſion in your Lordſhips, and the Honourable Houſe of Commons; and I moſt earneſtly entreat both your Lordſhips, and that Honourable Houſe, to become Interceſſors with his Majeſty in my behalf, for that Mercy which I was encouraged to hope for when I firſt ſurrendered, and which I have ever ſince with the utmoſt Confidence relied on.

I have only to add my moſt ſolemn Aſſurance before this Auguſt Aſſembly, that no future Time ſhall ever find me wanting in the moſt inviolable Duty and Gratitude to that merciful Prince who gives me my Life, and reſtores a Father to five miſerable and diſtreſſed Orphans; and I ſhall always retain the higheſt Eſteem and Veneration for your Lordſhips and the Honourable Houſe of Commons.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Widdrington, for greater certainty I ask your Lordſhip whether you have pleaded any thing in Arreſt of Judgment.

Lord Widdrington. No, my Lords, I have not.

Lord High-Steward. William Earl of Nithiſdale, what hath your Lordſhip to ſay for your ſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you according to Law?

Lord Nithiſdale. MY Lords, I have confeſſed myſelf guilty, relying on his Majeſty's Mercy; and I beg leave to aſſure your Lordſhips I was never privy to any Plot or Deſign againſt his Majeſty's Perſon or Government, and was unprovided with any Neceſſaries for ſuch a Purpoſe; but raſhly and inconſiderately, with only four of my Servants, joined thoſe who appeared in Arms in my Neighbourhood, and was one of the laſt who went unto them.

At Preſton, my Lords, his Majeſty's Generals gave great Hopes and Encouragement to believe that ſurrendring to his Majeſty's Mercy was the ready way to obtain it, with repeated Aſſurances that his Majeſty was a Prince of the greateſt Clemency.

Upon thoſe Hopes and Aſſurances I ſubmitted myſelf, and ſtill entirely depend on his Majeſty's Goodneſs, earneſtly beſeeching your Lordſhips and the Honourable Houſe of Commons, to intercede with his Majeſty on my behalf.

And I ſolemnly promiſe your Lordſhips I ſhall, during the Remainder of my Life, pay the utmoſt Duty and Gratitude to his moſt gracious Majeſty, and the higheſt Veneration and Reſpect to your Lordſhips and the Honourable Houſe of Commons.

Lord High-Steward. I muſt alſo ask your Lordſhip (your Lordſhip's Voice not reaching thus far) whether you have pleaded any thing in Arreſt of Judgment.

Lord Nithiſdale. No, my Lords, I have not.

Lord High-Steward, Lord Carnwath, what have you to ſay for yourſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you according to Law?

Lord Carnwath. MY Lords, I ſhall not trouble this Great Aſſembly with a Repetition of what I ſaid, when formerly before your Lordſhips and his Majeſty's Council.

I hope theſe Noble Lords entertain that favourable Opinion of my ſincere Dealing then, as to believe that want of Experience and Knowledge of the Laws was the great Inducement of engaging me in this fatal and unhappy Undertaking.

The only thing which I can hope or wiſh for is his Majeſty's Mercy; he has the Character of a merciful Prince: Should it pleaſe him to think me a proper Object for it (tho' I muſt confeſs my ſelf a very unworthy one) all I can ſay, my Lords, is, that the Remainder of my Life ſhall convince his Majeſty, and all the World, of my true Penitence and Gratitude.

My Lords, I am yet an unworthy Member of this great Body, the Peerage, now expecting your Lordſhips Judgment as to Life or Death: Should it be for Life, my Demeanour and Carriage for the future will be ſuch, as none of your Lordſhips ſhall be aſham'd of having ſhew'd me Compaſſion; but ſhould it be for Death, God's Will be done; to my laſt Hour I ſhall pray for the Nation's and your Lordſhips Proſperity; having this Comfort in my preſent Diſtreſs, that your Lordſhips are my Judges at this Tribunal: And yet a greater Comfort have I, that I am ſoon to appear before a greater, where I can't deſpair of finding Mercy and Forgiveneſs for all my Sins.

I beg God Almighty's Pardon for them: I have already ask'd his Majeſty's, and I do it now; and I do humbly beg leave, once more, and perhaps the laſt Occaſion that ever I ſhall have, to deſire that your Grace, this noble Houſe, and the Honourable Houſe of Commons of Great Britain, who are now here, would intercede with his Majeſty for me.

I take my Leave of your Lordſhips, and wiſh you all Happineſs.

Lord High-Steward. Does your Lordſhip offer any thing in Arreſt of Judgment?

Lord Carnwath. No, my Lords.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Kenmure, what have you to ſay for yourſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you according to Law?

Lord Kenmure. MY Lords, I am truly ſenſible of my Crime, and want Words to expreſs my Repentance. God knows I never had any perſonal Prejudice againſt his Majeſty, nor was I ever acceſſary to any previous Deſign againſt him. I humbly beg my noble Peers and the Honourable Houſe of Commons to intercede with the King for Mercy to me, that I may live to ſhew myſelf the dutifulleſt of his Subjects, and to be the Means to keep my Wife and four ſmall Children from ſtarving; the Thoughts of which, with my Crime, makes me the moſt unfortunate of all Gentlemen.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord, your Voice not being heard to this End of the Court, I would know whether in what you have ſaid you have offered any thing in Arreſt of Judgment.

Lord Kenmure. No, my Lords.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Nairn, what have you to ſay for yourſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you according to Law?

Lord Nairn. I Am very ſenſible how unfit I am to plead my own Cauſe before your Grace (my Lord High-Steward) and this Auguſt Aſſembly; and therefore, tho' I could ſay much to extenuate the Crime for which I ſtand impeached, yet I chuſe rather to lay my whole Streſs upon the King's Mercy, for which he is ſo renowned, and which I was put in hopes of at the Time of my Surrender. In Conſideration whereof, and in Compaſſion to an afflicted Wife and twelve Children, I ſtill hope, by the Mediation of your Grace, my Noble Lords, and the Honourable Houſe of Commons, I may obtain it; ſolemnly proteſting, that in Gratitude for ſo ſignal a Deliverance, I will, to the End of my Life, remain a dutiful and obedient Subject to his moſt gracious and ſacred Majeſty King George.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord, for greater certainty, I ask your Lordſhip whether you have offered any thing in Arreſt of Judgment.

Lord Nairn. No, my Lords.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our ſovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Lord High-Steward. JAMES Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn;

You ſtand impeached, by the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament aſſembled, of High Treaſon, in traiterouſly imagining, and compaſſing the Death of his moſt ſacred Majeſty, and in conſpiring for that end to levy a bloody and deſtructive War againſt his Majeſty, in order to depoſe and murder him; and in levying War accordingly, and proclaiming a Pretender to his Crown to be King of theſe Realms.

Which Impeachment, though one of your Lordſhips, in the Introduction to his Plea, ſuppoſes to be out of the ordinary and common Courſe of the Law and Juſtice, is yet as much a Courſe of Proceeding according to the Common Law, as any other whatſoever.

If you had been indicted, the Indictment muſt have been removed and brought before the Houſe of Lords (the Parliament ſitting.) In that caſe you had ('tis true) been accuſed only by the Grand Jury of one County; in the preſent, the whole Body of the Commons of Great Britain, by their Repreſentatives, are your Accuſers.

And this Circumſtance is very obſervable, (to exclude all poſſible Suppoſition of Hardſhip as to the Method of proceeding againſt you) That however all great Aſſemblies amongſt us are apt to differ on other Points, You were impeached by the unanimous Opinion of the Houſe of Commons (not one contradicting.)

They found themſelves, it ſeems, ſo much concern'd in the Preſervation of his moſt truly ſacred Majeſty, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion (the very Life and Soul of theſe Kingdoms) that they could not omit the firſt Opportunity of taking their proper Part, in order to ſo ſignal and neceſſary an Act of his Majeſty's Juſtice.

And thus the whole Body Politick of this free Kingdom has in a manner roſe up in its own Defence, for the Puniſhment of thoſe Crimes, which, 'twas rightly apprehended, had a direct Tendency to the everlaſting Diſſolution of it.

To this Impeachment you have ſeverally pleaded, and acknowledged yourſelves guilty of the High-Treaſon therein contained.

Your Pleas are accompanied with ſome Variety of Matter, to mitigate your Offences, and to obtain Mercy.

Part of which, as ſome of the Circumſtances ſaid to have attended your Surrender (ſeeming to be offer'd rather as Arguments only for Mercy, than any thing in Mitigation of your preceding Guilt) is not proper for me to take notice of.

But as to the other Part, which is meant to extenuate the Crimes of which you are convicted, it is fit I ſhould take this Occaſion to make ſome Obſervations to your Lordſhips upon it; to the end that the Judgment to be given againſt you may clearly appear to be Juſt and Righteous, as well as Legal; and that you may not remain under any fatal Error in reſpect of a greater Judicature, by reflecting with leſs Horror and Remorſe on the Guilt you have contracted than it really deſerves.

It is alledg'd by ſome of your Lordſhips, that you engaged in this Rebellion without previous Concert or Deliberation, and without ſuitable Preparations of Men, Horſes and Arms.

If this ſhould be ſuppoſed true, on ſome of your Lordſhips averring it, I deſire you to conſider, that as it exempts you from the Circumſtance of contriving this Treaſon, ſo it very much aggravates your Guilt in that Part you have undoubtedly born in the Execution of it.

For it ſhews, That your Inclinations to rebel were ſo well known (which cou'd only be from a continued Series of your Words and Actions) that the Contrivers of that horrid Deſign depended upon you, and therein judg'd rightly: That your Zeal to engage in this Treaſon was ſo ſtrong, as to carry you into it on the leaſt Warning, and the very firſt Invitation: That you would not excuſe yourſelves by want of Preparation, as you might have done; and that rather than not have a Share in the Rebellion, you would plunge yourſelves into it, almoſt naked and unprovided for ſuch an Enterprize: In ſhort, that your Men, Horſes, and Arms were not ſo well prepared, as they might, and would have been on longer Warning; but your Minds were.

It is alledg'd alſo as an Extenuation of your Crime, that no cruel or harſh Action (I ſuppoſe is meant no Rapine or Plunder, or worſe) has been committed by you.

This may, in part only, be true. But then your Lordſhips will at the ſame time conſider, that the laying waſte a Tract of Land bears but a little proportion in point of Guilt, compared with that Crime of which you ſtand convicted; an open Attempt to deſtroy the beſt of Kings, to ruin the whole Fabrick, and raze the very Foundations of a Government, the beſt ſuited of any in the World, to perfect the Happineſs, and ſupport the Dignity of Human Nature: The former Offence cauſes but a Miſchief that is ſoon recover'd, and is uſually pretty much confin'd; the latter, had it ſucceeded, muſt have brought a laſting and univerſal Deſtruction on the whole Kingdom.

Beſides, much of this was owing to Accident; your March was ſo haſty, partly to avoid the King's Troops, and partly from a vain Hope to ſtir up Inſurrections in all the Counties you paſſed through, that you had not time to ſpread Devaſtation, without deviating from your main, and, as I have obſerv'd, much worſe Deſign.

Farther, 'tis very ſurprizing that any concern'd in this Rebellion ſhould lay their ingaging in it on the Government's doing a neceſſary and uſual Act in like caſes for its Preſervation; the giving Orders to confine ſuch as were moſt likely to join in that Treaſon: 'Tis hard to believe that any one ſhould rebel, merely to avoid being reſtrain'd from rebelling; or that a gentle Confinement would not much better have ſuited a crazy State of Health, than the Fatigues and Inconveniencies of ſuch long and haſty Marches in the depth of Winter.

Your Lordſhips riſing in Arms therefore, has much more juſtify'd the Prudence and Fitneſs of thoſe Orders, than thoſe Orders will in any wiſe ſerve to mitigate your Treaſon. Alas! happy had it been for all your Lordſhips had you fallen under ſo indulgent a Reſtraint!

When your Lordſhips ſhall in good earneſt apply your ſelves to think impartially on your Caſe, ſurely you will not your ſelves believe, that 'tis poſſible, in the nature of the thing, to be engaged, and continue ſo long engaged, in ſuch a difficult and laborious Enterprize, through Raſhneſs, Surprize, or Inadvertency: Or that, had the Attack at Preſton been leſs ſudden, (and conſequently the Rebels better prepared to receive it) your Lordſhips had been reduced the ſooner, and with leſs, if not without any Bloodſhed.

No, my Lords; theſe, and ſuch like, art artful Colourings proceeding from Minds fill'd with Expectation of continuing in this World; and not from ſuch as are preparing for their Defence before a Tribunal, where the Thoughts of the Heart, and the true Springs and Cauſes of Actions, muſt be laid open.

And now, my Lords, having thus removed ſome falſe Colours you have uſed; to aſſiſt you yet farther in that neceſſary Work of thinking on your great Offence as you ought, I proceed to touch upon ſeveral Circumſtances that ſeem greatly to aggravate your Crime, and which will deſerve your moſt ſerious Conſideration.

The Divine Virtues ('tis one of your Lordſhips own Epithets) which all the World as well as your Lordſhips acknowledge to be in his Majeſty, and which you now lay claim to, ought certainly to have with-held your Hands from endeavouring to depoſe, to deſtroy, to murder that moſt Excellent Prince; ſo the Impeachment ſpeaks, and ſo the Law conſtrues your Actions; and this is not only true in the Notion of Law, but almoſt always ſo in Deed and Reality: 'Tis a trite, but very true Remark, that there are but few Hours between Kings being reduced under the Power of Pretenders to their Crown, and their Graves. Had you ſucceeded, his Majeſty's Caſe would, I fear, have hardly been an Exception to that general Rule, ſince 'tis highly improbable, that Flight ſhould have ſaved any of that Illuſtrious and Valiant Family.

'Tis a farther Aggravation of your Crime, that his Majeſty, whom your Lordſhips would have dethron'd, affected not the Crown by Force, or by the Arts of Ambition, but ſucceeded peaceably and legally to it; and on the Deceaſe of her late Majeſty without Iſſue, became undoubtedly the next in courſe of Deſcent capable of ſucceeding to the Crown, by the Law and Conſtitution of this Kingdom; as it ſtood declared ſome Years before the Crown was expreſly limited to the Houſe of Hanover. This Right was acknowledg'd, and the Deſcent of the Crown limited or confirmed accordingly, by the whole Legiſlature in two ſucceſſive Reigns; and more than once in the later, which your Lordſhips Accomplices are very far from allowing, would biaſs the Nation to that ſide.

How could it then enter into the Heart of Men, to think that private Perſons might with a good Conſcience endeavour to ſubvert ſuch a Settlement, by running to tumultuary Arms; and by intoxicating the dreggs of the People with contradictory Opinions, and groundleſs Slanders; or that God's Providence would ever proſper ſuch wicked, ſuch ruinous Attempts?

Eſpecially if in the next place it be conſider'd, that the moſt fertile Inventions on the ſide of the Rebellion, have not been able to aſſign the leaſt ſhadow of a Grievance as the Cauſe of it: To ſuch poor Shifts have they been reduced on this Head, that for want of better Colours, it has been objected, in a ſolemn manner, by your Lordſhips Aſſociates, to his Majeſty's Government; that his People do not enjoy the Fruits of Peace as our Neighbours have done ſince the laſt War: Thus they firſt rob us of our Peace, and then upbraid us that we have it not. 'Tis a monſtrous Rebellion that can find no fault with the Government it invades, but what is the Effect of the Rebellion it ſelf.

Your Lordſhips will likewiſe do well to conſider what an additional Burthen your Treaſon has made neceſſary on the People of this Kingdom; who wanted, and were about to enjoy ſome Reſpite: To this end, 'tis well known, that all new, or encreaſe of Taxes, were the laſt Year carefully avoided, avoided, and his Majeſty was contented to have no more Forces than were juſt ſufficient to attend his Perſon, and ſhut the Gates of a few Garriſons.

But what his Majeſty thus did for the Eaſe and Quiet of his People, you moſt ungratefully turn'd to his Diſadvantage, by taking Encouragement from thence, to endanger his and his Kingdoms Safety, and to bring Oppreſſion on your Fellow-Subjects.

Your Lordſhips obſerve I avoid expatiating on the Miſeries of a Civil War, a very large and copious Subject; I ſhall but barely ſuggeſt to you on that Head, that whatever thoſe Calamities may happen to be in the preſent Caſe, all who are at any Time or in any Place Partakers in the Rebellion (eſpecially Perſons of Figure and Diſtinction) are in ſome degree reſponſible for 'em: And therefore your Lordſhips muſt not hold your ſelves quite clear from the Guilt of thoſe Barbarities which have been lately committed, by ſuch as are engaged in the ſame Treaſon with you, and not yet perfectly reduced, in burning the Habitations of their Countrymen, and thereby expoſing many Thouſands to Cold and Hunger in this rigorous Seaſon.

I muſt be ſo juſt to ſuch of your Lordſhips, as profeſs the Religion of the Church of Rome, that you had one Temptation, and that a great one, to engage you in this Treaſon, which the others had not; in that 'twas evident, Succeſs on your part muſt for ever have eſtabliſh'd Popery in this Kingdom, and that probably you could never have again ſo fair an Opportunity.

But then, good God! how muſt thoſe Proteſtants be cover'd with Confuſion, who enter'd into the ſame Meaſures, without ſo much as capitulating for their Religion (that ever I could find from any Examination I have ſeen or heard) or ſo much as requiring, much leſs obtaining a frail Promiſe, that it ſhould be preſerv'd, or even tolerated.

It is my Duty to exhort your Lordſhips thus, to think of the Aggravations as well as the Mitigations (if there be any) of your Offences; and if I could have the leaſt Hopes, that the Prejudices of Habit and Education would not be too ſtrong for the moſt earneſt and charitable Entreaties; I would beg you not to rely any longer on thoſe Directors of your Conſciences, by whoſe Conduct you have, very probably, been led into this miſerable Condition; but that your Lordſhips would be aſſiſted by ſome of thoſe pious and learned Divines of the Church of England, who have conſtantly bore that infallible Mark of ſincere Chriſtians, univerſal Charity.

And now, my Lords, nothing remains, but that I pronounce upon you, (and ſorry I am that it falls to my Lot to do it) that terrible Sentence of the Law, which muſt be the ſame that is uſually given againſt the meaneſt Offender in the like Kind.

The moſt ignominious and painful Parts of it are uſually remitted by the Grace of the Crown to Perſons of your Quality; but the Law in this Caſe being deaf to all Diſtinctions of Perſons, requires I ſhould pronounce, and accordingly it is adjudg'd by this Court,

" That you, James Earl of Derwentwater,
" William Lord Widdrington, William Earl
" of Nithiſdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath,
" William Viſcount Kenmure, and William
" Lord Nairn, and every of you, return to
" the Priſon of the Tower from whence you
" came; from thence you muſt be drawn
" to the Place of Execution; when you " come there, you muſt be hang'd by the " Neck, but not till you be Dead; for you
" muſt be cut down alive, then your Bowels
" muſt be taken out, and burnt before your " Faces; then your Heads muſt be ſever'd
" from your Bodies, and your Bodies di-
" vided each into four Quarters; and theſe
" muſt be at the King's diſpoſal.

And God Almighty be merciful to your Souls!

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Then the Lord High Steward ſtood up uncover'd, and declaring there was nothing more to be done by vertue of the preſent Commiſſion, broke the Staff, and pronounced it diſſolv'd: And then leaving the Chair, came down to the Woolpack, and ſaid, Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

And then the Houſe adjourn'd to the Houſe above, and the Lords and others returned in the ſame Order they came down.

After Sentence paſt great Intereſt was made on their behalf for Mercy; inſomuch that the Houſe of Lords preſented an Addreſs to the King, To Reprieve ſuch of them as ſhould deſerve his Mercy; to which the King only anſwer'd, That on this and all other Occaſions, he would do what he thought moſt conſiſtent with the Dignity of his Crown, and the Safety of his People. However, Lord Widdrington, Lord Carnwath, and Lord Nairn were reprieved, and afterwards pardoned; but the other three, Lord Derwentwater, Lord Nithiſdale, and Lord Kenmure were order'd for Execution on Febr. 24.

The Earl of Nithiſdale eſcap'd the Blow, having found means of getting out of the Tower in Diſguiſe, the very Night before the Execution.

Early the next Morning the Scaffold on Tower-Hill was ſurrounded with the Guards, and a little before ten o'th' Clock the Earl of Derwentwater and the Lord Viſcount Kenmure were carried in an Hackney Coach from the Tower to the Tranſport-Office on Tower-Hill, where there was a Room hung with Black for their Reception, and there was a Paſſage or Gallery rail'd in, which led from thence to the Scaffold, which was alſo cover'd with Black.

The Earl of Derwentwater was firſt led to the Scaffold, where having ſpent ſome time in praying with a Book, he then addreſs'd himſelf to the Sheriff, and deſir'd the Liberty to read a Paper, which he had drawn up: This Requeſt being readily granted, he went to the Rails of the Scaffold and read as follows:

BEING in a few Minutes to appear before the Tribunal of God, where, tho' moſt unworthy, I hope to find Mercy, which I have not found from Men now in Power, I have endeavour'd to make my Peace with his Divine Majeſty, by moſt humbly begging Pardon for all the Sins of my Life; and I doubt doubt not of a merciful Forgiveneſs, thro' the Merits of the Paſſion and Death of my Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; for which End, I earneſtly deſire the Prayers of all good Chriſtians.

After this, I am to aſk Pardon of thoſe whom I might have ſcandaliz'd by pleading guilty at my Trial. Such as were permitted to come to me, told me, that having been undeniably in Arms, pleading guilty was but the Conſequence of having ſubmitted to Mercy; and many Arguments were us'd to prove there was nothing of moment in ſo doing; among others, the univerſal Practice of ſigning Leaſes, whereof the Preambles run in the Name of the Perſon in Poſſeſſion.

But I am ſenſible that in this I have made bold with my Loyalty, having never own'd any other but King James the Third for my rightful and lawful Sovereign; him I had an Inclination to ſerve from my Infancy, and was mov'd thereto by a natural Love I had to his Perſon, knowing him to be capable of making his People happy; and tho' he had been of a different Religion from mine, I ſhould have done for him all that lay in my Power, as my Anceſtors have done for his Predeceſſors, being thereto bound by the Laws of God and Man.

Wherefore, if in this Affair I have acted raſhly, it ought not to affect the Innocent; I intended to wrong no Body, but to ſerve my King and Country, and that without Self-intereſt; hoping, by the Example I gave, to have induc'd others to their Duty; and God, who ſees the Secrets of my Heart, knows I ſpeak Truth. Some Means have been propos'd to me for ſaving my Life, which I look'd upon as inconſiſtent with Honour and Conſcience, and therefore I rejected them; for, with God's Aſſiſtance, I ſhall prefer any Death, to the doing a baſe unworthy Action. I only wiſh now, that the laying down my Life, might contribute to the Service of my King and Country, and the Re-eſtabliſhment of the ancient and fundamental Conſtitution of theſe Kingdoms; without which, no laſting Peace, or true Happineſs, can attend them; then I ſhould, indeed, part with Life even with Pleaſure: As it is, I can only pray, that theſe Bleſſings may be beſtow'd upon my dear Country; and ſince I can do no more, I beſeech God to accept of my Life, as a ſmall Sacrifice towards it.

I die a Roman Catholick; I am in perfect Charity with all the World, I thank God for it, even with thoſe of the preſent Government, who are moſt inſtrumental in my Death. I freely forgive ſuch as ungenerouſly reported falſe Things of me; and I hope to be forgiven the Treſpaſſes of my Youth, by the Father of infinite Mercy; into whoſe Hand I commend my Soul.

JA. DERWENTWATER.

P. S. If that Prince who now governs, had given me my Life, I ſhould have thought my ſelf oblig'd never more to have taken up Arms againſt him.

After the reading this Paper he deliver'd it to the Sheriff to do with it as he pleas'd. Then turning to the Block he view'd it cloſe, and finding in it a rough place, which might offend his Neck, he bid the Executioner chip it off. Having prepar'd himſelf for the Blow by pulling off his Coat and Waſtcoat, he lay down to fit his Head to the Block, telling the Executioner that the Sign he ſhould give him was, Lord Jeſu receive my Soul, and at the third time of repeating it he was to do his Office; which accordingly he did at one Blow.

Immediately after the Earl of Derwentwater was executed as above, the Lord Kenmure was brought to the Scaffold, accompany'd by his Son and ſome Friends, and attended by two Clergymen of the Church of England, which was the Religion he profeſs'd. He made no formal Speech, but teſtify'd his Sorrow for having pleaded guilty. Then laying down his Head on the Block, he rais'd it up again, and ſtill continuing on his Knees, gave the Executioner ſome Money, and told him, he would give him no Sign, but that when he laid down his Head again, he might perform his Office as he ſaw good. Then having lifted up his Hands a ſhort time in Prayer, he reſolutely laid down his Head, which at two Blows was ſever'd from his Body.

After his Execution a Letter was found which he wrote to the Pretender (by the Style of King James) in which he declar'd, That he died for his faithful Services to his Majeſty, but hoped the Cauſe he died for would flouriſh after his Death: And as he ſuffered for his Service, he hop'd his Majeſty would provide for his Wife and Children.

CLXXXIII. The Trial of George Earl of Wintoun, upon an Impeachment for High-Treaſon, March 15, 16, 19. 1715. 2 GEO. I.

Die Lunæ 9 Januarii, 1715.

THE Earl of Wintoun was impeach'd of High-Treaſon; and the Articles were brought up againſt him and read the ſame Day in the Houſe of Lords: And it was order'd that the ſaid Earl, with the other impeach'd Lords, ſhould be brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Lords the next Day, to hear the ſaid Articles read, and to abide ſuch further Order as the Houſe ſhould think fit to make concerning them.

Die Martis 10 Januarii, 1715.

The Earl of Wintoun and the other impeach'd Lords were brought to the Bar in the uſual Form; then the ſaid Articles of Impeachment were read unto them; after which the Lord Chancellor asked them ſeverally what they had to ſay thereunto, and acquainted them, that if they had any thing to requeſt of the Houſe this was their proper Time.

Thereupon the Earl of Wintoun acquainted the Houſe he was unprepared, and very ignorant of the Forms of their Lordſhips Judicature, and deſired he might have a Copy of the ſaid Articles, and ſuch Time to anſwer as the Houſe ſhould think fit, and that Council might be aſſign'd to aſſiſt him. He was directed to withdraw; and being accordingly withdrawn, the Houſe took his Requeſts into Conſideration, and thereupon Ordered, That his Lordſhip ſhould be allowed a Copy of the ſaid Articles of Impeachment, and Time till Saturday next to put in his Anſwer thereunto; and that Council ſhould be aſſign'd him in order to aſſiſt him in preparing his Anſwer, and likewiſe in his Defence in Matters of Law.

Then his Lordſhip was called in again, and the Lord Chancellor acquainted him with the ſaid Order, and that the Houſe expected he ſhould name ſuch Council as he deſired to have.

To which he anſwered, that no body was allow'd to come to him, he was a Stranger and unprepared, and deſired to be allowed Time to name his Council.

Then his Lordſhip being again withdrawn,

After ſome time he was again called in, and the Lord Chancellor, by Order of the Houſe, acquainted him, That the Houſe was pleaſed, beſides Council, to allow him a Sollicitor, and to give him leave to name whom he deſired to come to him this Evening or to-morrow Morning, in order to adviſe him in the naming of Council and Sollicitor.

To which purpoſe the Earl of Wintoun named Mr. Hereot a Clergyman, Mr. Menzies, Major Sinclair, and Mr. George Leſly, a Lawyer.

And then he again withdrew.

And the Names of the ſeveral Perſons mentioned by the Earl of Wintoun being read to him,

Ordered, That they have leave to repair to the ſaid Earl at any convenient Hour, any time before the ſitting of the Houſe to-morrow, in order to adviſe him in the naming of Council, and a Sollicitor to aſſiſt him in his Defence.

Ordered, That the ſeveral Lords impeached, or any of them, have Liberty to cauſe Search to be made, and Copies of Records and Journals to be taken out, in order to their Defence; and that the ſaid Lords ſhall have Summons iſſued for ſuch Witneſſes as they ſhall reſpectively ſend in the Names of, to be by them made uſe of at their Trials; which Witneſſes ſhall have the Protection of this Houſe for their ſafe coming and going, during the Time of the ſaid Trials.

Die Jovis 12 Januarii, 1715.

A Petition of George Earl of Wintoun was preſented to the Houſe and read, praying that he may have ſome further Time for nominating Council, and a Sollicitor to act for him, and in the mean time to allow his Friends formerly named to have acceſs to him; he having cauſed Application to be made to Sir Thomas Powis, and Mr. Mead, to have appeared for him, but they both excuſed themſelves.

Ordered, That the ſame Perſons before allow'd to go to the Petitioner, have leave to reſort to him at any ſeaſonable Time, before Eleven of the Clock to-morrow in the Forenoon, in order to the adviſing him in naming other Council, inſtead of thoſe who have refuſed.

Whereas by Order of this Houſe on Tueſday laſt, the Lords impeached were to put in their reſpective Anſwers to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt them by the Houſe of Commons on Saturday laſt: The Houſe being this Day moved at the Requeſt of the Earl of Derwentwater and Lord Widdrington, to grant them further Time to put in their Anſwers to the ſaid Articles of Impeachment: It is Ordered, that all the ſaid Lords have hereby further Time allowed to put in their reſpective Anſwers to the ſaid Articles till Monday next at one of the Clock.

Die Lunæ 16 Januarii, 1715.

Whereas by Order of this Houſe on Thurſday laſt, the Lords impeached were allowed Time to put in their Anſwers till this Day to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt them, the Houſe being this Day moved, in regard the Council aſſign'd ſome of the ſaid Lords refuſed to be concerned for them, that Thurſday next may be appointed peremptorily for them to put in their ſeveral Anſwers to the ſaid Articles: It is Ordered, That the ſeveral Lords do peremptorily put in their ſeveral Anſwers to the ſaid Articles on Thurſday next at one of the Clock; and that the Lieutenant of his Majeſty's Tower of London do bring to this Houſe, on that Day, by that Time, the ſaid ſeveral Lords for the Purpoſes aforeſaid; and that Notice be forthwith given them of this Order.

Die Jovis 19 Januarii, 1715.

The Earl of Wintoun was brought to the Bar, by the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black Rod, where he kneeled until the Lord Chancellor directed him to riſe, and his Lordſhip acquainted him with the above-mentioned Order, and demanded of him if he was ready to put in his Anſwer.

He ſaid he had a Petition to preſent to the Houſe: He was an entire Stranger to the Nature of their Lordſhips Proceedings, and deſired his Petition might be read; and the ſame was read as follows.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Aſſembled.

The Humble Petition of George Earl of Wintoun,

Humly Sheweth,

THAT on Thurſday laſt I having applied to your Lordſhips, repreſenting how I had caus'd Application to be made to two Lawyers, to act as Council for me, in the Impeachment exhibited before your Lordſhips againſt me by the Honourable Houſe of Commons, and that they both declin'd to meddle, for Reaſons then given; your Lordſhips were pleas'd to allow me ſome more Time for nominating of Council, and Sollicitors, and this Day for giving in my Anſwers; but by Reaſon of my cloſe Confinement, and that your Lordſhips Order for allowing ſome Perſons to have acceſs to me, expired on Friday laſt at Eleven Forenoon; I have had no Opportunity of naming other Council and Sollicitors; nor can I have the Aſſiſtance of any, till they are appointed by your Lordſhips, and they allow'd acceſs to me.

That your Petitioner has ſeveral Specialities and Matters of great Moment, which he conceives neceſſary to be a Part of his Anſwers, and which cannot be drawn into Form, without the Aſſiſtance of his Council and Sollicitors.

Foraſmuch therefore as this Affair is to me of the greateſt Importance; may it pleaſe your Lordſhips to aſſign Sir Conſtantine Phipps, and Mr. Peer Williams, to be Council, and Charles Menzies, and Mr. James Leſlie, to be my Sollicitors; and to order that they may have acceſs to me from Time to Time during my Trial; as alſo that your Lordſhips would be pleas'd to allow Mr. George Hereot, a Miniſter of the Church of England, to have acceſs to me from Time to Time, ſeeing I am confin'd in a Room alone.

And your Petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c.

WINTOUN.

The ſaid Earl of Wintoun was directed to withdraw; and being withdrawn accordingly,

The Order made on Thurſday laſt upon his Petition was read, as alſo the ſeveral Orders made on Monday laſt.

Ordered, That the Council mentioned in the ſaid Petition be aſſigned him, and that either of the ſaid Sollicitors be likewiſe aſſigned, and that he have Time to put in his Anſwer to the ſaid Articles till Monday next. And that the Clergyman mention'd in his Petition, being his Relation, may have acceſs to him, provided he will ſtay in Cuſtody with him during his Confinement.

Then the Earl of Wintoun was again called in, and the Lord Chancellor acquainted him, that the Houſe had conſidered his Petition, and aſſign'd him the Council he deſir'd; and would aſſign him either of the two Sollicitors he ſhould chuſe; and that the Clergyman above-mentioned might come to him upon the Condition before expreſſed. Then the ſaid Earl of Wintoun naming Mr. Menzies, the Houſe accordingly aſſign'd him for his Sollicitor, and Ordered, that the ſaid Council and Sollicitor may have acceſs to him from Time to Time at all ſeaſonable Hours; and he withdrew.

Die Sabbati 21 Januarii 1715.

A Petition of George Earl of Wintoun was preſented to the Houſe and read, praying that their Lordſhips will allow him ſuch further Time for putting in his Anſwer, as their Lordſhips ſhall think fit.

Ordered, That the ſaid Petition be rejected.

Die Lunæ 23 Januarii, 1715.

The Earl of Wintoun being brought to the Houſe according to Order by the Lieutenant of the Tower, the Gentleman-Uſher was commanded to bring him to the Bar, where he kneel'd until he was directed by the Lord Chancellor to riſe; and his Lordſhip acquainted him that this was the peremptory Day appointed by the Houſe for his putting in his Anſwer to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Houſe of Commons, and asked him if he was ready to put in his Anſwer.

He thereupon made ſome Excuſes, and deſired further Time for that purpoſe;

And was directed to withdraw.

Ordered, That the Earl of Wintoun be called in, and acquainted, that this Houſe, upon conſidering his Petition on Saturday laſt, for further Time to put in his Anſwer to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him, did reject his ſaid Petition; and having indulged him more than any of the Lords impeached, are ſtill of Opinion (this being the peremptory Day for putting in his Anſwer) to allow him no further Time, and that the Conſequence of his refuſing to plead which will enſue in Law is, that Judgment will be awarded againſt him, as if he had pleaded guilty. Then,

He was accordingly called in, and the Lord Chancellor acquainted him with the ſaid Matter.

He thereupon delivered in at the Bar his Anſwer fairly engroſſed on Parchment, which was read.

Die Sabbati 28 Januarii, 1715.

The Commons replied to the Anſwer of the Earl of Wintoun.

Die Mercurii 8 Februarii, 1715.

Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, that Thurſday the ſixteenth Day of this inſtant February be, and is hereby appointed for the Trial of George Earl of Wintoun at the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, upon the Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt him by the Houſe of Commons.

Die Veneris 10 Februarii, 1715.

Upon reading the Petition of George Earl of Wintoun, ſetting forth, that he had a Petition in the Houſe on Wedneſday laſt, when their Lordſhips appointed Thurſday next for the Petitioner's Trial, deſiring that Conſideration might be had to the diſtance of the Place, and the Seaſon of the Year, for bringing up of his Witneſſes, both Men and Women, from Scotland, and other Parts; but the Noble Peer who promiſed, and would have moved the ſaid Petition, not being preſent at the Time of making the Motion for appointing a Day of Trial, the ſaid Petition was not preſented in Form, which occaſion'd the Appointment of ſo ſhort a Time, wherein it is altogether impoſſible to prepare any thing in order for the ſaid Trial: And praying that this Houſe will grant an Order to compel the ſeveral Witneſſes following (viz.) John Gordon, George Trotter, George Hogg, John Stewart, all Servitors to the Earl of Wintoun, —— Beatoun, Wife to Mr. David Nicholſon in Tranent, Adam Purvis, Clerk of the Epiſcopal Meeting-Houſe in Tranent, Chriſtopher Seton in Port-Seton, Lieutenant-General —— Wills, —— Forſter, Eſq; —— Miller, Eſq; Capt. Alexander Streton, —— Mackintoſh of Bordlim, —— Aenſlie, and —— Tod, Bailiffs of Muſſelbrough, and the School-maſter of Fiſherau, to appear before this Houſe at the Trial, to give Evidence on behalf of the Petitioner; and to allow ſuch Time for their coming hither, as, in regard to the Diſtance of the Place, and the Seaſon of the Year, and the Importance of the Affair, their Lordſhips, in their great Wiſdom and Juſtice ſhall think reaſonable: It is Ordered, That the Time appointed for the Trial of the Petitioner in Weſtminſter-Hall be, and is hereby, enlarged to Thurſday the eighth Day of March next: And that the ſeveral Perſons afore-named be, and are hereby required, to attend this Houſe on Thurſday the ſaid eighth Day of March, as Witneſſes on behalf of the Petitioner, except ſuch of the ſaid Perſons as are now Priſoners for High-Treaſon; and that they ſhall have the Protection of this Houſe for their ſafe coming and going, during the Time of the ſaid Trial.

Trial put off to Thursday March 8.

Die Lunæ 5 Martii, 1715.

Upon reading the Petition of George Earl of Wintoun, ſetting forth, that his Agents have uſed all Diligence poſſible in ſerving the Order of this Houſe for the Attendance of his Witneſſes; and now they are all on their Way hither, part by Sea and part by Land: And that the Nature of his Defence is ſuch, that if the Witneſſes were arrived, as none of them are, the Time would be too ſhort to prepare his Briefs, and inſtruct his Council; and praying that the Time appointed for his ſaid Trial, may be enlarged for ſuch Time as their Lordſhips, in their great Juſtice and Wiſdom, ſhall think proper, in a Caſe of ſo great Conſequence: It is order'd, that the Time appointed for the Petitioner's Trial be, and is hereby enlarged till Thurſday the fifteenth Day of this inſtant March, at ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Die Lunæ 12 Martii, 1715.

A Petition of George Earl of Wintoun was preſented to the Houſe and read, ſetting forth, that his Agents have uſed all poſſible Diligence in getting his Witneſſes hither, and ſeveral of them are lately arrived, but four of the moſt material of them, tho' they all be on their Way hither, are not yet come up, ſome of them being lame and others very infirm, ſo that they are not able to travel ſo quickly; and praying, that the Time appointed for his Trial may be enlarged for ſuch Time as their Lordſhips, in their great Juſtice and Wiſdom, ſhall think proper, in a Caſe of ſo great Concern.

And after Debate thereupon, and reading the Orders made in relation to the ſaid Trial, Charles Menzies, the Petitioner's Solicitor, was called in and examined upon Oath at the Bar, touching the Allegations of the ſaid Petition; and failing to make good the ſame;

And being withdrawn,

It was moved to reject the Petition.

And the Queſtion being put whether the ſaid Petition ſhall be rejected, it was reſolved in the Affirmative.

Die Martis 13 Martii, 1715.

Several Orders were made for preſerving the Peace, and touching the Courſe of Proceeding, to, and at the enſuing Trial; and among them,

Ordered, That the Council aſſigned the ſaid Earl of Wintoun may be preſent when he is at the Bar, in order to be heard touching any Point or Matter of Law, if any ſuch ſhall ariſe.

Die Mercurii 14 Martii, 1715.

Upon reading the Petition of George Earl of Wintoun, praying that this Houſe will be pleaſed to aſſign, and add Mr. Kettelby, and Dr. Strahan to his Council formerly named, and that they may have acceſs to him during his Confinement: It is Ordered, that the Council above-mentioned be aſſigned the Petitioner, to be heard to Matters of Law, but not to Matters of Fact, ſo as not to put off the Petitioner's Trial, and that they, or either of them have acceſs to the Petitioner from Time to Time, at all ſeaſonable Times.

A Motion being made, that the following Perſons, whoſe Names were contained in a Liſt exhibited at the ſame Time, on behalf of the Earl of Wintoun, might be ſummon'd as Witneſſes for the ſaid Earl at his Trial; being then, as alledg'd, in or near the City of London.

Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, that John Gordon of Kirkhill, Alexander Nisbet Writer in Edinburgh, William Knox, Thomas Baine, John Watteſone, all three of Seaton, Mrs. Magdalen Corſbie of Canongate, Agnes Duncan of Seaton, Dr. Lidderdale a Phyſician, Dr. Cockburne a Divine, Dr. John Inglis, Major Sinclair, George Trotter, and George Hogg of Seaton, be and are hereby required to attend this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, to-morrow at ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, in order to be examined as Witneſſes, on the behalf of George Earl of Wintoun at his Trial.

The Houſe being informed that the Earl of Wintoun deſired that General Carpenter might be examined as a Witneſs at his Trial:

The ſaid General Carpenter being a Member of the Houſe of Commons;

A Meſſage was ſent to that Houſe by Mr. Holford and Mr. Lovibond, to acquaint them, that the Lords do deſire that they will give leave to the ſaid General Carpenter to be examined at the ſaid Earl's Trial.

Ordered, That the Witneſſes which ſhall be produced by the Earl of Wintoun to be examined in his Defence, ſhall be examined upon Oath, which Oath to be adminiſter'd to the Witneſſes on both Sides at the ſaid Trial ſhall be this:

> The Evidence which you ſhall give in this Trial, concerning George Earl of Wintoun, Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.
> So help you God, and the Contents of this Book.

Die Jovis 15 Martii, 1715.

The Meſſengers ſent Yeſterday to the Houſe of Commons return Anſwer, That the Commons have given leave to General Carpenter to be examined as a Witneſs at the Trial of George Earl of Wintoun.

The Houſe was then adjourn'd to Weſtminſter-Hall.

Serjeant at Arms. God ſave the King.

Then the Herald and Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, after three Reverences, kneeling, preſented the White Staff to his Grace; and then his Grace, attended by the Herald, Black Rod and Seal-Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne) removed from the Wool-Pack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermoſt Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that purpoſe, and then ſeated himſelf in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Seal-Bearer holding the Purſe on the Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Then another Proclamation was made, as follows.

O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London bring forth your Priſoner to the Bar, according to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

Then George Earl of Wintoun was brought to the Bar by the Deputy Governour of the Tower, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Jaylor, who ſtood with it on the Left Hand of the Priſoner, with the Edge turned from him. The Priſoner when he approached the Bar (after kneeling) bowed to his Grace the Lord High-Steward, and to the Houſe of Peers; which Compliment was returned him by his Grace, and the Houſe of Peers.

And Proclamation being again made for keeping Silence,

The Lord High-Steward ſpake to the Priſoner as follows.

George Earl of Wintoun, you are brought to the Bar of this Auguſt Judicature, in order to a fair and impartial Trial, on the Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt you by the Commons of Great-Britain in Parliament aſſembled; to which you have anſwered, and pleaded Not Guilty: Thereupon the Commons have replied, and undertaken to prove you Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand impeached.

Under this heavy Charge (of which your Lordſhip has long ſince had a Copy, and which you will now hear read again) nothing can be a greater Support to your Mind (eſpecially if not conſcious of Guilt) than to conſider, that you are about to be tried by your Peers; not any ſelect Number of them, but by their whole Body aſſembled in Parliament, and indifferently ſummoned to attend this Trial.

Hence your Lordſhip may be aſſured, that Juſtice will be adminiſter'd to you, attended not only with that common Degree of Compaſſion which Humanity itſelf derives to Perſons in your Condition, but alſo with that extraordinary Concern for you, which naturally flows from a Parity of Circumſtances common to yourſelf, and to them who judge you, (thoſe Bonds, the weighty Accuſation laid upon you, with its Conſequences, almoſt only excepted.)

On the other hand, you muſt not hope, that if you ſhall be clearly prov'd guilty, their Lordſhips, being under the ſtrongeſt Obligation to do Right that can be laid on noble Minds, I mean that of their Honour, will not break through all the Difficulties unmerited Pity may put in their way, to do perfect Juſtice upon you, however miſerable that muſt render your Condition.

Your Lordſhip will not be interrupted while you are making your Defence in a proper manner; and therefore you will alſo attend with Patience to what ſhall be ſaid by the Managers of the Houſe of Commons, or given in Evidence againſt you.

When any of the Witneſſes produced againſt you by the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons are thoroughly examined by them, your Lordſhip will have Liberty to croſs-examine every Witneſs before another is called.

But the Council aſſigned you are not to croſs-examine any Witneſſes, nor to give you any Aſſiſtance publick or private, while Matter of Fact only is in Queſtion; but if any Matter of Law ariſe during the Courſe of your Trial, they may ſpeak to it in your Lordſhip's Behalf: And to that End they are permitted to be within hearing, that they may be the more ready and able to ſerve your Lordſhip on ſuch Occaſion.

Your Lordſhip is the firſt that on an Impeachment for High-Treaſon will have had the Benefit of a good Law made in the firſt Year of the late Queen (ſince the Revolution;) whereby in all Trials for High-Treaſon, as well as other capital Offences mentioned in the Act, the Witneſſes produced on the Part of the Priſoner are to be examined on their Oaths: So that your Witneſſes will become entitled, in Reſpect of the Obligation under which they give their Teſtimony, to the ſame Degree of Credit as the Witneſſes produced againſt you will be.

I take it for granted, that if your Lordſhip deſires it, you will be allowed the Uſe of Pen, Ink, and Paper, to take Notes in order to your Defence: And I doubt not but if during the Trial you are obſerved to omit any juſt Advantage which the Law allows you, I ſhall not only be excuſed, but approved, if I put you in mind of it.

I am alſo commanded to acquaint your Lordſhip, that when you have Occaſion to ſpeak you are to addreſs yourſelf to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular; as all others who ſhall have Occaſion to ſpeak in this Trial will likewiſe take notice they are to do.

The Lord High-Steward having done, commanded the Articles of Impeachment, and the Earl of Wintoun's Anſwer thereunto, as alſo the Replication of the Commons to the ſaid Anſwer, to be read; and the ſame were read accordingly, as follows.

ARTICLES of Impeachment of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn.

WHEREAS for many Years laſt a moſt wicked Deſign and Contrivance has been formed and carried on, to ſubvert the ancient and eſtabliſhed Government, and the good Laws of theſe Kingdoms, to extirpate the true Proteſtant Religion therein eſtabliſhed, and to deſtroy its Profeſſors; and inſtead thereof, to introduce and ſettle Popery and Arbitrary Power; in which unnatural and horrid Conſpiracy great Numbers of Perſons of different Degrees and Qualities have concerned themſelves and acted; and many Proteſtants, pretending an uncommon Zeal for the Church of England, have joined themſelves with profeſſed Papiſts, uniting their Endeavours to accompliſh and execute the aforeſaid wicked and traiterous Deſigns:

And whereas it pleaſed Almighty God in his good Providence, and in his great Mercy and Goodneſs to theſe Nations, to crown the unwearied Endeavours of his late Majeſty King William the Third of ever-glorious Memory, by making him the Inſtrument to procure the Settlement of the Crown of theſe Realms in the Illuſtrious Houſe of Hanover, as the only Means under God to preſerve our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and to ſecure the Proteſtant Intereſt of Europe; ſince which happy Eſtabliſhment the ſaid Conſpirators have been indefatigable in their Endeavours to deſtroy the ſame, and to make Way for the vain and groundleſs Hopes of a ſpurious Impoſtor and Popiſh Pretender to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms.

And to accompliſh theſe Ends, the moſt immoral, irreligious and unchriſtian-like Methods have been taken, but more particularly in the laſt Years of the Reign of the late Queen Anne, during which Time all imaginable Endeavours were uſed by the ſaid Conſpirators to prejudice the Minds of the Subjects of this Realm againſt the Legality and Juſtice of the ſaid Settlement of the Crown: And for that purpoſe the Holy Scriptures were wreſted, and the moſt wholſome Doctrines of the Church of England perverted and abuſed by Men in Holy Orders, in the moſt publick and ſcandalous Manner, in order to condemn the Juſtice of the late happy Revolution; and thereby to ſap and undermine the Foundation of the ſaid happy Eſtabliſhment; and the moſt notorious Inſtruments of theſe wicked Purpoſes were countenanced by particular Marks of publick Favour and Diſtinction; falſe and dangerous Notions of a ſole Hereditary Right to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms were propagated and encouraged by Perſons in the higheſt Truſt and Employments, contrary to the ancient, undoubted doubted and eſtabliſhed Laws of theſe Kingdoms; jeſuitical and ſcandalous Diſtinctions were invented and publickly inculcated, to enervate the Force and Obligation of thoſe Oaths which had been contrived in the plaineſt and ſtrongeſt Terms by the Wiſdom of Parliament for the Security of the ſaid Eſtabliſhment; and to conceal their Deſigns, and thereby the better to enable them to carry on the ſame, great Numbers of the ſaid Conſpirators of all Ranks and Conditions, pretending a Zeal for the Proteſtant Succeſſion, openly and voluntarily took the ſaid Oaths; groundleſs Fears of the Danger of the Church of England were fomented throughout theſe Kingdoms, to diſorder the Minds of well-diſpoſed Proteſtants.

By all which and many other ſuch ungodly Practices of the ſaid Conſpirators, the moſt cauſeleſs and dangerous Jealouſies and Diſſatisfactions were created in the Minds of the good People of this Kingdom, and great Numbers of well-meaning, but deluded Proteſtants were much diſquieted.

But nevertheleſs theſe diſhoneſt Methods were purſued by the ſaid Conſpirators with indefatigable Induſtry, as the only Means to weaken the Foundations of the ſaid happy Eſtabliſhment.

And whereas the Diſſolution of the late glorious Confederacy againſt France, and the Loſs of the Ballance of Power in Europe, were further Steps neceſſary to compleat the Deſigns of the ſaid Conſpirators; and the ſame being effected by the late ignominious Peace with France, the French King was render'd formidable, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion was thereby brought into the moſt imminent Danger; and by theſe and other pernicious Meaſures, the Deſtruction ſo long intended by the ſaid Conſpirators, for theſe poor Nations, ſeemed near at Hand.

At which Time, and under which moſt deplorable Circumſtances, it pleaſed Almighty God in his infinite Wiſdom to call to himſelf the late Queen Anne, and by a Concurrence of many moſt wonderful Providences to give a quiet and peaceable Acceſſion to his preſent moſt Gracious Majeſty to the Throne of his Anceſtors, to which he was received with one full Voice and Conſent of Tongue and Heart, and the united Joy of every good Subject and good Proteſtant, as their only lawful and rightful Liege Lord; and altho' from the Moment his Majeſty aſcended the Throne to this Day, his Reign has been one Series of Wiſdom, Juſtice and Clemency; his Labours conſtant, unwearied and ſucceſsful to retrieve the Honour and Reputation of theſe Nations; to re-eſtabliſh the Trade and recover the Wealth of his Kingdoms; and although all imaginable Encouragement has been given to the Church of England, and all Tenderneſs ſhewn even to his Popiſh Subjects, and his conſtant Care has been to procure the univerſal Good of his People; nevertheleſs the ſaid Conſpirators have, by the moſt vile and impious Methods, renewed their Endeavours to throw theſe Kingdoms into the utmoſt Confuſion, and to entail endleſs Miſeries on us and our Poſterities: For theſe Ends many of the abovementioned moſt wicked and dangerous Practices have been repeated with the utmoſt Induſtry and Inveteracy, to delude, diſorder and corrupt the Minds of his Majeſty's good Subjects; the moſt groundleſs Jealouſies have been fomented againſt his wiſe and happy Adminiſtration, and in many Parts of his Kingdoms the moſt unnatural, unexampled Riots and Tumults, by the ſecret and malicious Endeavours of the ſaid Conſpirators, have been procured, ſtirred up, and encouraged againſt his peaceable Proteſtant Subjects, under falſe Pretences of Zeal for the Church of England, and thereby more effectually to delude his good Subjects, and ſeduce them from their Allegiance, and prepare them for an open Rebellion.

And the ſaid Conſpirators having at length reſolved to deprive theſe Nations of the invaluable Bleſſings which they now enjoy under the wiſe and gentle Reign of his preſent moſt gracious Majeſty King George, and of the certain Proſpect of Happineſs which they have for their Poſterity, in a Succeſſion of Princes derived from himſelf; did contrive, confederate, and reſolve to put their moſt malicious, wicked, and traiterous Deſigns into immediate Execution; for which purpoſe, James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, together with Thomas Forſter, Jun. the Lord Charles Murray, Edward Howard, Thomas Errington, John Clavering, William Shaftoe, Sir Francis Anderton, Ralph Standiſh, Richard Townly, Thomas Butler, Thomas Walton, Gabriel Haſket, Richard Gaſcoigne, and divers other Perſons, as falſe Traitors to his preſent moſt ſacred Majeſty King George, the only lawful and undoubted Sovereign of theſe Kingdoms, having withdrawn their Allegiance, and cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which they as good and faithful Subjects owed to his ſaid Majeſty, did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November, 1715. moſt wickedly, maliciouſly, falſely and traiterouſly imagine and compaſs the Death of his ſaid moſt ſacred Majeſty.

And for the accompliſhing and executing their ſaid traiterous Purpoſe, they the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, did, in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of them, and at divers other Times, and in divers Places within this Kingdom, wickedly and traiterouſly agree, confederate, conſpire, and reſolve, together with many other evil-diſpoſed Perſons, to raiſe, excite, and levy within the Counties of Teviotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and the County Palatine of Lancaſter, and elſewhere within this Kingdom, a moſt cruel, bloody, and deſtructive War, againſt his Majeſty, in order to depoſe and murther his ſacred Majeſty, and to deprive him of his Royal State, Crown and Dignity.

aſſiſt in the forming and compoſing an Army of Men, conſiſting of his Majeſty's Liege Subjects, in order to wage War againſt his ſaid Majeſty, for and in behalf and in favour of the ſaid Pretender to the Crown of theſe Realms; and the ſaid laſt mentioned Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, at the Time and Times and Places aforeſaid; and at divers other Times and Places within this Kingdom, did maliciouſly and traiterouſly make, levy, and raiſe War and Rebellion againſt his moſt ſacred Majeſty; and in a warlike and hoſtile Manner did march thro' and invade ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom; and did unlawfully take and ſeize the Horſes and other the Goods and Chattels of many of the peaceable and good Subjects of his Majeſty, and in other Places did take and ſeize, from his Majeſty's faithful Subjects, Guns, and other warlike Inſtruments, for the carrying on their traiterous Purpoſes.

And the ſaid laſt mentioned Conſpirators, their Complices and Confederates, during their March and Invaſion aforeſaid, in open Defiance of his moſt ſacred Majeſty's juſt and undoubted Title to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, did wickedly and traiterouſly cauſe and procure the ſaid Pretender to be proclaimed, in the moſt publick and ſolemn Manner, as King of theſe Realms; and in ſeveral Places in the Counties aforeſaid, or ſome of them, did unlawfully take and ſeize from his Majeſty's Officers of the Revenue the publick Money, for the Uſe and Service of the ſaid Pretender; and tho' many of the Conſpirators are avowed Profeſſors of the Popiſh Religion, yet the more effectually to cover and diſguiſe their moſt wicked and traiterous Deſigns, and to delude his Majeſty's Subjects, they did prevail on and procure ſeveral Men in Holy Orders, Miniſters of the Church of England, and who had before that Time abjured the ſaid Pretender, to accompany, countenance and abet the ſaid moſt traiterous Enterprize; and in ſeveral Places in the Counties aforeſaid, where the ſaid Conſpirators, their Complices and Confederates then were, to pray for the ſaid Pretender in the publick Churches, as King of theſe Realms.

That the ſaid laſt mentioned Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, did, on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth or Thirteenth of November aforeſaid, traiterouſly ſeize and poſſeſs themſelves of the Town of Preſton in the County Palatine of Lancaſter againſt his Majeſty, and did then and there in a warlike and hoſtile Manner levy War, oppoſe, engage, and fight againſt his Majeſty's Forces; and did then and there cauſe and procure a miſerable and horrid Slaughter and Murther of many of his Majeſty's faithful Subjects.

All which Treaſons and Crimes abovementioned were contrived, committed, perpetrated, acted and done, by the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and other the Conſpirators aforeſaid, againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity; and contrary to the Duty of their Allegiance, and againſt the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom.

Of all which Treaſons and Crimes, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, do, in the Name of themſelves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and every of them.

And the ſaid Commons by Proteſtation ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Accuſations or Impeachments againſt the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them; and alſo of replying to the Anſwers which the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them, ſhall make to the Premiſſes, or any of them, or to any Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be by them exhibited according to the Courſe and Proceedings of Parliament; and do pray, that the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, be put to anſwer all and every the Premiſſes: And that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments may be upon them and every of them had and uſed as ſhall be agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

The Anſwer of George Earl of Wintoun, to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Honourable Houſe of Commons, for High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours.

THE ſaid Earl ſaving to himſelf all Benefit of Exception to the Incertainties and Inſufficiencies in the ſaid Articles of Impeachment contained, and alſo all Advantages and Privileges belonging to him as a Peer of Great Britain, for Anſwer to the ſaid Articles ſays, That he cannot but eſteem it the greateſt Addition to his Afflictions, to fall under the Diſpleaſure of the Honourable Houſe of Commons: Yet as his Innocence under theſe Misfortunes is his Support, ſo he hopes it will be his Security. He being taken with Perſons that were in Arms againſt the Government, might reaſonably be preſumed to be equally guilty, and to be juſtly joined with them in the ſame Impeachment; but when it ſhall appear how much the Circumſtances of his Caſe differ from others, he does not doubt but your Lordſhips great Juſtice will diſtinguiſh him in Judgment; and that it will be as pleaſing to that Honourable Body, who are his Accuſers, to have an innocent Man acquitted, as one that is guilty condemned. He begs leave to take notice, that he is deſcended from a very ancient, noble Family, in whoſe Blood the Streams of Loyalty were always pure, never corrupted or polluted with Treaſon or Sedition; and he never degenerated ſo much from his Loyal Anceſtors, as to form or carry on any Deſign to ſubvert or alter the Conſtitution of theſe Kingdoms, but for the Preſervation of it was upon all Occaſions ready to ſacrifice his Fortune, and even his Life: He was ſo cautious to avoid giving occaſion to be ſuſpected by the Government, that about eight Years ago, upon his Return from his Travails, he withdrew from all Converſation, and confined himſelf to his Houſe, never correſponded by Letter with any Perſon whatſoever; yet to his great Misfortune, he could not be quiet or ſafe in his cloſeſt Retirement; for many Perſons both Officers and others of the Militia of the Shire of Lothian, under the ſpecious Pretence of ſerving the Government, but in reality actuated by private Pique and Revenge, ſeveral times, contrary to Law, forcibly entred by Night into his Dwelling-houſe, called Seaton Palace, rifled it, turned his Servants out of Doors, and carried away the Proviſions of his Family. The moſt Sacred Places did not eſcape their Fury and Reſentment, they broke into his Chapel, defaced the Monuments of his Anceſtors, took up the Stones of their Sepulchres, thruſt Irons thro' their Bodies, and treated them in a moſt barbarous, inhuman and unchriſtian-like manner; Cannon and Mortars were brought to demoliſh his Houſe, and ſeveral Troops of Dragoons having gotten the Poſſeſſion thereof, ſome of them kept Guard there, and when they left it, many of the Militia enter'd, and kept Poſſeſſion thereof till they were driven from thence by the Highlanders, by whom he was likewiſe very ill treated, he being the only Perſon that was plunder'd by them. By theſe and many other Severities, the ſaid Earl was forced to leave his Houſe, and ſeek for Shelter among his Tenants and Neighbours, where he was purſued from Houſe to Houſe, and at laſt very unfortunately driven into the Company of ſome of the Gentlemen named in the Impeachment. He preſumes to affirm to your Lordſhips, that he did not join them with a traiterous or rebellious Deſign, but only with an Intention to preſerve himſelf from being inſulted and aſſaſſinated; for he had been once before taken up without any Warrant or Authority, and having got from the Perſons in whoſe Cuſtody he was, they threatned, if they could retake him, to murder him; and had before imbrued their Hands in the Blood of the Son of a neighbouring Gentleman. He never intended to have left his own Country; and when ſome Gentlemen mentioned coming into England, he oppos'd it; he was far from aſſiſting or encouraging them in their Undertakings; he was not admitted into their Secrets, nor informed of their Deſigns, and was ſo much a Stranger to their Proceedings, that when they marched towards Northumberland, he was told they were going along the Skirts of the Hills in Scotland to avoid General Carpenter; but afterwards diſcovered they were in England when it was too late, and to return alone into Scotland was too hazardous, which he did not attempt, becauſe he had reaſon to believe they would ſoon go back to Scotland.

Altho' he was conſtrain'd to keep the other Lords and Gentlemen Company, yet he never joined with them in any act of Hoſtility, nor aſſiſted in taking any of the Publick Money, or in ſeizing any Guns or other warlike Inſtruments, or countenanced or abetted them therein. He did not at Preſton or elſewhere fire a Piſtol, offer Violence to any Perſon whatſoever, or in any other manner fight againſt or reſiſt his Majeſty's Forces, but with the reſt ſurrendered himſelf to General Wills. The Honour of a Peer is more valuable than Life it ſelf, and therefore he ought to be ſo much the more cautious that it be not ſtained with the leaſt Imputation of Guilt. The ſaid Earl knows his Innocence, and hopes your Lordſhips will excuſe him, if in Juſtice to himſelf, and for the Preſervation of his Honour, he does not take upon him the Guilt of Crimes, the very Thoughts of which were always Strangers to his Breaſt: And therefore, in Anſwer to the Impeachment, he ſays, that he is Not Guilty of the Treaſon and other the Crimes and Miſdemeanours mentioned in the ſaid Articles, or any of them, in Manner and Form as is therein alledged; and for his Trial puts himſelf on your Lordſhips, who are his Peers, and begs your Lordſhips to believe that his Anſwer proceeds from the Senſe he has of the Truth of it, and not from Obſtinacy or any Inclination to give your Lordſhips and the honourable Houſe of Commons any unneceſſary Trouble, or from the leaſt Doubt or Miſtruſt of his Majeſty's Clemency. But if upon his Trial it ſhall appear, that he hath committed any Act which in the Rigour of the Law may be conſtrued to amount to the Crime of High-Treaſon, he hopes the Innocence of his Heart, and his Ignorance in the Law will, by the Power of your Lordſhips Interceſſion, render him an Object of his Majeſty's Mercy, which he and the reſt at the time of ſurrendring themſelves were encouraged by his Majeſty's Officers to depend upon. The ſaid Earl ſubmits his Caſe thus circumſtanced to your Lordſhips great Wiſdom and Judgment, and humbly prays your Lordſhips favourable Interpretation thereof, not doubting but to make his Innocence appear to your Lordſhips Satisfaction.

WINTOUN.

The Reply of the Houſe of Commons to the Anſwer of George Earl of Wintoun.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Hampden and others, to acquaint this Houſe, that they have conſidered the Anſwer of George Earl of Wintoun to the Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes aſſembled in Parliament, and do aver their Charge againſt the ſaid George Earl of Wintoun for High-Treaſon to be true, and that the ſaid Earl of Wintoun is guilty of the High-Treaſon in ſuch manner as he ſtands impeached; and that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge againſt him at ſuch convenient time as ſhall be appointed for that purpoſe.

Lord High-Steward. The Diſtance of this Place from the Bar is ſo very great, that I am obliged to aſk your Lordſhips Leave that I come down to the Table.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Which being done accordingly,

The Lord High-Steward ſaid, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, you will be pleaſed now to proceed.

Mr. Hampden. MY Lords, we appear in this Place in behalf of all the Commons of Great Britain, to make good the Impeachment of High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, George Earl of Wintoun.

The Commons in Parliament aſſembled being juſtly alarmed with the Dangers to which this Nation has been expoſed by the late unnatural Rebellion, have found it incumbent on them to enquire into the Authors and Promoters of ſo fatal and pernicious an Attempt, which was no leſs than to deprive theſe Nations of the invaluable Bleſſings which they enjoy under the wiſe and gentle Reign of his moſt Sacred Majeſty King George.

The indiſpenſable Duty which the Commons owe to his Majeſty, and to thoſe they repreſent, engage them to appear in the Cauſe of their Country, by examining into the Riſe and Progreſs of the ſaid late traiterous Enterprize, contrived and carried on with an Intent to depoſe and murder his ſaid Majeſty, and to ſet up a Popiſh Pretender to the Crown of theſe Realms, and in conſequence, to change the Conſtitution of this Nation, and to introduce a ſlavith and arbitrary Government.

The Earl of Wintoun appearing to the Commons to have been deeply engaged in the late Rebellion, their Zeal and Affection, and their Concern for the Safety of the Nation, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, and the Liberties of the People, have rendered it neceſſary for them to bring to your Lordſhips Bar this Offender, againſt whom they have, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, exhibited Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon, ſetting forth and charging,

That the Earl of Wintoun (with his Aſſociates named in the Articles, and divers others) contrary to his Allegiance, did traiterouſly conſpire and imagine the Death of his moſt Sacred Majeſty; and in Aid of ſuch Treaſon, did in the Months of September, October, or November 1715, reſolve to levy in ſeveral Parts of Scotland and England a moſt deſtructive War againſt his Majeſty.

That his Lordſhip, with other his Confederates, did aſſemble in a warlike manner, and procur'd Arms, Ammunition, and warlike Inſtruments, and did compoſe an Army to wage War againſt his Majeſty, and did march thro' and invade ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom, and unlawfully ſeiz'd his Majeſty's Treaſure for the Service of the Pretender, and took away the Horſes and other Goods of many of his Majeſty's peaceable Subjects.

And that during the ſaid March and Invaſion, the Earl of Wintoun, with other Rebels, did, in open Defiance of his Majeſty's undoubted Title to the Crown of theſe Realms, frequently cauſe the Pretender to be proclaimed in a publick and ſolemn manner as King of theſe Realms.

That the more effectually to diſguiſe theſe wicked Intentions, and to delude his Majeſty's Subjects, the ſaid Earl, with other Rebels, did prevail on ſeveral Miniſters of the Church of England, and who had abjur'd the Pretender, to pray for the Pretender in ſeveral publick Churches as King of theſe Realms.

And that the ſaid Earl, his Aſſociates, and Accomplices, did in November laſt, traiterouſly poſſeſs themſelves of the Town of Preſton in the County-Palatine of Lancaſter, and did levy War and fight againſt his Majeſty's Forces, and procur'd a miſerable Slaughter and Murther of many of his Majeſty's good and faithful Subjects.

My Lords, the Earl of Wintoun has, in his Plea to the ſaid Impeachment, thought fit to deny part of this great and heavy Charge; and in Anſwer to other Parts of it, he ſuggeſts to your Lordſhips to the Effect following;

That being taken with Perſons that were in Arms againſt the Government, he might be preſum'd to be equally guilty with them; but that when your Lordſhips ſhall conſider the Circumſtances of his Caſe, he doubts not of finding a Diſtinction from others in your Judgment.

He acquaints your Lordſhips with the Loyalty of his Anceſtors, from whoſe Character, he ſays, he is not ſo much degenerated, as to form or carry on a Deſign againſt the Conſtitution of theſe Kingdoms.

That to avoid being ſuſpected by the Government, he withdrew himſelf ſome Years ago from all Converſation, and retir'd to his own Houſe; but that ſeveral of the Militia of the Shire of Lothian, under pretence of ſerving the Government, did, contrary to Law, forcibly enter his Lordſhip's Houſe, which they rifled, and committed ſeveral other Diſorders there.

That afterwards Cannon and Mortars were brought to demoliſh his Houſe, and ſeveral Troops of Dragoons took Poſſeſſion of it; and upon their leaving it, the Militia came and kept Poſſeſſion of his Houſe till they were driven thence by the Highlanders, by whom he was alſo very ill treated.

That by theſe Severities, and afterwards not being ſuffered to live quietly among his Tenants, where he had retir'd for Shelter, he was driven into the Company of ſome of the Gentlemen named in the Impeachment; but affirms to your Lordſhips, that it was with an Intent to preſerve himſelf from being aſſaſſinated.

That he oppos'd the Propoſition of coming into England, and was not acquainted with the Deſigns of the other Gentlemen with him; and was ſurpriz'd when he found himſelf in England, but declin'd going back, becauſe he believ'd they would ſoon return to Scotland.

That he did not aſſiſt in taking any of the publick Money, or in ſeizing any warlike Inſtruments.

That he did not at Preſton, or elſewhere, fire a Piſtol, offer Violence to any Perſon, or fight againſt his Majeſty's Forces, but ſurrendred himſelf to the King's General.

And as an Inducement for ſuch Surrender, his Lordſhip ſays, that he, and the reſt with him, were at that time encouraged by his Majeſty's Officers to depend on his Majeſty's Mercy.

My Lords, notwithſtanding what is contain'd in the Earl of Wintoun's Plea to the Impeachment of the Commons, and the ſpecious Explanation which his Lordſhip has given to ſuch Proceedings of his, as were a Foundation to the Commons to include his Lordſhip in the Articles againſt the other Lords mentioned therein; we make no queſtion but we ſhall ſhew the Fallacy and Inſufficiency of the ſaid Plea to our Charge againſt him, and make it appear, that no leſs is contain'd in our Accuſation againſt his Lordſhip, than what the Law in every Man's Breaſt, the Light of Nature, and the Rules of Society diſapprove of, and condemn.

We ſhall in the Courſe of our Evidence prove to your Lordſhips, that the Earl of Wintoun joined early with the Rebels in Scotland in the beginning of this Enterprize; and that the Diſorders mentioned in his Plea to have been committed at his Houſe, and which he alledges as the Ground of his leaving it, and ſeeking Shelter among the Rebels, were not the true Cauſe of his joining them, ſince his Lordſhip had left his Houſe before the Highlanders came to it.

This Noble Peer was too great a Perſon to act an ordinary Part in this Rebellion. He openly engag'd in it, and not only appeared in Perſon, but led on, and encouraged his Aſſociates in it; ſome of which, thro' the Bleſſing of God on his Majeſty's Arms, are now in the Hands of Juſtice, and others have ſuffer'd for the ſame Treaſon.

We ſhall prove to your Lordſhips, that the Earl of Wintoun form'd a Troop of Horſe, which he maintain'd at his own Charge.

That he afterwards commanded a Squadron of Horſe, and that he continued his Command thereof in the ſeveral Marches to Preſton, and until the Surrender of that Place to the King's Forces.

That during the ſeveral Marches of the Rebels, the Earl of Wintoun was with them on Horſeback, arm'd with a Sword and a Caſe of Piſtols; and that he never ſhew'd any Uneaſineſs, but always appear'd as forward as any one; and that at the Action at Preſton his Lordſhip was aſſiſting, and very active among the Rebels.

That at ſeveral Places in Scotland and England, his Lordſhip, and other Rebels, caus'd the Pretender to be proclaim'd King of theſe Realms, and that his Lordſhip was preſent at ſuch Proclamations.

That his Lordſhip, and other Rebels, did in ſeveral Places cauſe his Majeſty's Treaſure to be ſeiz'd, for the Service of the Pretender; and did in ſeveral Places prevail on Miniſters of the Church of England, and who had abjur'd the Pretender, to pray for him in the publick Churches, as King of theſe Realms.

That when the Rebels ſurrender'd themſelves at Preſton to the King's Forces, they were far from receiving any Aſſurances of Mercy from his Majeſty's Officers; but were acquainted by the ſaid Officers, that his Lordſhip, and others taken with him, had no Reaſon to expect Mercy, ſince they were taken in open Rebellion againſt his Majeſty.

My Lords, the Commons, who are ever vigilant for the Safety of his Majeſty, and for the Preſervation of the Liberties of the People, cannot anſwer it to God or their Country, if they ſhould neglect to exert themſelves, in bringing to exemplary Juſtice the open and declar'd Inſtruments of this Rebellion; and it is a Satisfaction to the Commons, that in the Courſe of their Interpoſition, to reſcue the Nation from the fatal Conſequences of the late unprovok'd Rebellion, whatever Miſrepreſentations other Proſecutions may have been formerly liable to, the Notoriety of this Rebellion has been ſo evident, that the moſt malicious of our Enemies want Confidence to deny it.

We are not ſurpriz'd, that Papiſts ſhould be engag'd in this Rebellion, tho' the moſt unnatural and unexampled in its Circumſtances, by being void of the leaſt Pretext of Provocation, ſince they maintain it lawful to kill a Heretick King, and ſuch they term his preſent Majeſty, and 'tis declar'd by them, that ſuch a Piece of Service is not only lawful, but pious, and agreeable to God.

But how Proteſtants could be poſſeſſed with ſuch a Spirit of Infatuation, and to ſuch a Degree be deluded, as to believe the moſt ſecure and effectual Way to protect the Church, was to have Recourſe to a Popiſh Prince, to reſcue it from the Danger they imagined it liable to, from the Proteſtant Succeſſion taking place: And how it could enter into the Hearts of Proteſtants to be fir'd with ſuch an ill-directed Zeal, as to act in conjunction with avow'd Enemies of their Religion and Liberties, is not to be accounted for; unleſs ſuch unnatural and deſtructive Attempts are ſome of the neceſſary Conſequences of the late Male-Adminiſtration.

No leſs was to be the Sacrifice, than of his Majeſty, and his Royal Family, (a Succeſſion of Princes appointed by Divine Providence to be the Guardians of the Proteſtant Intereſt in Europe) and of our preſent happy Conſtitution, to appeaſe the Fury of Papiſts and Proteſtants aſſociated in this Rebellion, and who envied us the Bleſſings we enjoy'd by the uninterrupted Exerciſe of our Religious and Civil Rights and Privileges.

Had this Rebellion taken place, this Nation, the Glory of the Reformation, the moſt ſubſtantial Bulwark againſt Popery, and that had at the happy Revolution, under the Influences of King William the Third, of immortal Memory, triumph'd over the arbitrary Deſigns of our Enemies to ſubvert our Conſtitution, was to fall a Victim to Bigotry, Superſtition and Slavery, the pernicious and neceſſary Conſequences of introducing a Religion, void of natural Senſe and natural Conſcience.

If an Attempt to ſubvert the Government, to deſtroy the King, and ſet up a Popiſh Pretender; if marching in an hoſtile Manner; if carrying on a deſtructive War in the Bowels of the Nation, are only Acts of Surprize and Inadvertency, any Rebellion may be palliated over and excus'd; ſince ſcarce any Circumſtances can be added in Aggravation of that, which has lately been rais'd and carried on in this Kingdom.

My Lords, I have acquainted your Lordſhips with the neceſſary Occaſion of this Proſecution: I have endeavour'd in the moſt impartial Manner to diſcharge the Truſt repos'd in me, by opening the Nature of the Charge againſt the Earl at the Bar. I have likewiſe ſtated to your Lordſhips the Subſtance of his Plea to the Impeachment of the Commons. I have given your Lordſhips a general View of the Evidence which we ſhall produce, to make good our Charge, and to ſhew the Invalidity of the ſaid Plea; and from the Malignity of the late rebellious and traiterous Enterprize, and its fatal Tendency, I have repreſented the Neceſſity the Commons were under of applying to your Lordſhips for National Juſtice. I am not inſenſible how deficient I have been, in not ſetting a Matter of this Importance in the moſt advantageous Light; but I make no doubt, but that what is wanting in me, will be ſupplied by the Abilities of others that follow, and that your Lordſhips will find no Defect in their Diſcharge of the Parts they have taken in this Proſecution, whatever you may have found in the Opening of the Charge, and in that Part which has come to my Share.

Sir Joſeph Jekyll. I Have the Command of the Houſe of Commons upon me, to bear a Part in the Proſecution of their Impeachment againſt this Lord at the Bar.

And that which is aſſigned to me, is firſt to obſerve to your Lordſhips the Nature of the Charge; and in the next Place, to take notice of the Defence made to that Charge; and laſtly, to give your Lordſhips a general View of the Evidence which the Commons will produce to maintain their Accuſation.

And this I ſhall do with all the Plainneſs I am capable of, without attempting ſo vain and wicked a Thing, as to impoſe upon your Lordſhips, or divert you from the true Merits of this Cauſe.

My Lords, The Charge exhibited againſt this Lord, is a Charge of High-Treaſon; High-Treaſon at the Common Law, as declared by the Statute of the 25th of King Edward III. And there are two Species of High-Treaſon mention'd in that Statute, which the Commons have taken notice of in their Articles of Impeachment. The Firſt is compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; the Second is levying War againſt his Majeſty.

My Lords, The Overt-Acts that are ſet down in the Articles, I think, may be reduced to theſe Heads: Firſt, a Conſpiracy of the Earl of Wintoun, with other Lords and Gentlemen his Accomplices, to levy War with an Intent to depoſe the King; and a Conſpiracy to levy ſuch a War, hath been held a ſufficient Overt-Act of compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King.

My Lords, The next Overt-Act is, his Lordſhip's joining with his Accomplices in proclaiming the Pretender, which is endeavouring to ſet up another Prince in the Room of his Majeſty; and I believe it will not be doubted, but that is likewiſe an Overt-Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon. And if there wanted another Overt-Act, the levying War againſt the King with an Intent to depoſe him (which is likewiſe mention'd in the Articles, as a diſtinct Species of Treaſon) may ſerve for an Overt-Act of the other Species of compaſſing and imagining the King's Death; for tho' it is reckon'd in the Statute as a diſtinct Treaſon; yet it doth not thereby ceaſe to be of the Nature of an Overt-Act of compaſſing and imagining the King's Death which it was antecedent to, its being declar'd a diſtinct Species; and this Point is likewiſe ſupported by Authorities, and many Attainders have been upon it.

My Lords, The ſecond Species of High-Treaſon I charge upon this Lord, is that of levying War againſt the King; and the Overt-Acts mentioned are, the forming an Army, marching in an hoſtile Manner, ſeizing a Town, the Town of Preſton, engaging and fighting with the King's Forces.

My Lords, Perhaps it was not neceſſary to have alledged any of theſe Overt-Acts of levying War againſt the King, becauſe levying War itſelf being an Act, it ſuperſedes the Neceſſity of inſtancing particular Acts of Hoſtility. But to avoid all Cavils, theſe particular Acts are likewiſe alledged in the Commons Impeachment.

My Lords, I find another Crime charged upon this Lord who ſtands at the Bar, and that is Murder, the Murder of many of the King's faithful Subjects. And although this Crime is not mentioned in the Title of the Articles, and there was a good Reaſon for not doing it, ſince it is ſwallow'd up in the High-Treaſon, the greater Crime in the Eye and Eſtimation of the Law; yet it doth not thereby loſe its moral Exiſtence or real Guilt; but on the contrary, by accompanying the other Crime of High-Treaſon, is aggravated, and ſhews with what Miſchief his Heart may be filled, who at the ſame time he is murdering his Fellow-Subjects is meditating the Deſtruction of his Prince, and the Overthrow of his Country's Liberty.

My Lords, this is the Nature of the Charge againſt my Lord. In the next Place I ſhall take notice of that which occurs to me to be material in his Lordſhip's Defence, or the Anſwer he hath put in to this Charge.

My Lords, he hath pleaded generally Not Guilty; but not wholly relying on that general Plea, he hath in his Anſwer added a particular Specification of his Caſe. He begins in his Anſwer, by taking notice and admitting, That he being taken with Perſons that were in Arms againſt the Government, might reaſonably be preſumed to be equally guilty, and to be juſtly joined with them in the ſame Impeachment. He goes on to acquaint your Lordſhips with what ſevere and barbarous Uſage he met with at his Dwelling-Houſe, which he ſays forced him from his Houſe. He tells your Lordſhips at laſt, he was very unfortunately driven into the Company of ſome of the Gentlemen named in the Impeachment; but he preſumes to affirm to your Lordſhips, that he did not join them with a traiterous or rebellious Deſign, but only with an Intention to preſerve himſelf from being inſulted and aſſaſſinated; then he ſays, Altho' he was conſtrain'd to keep the other Lords and Gentlemen Company, yet he never joined them in any Act of Hoſtility. But yet he is ſtill under ſome Diffidence of his Caſe, therefore your Lordſhips will find at the Cloſe of his Anſwer he ſays, But if upon his Trial it ſhall appear that he hath committed any Act, which in the Rigour of the Law may be conſtrued to amount to the Crime of High-Treaſon, he hopes the Innocence of his Heart, and his Ignorance in the Law, will, by your Lordſhips Interceſſion, render him an Object of his Majeſty's Mercy, which he and the reſt, at the Time of ſurrendering themſelves, were encouraged by his Majeſty's Officers to depend upon.

My Lords, this ſpecial Caſe which my Lord hath made in his Anſwer, is not at all like the Caſe in my Lord Chief Juſtice Coke's Third Inſtitutes, Fol. 10. upon an Impeachment of High-Treaſon. Several Perſons were found to join with Sir John Oldcaſtle and others (who were in open Rebellion) pro timore Mortis, & quam cito potuerunt receſſerunt, and thereupon they were acquitted; but here my Lord doth not pretend that any Force was upon him, when he went in and joined the Rebels. I may therefore preſume to ſay this Lord's Defence is a weak and a doubtful one, but far be it from the Commons to deſire to convict his Lordſhip of the High-Treaſon charged upon him by any Infirmity in his Defence, or by any Means whatever, but by the Strength and Clearneſs of the Evidence they ſhall produce to your Lordſhips, and for that I ſhall trouble your Lordſhips but a very little with repreſenting to you the general View of the Evidence that we ſhall produce, and it is this: This Lord thought fit to go in and join the Rebels, not alone, but accompanied with fourteen of his own Servants; when he was there, he formed a Troop, conſiſting of his own Servants, and others; he paid the Troop, com-commanded a Squadron of the Rebels Horſe in their March; aſſiſted at the ſeveral Proclamations of the Pretender; when there was an Alarm given of the coming of the King's Forces, he got on Horſe-back in order to oppoſe and fight them; and he was in Arms and active with the Rebels in the Action at Preſton; and we ſhall ſhew your Lordſhips that at the Surrender there no Promiſe was made, no Expectation of Mercy was raiſed by any of the King's Officers in the Mind of this Lord, or of any of his Accomplices.

My Lords, tho' this be not material to the Iſſue now joined before your Lordſhips, yet it being put into my Lord's Anſwer, and being neceſſary for the Vindication of publick Juſtice, we ſhall ſhew plainly there was not the leaſt Encouragement or Intimation of that kind given.

My Lords, the Evidence will be more largely and particularly taken notice of, by the Gentleman who is to come after me; and I am ſure my Defects will be amply made up, by what he will offer to your Lordſhips.

But I can't ſit down without taking notice, that if this heavy Accuſation be proved againſt the Lord at the Bar, it is a ſtrange Notion of Loyalty, ſo much boaſted of in my Lord's Anſwer, which he hath been pleaſed to entertain.

My Lords, there is not a nobler or more uſeful Principle belonging to a Britiſh Subject, than true Loyalty: Loyalty is a faithful and dutiful Obedience to the King, under the Sanction and Direction of the Law. If therefore his Lordſhip hath contracted the Guilt of this high Offence againſt the Law, which is charged upon him, he hath offended againſt this Principle! And this I will ſay in general, whoever they be who caſt the Law out of the Idea of Loyalty, they looſen the Bands of Allegiance; for it is the Law that binds upon the Conſcience of the Subject the Faith and Allegiance he owes to his Sovereign, as it doth upon the Conſcience of the Sovereign, that Juſtice and Protection he affords to his Subjects.

Mr. Attorney-General.
Sir Edward Northey.

MY Lords, the Charges of High-Treaſon mentioned in the Articles of Impeachment exhibited by the Commons of Great-Britain againſt the Earl of Wintoun, the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Nature of his Crimes, having been fully open'd by Mr. Hampden and Sir Joſeph Jekyll; what remains for my Part is to give your Lordſhips an Account of the Nature of the Evidence we ſhall produce to your Lordſhips againſt the Priſoner, to prove him guilty of the High-Treaſon for which he ſtands impeached. He is charged with two Species of Treaſon, mentioned in the Statute of the 25 Edw. III. viz. Firſt, compaſſing and imagining the Death of our ſovereign Lord the King, whom God long preſerve. Secondly, levying War againſt the King within this Realm.

The Evidence that will be a Proof of the latter Treaſon, will alſo prove the firſt: For levying War to depoſe the King, is an Overt-Act of conſpiring the Death of the King, and hath always been ſo adjudged.

I ſhall briefly, and with as much Clearneſs and Truth as I can, ſtate the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, as it will appear by the Witneſſes we ſhall produce, without aggravating any thing which I do not think proper or neceſſary, your Lordſhips being Judges of the Fact, and of the Law ariſing thereupon. I ſhall only make this Obſervation on the Preamble to the Earl's Plea, that it directly contradicts his Plea of Not Guilty; and that if what he alledges be taken as true, he therein owns himſelf to be guilty, though from thence he concludes, that he is not guilty.

In September laſt, the late Earl of Mar in Perthſhire, and in the beginning of October, Mr. Forſter with ſome of the attainted Lords in Northumberland, with a great Number of armed Men, raiſed a Rebellion in Favour of the Pretender, and proclaimed him King of theſe Realms, and ſet up his Standard.

About the ſeventh or eighth Day of October laſt, the Earl of Wintoun left his Seat at Seaton in the County of Lothian, armed with a broad Sword and Piſtols, and carried with him fourteen or fifteen of his Servants well mounted, and ſo armed; about the tenth Day of October joined the Earl of Carnwath and the Lord Viſcount Kenmure at Moffett in the County of Annandale, and there they formed a little Army, which was commanded by Lord Kenmure till they joined Forſter.

The Lord Wintoun formed a Troop with his own Servants and others, and it was called his Troop, and he paid his own Servants eighteen Pence or two Shillings a Day, and he commanded from that Time a Squadron of Horſe, till he and the others ſurrender'd to the King's Forces at Preſton.

About the fourteenth or fifteenth Day of October, the Earl of Wintoun and the reſt of the Rebels marched from Moffett, in a hoſtile Manner, with Trumpets and a Standard to Lochmaben. There the Pretender was proclaimed King of Scotland, England, &c. and the Earl of Wintoun attended, and joined in the Proclamation, with his Sword drawn. Thence the Rebels marched to

Auchtelfechen,	Jedburg,
Langholm,	Rodberry,
Hawick,	Wooler.

where, about the twentieth Day of October, Forſter and his Rebels, being about five Hundred, joined the Lord Wintoun and the other Scots, being three Troops of Horſe.

From Wooler they all marched to Kelſoe in Tiviotdale, where the Highland Foot, commanded by Mackintoſh, joined them. There, at the Croſs, the Pretender was again proclaimed King, with Sound of Trumpet and Colours flying, the Lord Wintoun and the reſt aſſiſting.

On the ſeventeenth Day of October they marched back to Jedburg, and there were alarmed with an Account that the King's Forces were near; on which they mounted, and marched out of Town, and drew up, the Earl of Wintoun being very active; but the Forces advancing being diſcover'd to be part of the Rebels, they returned to Jedburg; and on the twenty-ninth Day of October they marched to Hawick.

Here Cockades were made of blue and white Ribbons for the Scots Rebels, to diſtinguiſh them from the Engliſh, who had red and white, and the Earl of Wintoun wore one, and gave others to his Men.

On the thirtieth Day of October, from Hawick they marched to Langholm: Here, on the thirty-firſt Day of October, about five or ſix Hundred of the Highland Foot left them, and went back; and they would not ſuffer any Perſon to come to them, to perſuade them to return, but the Earl of Wintoun; and he went to perſuade them, but could not prevail, and he returned, and declared it was not his Fault that they went away; and he after very much promoted the Rebels coming into England.

Here the Earl might have ſafely left the Rebels, if he had thought fit, without Hazard; and he had not gone alone, as in his Preamble he alledges.

From Langholm the Rebels marched to Langtown in Cumberland; and on the Firſt Day of November to Brampton; on the Second to Penrith; on the Third to Appleby; on the Fifth to Kendall; and on the Sixth to Kirby-Lonſdale.

At all theſe Places the Pretender was proclaimed King, the Earl of Wintoun aſſiſting.

On the Seventh Day of November they marched from Kirby-Lonſdale to Lancaſter, into which the Rebels marched with their Swords drawn, particularly the Earl of Wintoun; and here they again proclaimed the Pretender King, Lord Wintoun aſſiſting in the Circle.

Here the Rebels ſeized Arms, and ſome pieces of Cannon.

From Lancaſter the Horſe of the Rebels marched on the Ninth Day of November to Preſton, the Foot halted at Garſtang, and came to Preſton the Tenth.

In the Way to Preſton the Rebels were joined with about Fifteen Hundred Men, moſt part being of the County of Lancaſter.

And at Preſton the Pretender was again proclaimed at the Croſs.

During this March, at ſeveral Places, particularly at Duns, Brampton and Appleby, the publick Revenue of the King was collected by the Rebels, and Ceſſes raiſed on the King's Subjects.

They marched with Drums, Trumpets and Colours; and, where they could, took Priſoners ſuch as appeared for his Majeſty.

They cauſed the Pretender to be prayed for, as King, in the Churches in Lancaſter, and other places in their March.

Their conſtant Health was the Pretender's, by the Name of King James, and Succeſs to their Cauſe.

During the whole March the Earl of Wintoun never ſhewed any Uneaſineſs or Backwardneſs, but always appeared as forward and active as any of the Rebels.

Mr. Calderwood, their Quarter-Maſter, quartered the Scots in all places; and the beſt, next to the Lord Kenmure's, he provided for the Earl of Wintoun, who uſed to complain, if good Quarters were not provided for him.

The next part of our Evidence will be to ſhew what happen'd at Preſton, of which the Rebels had taken Poſſeſſion the Tenth Day of November.

On Saturday the Twelfth Day of November, about One in the Afternoon, General Wills with the King's Forces inveſted the Town, and attacked it that Day and on Sunday, and the Rebels defended it, and had made a Barrier at the entring of the Town, and planted the Foot in ſeveral Lanes and Streets for their Defence, and had the Cannon with them which they ſeized at Lancaſter.

The Earl of Wintoun during the Attack was with the other Lords, at the Head of two hundred Men, drawn up in the Market-place; he had his Sword, a Piſtol in one Hand, and another in his Breaſt; during that Attack, ſeveral of his Majeſty's Officers and Soldiers were killed.

On Sunday, about Ten in the Morning, General Carpenter came alſo to Preſton, with the King's Forces under his Command. Thereupon the Rebels finding themſelves to be ſurrounded, about Three in the Afternoon ſent out Colonel Oxborough to the Generals, to know what Terms would be granted to them if they would ſurrender; the Generals gave this Anſwer, That no Terms would be granted to them, but that they muſt ſurrender at Diſcretion.

Soon after the Rebels ſent out Captain Dalziel, to deſire time till Seven a Clock on Monday Morning, to conſider whether they ſhould ſurrender at Diſcretion. Upon which General Carpenter ſent Colonel Churchill, and General Wills Colonel Cotten, into the Town, to acquaint the Rebels that the time deſired ſhould be allowed them, provided they ſent out immediately an Engliſh Lord, and one of the Mackintoſhes, as Hoſtages, that none within the Town ſhould attempt to Eſcape, or make any Works for their Defence.

Colonel Churchill and Colonel Cotten went into the Town, and there met the Earl of Wintoun and the other Lords, and Mr. Forſter, and told them their Meſſage: All the Lords treated with them about the ſurrendring the Town, and ſeverally gave their Words, that if Time might be allowed them till next Morning to ſurrender, they would uſe their Endeavours that none ſhould make their Eſcape, and that they would not throw up any new Works for their Defence. Which Terms were agreed to, and the Earl of Derwentwater and Colonel Mackintoſh were delivered to them, and brought to the Generals as Hoſtages, and ſtaid all Night; and in the Morning early the Rebels agreed to ſurrender at Diſcretion; and the Lord Foreſter took Poſſeſſion of the Town, where he found the Earl of Wintoun in Arms, and he ſurrendred himſelf to the Lord Foreſter, and delivered to him two Caſes of Piſtols; and being in Cuſtody, complained of the little Regard Mr. Forſter had ſhewed to a Man of his Quality, and ſaid all the Reſpect that he had ſhewed him, was to give him the Poſt of Honour when there was any Danger.

The Generals Carpenter and Wills never offered any other Terms than that the Rebels ſhould ſurrender at Diſcretion, never promiſed them Mercy, or that they would even intercede for Mercy for them; nor gave the Colonels, ſent into the Town, any Orders to offer Mercy; nor did they: All the Encouragement they gave them to ſurrender at Diſcretion, was, that if they did ſo, they ſhould not be immediately put to the Sword by the Soldiers; and denied to promiſe, even to recommend them to the King's Mercy.

This is the Subſtance of the Evidence we ſhall lay before your Lordſhips, and the Order we ſhall give it in; and if what I have opened be proved, as I believe it will, or I would not have mention'd it, I apprehend it will fully prove the Charge againſt the Noble Lord, and ſhew how vain the Allegations in the Preamble to his Plea are.

I beg leave to ſay one thing more. The Noble Lord alledges, in the Preamble to his Plea, that he never ſhot off a Piſtol: certainly that is not material; for aſſembling and marching in a Hoſtile manner for a publick Purpoſe, and oppoſing the King's Forces, is levying a War, although the Lord accuſed never ſhot off a Piſtol.

We will call our Witneſſes, and begin with William Calderwood, who was Quarter-Maſter the whole time with Lord Wintoun.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, we deſire that William Calderwood may be ſworn.

L. H. Steward. Is it William Calderwood you call?

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, we deſire William Calderwood may be ſworn.

And he was ſworn by the Clerk accordingly.

Sir J. Jekyll. Mr. Calderwood, pray acquaint my Lords with what you know concerning this Rebellion, or any Part that the Noble Lord at the Bar had in it; tell the Story according to your own Method.

L. H. Steward. Do you hear what Queſtion is aſked? You are upon your Oath; give an Account of what you know of the late Rebellion, and what Part the Noble Lord at the Bar had in it.

Calderwood. Upon the Eleventh of October I went, with about Seventy Horſe, to join my Lord Carnwath, my Lord Wintoun, and my Lord Kenmure at Moffett; where the Pretender was proclaimed.

Attorney-General. We deſire that he may acquaint your Lordſhips, what Number of Men they had at Moffett.

Calderwood. One Hundred and Fifty.

Att. Gen. What Number of Men?

Calderwood. One Hundred and Fifty.

Att. Gen. Was the Priſoner at the Bar amongſt them? and did he bring in any with him?

Calderwood. Yes.

Att. Gen. About what time did he come in?

Calderwood. Towards the Evening of the Eleventh Day.

Att. Gen. What Day?

Calderwood. The Eleventh.

Sir J. Jekyll. What Number did the Lord Wintoun bring with him?

Calderwood. About Fourteen.

L. H. Steward. You ſpeak of the Priſoner at the Bar; he came in with Fourteen Men?

Calderwood. Yes, my Lord.

Att. Gen. Were they all armed; or how many were armed?

Calderwood. I don't know whether all were, but the moſt part of them were, with Sword and Piſtol.

L. H. Steward. You have ſaid at what Place they were, but your Voice did not reach hither; at what Place?

Calderwood. At Moffett.

Sir J. Jekyll. When my Lord at the Bar joined the Rebels, what did they do? Go on, and tell your Story.

Calderwood. They went to Lochmaben.

Sir J. Jekyll. When did the Lord at the Bar join them there?

Calderwood. The next Day.

Att. Gen. What was done there?

Calderwood. The Pretender was proclaimed there next Day.

L. Wintoun. I can't examine him, I deſire my Council may examine him.

L. Wintoun. I never examin'd a Witneſs in my Life, I deſire my Council may do it for me.

L. H. Steward. Have you any Queſtions?

L. Wintoun. My Lord, I hope you will allow my Council to ſpeak for me.

L. H. Steward. Have you any Queſtion you deſire to be ask'd, and it ſhall be ask'd?

Att. Gen. James Lindſey is ſworn, we deſire he may give your Lordſhips an Account, whether he was at any time at Moffett, when the Pretender was proclaim'd, and what Share my Lord Wintoun had in it? —— I believe it will be better to have ſomething for the Witneſſes to ſtand upon; —— ſtay a little, till ſomething is brought to ſtand upon.

A Chair was brought to ſtand upon.

Sir J. Jekyll. Was you at Moffett?

Lindſey. Yes.

Sir J. Jekyll. What paſt there, and who was at that Place?

L. H. Steward. Keep your Face, and direct your Anſwer this way; tho' the Gentlemen on the Left Hand ask you Queſtions, keep your Face this way.

Lindſey. I ſaw ſeveral Gentlemen.

Sir J. Jekyll. But did you ſee my Lord Wintoun there?

Lindſey. Firſt I ſaw him there; the ſecond time at Jedburg, the third time at Kendall, and the laſt at Preſton.

Lindsey. A great many Gentlemen on Horseback.

Sir J. Jekyll. Was he at Preston?

Lindsey. Yes, he was there.

Sir J. Jekyll. Was you present when they proclaimed the Pretender there?

Lindsey. I was standing at a great distance, but did not hear it, but saw the Army.

Lindsey. I heard talk of it only.

Sir J. Jekyll. What Troops were with the Rebels?

Lindsey. I can't tell how many.

Sir J. Jekyll. Do you remember any one Troop?

Lindsey. Yes, there was Lockhart's.

Sir J. Jekyll. Any beside?

Lindsey. There was one went by the Name of my Lord Wintoun's, but I knew it not.

Att. Gen. Who was there in that Troop of Lockhart's?

Lindsey. Several Gentlemen.

Att. Gen. Was there any but Gentlemen?

Lindsey. Some private Men and Servants.

Sir J. Jekyll. Was you at Preston when the King's Forces invested it?

Lindsey. Yes.

Sir J. Jekyll. How did the Prisoner behave himself?

Lindsey. I cannot tell.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, we have done with our Examination of this Witness.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, if you would ask this Witness any Question, propose it, and it shall be asked.

After a considerable Pause,

Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Elias Cammeron, we desire he may be sworn.

He was sworn accordingly.

Mr. Cowper. My Lords, we desire he may be asked whether he was in the Rebels Army.

L. H. Steward. You hear the Question; direct your Answer this way.

Cammeron. Yes, I was there.

Mr. Cowper. Under whose Command?

Cammeron. Under the Command of Captain Mackcleane.

Cammeron. I joined them at Moffett, and then we proceeded to a Place called Lochmaben; and then we march'd to Duns, from thence to Kelsoe; within two Miles of Kelsoe we met the Horse. Then we went from Kelsoe to Jedburg, I saw my Lord Wintoun there; the next Day we rested. Then we marched, from Langtown to Brampton; from Brampton to Penrith; from Penrith to Kirby-Lonsdale; and from Kirby-Lonsdale to Lancaster; where I saw my Lord Wintoun at the Head of his Horse with a Trumpet sounding before him; I saw them march; we staid a Day at Lancaster, and the Horse went into Preston the next Day; either Wednesday or Thursday I saw my Lord Wintoun, and after the King's Forces were come I saw my Lord Wintoun with other Lords.

Mr. Cowper. You have mentioned proclaiming the Pretender at one or two Towns, pray give an Account at how many Places you observed that he was proclaimed?

Cammeron. I heard him proclaimed at Duns, at Kelsoe, and at Lancaster.

Mr. Cowper. I desire to know if at any of these Places you observed the Prisoner, my Lord Wintoun?

Cammeron. At Lancaster I did observe him to go into the Ring when they were going to proclaim him, but at the Time of the Proclamation I did not see him, being in the outward Part of the Ring.

Att. Gen. Pleaſe to acquaint my Lords, whether in your March you took any Priſoners.

Cammeron. When we were near Penrith, we took a great many Priſoners. I did not ſee them taken.

Att. Gen. At the Time the Highlanders came to Seaton Houſe, was this Lord there?

Cammeron. No, I do not know that he was.

Cammeron. Yes, they gave Receipts. I ſaw one which was to this Effect: After the Year and Date, then, Receiv'd ſuch a Sum of Money as Exciſe-Duty, due from ſuch a Perſon to ſuch a Perſon.

Att. Gen. During the Time the King's Forces attack'd Preſton, what did you obſerve my Lord Wintoun do?

Cammeron. What I obſerved of my Lord Wintoun, was this: I was there by the Church-yard, there I ſaw my Lord Wintoun in the Church-yard, with my Lord Kenmure and Derwentwater at the Time of the Action, but I did not ſee him in the Action, and whether he had Piſtols or not I can't be poſitive.

Cammeron. I obſerved nothing, but he was like the reſt, riding to and fro with the reſt.

Sir J. Jekyll. Did you ſee him aſſiſting at the Proclamation of the Pretender at Preſton?

Cammeron. I ſaw him go into the Ring with the reſt, but I did not ſee him at the time of the Proclamation.

L. H. Steward. I believe in this Narration his Voice did not reach this End of the Court; therefore if he hath ſaid any thing proper to be taken notice of, you will do well to have it over again.

Att. Gen. We aſk him whether he knew the noble Lord to be at any of thoſe Places aſſiſting at proclaiming the Pretender?

Cammeron. I did not obſerve him but at Lancaſter.

Att. Gen. What happen'd there?

Att. Gen. Was that the Time when the Pretender was proclaimed at Lancaſter?

Cammeron. Yes.

Att. Gen. Whether had my Lord his Sword by his Side, or had he it drawn?

Cammeron. Really I cannot be poſitive to that.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtion?

L. Wintoun. My Lords, I be not prepared, ſo I hope your Lordſhips will do me Juſtice; I was not prepared for my Trial; I did not think it would come on ſo ſoon, my material Witneſſes not being come up, and therefore I hope you will do me Juſtice, and not make uſe of Cowper-Law, as we uſed to ſay in our Country, hang a Man firſt, and then judge him.

L. H. Steward. Did you hear? My Lord Wintoun, pleaſe to ſpeak it again.

L. Wintoun. I ſaid that I was not prepared for my Trial; I did not think it would come on ſo ſoon. Some Gentlemen are juſt come up; pleaſe your Lordſhips to let me know what they ſay, that I may be the better able to make my Defence.

L. H. Steward. If your Lordſhip will ask this Witneſs any Queſtion, now is your Time; but if what you are ſaying is your Defence, you ſhould reſerve that till the Commons have done.

Robert Patten is called and ſworn.

Patten. Yes, they were going out to defend themſelves.

Sir W. Thomſon. You ſaw my Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. Yes.

Sir W. Thomſon. In what manner?

Patten. He had his Sword by his Side.

Sir W. Thomſon. When you went from that Place, whither did you go then?

Patten. We went to Langholm.

Sir W. Thomſon. What paſs'd there?

Patten. We continued there till next Morning, when we conſulted whether to march for England or for Scotland; a Party of Horſe went for Dumfreiſe. The Highlanders, a great part of them went off there, and would not march for England.

Sir W. Thomſon. Was my Lord Wintoun with them at their going off?

Patten. Nothing material, but aſk'd me if I knew the Country.

Sir W. Thomſon. When the Foot went off at Langholm, did my Lord go to them?

Patten. I ſaw him go up to them, and make a Halt.

Sir W. Thomſon. But he came back again?

Patten. Yes.

Sir W. Thomſon. At that time, if my Lord had had any Inclination to it, whether might he not have gone off?

Patten. Yes: I can't tell my Lord's Inclination, but any Body might have gone off, there was no Reſtraint upon him.

Sir W. Thomſon. Whither did you march from Langholm?

Patten. There was the Poſſe Comitatus, whether that Poſſe Comitatus were the Militia I can't tell; they were got together, and upon our advancing they diſpers'd themſelves.

Sir W. Thomſon. Where was my Lord Wintoun then?

Patten. I ſaw him among the Scots Lords there after his uſual manner, on Horſeback, with Sword and Piſtols.

Sir W. Thomſon. Was his Sword drawn?

Patten. No.

Sir W. Thomſon. Whither did they go then?

Patten. They went to Appleby.

Sir W. Thomſon. What paſſed at Appleby?

Patten. They went from Appleby to Kendall.

Sir W. Thomſon. What happened there?

Patten. A Proclamation was read, as at moſt of the Towns.

Sir W. Thomſon. Did you ſee my Lord Wintoun at any of thoſe Proclamations?

Patten, No, I did not.

Sir W. Thomſon. Where did you go then?

Patten. To Kirby-Lonſdale.

Sir W. Thomſon. Did any thing happen remarkable there?

Patten. I dined with the Scots Lords at Kirby.

Sir W. Thomſon. What happen'd there? and what Healths were drank there?

Patten. The Pretender's Health, and Succeſs to our Cauſe, that was the uſual Health.

Sir W. Thomſon. Was my Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. Yes, there was my Lord Kenmure, Carnwath, and the other Lords.

Sir W. Thomſon. Did he drink the Health among the reſt?

Patten. All the Table did.

Sir W. Thomſon. From thence whither did you go?

Patten. To Lancaſter.

Sir J. Jekyll. At the place where you drank Healths, was there any other remarkable Health?

Patten. The uſual Health was good Succeſs to the Cauſe in hand.

L. H. Steward. Who drank that Health?

Patten. All the Company.

L. H. Steward. Who was in Company? was the Priſoner at the Bar in Company?

Patten. Yes, he was.

Sir W. Thomſon. When you came to Lancaſter, in what manner did you enter that Town?

Patten. We entred that Town more regularly than any other we had marched thro'.

Sir W. Thomſon. After what manner?

Patten. They march'd into the Town with their Swords drawn, and the Highlanders were drawn round the Croſs; the Gentlemen marched into the Town on Horſeback; the Pretender was proclaimed there.

Sir W. Thomſon. You was by when the Pretender was proclaimed?

Patten. Yes.

Sir W. Thomſon. Was my Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. I can't ſay I ſaw him there: I ſaw him in the Town at the head of ſome Horſe with his Sword drawn.

Sir W. Thomſon. Was there any Cannon ſeized at Lancaſter?

Patten. Some Pieces of Cannon were ſeized.

Sir W. Thomſon. What did you do with the Cannon?

Patten. We carried them with us to Preſton.

Sir W. Thomſon. When there were Prayers in the Pariſh Church at Lancaſter, who was prayed for?

Patten. The Pretender.

Sir W. Thomſon. Do you know who were preſent?

Patten. A great many.

Sir W. Thomſon. Was the Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. I can't tell.

Sir W. Thomſon. Did you obſerve at any time any Force or Compulſion uſed to detain my Lord Wintoun?

Patten. No, none at all.

Sir W. Thomſon. Did he ſhew any Uneaſineſs, or any Backwardneſs to go with them?

Patten. I can't be Judge of my Lord's Uneaſineſs, it did not appear ſo.

Sir W. Thomſon. By whoſe Direction was the Prayer for the Pretender?

Patten. By Order of Mr. Forſter.

Sir W. Thomſon. My Lords, we have done with this Witneſs.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, will you pleaſe to aſk this Witneſs any Queſtion?

L. Wintoun. No.

Att. Gen. My Lords, we deſire to call my Lord Forreſter.

Then a Chair was placed for Lord Forreſter near the Clerks Table.

And the Oath was adminiſtred to him by the Lord High Steward.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, we beg leave to aſk this Noble Lord a Queſtion or two: Was your Lordſhip at Preſton?

L. Forreſter. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. Steward. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to raiſe your Voice.

L. Forreſter. I was there with the King's Troops, and had the Honour to command Brigadier Preſton's Regiment. We came before Preſton on Saturday the 12th of November.

Att. Gen. Will your Lordſhip acquaint my Lords what paſs'd at Preſton when you was there? whether you was by at Preſton when the King's Forces attack'd it, and whether it was defended by the Rebels, and what elſe paſſed there?

L. Forreſter, I was there, and commanded one of the Attacks under Brigadier Honywood.

Att. Gen. Was the Town defended by the Rebels, and were any of the King's Officers and Soldiers killed?

L. Forreſter. Yes, a great many.

Att. Gen. Pleaſe to give an Account what Number.

Lord Forreſter. We loſt a great many.

Att. Gen. Can you gueſs the Number?

L. Forreſter, No, I can't exactly tell: A good many; we had 'twixt Sixty and Seventy of the Regiment I had the Honour to Command killed and wounded.

Att. Gen. How many were killed?

L. Forreſter. About thirty were killed dead on the Spot.

Att. Gen. How long did that Attack laſt, before they deſired to capitulate?

L. Forreſter. From Saturday till Sunday Morning between one and two a Clock.

Sir J. Jekyll. I think your Lordſhip had a command to take Poſſeſſion of the Town?

L. Forreſter. Yes; I took Poſſeſſion of the Church-yard Monday Morning about Six a Clock.

Sir J. Jekyll. Will you pleaſe to give an Account of what you know of the Noble Lord at the Bar when the Town ſurrendred.

L. Forreſter. The Town ſurrender'd at ſix a Clock in the Morning; I came into the Church-yard and took Poſſeſſion of it; then I went to the Mitre Tavern, where that Lord and the reſt of the Lords were; I diſarmed them.

Att. Gen. What Arms did my Lord Wintoun deliver up at that time?

L. Forreſter. Two Caſes of Piſtols.

Sir J. Jekyll. If my Lord hath a mind to aſk any Queſtion of the Noble Lord that hath been examined, we deſire he may do it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, will you be pleaſed to aſk this Noble Lord any Queſtion concerning this matter at Preſton?

L Wintoun. I had no Arms: Pleaſe to aſk him whether I had Sword or Piſtol in my Hand?

L. H. Steward. Take my Lord's Queſtion in Writing.

Then the Clerk went and took it.

Queſtion. Whether the Arms your Lordſhip mentioned to have been delivered to you, whether he had the Arms then about him, or his Lordſhip did not ſay they were in the Stable?

L. Forreſter. He brought the Arms to me himſelf, and gave them me out of his own Hands.

L. H. Steward. My Lord ſays you brought the Arms to him your ſelf, and gave them him out of your own Hands.

L. Forreſter. I got ſo many of them that I ſhould not have made any Diſtinction of his from the reſt, but that I remember he gave me his Arms out of his own Hands, and deſired me to give them to my Lord Kimmergem.

L. H. Steward. You deſired my Lord Forreſter to give them my Lord Kimmergem.

L. H. Steward. Another Queſtion propoſed is, Whether my Lord Wintoun did not give Orders to his Servant to bring the Arms out of the Stable, and to give them my Lord Kimmergem?

L. Forreſter. I believe he did bring them out of the Stable.

L. H. Steward. My Lord believes you did bring them out of the Stable.

L. Wintoun. I deſire he may be aſked whether I had a Sword about me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Forreſter, the Queſtion is, Whether your Lordſhip found a Sword about my Lord Wintoun?

L. Forreſter. I did not ſee any Sword that he had; he had a great Coat on, and might have had a Sword under that, but I ſaw none.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Forreſter, did the Priſoner at the Bar deliver himſelf and his Arms to your Lordſhip as one of thoſe in the Surrender?

L. For-

L. Forreſter. I took it ſo.

Sir J. Jekyll. We beg leave to call General Carpenter, and deſire he may be Sworn in his Place, and give your Lordſhips his Evidence.

General Carpenter was Sworn in his place.

Proclamation for Silence as uſual.

Sir J. Jekyll. Mr. Carpenter, pleaſe to give my Lords an Account when you came to Preſton, and what happened there.

Gen. Carpenter. I came to Preſton on Sunday the 12th of November laſt: The Troops under Mr Wills had been there the Afternoon before. I got there about Ten a Clock on Sunday Morning, with Three Regiments of Dragoons; and there had been no Intercourſe nor Meſſage paſs'd before I came.

Att. Gen. Pleaſe to inform my Lords what paſs'd there after you came to Preſton.

Gen. Carpenter. After I came, the Rebels ſent out to know what Terms they might expect, and were anſwer'd none but at Diſcretion. They ſoon after ſent out one Captain Dalziel, to deſire a Ceſſation till next Morning; upon which I ſent in Colonel Churchill to tell them, I agreed to a Ceſſation, provided they ſent out an Engliſh Lord and a Scots Lord as Hoſtages: I named my Lord Derwentwater and my Lord Kenmure. Captain Dalziel ſaid he thought my Lord Kenmure would not come out. I named then Brigadier Mackintoſh: He alſo thought he would not come out. I was unwilling to make great Difficulties, it growing towards Night; and ſaid either of the Mackintoſh's and an Engliſh Lord: And he brought out my Lord Derwentwater and Colonel Mackintoſh as Hoſtages, that they ſhould make no Attempt to eſcape, nor any Works for Defence in the Town.

Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, acquaint my Lords who you ſent in with Colonel Churchill.

Gen. Carpenter. Colonel Cotten.

Att. Gen. When did they agree to the Surrender of the Place?

Gen. Carpenter. Not till the next Morning. The Hoſtages were, that none ſhould attempt to eſcape, nor any Defences ſhould be made in the Town till the next Morning, at which time they would determine whether they would ſurrender or not.

Att. Gen. I deſire you to acquaint my Lords whether theſe were all the Terms offered, or whether there was any Hopes of Mercy given them?

Gen. Carpenter. I gave them none at all my ſelf, and it is very unlikely any Body elſe ſhould: I commanded in Chief his Majeſty's Forces there: No Body ought to have done it; and if any Officer whatſoever took upon him ſo to do without my Order or Leave, it was very unanſwerable by the Rules and Diſcipline of War; and what he cannot anſwer: I hope no Body did: I am ſure I gave no ſuch Directions: Colonel Churchill can acquaint your Lordſhips whether I directed him to mention any other Conditions to them than at Diſcretion.

Sir J. Jekyll. Did you hear any other Officer give them any Hope or Expectation of Mercy?

Gen. Carpenter. No, I did not.

Sir J. Jekyll. If my Lord Wintoun hath any Queſtions to ask this honourable Perſon, he may do it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, now is your Time if you'll aſk any Queſtion of General Carpenter.

L. Wintoun. Whether I was concern'd in making any——

L. H. Steward. I don't hear the Queſtion—— Then the Clerk was ſent down to take it in Writing.

And the Queſtion being brought up to the Lord High-Steward by the Clerk,

L. H. Steward. The Queſtion my Lord asks is, Whether he was concern'd in making any Capitulation, or knew any thing about it?

Gen. Carpenter. Not that I know of; it is impoſſible for me to know, except by Hearſay: He was not the Perſon treated with, I treated with my Lord Derwentwater and one of the Mackintoſh's, ſo that I know nothing of his being concerned in any manner of Treaty.

L. H. Steward. You hear the Anſwer.

Sir J. Jekyll. We beg leave to call General Wills.

L. Wintoun. I deſire to ask my Lord Forreſter a Queſtion.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun deſires to propoſe a Queſtion to my Lord Forreſter.

Sir J. Jekyll. Tho' that be out of Method, yet don't oppoſe it.

L. H. Steward. Bring up the Queſtion. My Lord, the Queſtion my Lord Wintoun propoſes is, Whether he had any Sword or Arms when he firſt ſaw your Lordſhip at Preſton?

L. Forreſter. I don't remember I had a Sword from him; I can't tell whether he had a Sword about him, for he had a great Coat on; but I remember I took none from him, I had only the two Caſes of Piſtols which he gave me.

L. H. Steward. He could not tell whether you had a Sword about you, you had a great Coat that he could not well ſee; but he remembers he took none from you, only the two Caſes of Piſtols which you gave him.

L. H. Steward. Who do you call next?

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, we deſire that General Wills may be ſworn.

He was ſworn accordingly.

Sir J. Jekyll. Mr. Wills, pray give my Lords an Account when you came before the Town of Preſton, and what happen'd there.

Gen. Wills. My Lords, I had the Honour to command the King's Troops that attack'd the Rebels at Preſton; I came before that Town the 12th of November laſt about One o' Clock, and order'd two Attacks upon the Town; that Attack which leads to Wiggen was commanded by Brigadier Honywood, who beat the Rebels from their firſt Barricade, and took Poſſeſſion of ſome of the Houſes in the Town; the other Attack which leads to Lancaſter was commanded by Brigadier Dormer, who lodg'd his Troops nigh the Barricade of the Rebels. The next Day, about Two o' Clock, Mr. Forſter ſent out one Mr. Oxborough, an Iriſhman, offering to lay down their Arms and ſubmit themſelves, and hoped that I wou'd recommend them to the King for Mercy; which I refuſed, and told them I wou'd not treat with Rebels, for that they had killed ſeveral of the King's Subjects, and that they muſt expect to undergo the ſame Fate; upon which he ſaid, that as I was an Officer, and a Man of Honour, he hoped I wou'd ſhew Mercy to People who were willing to ſubmit: Upon which I told them all I would do for them was, that if they laid down their Arms, and ſubmitted Priſoners at Diſcretion, I would prevent the Soldiers from cutting them to pieces till I had further Orders, and that I would give them but one Hour to conſider of it; and and ſent him back again into the Town to acquaint Forſter of it; before the Hour was expir'd they ſent out Mr. Dalziel, Brother to the Earl of Carnwath, and he wanted Terms for the Scots. My Anſwer was, that I wou'd not treat with Rebels, nor give them any other Terms than what I had before offer'd them: Upon which it was deſired that I would grant further Time till Seven o' Clock next Day, to conſult the beſt Method of delivering themſelves up. I agreed to grant them the Time deſired, provided that they threw up no new Intrenchments in the Streets, nor ſuffer'd any of their People to eſcape, and that they ſent out the Chief of the Engliſh and Scots as Hoſtages for the Performance; and I ſent in Colonel Cotten to bring them out, who brought out the Earl of Derwentwater and Mr. Mackintoſh. The next Day about Seven o' Clock Mr. Forſter ſent out to let me know, that they were willing to give themſelves up Priſoners at Diſcretion, as I had demanded. Mr. Mackintoſh being by when the Meſſage was brought, ſaid he could not anſwer that the Scots would ſurrender in that manner; for that the Scots were People of deſperate Fortunes, and that he had been a Soldier himſelf, and knew what it was to be a Priſoner at Diſcretion; upon which I ſaid, go back to your People again, and I will attack the Town, and the Conſequence will be, I will not ſpare one Man of you. Mackintoſh went back, but came running out immediately again, and ſaid, that the Lord Kenmure, and the reſt of the Noblemen, with his Brother, would ſurrender in like manner with the Engliſh.

Sir J. Jekyll. When the Attack was made by the King's Forces, whether any, and how many were killed?

Gen. Wills. I believe between ſixty and ſeventy, but few of the Horſe; there were killed and wounded about a hundred and thirty.

Att. Gen. If you pleaſe to acquaint my Lords, whether any of the Rebels came and treated with you, or if you gave them any Encouragement to hope for Mercy.

Gen. Wills. All the Terms I gave them was, that I would ſave their Lives from the Soldiers 'till further Orders, if they ſurrender'd at Diſcretion: I deſire to explain the Meaning of ſurrendering at Diſcretion, which is, then it is in our Power to cut them all to pieces; but I would give them their Lives till further Orders; for I could have cut them to pieces immediately after they are made Priſoners at Diſcretion, by the Rules of War; and if they did not comply I would renew the Attack, and not ſpare a Man.

L. H. Steward. You told them that if they did not comply, you would renew the Aſſault?

Gen. Wills. Yes, and not ſpare a Man of them.

Sir J. Jekyll. Did you give your Officers any Directions to give any other Terms?

Gen. Wills. No, I did not.

L. H. Steward. Then you gave no Directions to any other Officer to give other Terms than you yourſelf had offer'd?

Gen. Wills. No, I did not.

Mr. Cowper. Was there any other but theſe two, Colonel Churchill and Colonel Cotten ſent in by you, or by General Carpenter?

Gen. Wills. Yes, Colonel Naſſau, to bid our own People forbear firing.

Mr. Cowper. Had Colonel Naſſau any Authority to treat?

Gen. Wills. No, he went in only to bid our Troops to forbear firing, and order Colonel Cotten to come out with the Hoſtages.

Sir J. Jekyll. You ſay the Rebels deſired you to recommend them to the King's Mercy? Who made that Propoſition?

Gen. Wills. One Oxborough.

Sir J. Jekyll. Had you any other Propoſition by any other?

Gen. Wills. Mr. Dalziel, Brother to my Lord Carnwath, for the Scots. I refuſed him likewiſe, and told him I wou'd treat with no Rebels, nor give them any Quarter.

Sir J. Jekyll. If my Lord at the Bar will ask this honourable Gentleman any Queſtion, now is the Time.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the Clerk is ſent down to you again; if you have any Queſtion he will take it.

The Clerk return'd with the Queſtion to my Lord High-Steward.

L. H. Steward. The Queſtion my Lord propoſes to General Wills is, Whether you, General Wills, gave any Summons to ſurrender before you made the firſt Attack; or if you did not make the Attack without any Summons at all?

Gen. Wills. When I was viewing the Town they ſhot two of my Dragoons, and I did not ſummons them.

Another Queſtion taken by the Clerk and brought up.

L. H. Steward. Another Queſtion my Lord deſires to be ask'd is, Whether you offer'd to prevent the Forces from falling upon the Gentlemen at Preſton, provided they ſurrender'd at Diſcretion?

Gen. Wills. Before ever I had drawn up the Troop——

L. H. Steward. The Queſtion is, Whether you offered to prevent the Forces from falling upon the Gentlemen at Preſton, provided they ſurrender'd at Diſcretion?

Gen. Wills. Yes, my Lords, I did hinder the Troops from falling upon them after they offer'd to ſurrender.

Another Queſtion brought up by the Clerk.

L. H. Steward. General Wills, my Lord deſires you may be ask'd what you know, or have been inform'd of his Lordſhip's being againſt coming to England; or of my Lord's being againſt fighting with any of yours, or General Carpenter's Troops?

Gen. Wills. I never knew my Lord Wintoun, nor ſaw him till four Days after he was taken at Preſton, ſo that I can ſay nothing to that I don't know any think of.

L. Wintoun. I deſire General Carpenter may be ask'd the ſame Queſtion.

L. H. Steward. Do you know any thing, or have heard that my Lord Wintoun was againſt coming into England, or fighting the King's Forces?

Gen. Carpenter. My Lords, I heard that at Jedburg they held a Council of War, the chief Officers, &c. this is only Hearſay, I ſpeak not of my own Knowledge.

Sir J. Jekyll. For the ſake of Evidence it is incumbent on us to deſire that my Lord confines himſelf to ask the General what he knows, and not to what he heard ſaid.

Att. Gen. We have two Witneſſes more, the Colonels that were ſent into the Town by the two Generals, Colonel Churchill and Colonel Cotten.

Colonel

Colonel Churchill was ſworn.

Mr Cowper. The Queſtion propos'd is, Whether you was ſent into Preſton, and by whom?

Col. Churchill. I came up to Preſton on Sunday Morning, under General Carpenter's Command, about Ten o' Clock; about One they ſent out to capitulate; about Five I was ſent in by General Carpenter, their Requeſt being, that they might have Time till next Day to conſider whether they ſhould ſurrender or not. My Directions were, they ſhould have that, upon Condition they ſent out Hoſtages that none of them ſhould attempt to eſcape, and that no Defence ſhould be made in the Town. The People named to me by General Carpenter were my Lord Derwentwater or my Lord Widdrington, and my Lord Kenmure or Mackintoſh was mentioned for the Scots. I directed them to ſend the Hoſtages to me. They could not find my Lord Derwentwater nor Widdrington, and Mackintoſh was gone to Bed. A little before eight I went with them, and told them the Terms I was to deliver to them, that they were to throw up no Works to fortify themſelves, and ſhould anſwer for the People, that none of them ſhould eſcape. My Lord Derwentwater and Mackintoſh went out with me: I carried them to the two Generals there, and at Seven o' Clock next Morning they ſurrender'd themſelves.

Mr. Cowper. Pleaſe to give me leave to ask you, whether you had any Commiſſion from the General that ſent you into the Town, or whether you of yourſelf, without ſuch Commiſſion, gave them any Hopes of Mercy?

Col. Churchill. I had not any Power to do it, and was ſo far from doing it, that I don't remember a ſingle Syllable was mentioned either on our Side or theirs about it.

Mr. Cowper. Did you at any other Time hear any other Officers give them ſuch Aſſurance?

Col. Churchill. I never heard a ſingle Word like it.

Att. Gen. Who did you treat with?

Col. Churchill. The Body I treated with carried me to Mr. Forſter, and then to my Lord Kenmure. I deliver'd my Meſſage to Mr. Forſter. I did not know any Scots Lord but Kenmure.

Att. Gen. Who was preſent beſides my Lord Kenmure?

Col. Churchill. I ſaw a great many, but I did not know particularly any.

Att. Gen. The next is Colonel Cotten, who was ſent in by General Wills. We deſire Colonel Cotten may be ſworn.

He was ſworn accordingly.

Att. Gen. We deſire to ask Colonel Cotten, whether he was ſent into Preſton by General Wills, and what Inſtructions were given him when he went in?

Col. Cotten. I was ſent into the Town by General Wills at their Deſire, they having Terms to offer: I told them we could give them none; they urged they had Diſputes amongſt the Scots and Engliſh, and deſired till the next Morning to reconcile them. General Wills ſent me again into the Town to allow them that time, provided that the Lords would give their Words that they would throw up no Works for their Defence from that time, and do their utmoſt that none of their People ſhou'd make their Eſcape; and the Lords did give their Words; and the Lord at the Bar was preſent.

Att. Gen. I deſire you would acquaint my Lords upon what Terms they ſurrendered.

Col. Cotten. I had no Power from Mr. Wills to promiſe them any Terms, nor I did not.

Sir J. Jekyll. Did you acquaint them you had no Power to offer them any Terms?

Col. Cotten. I did.

Att. Gen. Who did you acquaint?

Col. Cotten. All the Lords, and the People that had any Influence over the common Men.

Sir J. Jekyll. Was the Noble Lord at the Bar amongſt them?

Col. Cotten. He was.

Sir J. Jekyll. Was there any Overtures made of obtaining the King's Mercy?

Col. Cotten. I had no ſuch Order from Mr. Wills, and I did not offer it neither directly or indirectly.

Att. Gen. My Lords, I thing it hath been deſired to call Brigadier Munden, who ſpeaks only as to the Attack; and I think, my Lords, if this Evidence need to be corroborated, we ſhall deſire to call another Evidence who was with General Wills all the time the Overtures paſs'd.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, if the Lord at the Bar hath any Queſtion to aſk Colonel Cotten, we deſire he may be indulged.

L. Wintoun. I would know whether they did not take Priſoners and kill them, notwithſtanding the Capitulation?

L. H. Steward. The Queſtion my Lord deſires may be aſk'd is, Whether you did not take Priſoners and kill them, notwithſtanding the Capitulation?

Col. Cotten. My Lords, upon my coming out of the Town, tho' the Lords had engaged to prevent any of their People making their Eſcape, we were alarm'd with an Account that ſeveral were attempting it, and about ſix of thoſe who were endeavouring to eſcape were cut to Pieces. Upon this Breach of their Parole Colonel Churchill and my ſelf were ſent in to demand Hoſtages, and brought out Lord Derwentwater and Mr. Mackintoſh.

Att. Gen. We deſire Brigadier Munden may be Sworn.

He was accordingly called and Sworn.

Att. Gen. We deſire Brigadier Munden may be aſked whether he was ſent with theſe two Colonels into the Town, and what Directions were given them.

L. H. Steward. You hear the Queſtion, pleaſe to give your Anſwer.

Brigadier Munden. I humbly apprehend I am called to give ſome Account of the Attack at Preſton, which I will do in as few Words as I can. I am firſt to tell your Lordſhips, after the Rebels demanded an Audience of General Wills, their firſt Demand was for Terms: The Anſwer they received was, that General Wills would not treat with Rebels, but if they ſurrendered as Priſoners at Diſcretion, they ſhould have their Lives ſpared 'till his Majeſty's Pleaſure was known. They aſk'd if thoſe were the only Terms; it was anſwered yes. Afterwards this Gentleman went into the Town, who had an Hour's time allowed him to conſider of it. I remember his inſiſting upon Terms, but all the Anſwer Mr. Wills gave them was, if he had Inclination, he had no Power to give them any, otherwiſe than ſaving their Lives till his Majeſty's Pleaſure was further known. If they expected other Terms, they might return into the Town immediately, and he would attack them and cut them to Pieces.

After

After this the Gentleman went into the Town, my Lord Derwentwater and Mr. Mackintoſh came out to us. Mr. Mackintoſh and my Lord Derwentwater and I heard them frequently repeat their Requeſt to the General for Terms, and I heard Mackintoſh give a particular Account of the Bravery and Hardineſs of their Troops. Mr. Wills told him he might have proved and tried them if he had pleaſed, and then it would have been ſeen whether the King's Troops or a parcel of Rebels would have acted the braver Part. Mr. Wills received them with the utmoſt Deteſtation and Contempt, and gave them no hope of Mercy either directly or indirectly.

Att. Gen. Did you ever hear any other of the Officers offer them any other Terms?

Brig. Munden. No, I did not hear any. I heard the Inſtructions that were given to Colonel Cotten by General Wills, and when Mr. Cotten came out of the Town the third time, which was when he went to take their Parole of Honour.

Sir J. Jekyll. Did my Lord Wintoun come to give his Parole?

Brig. Munden. When Colonel Cotten came out, I very well remember he ſaid he had received his Parole of Honour among the reſt.

Sir J. Jekyll. If my Lord at the Bar hath any mind to aſk this honourable Perſon, Brigadier Munden, any further Queſtions, we have done with him.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, do you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtion?

L. Wintoun. No.

Sir J. Jekyll. We that are entruſted by the Houſe of Commons have no more Evidence to offer to your Lordſhips.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons have done with the Evidence they propoſed to call againſt you, therefore it is your Lordſhip's time to open what Evidence you have, or if you have made any Obſervations on the Evidence given againſt you, to deliver them, or to call your own Witneſſes — Take your own Method.

Proclamation was made for Silence as uſual; and after ſome Pauſe,

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, I acquainted your Lordſhip that the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons who manage the Evidence to ſupport the Impeachment, have done with giving their Evidence; they deſign to give no more againſt you; therefore this is the time that is proper for your Lordſhip to make your Defence; you are to do it in your own Method, either by calling your Witneſſes, or making ſuch Obſervations in your Defence as you think proper.

L. Wintoun. Pleaſe to allow me ſome time, for my Witneſſes are not yet come. I have uſed all poſſible Endeavours to get them, pleaſe to allow me till this Day Month 'till they come up. It will ſignify nothing to examine any Witneſſes after I am dead.—I never ſaw my Council but once, that they might inſtruct me what I have to ſay. My Lords, I am informed they will be here ſome time next Week.

L. H. Steward. What your Lordſhip ſaid is not heard.

L. Wintoun. I ſaid I never ſpoke to any of my Council, and that but once I have ſent to my Council; I never ſaw them.

Proclamation for Silence was made as uſual.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, offer what you have to ſay now, while the Court is in Silence.

L. Wintoun. My Lords, the moſt material of my Witneſſes are not come up, they will be here ſome time next Week; I have not talk'd to my Council.

L. H. Steward. Your moſt material Witneſſes are upon the Road, you deſire ſome time till they come up; the Effect of your Petition to the Houſe of Lords, that is what you offer again?

L. Wintoun. Yes, my Lords.

Att. Gen. We think it our Duty to acquaint your Lordſhips, that what that noble Lord inſiſts upon now is out of time. If he had any Reaſons to offer to defer the Trial, he knew the proper Time and Place. Our Duty is to let your Lordſhips know, that when the Evidence for the Proſecution is given, the Priſoner is not to have time to delay the Proceedings, not any longer time. He ought to have applied before. We muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips.

Mr. Cowper. This Requeſt of his Lordſhip, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſeems to concern the Methods of Juſtice, and is, we think, of great Conſequence with reſpect to the Commons. My Lords, we ſhould have been very far from preſſing to bring on his Lordſhip's Trial ſooner than might have been thought conſiſtent with the Rules of Juſtice: But when we conſider the Time your Lordſhips have allowed him upon ſeveral Applications he has made to your Lordſhips for that purpoſe; when we all know he has had Notice ever ſince he was ſeized and made Priſoner at Preſton, that a Defence would be neceſſary, and that it concerned him to provide for it; when we reflect how long it is ſince the Commons exhibited their Impeachment againſt him, it's ſurprizing after all to find his Lordſhip alledge, that he hath not had Time to bring up his Witneſſes. With what View his Lordſhip is adviſed to make this Defence may be eaſily explained: It is, my Lords, to move the Compaſſion of the People, and, I fear, to traduce the Juſtice of your Lordſhips Proceedings. Surely it muſt be confeſſed, that he hath had more than Time ſufficient, more than any one in the like Circumſtances hath been allowed by your Lordſhips great Indulgence; and yet at laſt to have nothing to offer, but that his Witneſſes are not come, without attempting to produce one ſingle Witneſs to prove that he has or expects any one Witneſs to appear for him.

My Lords, the ſtated Rules of Proceeding in Trials of this Nature ought to be ever ſacred; and I don't know that any one Priſoner hath a Right to be indulged in Methods unknown to the Conſtitution.

My Lords, I believe when a Priſoner impeached by the Commons puts himſelf upon his Defence, and is brought upon his Trial, there ought to be no Interruption or Delay whatſoever. Sure I am, it is inconſiſtent with the Proceedings of all other Courts of Juſtice.

Your Lordſhips, as we are informed, lately denied the Priſoner any further Time; and if it was then thought not proper to be granted, certainly now he hath put himſelf upon his Trial, and ſtands upon his Defence at your Lordſhips Bar, he ſhall not be indulged to making the ſame Requeſt.

My Lords, whatever Compaſſion we may have for this unhappy Lord, yet the Commons, when they reflect that the Methods and Forms of Juſtice are eſſential to Juſtice it ſelf, they then think themſelves obliged to oppoſe a new Attempt, and hope the Trial ſhall proceed.

L. Wintoun. My Witneſſes are not come up. They will be up about Monday or Tueſday next. I have had no longer time than ſince the 10th of February laſt to bring up my Witneſſes, when it was very bad travelling.

A Motion was made to adjourn.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Lordſhip hath heard the Commons oppoſe your Requeſt: You have heard the Reaſons given for ſuch Oppoſition. Doth your Lordſhip, having heard the Reaſons, yet inſiſt upon it, or do you withdraw your Requeſt?

L. Wintoun. I inſiſt upon it, my Lords.

Then the Houſe was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

And being returned in about an Hour, and the Houſe reſumed, and Proclamation made for Silence, as uſual;

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, I am commanded by the Lords to let you know, that they have conſidered your Requeſt, and that they are of Opinion it is not now conſiſtent with the Rules of Juſtice to allow you further Time for ſending for your Witneſſes; therefore you are to proceed in your Defence. I am likewiſe to acquaint you, that in reſpect to the lowneſs of your Voice, the Lords have ordered a fit Perſon to ſtand by you (after he is ſworn) to report truly to their Lordſhips what you ſay during your Trial.

Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that one of your Lordſhips Clerks be appointed to ſtand by and report to your Lordſhips?

Lords. Yes, Yes.

A Clerk was ſworn to make true Report; but my Lord Wintoun began to ſpeak ſo very low, as ſcarce any could hear. Whereupon

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, I perceive it is your Lordſhips Pleaſure to indulge the Lord at the Bar, to have a Perſon ſworn to report truly to your Lordſhips what he ſhall ſay in his Defence; but it is not your Lordſhips Intention that the Lord at the Bar ſhould ſpeak ſo low, as it is impoſſible for us or any near him to hear what he ſays.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, Speak as loud as you can, ſo as the Managers may hear; he is only to help your Voice, ſo as their Lordſhips may hear.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. I think it very hard, and great Injuſtice, that I ſhould not be allowed Time to make my own Defence; and that my Witneſſes ſhould not come up; and that I ſhould be tyed down to a fooliſh Form, which I am not accuſtom'd to, when I am in danger of my Life.

Then the Houſe was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Friday, March 16. The Second Day.

L. H. Steward. THE Houſe is reſumed. Do your Lordſhips give the Judges leave to be cover'd?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation made for Silence, and another to bring forth the Priſoner, as uſual.

The Priſoner brought to the Bar, and kneels.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, you may riſe. ——My Lord Wintoun, you may proceed upon your Defence.

The Clerk order'd to report as before.

L. H. Steward. I again remind your Lordſhip, you are to ſpeak in your Defence as loud as you can; if your Voice is not heard, he is ready to report to the Lords what you ſay, but you muſt ſpeak as loud as you can.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. My Council is ready here to ſpeak for me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I would not preſume to make an Anſwer, but that it is known Law; that undoubtedly your Lordſhip cannot have Council, by the Law of the Land, to ſpeak in your Defence, unleſs it be to Matter of Law; for the Law ſuppoſes every Man ſufficient to anſwer for himſelf as to Matter of Fact.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lords, I am not accuſtomed to ſpeak on ſuch Occaſions; therefore I hope your Lordſhips will allow my Council to ſpeak for me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I muſt acquaint you, that the Law in this Caſe admits of no Exception, but holds to the general Rule.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lords, I don't underſtand the Law; I am perfectly a Stranger to the Cuſtoms of the Houſe, therefore hope your Lordſhips will allow my Council that know them to ſpeak for me.

L. H. Steward to the Clerk. You let your Voice fall.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I am not accuſtomed to the Practice of this Houſe; therefore I deſire that your Lordſhips would pleaſe to allow other People to ſpeak for me that underſtand them.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Council are not to be allowed to ſpeak for you, as to thoſe Things that are Matter of Fact, in an Impeachment of High-Treaſon, but to what is Matter of Law; and I believe if you aſk your own Council they will tell you, as the Law ſtands they cannot be heard for you here as to Matter of Fact.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. The Council will inform your Lordſhips of the Matter of Fact, and they know how better to expreſs it than I do.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, have you any Witneſſes to call in your Defence?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I told your Lordſhips Yeſterday, my moſt material Witneſſes were not yet come up.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I acquainted your Lordſhip Yeſterday, and now would remind you of your own Petition exhibited to the Houſe of Lords, wherein you acknowledge that a great many of your Witneſſes were come up; thoſe Witneſſes were arrived, you only then pretended Four were not yet come. Doth your Lordſhip deſign to make no manner of uſe of thoſe great Numbers of Witneſſes that you admitted were come?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. Without thoſe they would not be of ſuch an Effect—They would ſerve for nothing without thoſe Witneſſes coming.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve the Lords wait with great Patience, to ſee if your Lordſhip would be better adviſed, and go into your Defence.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I don't really know, my Lords, what to ſay for it, for I don't underſtand the Proceedings of this Houſe. It was always the Cuſtom in any Court where I was, for People to be allowed to ſpeak, or the Council be allowed allowed to ſpeak for me, for I am not accuſtomed to ſpeak any manner of way in my own Defence, therefore I hope you will allow my Council to ſpeak for me. My Council have a Point of Law to ſpeak to; they ſay ſo, but I know nothing of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Council have had Acceſs to you; and tho' your Lordſhip can't ſpeak and argue to the Point of Law, can't your Lordſhip propoſe what the Queſtion is?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. It is impoſſible for me to do a thing I don't underſtand; I don't know what the Point of Law is, no more than a Man that knows nothing about it.

When ſome laugh'd,

L. Wintoun. I am only ſpeaking in my own Defence; I don't expect to be laugh'd at.

L. H. Steward. I think his Lordſhip does obſerve well; I hope every one will forbear that.

L. H. Steward. Won't your Lordſhip be pleaſed to name what Matter the Queſtion concerns?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. It will be ſomething about the Trial; no doubt ſomething of what the common People have been ſpeaking about—It is, no doubt, in Anſwer to the Managers of the Houſe of Commons. I have not ſeen my Council ſince I was laſt here in the Houſe; I have been kept cloſe Priſoner all the time, and no Body come near me; nor had I any Time to ſpeak with any Body, particularly with my Council; ſo that I have not had Time to be exactly informed of all the Points of Law they have to plead. The Council will tell themſelves what Point of Law they have to plead.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, regularly you ſhould propound your own Queſtion before your Council ſpeak. Before it appears to be a Point of Law, it is not fit for your Council to be heard.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. It is impoſſible I ſhould direct a Council, I, that don't underſtand Law; I can't introduce a Point of Law; my Council will ſpeak to the Point of Law.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, did not you ſpeak to your Council laſt Night?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I could not.

L. H. Steward. Why?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. Becauſe it was late when I went from hence; and your Lordſhips know I am a cloſe Priſoner in the Tower; and was lock'd up and could not ſee them. I ſee no Body but the Guards.

L. H. Steward. Hath not your Lordſhip ſeveral times ſeen your Council, as often as you required an Order for ſo doing?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I never ſaw my Council but once, before I gave in my Anſwer.

L. H. Steward. Did you deſire to ſee them oftner?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lords, my Solicitor ſpoke to them; and my Witneſſes not being come up, it was needleſs for me to ſpeak to my Council, before that they might know what the Witneſſes had to ſay, and ſo might draw up the State of the Queſtion. I did not doubt but the Lords would have given me more Time; and therefore I was not ſo deſirous to ſee my Council, as I would have been, if I thought I ſhould have been ſo much crampt in Time.

Mr. Cowper. My Lords, I had the Honour to receive the Commands of the Commons, to reply to his Lordſhip's Defence; and it was reaſonable to expect that the Priſoner, having pleaded Not Guilty to the Impeachment, would have attempted to give ſome Evidence in ſupport of his Plea; but ſince it ſeems to be his Lordſhip's Reſolution not to enter into a Defence, I think it my Duty to ſay ſomething to your Lordſhips upon this unexpected Occaſion. Such is the Treaſon, and ſo full the Evidence to prove it, that I think his Lordſhip's Behaviour, unaccountable as it is, more to his Purpoſe than any other could have been. My Lords, I am very unwilling to ſpeak my own private Sentiment of his Lordſhip's preſent Conduct, although the Obſervations I could make ariſe out of his Lordſhip's Anſwer to the Impeachment: Whoever ſhall read and conſider it, will find my Lord Wintoun not denying, but confeſſing the ſeveral Overt-Acts of Treaſon laid to his Charge, and then drawing a falſe Concluſion, that he is Not Guilty however of the Treaſon whereof he is accuſed. He denies that what he did was done with a traiterous Intention, and ſays very emphatically, that the pure Streams of Loyalty which have always run in the Blood of his Anceſtors, are derived to him uncorrupted; and thus, my Lords, a Popiſh Pretender being the Object of his Lordſhip's Loyalty, he thinks he may be guilty of the whole Impeachment without being a Traitor. This is the true ſtate of the Caſe. It ſeems to me, his Lordſhip is determined to maintain his Point; and how far he may think it proper to acknowledge your Lordſhip's Juriſdiction I know not. My Lords, as to the Impeachment which the Commons with great Juſtice have exhibited againſt this Priſoner, your Lordſhips have obſerved that the ſeveral Treaſons therein contained have been fully proved; I am unwilling, in a caſe ſo plain, and where no Defence has been, or can be made, to waſte your Lordſhip's Time. Your Lordſhips have heard, in the courſe of the Evidence which we have produced, that this Lord departed from his Seat of Seaton Houſe with about fourteen of his own Servants free and unconſtrained; that he joined others of the Rebels at Moffett, at which Place his Lordſhip was pleaſed to form a Troop, which from thenceforth was called the Earl of Wintoun's Troop. The Priſoner had the Command of it, and for fear his Zeal for the Pretender ſhould paſs unobſerved, his own Servants rid in his own Troop in his own Livery; and I may add, that it appears his Lordſhip's Troop was paid after the rate of Two Shillings per diem each Man, by his Lordſhip's Order, and with his own Money. From the Town of Moffett, which I mentioned, your Lordſhips had an account of many Marches and Countermarches; his Lordſhip and the Rebels under him every where increaſing in their Numbers; every where declaring and proclaiming the Pretender to his Majeſty's Crown, as King of theſe Realms. And, my Lords, I may venture to ſay it appears through the whole courſe of the Evidence, that no one was more zealous and active than the Priſoner. My Lords——

L. Guilford. I am very ſorry to interrupt that Gentleman, but I think it proper, before the Houſe of Commons ſum up their Evidence, to move your Lordſhips to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Houſe was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and after about half an Hour returned, and the Houſe was reſum'd.

And Proclamation for Silence being made as uſual,

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, I am order'd by their Lordſhips to acquaint you, that they are yet ready to hear any thing that you have to ſay in your Defence by way of Obſervation upon what hath been proved againſt you, or alledged againſt you, or otherwiſe; they are likewiſe ready to hear any Witneſſes you are pleaſed to call or produce; but then I am to acquaint your Lordſhip, that if you neglect this Opportunity now given you, then it is their Lordſhips Pleaſure that I ſhould ſignify to the Managers of the Houſe of Commons, that they ſhould go on to their Reply; and if ſuch Reply be made, your Lordſhip hath no further Opportunity to alledge any thing, or to prove any thing. This Notice is order'd by their Lordſhips to be given you. I am likewiſe to acquaint you, that it is their Lordſhips Opinion, as I before told you, that if you have any Queſtion of Law to be ſpoken by your Council, their Lordſhips cannot admit any other Form, but that you ſhould propound it to their Lordſhips yourſelf.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I believe my Council, my Lords, have ſomething to ſay in Anſwer to what the Managers have ſaid. My Lords, the Gentleman who was preſent, knows they would not let me know what they had to ſay.

Clerk. He ſays I was by when his Council ſaid ſo.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if your Lordſhip hath any Notes or Papers, you may help your Memory by them in your Defence——Read or look upon them.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I ſhall read it as I can, and you will excuſe it if I don't do it right as I ſhould do.

Lord Wintoun reads, and the Clerk repeats.

The Council have a Point of Law ariſing from what hath been paſs'd in the Houſe, to ſhew that he is ſuch a Perſon as is not capable of committing the Treaſon laid in the Impeachment. I plead Not Guilty, and this alledges the ſame. I ſay I am Not Guilty, and the Paper ſays it will demonſtrate I am not.

The Paper read again and repeated as before. The Council have a Point of Law ariſing from what hath paſſed in the Houſe, to ſhew that he is ſuch a Perſon that is not capable of committing the Treaſon laid in the Impeachment.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I don't underſtand Law, and how ſhould I introduce a Point of Law?

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, if your Lordſhip doth not proceed to make a Defence, and to call your Witneſſes, I have already acquainted you, and I believe I ſhall be excuſed for doing it a ſecond Time, that I ſhall ſignify to the Managers of the Houſe of Commons to reply, after which your Lordſhip can't have them examined.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I heard your Lordſhip what you ſaid, but I don't underſtand what is meant by it.

L. H. Steward. They may proceed to ſay what they think proper touching that Sort of Defence your Lordſhip is making, to anſwer what they have already ſaid and proved againſt your Lordſhip; after they have ſaid and done this, the Lords won't allow you to ſpeak afterwards.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. The Council deſire to be heard, ſince they have written a Paper, to be heard on that Paper.

L. H. Steward. The Paper is allowed to help your own Memory, but you muſt not give in any Paper as written by your Council, nor mention it as ſuch.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I deſire my Council may be heard on the Point of Law contained in what I call the Paper. I deſire my Council may be heard to the Point of Law, which I read out of the Paper. I deſire my Council may be heard to the Point of Law, which they urge they have to ſay.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, you have by the help of a Paper, propounded that which you call a Point of Law. Their Lordſhips have heard what you have propounded. I don't find any Motion is made to adjourn, to conſider whether ſuch a Point is fit for your Council to be heard to, that is, whether it is a Point of Law. If there be any Doubt, you will preſently ſee it by the Effect, by ſuch a Motion as I have mentioned.

After ſome Pauſe,

L. H. Steward. If your Lordſhip doth not proceed, I muſt intimate to the Managers of the Houſe of Commons that they may reply.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lords, if your Lordſhips will allow my Council to be heard on the Point of Law I have given in.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I think I may now preſume to tell you, that I humbly apprehend it is no Point of Law which you propoſe.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I am not a Judge of a Point of Law, for I don't underſtand Law, nor never did.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the ſame Matter muſt not be drawn over and over again. If your Lordſhip doth not proceed to ſomething proper for your Defence, I muſt ſignify immediately to the Managers that they may reply.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. If your Lordſhips pleaſe to hear the Council, they will tell you what it means. The Council dare not ſpeak till they be deſired.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, you may reply.

Mr. Cowper. My Lords, I ſhall avoid, as near as I am able, repeating any Thing I have already ſaid before your Lordſhips laſt Adjournment. I was obſerving that the Behaviour of the Priſoner, my Lord Wintoun, throughout all his Conduct, during the whole Progreſs of the Rebellion, appear'd in a quite different Light, to that in which he would now willingly appear: Your Lordſhips find him, according to the Evidence, at every falſe Alarm very inquiſitive to know the Occaſion; having aſſumed the Command of a Squadron, his Lordſhip was inſtantly at his Poſt, ready to receive and encounter his Majeſty's Forces, and the Reverend Mr. Patten has done Juſtice to his Lordſhip's Vigilance and Courage upon this Occaſion; but it ſeems the Alarms were both falſe: Hence we may obſerve, that Alarms may be falſe, and Dangers may be imaginary; which Mr. Patten, and Men of his Principles would do well to reflect on at leiſure. My Lords, after great Numbers of Marches and Counter-marches, during which his Majeſty's Subjects were plundered, the Publick Money ſeized, and Taxes exacted from the People by Force and Violence, Your Lordſhips have heard that the Town of Preſton was ſeiz'd by this Lord, and the Traitors, his Accomplices. At this Place enſued a terrible Slaughter of his Majeſty's faithful Soldiers, Men who deſerved a better Fate than to die by the Hands of ſuch perfidious Rebels. But when the uſual Bravery of the King's Troops prevailed, and there was nothing left but the undeſerved Hope of Mercy, you find the Priſoner amongſt the reſt ſurrendering his Arms and his Perſon to the Diſcretion of his Majeſty's Generals. The Commons cannot, my Lords, but take a particular Satisfaction in one Incident, occaſion'd by this Lord's putting himſelf upon his Trial, which is, that it has adminiſter'd to them a Time and an Opportunity, in the moſt publick Manner before this Auguſt Aſſembly, to vindicate his Majeſty's Generals from a malicious Calumny ſuggeſted even by this Lord, the Priſoner, in his Anſwer to the Impeachment, and not only by him, but by the reſt of his Accomplices already attainted. It ſeems not to be accidental, that all the Lords mentioned in the Impeachment ſhould every one of them (falſe as it appears to be) alledge that they ſurrender'd, ſome ſay upon Promiſes, but all agree upon Hopes given of Mercy, conſidering how fully it now appears, that there is not the leaſt Colour or Shadow of Truth to ſupport this Suggeſtion; it is no uncharitable Reflection to ſay, that their Lordſhips, I doubt, to ſupply the Miſchiefs their Arms could not accompliſh, were willing to aſſiſt their Party, by furniſhing them with an Untruth to propagate. With what Zeal and Induſtry has it been accordingly propagated! I may take the Liberty, I preſume, to ſay, with the Conſent of this whole Aſſembly, that it appears on the Evidence to be utterly falſe; nay further, that the very Reverſe is true, the Rebels would willingly have obtained a Promiſe, or even a Hope of being recommended, but the Generals rightly told them, Rebels deſerved no Mercy, nor would they treat with Rebels of ſurrendering otherwiſe than at Diſcretion. I cannot conclude without touching ſhortly upon a Queſtion which I obſerved his Lordſhip to aſk, during the Courſe of the Evidence; I think it was propoſed to Colonel Cotten, Whether any of our Men, as his Lordſhip was pleaſed to expreſs it, were ſlain during the Time of the Ceſſation of Arms at Preſton? which, in fact, was true; and if it had been anſwer'd in the Affirmative without Explanation, I believe his Lordſhip would have been gratified, by furniſhing his Friends with another Story to propagate, which, well improved, might have laſted a good while; but when the Witneſs (who, I preſume, diſcerned the Tendency and Malignancy of the Queſtion) gave his Anſwer, the Caſe appears this; The Rebels ſtipulate and agree (Hoſtages being delivered) that no Works ſhall be erected in the Town during the Suſpenſion; that no Perſon then in the Town ſhall go out of it during the ſame time; in Breach of which Stipulation and Agreement about ſix of the Rebels attempt, Sword in Hand, to charge through the King's Troops, in which Attempt they fell; and if the King's Troops had done leſs they had not done their Duty. My Lords, I thought it not improper to make ſome few Obſervations upon the Evidence; not that his Lordſhip's Defence has made it requiſite, but to anſwer, according to my Power, the End of that Truſt which the Commons have been pleaſed to repoſe in me.

Sir William Thomſon. My Lords, I ſhould think myſelf unworthy the Honour of being allowed any Share of your Lordſhips Time; but as I was entruſted by the Commons to aſſiſt the learned Gentleman who ſpoke laſt, in a Reply to ſuch Defence as ſhould be made by the Noble Lord at the Bar, although no Evidence has been produced by him, yet I muſt requeſt your Lordſhips Patience to make a few Remarks upon the Nature of this Cauſe, as it ſtands before your Lordſhips.

The Anſwer of the Noble Lord not being ſupported by Evidence, ought to go for nothing; but ſince ſeveral Matters are alledged in it to mitigate, if not to juſtify his Proceedings, which are falſified by our Evidence, I beg leave to take ſome notice of it.

I muſt agree with the Noble Lord, that "It "will be very pleaſing to that honourable Aſ- "ſembly who are his Accuſers to have an inno- "cent Man acquitted, as well as a guilty one "condemned." Nor can I differ with him where he aſſerts, "That to be taken with Perſons in "Arms againſt the Government, is a reaſonable "Preſumption of his Guilt, and a very juſt "Foundation to accuſe him with the reſt ſo "taken; but that the Circumſtances of his Caſe "appear ſo different from the others, as to re- "quire your Lordſhips diſtinguiſhing him in "Judgment." I cannot ſay, that any thing has been offer'd to your Lordſhips which makes room for ſuch a Diſtinction.

"The Noble Lord is pleaſed to give an Ac- "count of what happened to him about eight "Years ago, when he endeavour'd to avoid the "Suſpicion of the Government; he mentions the "ill Uſage of the Militia and the King's Troops, "and ſeveral Tranſactions, viz. rifling his Houſe, "and committing Diſorders there, without tel- "ling when they happened, or from whom; he "is pleas'd to ſay that he was unfortunately "driven into the Company of ſome of the Per- "ſons mentioned in the Impeachment; that he "joined them without any Intention to aſſiſt their "Deſigns; that he never meant to leave his own "Country; that he was ignorant of the Pur- "poſes of his Companions; that he was con- "ſtrain'd to keep them Company, but never "join'd in any Act of Hoſtility, or countenanced "or abetted them therein.

My Lords, the Evidence againſt this Noble Lord ſufficiently explains how far he abetted the Undertakings of his Companions.

It was prov'd to your Lordſhips, that when he firſt came to join the Rebels at Moffett, he brought fourteen of his Domeſticks with him, moſt of them well armed and accoutred; that he came with them to a Place of Rendezvous, where were aſſembled the Lord Kenmure, and about one hundred and fifty Horſe; that from the Time he joined them till he was taken, he marched along with them in an Hoſtile Manner through all the Towns at the Head of his Troop that he had form'd, and which he commanded upon all Occaſions; that he had alſo a Squadron under his Command and Direction, to whom he gave Orders, and was very ready to have diſpoſed them to Action, particularly on two Alarms of the King's Troops; that he aſſiſted ſeveral Times at the proclaiming the Pretender by the Rebels in the the Towns where they paſſed thro' with his Sword in Hand; that he was with them at thoſe Towns where they ſeized the Publick Money, the Cannon, and other warlike Inſtruments; and when he came to Preſton, that in the Preparations to reſiſt the King's Troops he was as active as any of the reſt; and particularly in the Church-yard, where the Rebels were drawn together in order to that Reſiſtance, he had his Sword and Piſtols with him, and was aſſiſting in making the Diſpoſitions for Engagement.

And for the Conſtraint that is pretended, 'tis plain, that as he came in to the Rebels in the manner I have mentioned without any Force or Compulſion whatever, ſo he continued all along with them, and gave them the beſt Aſſiſtance he could, and was far from ſhewing any Backwardneſs or Uneaſineſs at their Proceedings through the whole Progreſs of this Affair. He drank the Pretender's Health, and the other uſual Healths among the Rebels, viz. Succeſs to their Cauſe; and if he had not wiſh'd it, he might have left them whenever he would, if he had an Inclination ſo to do; he did not want an Opportunity, particularly at Langholm, when about five hundred Highlanders went back to Scotland; before they went they ſuffer'd him to come to them (though they would not any other) that he diſcourſed them, and came back from them, and declared it was not his Fault that they would not go along with him into England. My Lords, whether the whole Tenor of this Proceeding does not manifeſt the Intentions of this Noble Lord, and whether the Evidence of theſe Facts does not falſify every Allegation in his Anſwer, by which he would juſtify himſelf, your Lordſhips will eaſily determine.

The Noble Lord ſays further in his Anſwer, "That if he hath committed any Act which by "the Rigour of the Law may be conſtrued High-"Treaſon, he hopes the Innocence of his Heart, "and his Ignorance of the Law, will, by your "Lordſhip's Interceſſion, render him an Object "of his Majeſty's Mercy; which, he ſays, at "the Time of his Surrender, he was encouraged "to depend upon by his Majeſty's Officers."

As to any Aſſurances or Encouragement to expect Mercy upon the Surrender, the direct contrary is fully made out, I dare ſay, to your Lordſhips entire Satisfaction. And for your Lordſhips Interceſſion, that is not the Conſideration now before you: The Queſtions is only, whether the Witneſſes have proved him guilty of the High-Treaſon of which he is accuſed?

I find the noble Lord cannot condeſcend to own the Facts he is charged with to amount to this Crime: He is pleaſed to ſay, "That he is de-"ſcended from a noble Family, in whoſe Blood "the Streams of Loyalty were always pure, "never corrupted or polluted with Treaſon or "Sedition; that he never degenerated from his "loyal Anceſtors, ſo as to form or carry on any "Deſign to ſubvert or alter the Conſtitution of "this Kingdom, but that he was always ready "to ſacrifice his Fortune, and even his Life for "its Preſervation.

My Lords, I could wiſh, for the Sake of this unhappy Lord, the Object of your preſent Conſideration, that it were not too evident what Conſtitution he meant to preſerve, and for which he has ventured his Life and Fortune.

All Mankind, who will not ſhut their Eyes, muſt ſee that the Purpoſe of this Noble Lord and his Accomplices was to dethrone his moſt ſacred Majeſty, our Proteſtant King, whom God and the Laws have ſet over us, and in his Stead to ſet up a Popiſh Pretender to his Crown, bred up in Superſtition, and under the Maxims of Tyranny and Arbitrary Power: The Succeſs of this Deſign muſt neceſſarily have produced a moſt dreadful Scene of Blood and Confuſion; the Life of our moſt gracious Sovereign, the Lives of all his Royal Family, your Lordſhips, and thoſe other brave and honeſt Britons who would have ſtood in the Defence of the Religion, the Laws and Liberties of their Country, muſt have been ſacrificed to the Rage and Fury of Popiſh Bigotry, and to the inſatiable Cruelty of Jeſuits and Prieſts, who, as we are Proteſtants, are our moſt implacable Enemies.

Inſtead of the Happineſs we now enjoy under our moſt excellent Form of Government, where every thing that is dear and valuable to human Nature is protected by the Laws from the leaſt Violence or Invaſion whatever, what could this Nation expect from Popery and Arbitrary Power, but endleſs Miſeries and Calamities, and the moſt abject Slavery?

My Lords, it is a melancholy Reflection, that there ſhould be any, who pretend to the Name of Britons, who would engage in ſo groundleſs, ſo unprovok'd, and, moſt properly called, ſo unnatural a Rebellion; or that others ſhould be ſo deluded or corrupted, as, by their falſe and malicious Inſinuations, and by their vile Calumnies on the beſt of Princes, or by their avowed Indifference towards him, to encourage that traiterous Enterprize.

All ſuch Enemies to the Welfare and Proſperity of their Country, ought to reflect, with the utmoſt Shame and Confuſion, on the diſmal Proſpect they were preparing for us by the natural Tendency of their Proceedings: And I cannot but think, that it muſt add to the Affliction of this unfortunate Lord who ſtands before this Auguſt Judicature, while he reflects on the Aſſurances given him of generous Compaſſion as far as is conſiſtent with the Rules of Juſtice, while he conſiders of that Humanity and tender Regard expreſs'd towards him by that great and noble Mind, who ſo juſtly repreſented all your Lordſhips Sentiments, while he obſerves that Care and Concern ſhewn to him, that Aſſiſtance granted him towards making his Defence, and that his Judges are ſo many noble Peers, who can never be influenced to condemn the Innocent, and who will be govern'd only by full Proof and clear Conviction: Sure he muſt now reproach himſelf, when he thinks that he was about to ſubvert thoſe very Laws by which even his Life, who has ſo tranſgreſſed, is thus protected.

My Lords, I am here led to take notice alſo, that his moſt gracious Majeſty (againſt whom this unfortunate Lord, with his Aſſociates, have ſo ſignally offended) hath been pleaſed to expreſs his mild and gentle Diſpoſition, even to them his moſt inveterate Enemies. It was an Uneaſineſs to him that he could not diſtinguiſh the firſt Years of his Reign by the endearing Marks of Peace and Clemency; it afflicted him that the Calamities of his faithful Subjects ſhould require indiſpenſable Returns of Severity.

I may preſume your Lordſhips natural Compaſſion would incline you to the ſame merciful Diſpoſition; but the Commons are perſuaded that your Lordſhips will have ſome Regard to the Lives of thoſe many brave and gallant Men, who by the baſe Methods of the Rebels were murdered, and expired in their Country's Cauſe; that their Blood demands the Juſtice of that Country in whoſe Defence it was ſpilt; and the Commons are aſſured that your Lordſhips muſt think that the Publick Safety alſo requires your exemplary Juſtice, more eſpecially on the principal Offenders; and that 'tis the moſt effectual Method to prevent any future Inſurrections or Diſturbance of the Publick Repoſe and Tranquillity of the Kingdom, and to render firm and laſting our preſent happy Eſtabliſhment.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons have nothing more to offer to your Lordſhips, but deſire your Lordſhips Opinion on this Evidence.

Then the Houſe of Lords was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and being returned, the Houſe reſumed, and Proclamation made for Silence as uſual.

Then the Lord High-Steward being ſeated on the Chair, placed as before-mentioned, ſtood up uncovered, and beginning with the youngeſt Peer, ſaid, Thomas Lord Parker, what ſays your Lordſhip, is George Earl of Wintoun Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached, or not Guilty?

Proclamation for Silence, and Proclamation to bring forth the Prisoner, as usual.

L. H. Steward. George Earl of Wintoun, the Lords have considered of the Charge, and the Evidence given against you; and likewise of what you have said in your Defence, and of the whole Matter as it hath been before them in this Trial, and are of Opinion that your Lordship is Guilty, and have found your Lordship guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached.

Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then all the Lords return'd in the Order before-mentioned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Monday, March 19. The Third Day.

PRoclamation for Silence, and Proclamation for the Prisoner to be brought to the Bar, as usual.

L. H. Steward. George Earl of Wintoun, when you was last at this Bar, I let your Lordship know that your Peers had found you guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached, that is in the Terms of Law, convicted you of High-Treason. I am now to ask your Lordship if you have any thing to offer why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you according to the Law.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lord Wintoun saith his Council have a Point of Law to offer to your Lordships, to shew that he is such a Person, against whom, by Law, Judgment ought not to be given.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, will your Lordship state the Point upon which your Lordship is advised, that you are not such a Person against whom Judgment ought to be given?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I don't know what your Lordship means.

Sir C. Phipps. If your Lordships please, we have a Point of Law humbly to offer to your Lordships, if ——

Att. Gen. My Lords, I hear a Gentleman of the long Robe offering to speak. I do humbly insist on it that they are not to speak, unless there be a Point of Law stated by the Prisoner, and which your Lordships shall think to be a Point of Law, we think it irregular.

Mr. Cowper. We apprehend the Objection to that Gentleman's being heard is so obvious, that we are surprised to find he should presume to speak without your Lordship's Direction so to do; he cannot but know that the Prisoner is to propound the Question in Law; and if your Lordships shall conceive it to be a Point of Law proper to be argued by Council, your Lordships will direct him to speak; but he ought not in any case to propound a Question in Law, nor when a Question is propounded by the Prisoner, to speak to it without your Lordships express Direction.

Lord High-Steward. Sir Constantine Phipps, you know the Practice to be so, and the Point must be first stated by the Prisoner before you can speak to it.

Sir C. Phipps. My Lords, if I had been heard but ten Words more ——

Sir W. Thomson. My Lords, we humbly insist upon it that that Gentleman be not heard one Word more.

Lord Ilay moved to adjourn.

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordship's pleasure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords went in their Order to the Chamber of Parliament.

And after about half an Hour being returned,

The House was resumed, and Proclamation made for Silence, as usual.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the Lords have consider'd of the Matter which you have moved in Arrest of Judgment, which was to this effect, that you are not ſuch a Perſon as againſt whom Judgment of Death for High-Treaſon ought to be pronounced. I am directed to acquaint you that their Lordſhips are of Opinion it is Matter of Fact, and not of Law; and that the Lords think you are ſuch a Perſon as againſt whom Judgment ought to be given in this Caſe. I am likewiſe ordered by the Lords to reprimand you Sir Conſtantine Phipps, for having, in a Proceeding of this Nature, preſumed to be ſo forward as to ſpeak for the Priſoner at the Bar before a Point of Law was firſt ſtated, and you had leave to ſpeak to it; and your Fault is certainly the greater, for having preſumed to do this to a Matter which you cannot but know is Matter of Fact, and that the Law is not doubtful one way or other, the Fact being ſuppoſed. My Lord Wintoun, I am allowed again to aſk your Lordſhip, if you have any thing further to alledge or move why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon you according to the Law.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Council are ready to offer, in Arreſt of Judgment, that the Impeachment is inſufficient, for the Time of committing the Treaſon is not therein laid with ſufficient Certainty.

L. H. Steward. I think the Matter moved by my Lord is, that his Council ſhould be admitted to ſhew that the Impeachment is inſufficient, in reſpect that the Time therein is not laid with ſufficient Certainty. This I think is the Matter moved. Will your Lordſhips be pleaſed that the Council have Leave to ſpeak?

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure that the Council for the Priſoner may be allowed to ſpeak to this Pont?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. I aſk your Lordſhips leave to go nearer to the Table.

Which being done,

Proclamation for Silence was made as uſual.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen that are of Council for the Priſoner at the Bar, you have liberty to ſpeak to the Point propoſed.

Sir Conſtantine Phipps. MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhips, we that have the Honour to be aſſigned by your Lordſhips as Council in this Caſe, do humbly apprehend the Impeachment againſt the noble Lord at the Bar to be inſufficient; it is ſo uncertain, that we (with the greateſt Submiſſion) take it no Judgment can be given upon it. My Lords, we beg leave to take Notice to your Lordſhips, that in Indictments in the Courts below, even for Treſpaſſes, the Law requires the certain Day when the Offence is ſuppoſed to be committed to be alledged, and if a particular Day be not laid, the Indictment is inſufficient. And if ſuch Certainty is requiſite in Offences of the moſt minute Nature, it is much more ſo in capital Crimes, and more ſtill in Offences of the higheſt Nature, ſuch as Treaſon, with which this noble Lord is charged.

My Lords, there be two Reaſons why, in Indictments for High-Treaſon, a certain Day ſhould be aſſigned when the Treaſon was committed.

One is for the Advantage of the Priſoner, that being appriſed not only of the Facts with which he is charged, but alſo of the Time when thoſe Facts are ſuppoſed to be committed, he may be the better able to make his Defence: 'Tis poſſible he may have Witneſſes to prove he was at another Place, and in other Company, at the Time when he is accuſed to have committed the Treaſon, or may by other Circumſtances make his Innocence appear.

The ſecond Reaſon is for the Benefit of the Crown, that it may be known to what Time the Forfeiture ſhall relate; for in Treaſon the Forfeiture relates to the Time laid in the Indictment; and if there be no preciſe Time alledged in the Indictment, the Forfeiture can relate no further than to the Judgment.

My Lords, the Forfeitures in Caſes of Treaſon are very great, therefore we conceive, with humble Submiſſion, that the Accuſation ought to contain all the Certainty it is capable of, that the Priſoner may not by general Allegations be rendered incapable to defend himſelf in a Caſe which may prove ſo fatal to him.

Our Books, my Lords, furniſh us with many Inſtances where Indictments have been held to be inſufficient for leſs Faults than not ſpecifying the Day when the Offence was committed; but in Caſes ſo plain, I will not trouble your Lordſhips with citing Authorities; for I believe there is not one Gentleman of the long Robe but will agree an Indictment for any capital Offence to be erroneous, if the Offence be not alledged to be committed upon a certain Day.

My Lords, an Attainder upon an Impeachment ſubjects the Offender to the ſame Puniſhment, the ſame Forfeitures, as an Attainder upon an Indictment; and therefore I am at a loſs to find out a Reaſon why there ſhould not be the ſame Certainty in one, as in the other; if equal Certainty be required in both, then we humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment whether this Impeachment be not erroneous and inſufficient, in that there is no particular certain Time alledged when the Treaſon or the Overt-Acts were committed. The Treaſon alledged is conſpiring and imagining the Death of the King, and the Impeachment ſets forth, "That the Conſpirators "(and names them) as falſe Traytors to his pre- "ſent moſt ſacred Majeſty King George, the only "lawful and undoubted Sovereign of theſe King- "doms, having withdrawn their Allegiance, and "cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, "which they, as good and faithful Subjects, "owed to his ſaid Majeſty, did, in or about "the Months of September, October, or Novem- "ber 1715, moſt wickedly, maliciouſly, falſly, "and traiterouſly imagine and compaſs the Death "of his moſt ſacred Majeſty." My Lords, a Proſecution by Impeachment is a Proceeding at the Common Law, for Lex Parliamentaria is a Part of the Common Law; and we humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhips Conſideration, whether there is not the ſame Certainty required in one Method of Proceeding at the Common Law as in another.

Your Lordſhips obſerve with what Uncertainty, as to the Time, the Treaſon is alledged. 'Tis ſaid to be in or about the Months of September, October, or November 1715. Who is able to ſay to which of theſe Months, much leſs to what Day of either of theſe Months, the Forfeiture ſhall relate? And how is it poſſible for the noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, to make a Defence to a Charge ſo general, unleſs he bring for Witneſſes all thoſe Perſons with whom he has had any Converſation during thoſe three Months at leaſt?

My Lords, The Overt-Acts are alledged with the ſame Inſufficiency and Uncertainty as the Treaſon it ſelf is; for in charging the firſt Overt-Act, which is conſpiring to levy War and to depoſe the King, it is ſaid, "That for accompliſhing "and executing their ſaid traiterous Purpoſes, "they the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, &c. "did, in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of "them, and at diverſe other Times, and at di-"verſe other Places within this Kingdom, wick-"edly and traiterouſly agree, confederate, &c. "to raiſe, excite, and levy, within the Counties "of Teviotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and "the County-Palatine of Cheſter, and elſewhere "within this Kingdom, a moſt cruel, bloody, "and deſtructive War againſt his Majeſty, in "order to depoſe and murther his ſacred Ma-"jeſty, and to deprive him of his royal State, "Crown and Dignity." My Lords, can any thing be more uncertainly alledged, than to ſay that the Conſpirators did, in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of them, and at diverſe other Times, and at diverſe other Places within this Kingdom, confederate, &c. to levy War within the Counties of Teviotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and County-Palatine of Cheſter, and elſewhere within this Kingdom?

The next Overt-Act, which is actually levying War, is not laid with greater Certainty; for the Impeachment ſets forth, "That the ſaid Earl of "Derwentwater, &c. their Accomplices and Con-"federates, in or about the Months aforeſaid, in "the Counties aforeſaid, or ſome of them, did "gather together great Numbers of his Maje-"ſty's Subjects, and with them did aſſemble in "a warlike and traiterous manner, in order to "raiſe Tumults and Rebellion within this King-"dom; and having procured great Quantities "of Arms, Ammunition, and warlike Inſtru-"ments, at the Times and Places aforeſaid, or "ſome of them, did form and compoſe, or did "aſſiſt in forming and compoſing an Army of "Men, conſiſting of his Majeſty's liege Sub-"jects, in order to wage War againſt his ſaid "Majeſty, for, and in behalf, and in favour of "the ſaid Pretender to the Crown of theſe "Realms; and at the Time, and Times, and "Places aforeſaid, and at divers other Times and "Places within this Kingdom, the ſaid Conſpi-"rators did levy and raiſe War and Rebellion "againſt his moſt ſacred Majeſty, &c.

The next Overt-Act is proclaiming the Pretender, which is more uncertain than any of the other; for the Impeachment ſets forth, "That "the aforeſaid Conſpirators, during their March "and Invaſion aforeſaid, in open Defiance of his "moſt ſacred Majeſty's juſt and undoubted Ti-"tle to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, "did wickedly and traiterouſly cauſe and pro-"cure the ſaid Pretender to be proclaimed in the "moſt publick and ſolemn manner as King of "theſe Realms.

Here is no certain Time or Place alledged when or where the Pretender was proclaim'd, but only that it was during their March and Invaſion.

The laſt Overt-Act ſeems to be laid with greater Certainty than the reſt; for 'tis ſaid, "That the "Conſpirators did, on or about the 9th, 10th, "11th, 12th, or 13th of November aforeſaid, "traiterouſly ſeize and poſſeſs themſelves of the "Town of Preſton, in the County Palatine of "Lancaſter, againſt his Majeſty, and did then, "and there, in a warlike and hoſtile Manner, "levy War, oppoſe, engage, and fight againſt "his Majeſty's Forces, and did then and there "cauſe and procure a miſerable and horrid "Slaughter and Murther of many of his Ma-"jeſty's faithful Subjects." Here indeed are particular Days mention'd, but then the Words or about leave it at large, for no Man can tell how many Days may be included in theſe Words or about. We humbly apprehend that a Charge of this high Nature ought not to be alledged with ſuch uncertainty, and that the Impeachment is as erroneous as an Indictment drawn in this Manner would be; this being a Proceeding of the ſame Nature, and according to the Courſe of the Common Law.

My Lords, I do not pretend any great Skill in Parliamentary Proceedings, but preſume to ſay that in my little Experience in Buſineſs in other Courts, I never ſaw a Charge exhibited againſt any one that was laid in ſo uncertain a manner, unleſs in Libels in the Eccleſiaſtical or Admiralty Courts, which cannot in the leaſt influence the Caſe now before your Lordſhips; this (as I have obſerved) being a Proceeding according to the Courſe of the Common Law.

Upon the whole Matter I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment, whether for the Reaſons I have offer'd to your Lordſhips Conſideration, the Impeachment is not erroneous, and whether your Lordſhips will think fit to proceed to Judgment againſt the noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar upon an Impeachment ſo uncertain and inſufficient as I humbly apprehend this to be.

Mr. Williams. MY Lords, I am alſo aſſign'd, by your Lordſhips, of Council for this unfortunate Lord, and humbly inſiſt in arreſt of Judgment, that there is a Defect in this Impeachment, in regard no certain Day is laid, when the Treaſon is charg'd to have been committed.

In the Impeachment 'tis ſaid, that this noble Lord did, in or about the Months of September, October or November 1715, together with the others in the Impeachment nam'd, traiterouſly compaſs the Death of his moſt ſacred Majeſty: That this noble Lord did, in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of them, together with the reſt, agree and confederate to levy War, againſt his Majeſty: That in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of them, this noble Lord with others did levy War, and did march thro' ſeveral parts of the Kingdoms, and did proclaim the Pretender to be King: And that on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, or Thirteenth of the ſaid November, the noble Lord with others did ſeize and poſſeſs themſelves of the Town of Preſton, and fought againſt his Majeſty's Forces.

This is the Effect of the Impeachment.

And with great Submiſſion I take it, that in Point of Law, the Impeachment is defective in reſpect of the Uncertainty of the Time when this Treaſon is ſaid to have been committed.

I humbly apprehend, that the Honourable the Houſe of Commons is the Grand Inqueſt of the whole Nation; and that their Impeachment is in Nature of an Indictment, found by that Grand Inqueſt: Differing from an Indictment in this Reſpect, that an Indictment is found by the Inqueſt of a County only; but an Impeachment by the Grand Inqueſt of the whole Kingdom.

And

And taking it, that Impeachments are properly to be reſembled to Indictments,

Then as the omitting of the laying of a certain Day when the Treaſon was committed, wou'd be a material Fault in the Caſe of an Indictment; with great Submiſſion, it is as material a Defect in the Caſe of an Impeachment.

It ſeems plain, that in the Caſe of an Indictment, a certain Day ought to be laid when the Treaſon was committed.

It will, I believe, hardly be denied, but that in Caſe of an Indictment for Treaſon, it wou'd be ill, if 'twere laid, that the Party indicted committed the Treaſon on or about the firſt of September, 1715.

It wou'd be apparently worſe, if 'twere laid in an Indictment, that the Party committed the Treaſon in or about the Month of September, 1715.

It wou'd ſtill be worſe (becauſe more uncertain) if it were laid in an Indictment, that the Party committed the Treaſon in or about the Months of September, October or November, 1715.

And, with great Submiſſion, this, as I humbly take it, is the very Caſe before your Lordſhips; I mean, taking it, that Impeachments and Indictments, as to the material Parts of them, are to be meaſured by the ſame Rules of Law, as I humbly conceive they ought to be.

That the certain Day, for the committing the Treaſon, ought to be laid in Caſe of Indictments for Treaſon, ſeems to be proved, not only from the conſtant Practice of laying a Day certain in all Indictments of Treaſon; but from the Reaſon of the Law, which ſhews it to be a Subſtantial and Material Part of the Indictment.

That the conſtant Practice, in Caſe of Indictments for Treaſon, is to lay the Day on which the Treaſon is ſuppoſed to be done, will, as I preſume, be admitted.

And ſuch conſtant Practice is, of itſelf, a ſtrong Argument that the Law requires it.

But I humbly take it, that the Reaſon of the Thing argues ſtill much ſtronger for me, and ſhews it to be an eſſential Part of the Indictment.

The Reaſon of mentioning a Day certain in the Indictment when the Treaſon is ſuppoſed to have been committed, is in ſome Reſpects even for the Benefit of the Crown itſelf, and in ſome Reſpects for the Advantage of the Party indicted.

It concerns the Crown, in reſpect of the Forfeitures accruing to the King, of the Lands of the Party indicted; for where an Attainder enſues upon an Indictment for Treaſon, the Lands of the Party indicted are forfeited to the Crown, not only from the Judgment, but from the Day mentioned in the Indictment when the Treaſon is charged to have been committed.

This is expreſly ſaid, in the Lord Coke's 1 Inſt. 13. a. b. 390. b. and the Difference there taken is, between a Writ of Appeal and an Indictment. 'Tis there ſaid, That if a Man be indicted for a capital Offence and outlaw'd upon it, the Land of the Party is forfeited from the Day laid in the Indictment, for the committing of the Treaſon, or other capital Crimes; but in the Caſe of an Outlawry upon a Writ of Appeal, becauſe no Day is mentioned in the Writ, the Forfeiture is only from the Judgment.

And tho' in the Caſe of a Writ of Appeal, which is called in Latin (Breve) from its Brevity, no Day is mention'd, yet in the Declaration upon the Appeal (which reſembles an Indictment) 'tis neceſſary not only to mention the Day, but even the Hour when the Murder or Felony was committed.

In the Caſe of Wilſon againſt Law, which was adjudg'd in the Court of King's-Bench, in the ſixth Year of King William and Queen Mary, in an Appeal of Murder, an Exception was taken to the Appeal that it was too uncertain, in regard the Murder was laid to be done, circa horam primam poſt meridiem, and this Incertainty even of the Hour was much inſiſted upon: But this, 'tis true, was at length over-rul'd, and held that circa horam primam, or inter horam primam & ſecundam, was well enough.

However no one, as I humbly apprehend, ever doubted, but that laying of a certain Day when the Fact was committed, is neceſſary both in the Caſe of an Indictment, and in a Declaration upon an Appeal; and that as to the Land of the Party indicted, the Forfeiture relates to the Day mentioned in the Indictment.

But, if the Queſtion were aſk'd in the preſent Caſe, from what Day the real Eſtate of this unhappy Lord ſhould be forfeited, it wou'd, as I humbly apprehend, be difficult to anſwer it.

And that Difficulty ariſes from the Incertainty of the Impeachment, as to the Time when the Fact was committed.

If then the laying in an Indictment the certain Day when the Treaſon was committed concerns the Benefit of the Crown, as it ſurely does;

If it entitles the King to the Forfeiture of the Lands from the Day laid in the Indictment, as from the Authorities I have mentioned it appears to do;

If this Matter concerns that great Prerogative and Flower of the Crown, and its Right to Forfeitures;

Then ſurely this Omiſſion can by no means be called a ſlight Omiſſion, or a Fault in Form only.

It will alſo have its Weight with your Lordſhips, That the mentioning a Day certain in the Indictment, when the Crime is laid to have been done, is likewiſe for the Benefit of the Party indicted. 'Tis for his Advantage to know the Time when he is charg'd to have committed the Offence, and by that he will be the better enabled to defend himſelf againſt the Accuſation.

It is a known Rule in Law, that in all Caſes of Indictments, (tho' for Miſdemeanours only) they ought to be ſtrictly certain.

This Rule holds a fortiori in Caſes of Indictments for capital Offences;

And ſtill, a fortiori, in Caſes of Indictments for High-Treaſon, where for Example ſake the Judgment, tho' juſt, is as terrible as can well be thought of.

My Lords, I am ſenſible I ought to have too great a Value for your Lordſhip's Time, to cite any of thoſe numerous Caſes in the Law-Books, which juſtify that known Rule in the Law that requires Certainty in Caſes of Indictments.

I ſhall only beg leave to mention to your Lordſhips one Caſe, which is an Authority of your Lordſhips, upon a Writ of Error before your Lordſhips, which ſhews how ſtrict the Law is in the penning of Indictments for Treaſon; and that it requires that even what ſeems to be Matter of Form only in ſuch Indictments muſt be complied with. It is the Caſe of the King againſt Tucker, which was in the ſixth Year of King William and Queen Mary, and is reported in Serjeant Levinz, 3. Rep. 396. where Tucker was indicted for Treaſon, and in the Concluſion of the Indictment it was not ſaid to be contra allegiantiæ ſuæ debitum; and upon this Indictment Tucker was attainted, and his Lands forfeited to the Crown, and afterwards purchas'd under the Attainder; but afterwards this Attainder was revers'd in a Writ of Error in the King's-Bench upon very great Debate, for want of thoſe Words in the Indictment, contra allegiantiæ ſuæ debitum, and upon a Writ of Error before your Lordſhips the Judgment of Reverſal was affirmed, by which means a Purchaſer under the Attainder loſt the Eſtate.

With Submiſſion, this Caſe is much ſtronger than the principal Caſe now before your Lordſhips.

In that Caſe it might with ſeeming Reaſon be objected, that the Word (Proditorie) which is always in the Body of every Indictment, ſhews and neceſſarily implies, that the Treaſon committed was againſt the Party's Allegiance, for elſe how cou'd it be Proditorie?

Alſo in that Caſe the Treaſon is ſet forth at large in the Indictment, together with the Overt-Act, which demonſtrates that the doing this muſt be againſt the Party's Allegiance.

But all this would not maintain the Indictment, in regard Indictments for Treaſon were always laid to be againſt the Party's Allegiance.

And if the conſtant Forms of Indictments be an Argument,

'Tis as ſtrong a one for us in the preſent Caſe; for I believe there never was an Indictment without mentioning the Day when the Fact was committed.

Neither, with Submiſſion, is this Matter of Form only, but 'tis the ſubſtantial Part of the Indictment, in regard in this Point the King is intereſted in reſpect of the Forfeiture, and the Party in reſpect of his Defence.

It will, I humbly preſume, hardly be expected, from us, that we ſhould cite Precedents of Impeachments, eſpecially if 'twere known what few Hours notice we have had of attending your Lordſhips in arreſt of Judgment.

However, I will beg leave to mention one Caſe of an Impeachment freſh in your Lordſhips Memory, Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe.

Dr. Sacheverell was impeach'd before your Lordſhips by the Honourable Houſe of Commons for ſeditious Expreſſions in two Sermons; the one preach'd at Derby Aſſizes, and the other at St. Paul's, London; and in that Impeachment the preciſe Days are laid when the Doctor preached each of theſe two Sermons.

And I humbly take it, that by a like Reaſon a certain Day ought to be laid in the Impeachment, when this Treaſon was committed; and that the Authority of Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe ſeems ſo much ſtronger than the preſent Caſe in queſtion, as the Crime of Treaſon is higher than that of a Miſdemeanour.

My Lords, I have nothing elſe to ſay on behalf of this unhappy Lord; unhappy, as being in that doubtful State of Memory, not inſanæ enough to be within the Protection of the Law, nor at the ſame time ſanæ enough to do himſelf in any reſpect the leaſt Service whatever.

Here the Managers gave ſome Interruption to the Council.

Lord High-Steward. Mr. Williams, I apprehend the Reaſon why the Managers of the Houſe of Commons appear uneaſy with you, is, that you are going into a Matter of Fact, and which you have not leave to ſpeak to; you muſt therefore confine yourſelf to the Point of Law that was ſtated.

Mr. Williams. My Lords, I ſhall take up no more of your Lordſhip's Time; but humbly hope that the Caſes of Indictments are parallel with thoſe of Impeachments;

That, as in an Indictment for Treaſon, the want of laying a Day when the Treaſon is charg'd to have been committed, is a manifeſt Error;

That as the conſtant Forms of Indictments are ſo;

That as the Reaſon of the Law requires they ſhould be ſo;

So for want of this Certainty in this Impeachment, we with great Submiſſion inſiſt that the Impeachment is defective:

And therefore pray that the Judgment againſt this unfortunate Lord may be arreſted.

Mr. Walpole. MY Lords, the Commons have attended to the Objection made by the Council on the Part and Behalf of the noble Lord at the Bar, and they humbly conceive thoſe learned Gentlemen ſeem to forget in what Court they are. They have taken up ſo much of your Lordſhips time in quoting of Authorities and uſing Arguments to ſhew your Lordſhips what would quaſh an Indictment in the Courts below, that they ſeem to forget they are now in a Court of Parliament, and on an Impeachment of the Commons of Great Britain. For ſhould the Commons admit all that they have offered, it will not follow that the Impeachment of the Commons is inſufficient; and I muſt obſerve to your Lordſhips, that neither of the learned Gentlemen have offered to produce one Inſtance relating to an Impeachment, I mean, to ſhew that ever the Sufficiency of an Impeachment was called in queſtion from the Generality of the Charge, or that any Inſtance of that Nature was offered at before. The Commons don't conceive, that if this Exception would quaſh an Indictment, it would therefore make this Impeachment inſufficient; nor do they think it neceſſary, in Juſtice to the noble Lord at the Bar, that a certain Day ſhould be mentioned in the Impeachment. They don't think, from the Nature of this Crime, and the Evidence that has been given, that there can be any Hardſhip for want of fixing a certain Day on which the Treaſon was committed. What he is charged with, is being concerned in a moſt notorious Rebellion. The Time mentioned in the Impeachment is the Months of September, October, and November, and particularly the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteenth Days of November. He is charged with being concerned from the Time that he left his own Houſe, to the Time he was taken at Preſton; and it hath been proved, I believe, in a more ample Manner than ever any Crime of the like Nature hath been. And how can this noble Lord ſuffer becauſe no particular Day is mentioned, after he continued in Rebellion for ſo many Days and Months, and marched through ſo many Counties? It is impoſſible to conceive he can ſuffer from any Uncertainty in the Charge, in not having a particular Day fixed.

But,

But, my Lords, the Commons think themſelves ſufficiently juſtified, and their Impeachment ſupported by a Precedent I have in my Hand, the Trial of my Lord Stafford, who was tried for High-Treaſon, and was executed for the ſame. And I obſerve that he had Council, and it appears he offer'd ſome Things in Arreſt of Judgment; and altho' it will appear that the Time was more uncertain in that Impeachment, yet that was never attempted to be offer'd in Arreſt of Judgment. In his Caſe the Words of the Articles of Impeachment are, That for divers Years laſt paſt a damnable Contrivance and Conſpiracy had been form'd and carried on, that is juſt as theſe Articles are; and when they come to the particular Charge, all that is ſaid is, That within the Time aforeſaid, &c. that is, ſome Time within divers Years laſt paſt; but this Impeachment is ſo far from being uncertain, that the Commons have named three Months, in which the Treaſon charged in the Impeachment was committed; and in the Precedent it is only ſaid, Within ſome of the Years laſt paſt; ſo that here the Commons are ſufficiently juſtified in the Articles exhibited by them, by the Precedent I have mentioned; and there Judgment paſſed, and nothing of this Nature was offered in Arreſt of Judgment. I hope this will ſatisfy your Lordſhips, that this Impeachment is ſufficient, notwithſtanding this Objection; and I hope it will never be allowed here as a Reaſon, that what quaſhes an Indictment in the Courts below, will make inſufficient an Impeachment brought by the Commons of Great Britain.

Mr. Attorney-General. MY Lords, the Council for the Priſoner have made two Objections, as I apprehend, in Point of Law, which I would give a ſhort Anſwer to, without taking notice of the other Matter which was ſpoke to by one of the Gentlemen, contrary to the Orders of the Houſe.

The Firſt Objection is, That there is no certain Day charged in the Impeachment, when the Treaſon was committed.

The Second is, That as to ſeveral of the Overt-Acts there is no Time mentioned at all.

I would follow the Steps of the learned Gentleman who ſpoke before me, and I think has given a good Anſwer to theſe Objections; I would take notice, that we are upon an Impeachment, and not upon an Indictment. The Courts below have ſet Forms to themſelves, which have prevailed for a long Courſe of Time, and thereby are become the Forms by which thoſe Courts are to govern themſelves; but it never was thought, that the Forms of thoſe Courts had any Influence on the Proceedings of Parliament. In Richard the Second's Time it is ſaid in the Records of Parliament, That Proceedings in Parliament are not to be govern'd by the Forms of Weſtminſter-Hall.

I beg leave to take notice, in Anſwer to this Objection, that tho' it is the uſual Form in the Courts below to alledge a certain Day on which the Crime is charged to be committed, yet at the ſame time they add (and at divers other Days and Times) and that Day which is laid, is only for Form ſake; but that Day is not material, they are not bound to prove the Crime committed on that Day, but they may prove the Defendant Guilty at any Time, either before or after the Day laid in the Indictment. There has been produced by the Honourable Gentleman who ſpoke before, a Precedent in Parliament much ſtronger than this Caſe, it is the Caſe of the Lord Stafford; there is not ſo much Certainty as there is in this Impeachment. Here it is ſaid, That on or about the Months of September, October, or November, or on or about one of them, the Crimes charged in the Impeachment were committed; but all that is ſaid in my Lord Stafford's Caſe is, That there had been for many Years then laſt paſt a damnable Conſpiracy carried on; and when they came to charge the noble Lord with particular Facts, there is no Time mentioned at all.

One of the Gentlemen cited another Caſe in Parliament, which was Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe: There was in that Caſe an Exception taken to the Impeachment for Uncertainty; and it was ſaid and argued from the Forms of the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall, that where Indictments were for Words ſpoke or writ, the Words muſt be laid as they were ſpoke or wrote; and the Opinion of the Judges was, that it was neceſſary according to the Forms of the Courts below, but it was reſolved to be otherways in the Court of Parliament, and they were not bound but by their own Forms; ſo that upon this Head we apprehend we are clear of the Forms of Law in the Courts below, and that they are of no Uſe, ſince if a certain Day is laid, they are not by Law bound to prove the Crime committed on that Day, but may prove it upon any other Day.

The Second Objection is, That there is no Time laid for ſome of the Overt-Acts.

I think there is a certain Day charged when one of them was done, the ſeizing of Preſton; and in the inferior Courts it has been held, that it is not neceſſary there ſhould be a Day and Place alledged for every Overt-Act.

We think this Objection has no Weight in it, and therefore would not ſpend more of your Lordſhips Time in it; we are in the Caſe of an Impeachment, and in the Court of Parliament. Your Lordſhips have already given Judgment againſt Six upon this Impeachment, and it is warranted by the Precedents in Parliament; therefore we inſiſt that the Articles are good in Subſtance, and according to the Forms of Parliament.

Mr. Cowper. THE Objection, as ſtated by the Priſoner, and upon which his Council have argued, is this, That the Time of the Treaſon committed is not laid in the Impeachment with ſufficient Certainty. The Council have acquainted your Lordſhips with the Practice of inferior Courts, and have inſiſted too much upon the Precedents of Treſpaſſes and other Crimes ſet forth in Indictments, conſidering the Queſtion ariſes upon the Uſage and Practice of the High-Court of Parliament; and they cannot but know that the Uſages of Parliament are Part of the Laws of the Land, altho' they differ in many Inſtances from the Common Law, as practiſed in the inferior Courts, in Point of Form.

My Lords, if the Commons, in preparing Articles of Impeachment, ſhould govern themſelves by Precedents of Indictments, in my humble Opinion they would depart from the ancient, nay, the conſtant Uſage and Practice of Parliament.

It is well known that the Form of an Impeachment has very little Reſemblance to that of an Indictment; and I believe the Commons will endeavour to preſerve the Difference, by adhering to their own Precedents.

One

One of the learned Gentlemen has ſaid that he had not time to ſearch Parliamentary Precedents: That Gentleman ſeldom wants time to make himſelf ſerviceable to his Clients; but when he has more Leiſure, I believe he will not find one Precedent, where, in the caſe of an Impeachment of High-Treaſon, there hath been a certain Day or Time laid when the Treaſon was committed. The Precedent that hath been mentioned of my Lord Stafford is directly otherwiſe: There your Lordſhips will find it laid thus, that for many Years laſt paſt there has been contrived and carried on by Papiſts a traiterous and execrable Conſpiracy. And afterwards when it comes to charge the Treaſon and Overt-Acts, it alledges they were done and committed within the time aforeſaid. And yet we don't find any Exception was taken for want of Certainty, altho' not ſo much as a Year was laid with Certainty, within which the Treaſon was committed.

In the Caſe of my Lord Wintoun the Commons have charged, that his Lordſhip, together with James Earl of Derwentwater, and ſeveral others, as falſe Traytors to his Majeſty, did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November 1715, traiterouſly imagine and compaſs the Death of the King: That his Lordſhip and the reſt, to accompliſh their ſaid traiterous Purpoſe, did, in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of them, conſpire and agree to levy War within this Kingdom, in order to depoſe and murther his Majeſty: That his Lordſhip did, within the time aforeſaid, traiterouſly levy a War and Rebellion in the Bowels of the Kingdom; and that he, together with his Accomplices and Confederates, did, on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, or Thirteenth of November aforeſaid, traiterouſly ſeize and poſſeſs themſelves of the Town of Preſton; and did then and there cauſe and procure a miſerable and horrid Slaughter and Murther of many of his Majeſty's faithful Subjects. So that, my Lords, here is a Certainty not only of the Year, but of the Months and Days; and the Treaſons committed by the Priſoner are, with Submiſſion, not only charged with Certainty as to the Point of Time, but are charged with a great deal more Certainty than was neceſſary, in a Caſe where his Lordſhip's Treaſons began at Seaton Houſe, and continued from thence till the Surrender of Preſton.

Surely there is not the leaſt Weight in the Priſoner's Objection; for even in the Caſe of an Indictment, tho' it be neceſſary to lay a Day, yet it is not neceſſary to prove the Treaſon to be done upon that Day: So that even in inferior Courts it is an immaterial Form. One would think, if it be neceſſary to aſſign a Day certain, it ſhould be neceſſary alſo to prove the Treaſon to be done upon that Day; but it is not requiſite to prove the Treaſon upon the Day; therefore in inferior Juriſdictions it ſeems rather a Form than Subſtance. The Courts below have, it's true, their Forms, many Forms for which no Reaſon can be given; but I believe in Parliamentary Proceſs, nothing is neceſſary that is not material.

Sir W. Thomſon. MY Lords, we humbly apprehend that the Exception taken in Arreſt of Judgment has no Foundation in Law or Reaſon.

As to the Law, we muſt refer to the Forms of Proceedings in the Court of Parliament, which is the Law of Parliament, and which muſt be owned to be Part of the Law of the Land. It has been mentioned already to your Lordſhips, that the Precedents in Impeachments are not ſo nice and preciſe in Form as in the inferior Courts; and we preſume your Lordſhips will be governed by the Forms of your own Court, (eſpecially Forms that are not eſſential to Juſtice) as the Courts below are by theirs; which Courts differ one from the other in many Reſpects as to their Forms of Proceedings, and the Practice of each Court is eſteemed as the Law of that Court.

As to the Reaſons alledged to ſupport the Exception, they will receive a plain Anſwer.

'Tis ſaid, that 'tis neceſſary to alledge a certain Day in an Impeachment when the Fact was committed, that the Defendant may be able to make his Defence, that he may produce Witneſſes to give an Account where he was at the time he is accuſed to have been guilty. And one of the learned Council was pleaſed to ſay, that this is requiſite in Indictments for the ſmalleſt Offences, and ought to be much more ſo in capital Caſes, and in Impeachments for ſo high a Crime as Treaſon. My Lords, that Gentleman knows very well, that the Day which is mention'd in an Indictment is not material to the Purpoſe of making a Defence as to that Time only, for that the Defendant muſt come prepared to give an Account of his Innocence all the time between the Day alledged and the Indictment found. And in this Caſe there is no Hardſhip on the noble Lord at the Bar. Here is one of the Treaſons alledged to be within the Compaſs of Five Days (viz. the ſeizing of Preſton, levying War there, and engaging the King's Troops.) if he could have given an Account of himſelf to have been elſewhere at thoſe times, it might have been of Service to him: But that happened very unfortunately for him to be otherwiſe; and your Lordſhips have found him guilty of thoſe Facts on or about thoſe Five Days: Which has created a ſecond Reaſon to be offered to your Lordſhips, that the time alledged is not ſufficiently certain (viz.) To what Day ſhall the Forfeiture of the Defendant's Eſtate relate? If 'tis taken the moſt favourably for the Defendant, the Conviction ſhall operate ſo as to make the Forfeiture only from the laſt of theſe Days, and I don't apprehend any other Inconvenience. But to infer that, for that Reaſon, no Judgment at all ſhall be given upon this Conviction, where the material, the ſubſtantial Part of the Iſſue is found, ſeems not to be right Conſequence.

My Lords, we conceive for theſe Reaſons, and what has been mention'd before, this Exception has no Weight in it, and hope your Lordſhips will over-rule it.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I ſuppoſe you don't oppoſe the Council's replying to you; afterwards, if you have any thing to offer, you may be heard to it.

Att. Gen. My Lords, we don't object to it, if the Commons have the Liberty of ſpeaking afterwards and cloſing, which they inſiſt upon as their Right.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen, you may reply.

Sir C. Phipps. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that we reply?

L. H. Steward. You may reply.

Sir C. Phipps. IF your Lordſhips pleaſe, we do not, with great Submiſſion, apprehend they have anſwer'd our Objection; but before I take notice of the Anſwers, I beg leave to ſet the learned Gentleman that ſpoke laſt right in one thing, wherein he did miſapprehend me: He was pleaſed to ſuggeſt that I ſaid the Day laid in an Indictment was material. I don't remember I ſaid ſo, for I never thought the Day ſo material, that there was a Neceſſity to prove the Treaſon to be committed upon that very Day; I did ſay there ought a certain Day to be alledged in Indictments, and that there always is; but how material that Day is, when alledged, is another Conſideration; but I conceive the Day laid in an Indictment, ought to be very near the time, if not upon the very Day the Treaſon is ſuppoſed to be committed, for the Reaſons I have before offered; and I take conſtant Practice to be ſo. I perceive all the Gentlemen who have ſpoke in Anſwer to me have been pleaſed to admit, that in Indictments for Treaſon and other capital Offences, there is a certain Day always alledged. The honourable Gentleman that ſpoke firſt, was pleaſed to make a Difference between an Indictment and an Impeachment; That an Impeachment is a Parliamentary Proceeding, and that the Parliament in their Proceedings are not tyed up to ſuch ſtrict Form as the Courts below. I have already ſpoken fully to this Point, and therefore ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with any Repetition, but ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment, whether an Impeachment, by which a Noble Peer is to be attainted, ought not to be as certain as an Indictment, by which a Commoner is to be attainted, and whether by the Lex Parliamentaria as much Certainty is not required in one Caſe as in the other. The ſame Gentleman was pleaſed to obſerve, that the Impeachment in my Lord Stafford's Caſe was more general than this, for there it was charged, that for many Years laſt paſt there had been a Conſpiracy to alter and ſubvert the Government, &c. In anſwer to which I beg leave to take Notice, that the Impeachment of that Lord begins with an Account of the Plot in general, and in that Caſe there is no doubt but ſuch a general Allegation was ſufficient. But whether the particular Part, which my Lord Stafford had in that Plot, be not more certainly alledged, I muſt beg leave to refer to the Tryal, for I cannot take it upon my Memory to ſay one way or other. But whether it was ſo or no, I think is not material? for that honourable Perſon admits, that no Objection was made to that Impeachment for the Uncertainty of the Charge: If ſuch Objection had been made and over-ruled, it would have been a full Anſwer to us; but ſince no Notice was taken of it, our Objection is as ſtrong and of the ſame Force as if that Caſe had never happened.

A learned Gentleman of great Eminence in the Law was pleaſed to obſerve, that frequently in Indictments for Treaſon, the Offence is laid to be committed, diverſis aliis diebus & vicibus, which is true; but then in all ſuch Caſes there is a particular Day firſt charged in the Indictment; and I believe that learned Gentleman, or any other of the Long Robe, will not ſay that an Indictment conceived in ſuch general Terms, without alledging a particular Day, would be good. As to that Part of the Impeachment which relates to the taking of Preſton, tho' that ſeems more certain than any other Overt-Act; yet I have ſhewed that the Words or about, leave it at large, and render it uncertain.

My Lords, this is what we humbly offer by way of Reply; and humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment, whether our Objections are not good, notwithſtanding what has been ſaid in Anſwer to them.

Mr. Williams. MY Lords, I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether the learned Managers have anſwer'd the Objection which we have humbly laid before your Lordſhips in Arreſt of Judgment.

The Managers are pleaſed to object, that we are attempting to quaſh an Impeachment of the Honourable Houſe of Commons for High-Treaſon, and that this has not been known.

But, my Lords, with great Submiſſion, we are not endeavouring to quaſh this Impeachment. We are ſo far from it, that we muſt admit that the Courts of King's-Bench will not quaſh Indictments for Treaſon, nor Indictments for Felony, nor even Indictments for any groſs Miſdemeanours, but will put the Party to plead to ſuch Indictments; but in the preſent Caſe, where the Matter in Iſſue has been try'd, and the unhappy Lord is convicted; if this Impeachment be defective, as I humbly hope and inſiſt it is, then what other Way, what other Method has this unfortunate Lord at the Bar to take Advantage of this Defect, but by offering it to your Lordſhips in Arreſt of Judgment, which on my Lord's Behalf we now humbly do?

It ſeems admitted, as I apprehend, that had the preſent Queſtion been upon an Indictment, inſtead of an Impeachment, that then the Exception might have prevailed: But the Managers are pleaſed to inſiſt, that the Law and Courſe of Parliaments juſtify this Omiſſion in Caſe of Impeachments; and for this an Honourable Manager has been pleaſed to cite the late Lord Stafford's Caſe; and that the Impeachment of that Lord was more uncertain, as to the Time laid for the committing the Treaſon, than the Impeachment now before your Lordſhips.

My Lords, I muſt confeſs I am very unfit to anſwer an Objection of this Nature, and which concerns the Courſe of Parliaments: But wou'd beg leave, with the greateſt Submiſſion, to obſerve, that only one Precedent (I beg Pardon if I miſtake, I mean that of the late Lord Stafford) has been cited againſt us: It muſt be ſubmitted to your Lordſhips, how far that one ſingle Precedent will of it ſelf be taken as a Proof, that this is the Courſe and Cuſtom of Parliamentary Impeachments, eſpecially when it appears that the Objection now made, was not made in that Caſe. It muſt be ſubmitted to your Lordſhips, whether repeated and iterated Acts are not requiſite to prove this, as well as all other Cuſtoms; and that if this were Lex & Conſuetudo Parliamenti, whether it wou'd not be an eaſy Matter to cite many Inſtances in that Behalf, and whether it is not the more neceſſary in this Caſe to cite farther Precedents, in regard the ſingle Caſe of the Lord Stafford may ſeem, as to this Point, to have loſt ſome Part of its Force, by the later Precedent of Doctor Sacheverell's Caſe, when even in Caſe of a Miſdemeanour, a certain Day is laid in the Impeachment when the Miſdemeanour is charged to have been committed.

It has been alſo objected by the learned Managers, that in Indictments of High-Treaſon, it is uſually charg'd, that the Party committed the Treaſon diverſis diebus & vicibus, which is as uncertain as the preſent Impeachment.

My Lords, It is very true that theſe Words (diverſis diebus & vicibus) are as uncertain as the Words in the preſent Impeachment; and that theſe Words are uſually put into Indictments: But with Submiſſion, it is as true, that in all Indictments for Treaſon, over and beſides theſe Words, there is a certain Day laid when the Treaſon is ſaid to be committed; and I would beg leave to know, whether if in Caſe of an Indictment, the Treaſon were laid to be committed diverſis diebus & vicibus, without any further Certainty as to the Day, whether this wou'd not be ill for the Uncertainty: And this Caſe, with Submiſſion, ſeems to come neareſt to the preſent Caſe; and as to the Words diverſis diebus & vicibus, tho' they are frequently mentioned in an Indictment, yet they are only Surpluſage, and the Indictment good, whether with 'em, or without 'em.

It is likewiſe objected, that if a certain Day for the committing this Treaſon had been mentioned in this Impeachment, or in an Indictment, yet it had not been material; becauſe if the Treaſon had been proved to have been committed on any other Day, the Party muſt have been found guilty; and therefore, if the Day be immaterial, the omitting of it muſt be alſo immaterial.

My Lords, I muſt admit that the Day, as to the Party indicted, is not in this reſpect ſo far material, but that if it ſhou'd be prov'd that the Party committed the Treaſon on a different Day, than that laid in the Indictment, yet the Party muſt be found guilty: And that it might put too great a difficulty on ſuch Proſecution, to hold, that if the Treaſon be not proved to be committed on the preciſe Day laid in the Indictment, that therefore the Party, who appears ſtill guilty of the Treaſon, ſhou'd upon the nicety of the time be found not guilty; but what I humbly inſiſt on is, that 'tis the conſtant Courſe to mention a Day certain in the Indictment; and that the Day thus mention'd in the Indictment is, as I believe, generally the very Day on which the Treaſon is inſiſted on to be committed; and to know this, is, with Submiſſion, of great uſe to the Party indicted or impeached, and may very much aſſiſt him in his Defence. And I farther humbly inſiſt, that the mentioning of a Day certain in the Impeachment or Indictment for the committing the Treaſon, is manifeſtly for the Advantage, and the omitting it, is to the Prejudice, of the Crown; in regard, as between the Party impeached or indicted, and the Crown, the Forfeiture of the Land to the King ſhall relate to that Day which is laid in the Impeachment or Indictment.

My Lords, from hence, with the greateſt Deference to your Lordſhips, I beg leave to infer;

That the mentioning of a Day certain in the Impeachment, is material:

That by Conſequence the Omiſſion of it is alſo material:

That therefore in reſpect of this Omiſſion, the Impeachment is defective;

And in regard of this Defect I humbly pray that your Lordſhips wou'd be pleaſed to arreſt the Judgment.

Mr. Attorney General. MY Lords, for preſerving the Rights of the Commons of Great Britain, I ſhall trouble your Lordſhips with a Word or two.

I think the learned Gentlemen have left it now where they left it on their firſt Speech: They now agree that the particular Day in an Indictment is but Form, and that the Fact may be proved any Day before or after, and ſo the Law is in the inferior Courts.

I only add this, that the Priſoner loſes no Benefit nor gets any, by having a Day charged or omitted; for ſince it is of no uſe, he muſt provide for his Defence as if no Day was laid; and ſince it is immaterial in Indictments, it muſt be ſo in Impeachments. We are juſtified by the Forms and Precedents of Parliament. As to the Anſwer given to my Lord Stafford's Caſe, that this Objection was not made there, but that it paſt ſub ſilentio: If that Impeachment had not been thought good, we know he had the Aſſiſtance of learned Council, who were well able to adviſe him, and who certainly would have taken the Exception. There is no uncertainty in it that can be to the Prejudice of the Priſoner, we inſiſt it is according to the Forms of Parliament, he has pleaded to it, and your Lordſhips have found him guilty.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Council have been heard, hath your Lordſhip any thing more to offer in Arreſt of Judgment?

L. Wintoun. If your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to aſk the Council, they will tell you what they have to object.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you have been told again and again upon this Occaſion, that the Point you would have your Council ſpeak to muſt be firſt ſtated and propoſed by your ſelf; you have had a ſufficient Opportunity to inform your ſelf.

L. Wintoun. Since your Lordſhip won't allow my Council, I don't know nothing.

Lord Stamford moved to adjourn.

L. H. Steward. I once more acquaint your Lordſhip, that as your Council have been allowed to ſpeak; ſo the Queſtion yet is, whether you have any other Point or Matter for them to ſpeak to; the Lords are ready to hear: Have you any thing elſe to propoſe?

L. Wintoun. If you will allow my Council to anſwer, he will anſwer.

L. H. Steward. My Lords! Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Houſe was adjourned about three of the Clock, and about five returned again, and Proclamation was made for Silence as uſual.

L. H. Steward. GEORGE Earl of Wintoun, I have already acquainted you, that your Peers have found you Guilty, (i. e.) in the Terms of the Law, convicted you of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand impeached.

After, your Lordſhip has moved in Arreſt of Judgment, and the Lords have diſallow'd that Motion; their next Step is to proceed to Judgment.

The

The melancholy Part I am to bear in pronouncing that Judgment upon you, ſince it is his Majeſty's Pleaſure to appoint me to that Office, I dutifully ſubmit to; far, very far, from taking any Satisfaction in it.

'Till Conviction, your Lordſhip has been ſpoke to without the leaſt Prejudice, or Suppoſition of your Guilt; but now it muſt be taken for granted, that your Lordſhip is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand impeached.

My Lord, this your Crime is the greateſt known to the Law of this Kingdom, or of any other Country whatſoever: And it is of the blackeſt and moſt odious Species of that Crime; a Conſpiracy and Attempt, manifeſted by an open Rebellion, to depoſe and murder that ſacred Perſon, who ſuſtains and is the Majeſty of the whole; and from whom, as from a Fountain of Warmth and Glory, are diſperſed all the Honours, all the Dignities of the State, indeed the laſting and operative Life and Vigour of the Laws, which plainly ſubſiſt by a due Adminiſtration of the executive Power.

So that attempting this precious Life, is really ſtriking at the moſt noble Part, the Seat of Life and Spring of all Motion in this Government; and may therefore properly be called a Deſign to murder, not only the King, but alſo the Body-Politick of the Kingdom.

And this is moſt evidently true in your Lordſhip's Caſe; conſidering that Succeſs in your Treaſon muſt infallibly have eſtabliſhed Popery; and that never fails to bring with it a Civil, as well as Eccleſiaſtical Tyranny; which is quite another Sort of Conſtitution than that of this Kingdom, and cannot take Place, 'till the preſent is annihilated.

This your Crime (ſo I muſt now call it) is the more aggravated, in that when it proceeds ſo far, as to take Arms openly, and to make an offenſive War againſt lawful Authority, 'tis generally (as in your Caſe) complicated with the horrid and crying Sin of murdering many, who are not only innocent but meritorious.

And if Pity be due (as I admit it is, in ſome Degree) to ſuch as ſuffer for their own Crimes; it muſt be admitted, a much greater Share of Compaſſion is owing to them, who have loſt their Lives merely by the Crimes of other Men.

As many as have ſo done in the late Rebellion, ſo many Murders have they to anſwer for who promoted it; and your Lordſhip, in examining your Conſcience, will be under a great Deluſion, if you look on thoſe who fell at Preſton, Dumblain, or elſewhere, on the Side of the Laws, and in Defence of ſettled Order and Government, as ſlain in lawful War; even judging of this Matter by the Law of Nations.

Alas! my Lord, your Crime of High-Treaſon is made yet redder, by ſhedding a great deal of the beſt Blood in the Kingdom: I include in this Expreſſion the brave Common Soldiers, as well as thoſe Gallant and Heroick Officers, who continued faithful to Death, in Defence of the Laws; for ſure but little Blood can be better than that, which is ſhed while it is warm in the Cauſe of the true Religion, and the Liberties of its native Country.

Believe it, notwithſtanding the unfair Arts and Induſtry uſed, to ſtir up a pernicious Exceſs of Commiſeration, towards ſuch as have fallen by the Sword of Juſtice, (few, if compar'd with the Numbers of good Subjects, murdered from Doors and Windows at Preſton only) the Life of one honeſt, loyal Subject is more precious, in the Eye of God, and all conſidering Men, than the Lives of many Rebels and Parricides.

This puts me in mind to obſerve to your Lordſhip, that

There is another Malignity in your Lordſhip's Crime (open Rebellion) which conſiſts in this; that it is always ſure of doing Hurt to a Government in one Reſpect, though it be defeated; (I will not ſay it does ſo on the whole Matter.)

For the Offence is too notorious to be let paſs unobſerved, by any Connivance: Then is a Government reduced to this Dilemma; if it be not puniſhed, the State is endanger'd, by ſuffering Examples to appear, that it may be attack'd with Impunity; if it be puniſhed, they who are publickly or privately Favourers of the Treaſon (and perhaps ſome out of meer Folly) raiſe undeſerved Clamours of Cruelty againſt thoſe in Power; or the loweſt their Malice flies, is, to make unſeaſonable, unlimited, and injudicious Encomiums upon Mercy and Forgiveneſs (Things rightly uſed, certainly of the greateſt Excellence.)

And this Proceeding, it muſt be admitted, does ſome Harm, with ſilly undiſtinguiſhing People.

So that Rebels have the Satisfaction of thinking they hurt the Government a little, even by their Fall.

The only, but true Conſolation every wiſe Government has in ſuch a Caſe (after it has temper'd Juſtice with Mercy in ſuch proportion as ſound Diſcretion directs, having always a Care of the Publick Safety above all Things) is this;

That ſuch like Seeds of unreaſonable Diſcontents, take Root on very ſhallow Soil only; and that therefore, after they have made a weak Shoot, they ſoon wither and come to nothing.

It is well your Lordſhip has given an Opportunity of doing the Government right, on the Subject of your Surrender at Preſton.

How confidently had it been given out by the Faction, that the Surrender was made on Aſſurances, at leaſt Hopes inſinuated of Pardon: Whereas the Truth appears to be, that Fear was the only Motive to it; the evil Day was deferred; and the Rebels rightly depended, fewer would die at laſt by the Meaſures they elected, than if they had ſtood an Aſſault: They were aw'd by the experienced Courage, Diſcipline, and Steadineſs of the King's Troops; and by the ſuperior Genius and Spirit of his Majeſty's Commanders, over thoſe of the Rebels; ſo that in truth they were never flatter'd with any other Terms, than to ſurrender, as Rebels and as Traitors; their Lives only to be ſpar'd till his Majeſty's Pleaſure ſhould be known.

It was indeed a Debt due to thoſe brave Commanders and Soldiers (to whom their King and Country owe more than can be well expreſs'd) th[illegible] Victory ſhould be vindicated to the preſent and future Ages from untrue Detraction, and kept from being ſullied by the Tongues of Rebels and their Accomplices, when their Arms could no longer hinder it.

'Tis hard to leave this Subject without ſhortly obſerving, that this Engine which ſets the World on fire, a lying Tongue, has been of prodigious uſe to the Party of the Rebels, not only ſince and during the Rebellion, but before, while it was forming, and the Rebels preparing for it.

False Facts, false Hopes, and false Characters, have been the greater Half of the Scheme they set out with, and yet seem to depend upon.

It has been rightly observed, your Lordship's Answer does not so much as insist, with any Clearness, on that, which only could excuse your being taken in open Rebellion; That you was forced into it, remain'd so under a Force, and would have escaped from it but could not.

If you had so insisted, it has been clearly prov'd, that had not been true; for your Lordship was active and forward in many Instances, and so considerable in a Military Capacity among your Fellow-Soldiers, as to command a Squadron.

These and other Particulars have been observed by the Managers of the House of Commons, and therefore I shall not pursue them farther;

But conclude this Introduction to the Sentence, by exhorting your Lordship, with perfect Charity and much Earnestness, to consider, that now the Time is come when the Veil of Partiality should be taken from your Eyes (it must be so when you come to die) and that your Lordship should henceforward think with Clearness and Indifference (if possible) which must produce in you a hearty Detestation of the High Crime you have committed, and being a Protestant, be very likely to make you a sincere Penitent, for your having engaged in a Design, that must have destroyed the Holy Religion you profess, had it taken Effect.

Nothing now remains; but that I pronounce upon you that Sentence which the Law ordains, and which sufficiently shews, what Thoughts our Ancestors had, of the Crime of which your Lordship is now convicted: viz.

"That you George Earl of Wintoun return to "the Prison of the Tower from whence you "came; from thence you must be drawn "to the Place of Execution; when you "come there, you must be hang'd by the "Neck, but not till you be Dead; for you "must be cut down alive, then your Bowels "must be taken out, and burnt before your "Face; then your Head must be sever'd "from your Body, and your Body di-"vided into four Quarters; and these must "be at the King's disposal.

And God Almighty be merciful to your Soul!

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up uncover'd, and declaring there was nothing more to be done by vertue of the present Commission, broke the Staff, and pronounced it dissolv'd: And then leaving the Chair, came down to the Woolpack, and said, Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the House of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

And then the House adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament, and the Lords and others returned in the same Order they came down.

The Earl of Wintoun was carried back to the Tower, from whence he afterwards made his Escape.

The Trial of Francis Francia a Jew at the Old-Baily, for High-Treason, Jan. 22. 1716, 3 Geo. I.

FRANCIS Francia having been formerly arraigned upon the Indictment found against him for High-Treason, and having pleaded Not Guilty, was on Tuesday the 22d of January brought to the Bar to receive his Trial.

Clerk of Arraignments. You the Prisoner at the Bar, these Men that you shall hear call'd, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death. If therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Dennis Dutry, Bart.

Prisoner. Are you a Freeholder in this City?

Sir D. Dutry. Yes.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lord, we that are Council for the King desire, that those who are called may be asked that Question; Whether they have Freehold (or Copyhold) of Ten Pounds per Annum, or not; before they are sworn in Chief?

Mr. Att. Gen. We suppose the Prisoner will ask that Question; and therefore we desire that it may be ask'd of every one as they come to the Book. Sir Edward Northey.

Mr. Ward. It is a Challenge on both Sides.

L. C. Baron. They ought to be sworn whether they have a Freehold or not, if they would excuse themselves.

Mr. Hungerford. I have nothing to offer against it. In case the King's Council think fit to proceed in that Method, we concur in it. I should have mov'd it myself, if they had not.

Mr. Att. Gen. It was in the Trials of the Rebels.

Prisoner. He has had a Quarrel with me; and there was a Suit depending between us about seven Years ago: And I challenge him for Cause.

Mr. Att. Gen. He may challenge him peremptorily, if he will. But if he challenges him for Cause he must prove it.

Prisoner, Sir Dennis will not deny it.

L. C.

L. C. Baron. If you challenge him, you muſt prove your Challenge. Do you challenge him for Cauſe, or peremptorily?

Priſoner. For Cauſe.

L. C. Baron. That which you aſſign is no Cauſe.

Then Sir Dennis was ſworn upon a Voir Dire, with reſpect to his Freehold; as all the others were, before they were either challenged, or ſworn in Chief.

Sir J. Jekyll. Sir, have you a Freehold in this City?

Sir D. Dutry. Yes.

Sir J. Jekyll. To what Value?

Sir D. Dutry. About Ten Pounds a Year.

Priſoner. My Lord, there has been a Suit depending between us.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they talk of a Suit, they muſt prove it by Record.

Priſoner. His Name is Dennis; and they have given me a Pannel with barbarous Latin. In my Copy of the Pannel, he is return'd by the Name of Dionyſius; that is not the ſame Name.

Mr. Ward. The Priſoner obſerves, that in the Pannel he is return'd by the Name of Dionyſius, when his Name is Dennis.

Sir J. Jekyll. He is to have a Copy of the Pannel; and it is not to be put into Engliſh for him.

Mr. Ward. But we ſay, that is not Latin for Dennis.

Sir J. Jekyll. Sure no one will argue, but that Dionyſius is the proper Latin Name for Dennis.

L. C. Baron. You offer no Cauſe of Challenge.

Priſoner. I hope I prove his Name is return'd in the Pannel Dionyſius.

L. C. Baron. It is ſo; and that is Latin for Dennis.

Priſoner. No, it is not. Dennis is a Saint in France, and Dionyſius is a Saint in Italy. They are two different Names, and of different Countries.

L. C. Baron. Dionyſius is Latin for Dennis. If you don't challenge him peremptorily, he muſt be ſworn.

Priſoner. I alledge, that we fell out about ſeven Years ago: And that his Name is not Dionyſius, as it is wrote in the Pannel. And in my former Pannel he was put down Knight, and in this Baronet.

L. C. Baron. Theſe Things are nothing, except the Suit; and that you muſt prove.

Mr. Hungerford. As to the Diſtinction of the two Saints, I do not meddle in it. But I ſuppoſe Sir Dennis can tell whether he is a Knight, or a Baronet. But as to the Saints, whether the Nominal ones Abroad, or the Pretended ones at Home, I let them alone.

Priſoner. You allow'd this Callenge the laſt Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. You challeng'd him peremptorily.

Mr. Ward. He was ſtiled Knight in the laſt Pannel.

L. C. Baron. That don't appear to us. You muſt either challenge him peremptorily, or he muſt be ſworn.

Priſoner. I muſt do what you order; but I think it very hard. Then I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Sir John Scott, Kt.

Priſoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Daniel Wray, Kt.

Priſoner. I don't except againſt him.

Then he was ſworn.

Priſoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Biſhop.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Chamberlain.

He was ſworn.

Cl. of Arr. John Caſebert.

Priſoner. He was upon the Grand Jury that found the Bill againſt me; and I challenge him for that Cauſe.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Wood.

Priſoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Iſaac Cailovell.

Priſoner. He don't write his Name as it is in the Pannel. I could never find this Gentleman out by all the Enquiry I could make.

L. C. Baron. What is the Miſtake?

Priſoner. It is wrote in the Pannel v Conſonant, and he ſpells his Name with a w. And it is in the Pannel a ſingle l, and he writes it with double ll.

Then Mr. Cailovel being ask'd, ſaid he wrote his Name with a v Conſonant, as in the Pannel; but with a double ll.

L. C. Baron. That don't alter the Pronunciation. It is the ſame Name.

Priſoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Davis. He was ſworn.

Priſoner. I challenge him for Cauſe. He is return'd upon the Pannel Greenway, and his Name is Greenaway: That is a different Name.

Sir J. Jekyll. How are you uſually called; Greenway, or Greenaway.

Mr. Greenaway. I am moſt commonly called Greenaway.

Then he was ſet aſide.

Then Proclamation was made, as is uſual in thoſe caſes.

Priſoner. I pray that George Flint, a Priſoner in Newgate, may be ſent for; and may be near me during my Trial.

L. C. Baron. What is he in Newgate for?

Priſoner. For a Fine.

L. C. Baron. Then he may be ſent for.

Which was done accordingly.

Cl. of Arr. Francis Francia, hold up your Hand.

Which he did.

Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe.

HE ſtands indicted by the Name of Francis Francia, of London, Merchant: For that he being a Subject of our moſt Serene Lord GEORGE, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traitor againſt our ſaid Lord the King, his ſupreme, true, natural, lawful and undoubted Lord; withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King towards him ought to bear; and deſigning and traiterouſly intending, the Government of theſe Kingdoms, under our ſaid Lord the King duly and happily eſtabliſh'd, to change and ſubvert; and our ſaid Lord the King from the Title, Honour, Royal Eſtate, Empire and Government of theſe Kingdoms to depoſe; and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring; and the Perſon in the Life of King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and after the Death of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal Eſtate, and Dignity of King, and to the Government of this Kingdom to advance; The Firſt Day of September in the Second Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, and at ſeveral Days and Times as well before as after, falſly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did compaſs, imagine and intend, our ſaid Lord the King, now and then his ſupreme, true, natural, lawful and undoubted Lord, from the Title, Honour, Royal Eſtate, Empire and Government of theſe Kingdoms, to depoſe and to Death and to final Deſtruction to put and bring; and the ſaid Perſon, in the Life of the ſaid King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and ſince the Death of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal Eſtate and Dignity of King, and to the Empire and Government of this Kingdom, to exalt. And that he the ſaid Francis, to accompliſh and bring about the ſaid Treaſon, and traiterous and deviliſh Intention, did traiterouſly meet, propoſe, conſult, conſpire, and agree with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, to raiſe Inſurrection, Rebellion and War within this Kingdom, againſt our ſaid Lord the King, and in Favour of the ſaid Perſon, in the Life of the ſaid King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and ſince the Death of the ſaid late King taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third. And that he the ſaid Francis Francia, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the ſaid Treaſon and traiterous Intention, did propoſe, conſult, conſpire and agree with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, to require, ſollicite and procure, from divers Foreigners, and others, in the Kingdom of France, Arms, Ammunition and Money, to aſſiſt and help in the ſaid War. And that he the ſaid Francis Francia did traiterouſly compoſe and write, and cauſed to be compoſed and written, ſeveral traiterous Letters, notifying the Intentions and Reſolutions of him the ſaid Francis Francia, and the ſaid other Traitors, to move and levy the ſaid War; and requiring Aid in the ſaid War, of the ſaid Foreigners, and other Perſons then in France. And the ſaid Letters ſo compoſed and written, and cauſed to be compoſed and written, did traiterouſly ſend, and cauſed to be ſent, to Parts beyond the Seas, to be delivered to the ſaid Foreigners, and other Perſons in France, and cauſed and procured them to be delivered accordingly; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned and hath thereunto pleaded Not Guilty: And for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country; which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether he be guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty? If you find that he is guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty: If you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Cowper, Jun. MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn: The Priſoner at the Bar, Francis Francia, ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon; in intending to alter and ſubvert the Government of theſe Realms, happily eſtabliſh'd under his Majeſty King GEORGE; to depoſe his Majeſty, to bring him to Death, and to place the Pretender upon his Throne.

The Indictment ſets forth, that for this Purpoſe the Priſoner, the Firſt of September, in the Second Year of the Reign of his preſent Majeſty, and at ſeveral other Days and Times, at London in your County, traiterouſly compaſſed and imagined, to depoſe and kill his moſt Sacred Majeſty, and to place the Pretender on his Throne.

And that for the more effectual performing ſuch his Intentions, he did meet, propoſe, conſult and agree with ſeveral other Traitors, to raiſe Rebellion and War within this Kingdom, againſt his Majeſty, and in favour of the Pretender. And that he did ſollicit Men, Arms and Ammunition, from certain Foreigners and others in France, to aſſiſt him in that Rebellion. And that he did write and cauſe to be written ſeveral Letters, intimating this Reſolution, and requeſting the Aſſiſtance of ſuch Foreigners and others.

The Indictment charges further, that he wrote and compoſed ſuch Letters, and cauſed them to be wrote and compoſed; and procured them to be ſent and deliver'd for that Purpoſe. And this, Gentlemen, is laid to have been by him done, contrary to the duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe provided.

Gentlemen, to this Indictment the Defendant has pleaded that he is Not Guilty. If upon calling our Evidence for the King, we ſhall prove this Caſe upon him; it will become your Duty to find him guilty of the Charge.

Sir J. Jekyll. MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council with his Majeſty: And, Gentlemen, it is my Part to open to you the Subſtance of the Charge againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; and the Nature of the Evidence we ſhall offer to prove that Charge.

The Priſoner ſtands indicted of the firſt Species of High-Treaſon, mentioned in that antient Statute 25 Edw. III. that is, compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King.

The Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment, to manifeſt that traiterous Deſign of the Priſoner, are three:

He is charged with conſulting and conſpiring, with other Traitors, to levy War againſt the King, in favour of the Pretender to his Majeſty's Crown:

With conſpiring and agreeing to ſollicit and procure Aſſiſtance, from Foreigners and others in France, to carry on that War:

And further, with writing traiterous Letters, notifying his and his Accomplices Reſolution to Levy that War; and requiring the before-mentioned Aſſiſtance; and ſending thoſe Letters into foreign Parts for that Purpoſe.

Theſe are undoubted Overt-Acts of the High-Treaſon charged upon him.

To make good this Charge, we ſhall ſhew, that about three or four Years ſince, there was a Correſpondence begun between the Priſoner and Abbot Butler, an Eccleſiaſtick of Cambray. That Correſpondence began on the Occaſion of a Law-Suit in England; wherein one Mrs. Butler, a Relation of that Abbot, was concerned; which was recommended to the Priſoner's Care. But ſome Time after (a Gentleman, whoſe Name it will be neceſſary to mention in the Proſecution of this Cauſe) Mr. Harvey of Combe took upon him to make uſe of that Correſpondence, in order to tranſmit and receive Letters to and from that Abbot; and alſo to the Duke D'Aumont, by the means of the Priſoner.

Mr. Harvey, for ſome time, made uſe of the Priſoner only to convey thoſe Letters forward and backward, under the Priſoner's Cover, directed to one D'Aulmay, alias Payen; who had married a near Relation of the late Duke of Ormond; to be communicated by D'Aulmay to the Abbot, or the Duke D'Aumont. But it ſeems, the Priſoner having gained a Knowledge of the Tendency of Mr. Harvey's Correſpondence, (which was a treaſonable one) he himſelf ſoon after came to partake of the Guilt.

As it was at firſt a Correſpondence between the Priſoner and the Abbot, and afterwards between Mr. Harvey and the Abbot, under Covers; ſo afterwards, Mr. Harvey made uſe of the Priſoner himſelf, to correſpond with D'Aulmay. And in thoſe Letters you will find, that the Priſoner does not enter into the Correſpondence as a Matter that he was tranſacting only as for Mr. Harvey, but ſhews a great Concern in it himſelf: He is importunate for Aſſiſtance to the late Rebellion from France; Impatient for its Coming, and Anxious for the Succeſs.

The Evidence we ſhall offer to you, to ſhew that this Correſponce was thus carried on, will be this.

Informations being given to a Noble Lord, (then Secretary of State) of a treaſonable Correſpondence being carry'd on by Mr. Harvey, by means of the Priſoner; there was a Warrant iſſued to take the Priſoner, and ſeize his Papers. And upon the Execution of that Warrant, Letters directed to the Priſoner, and his Copy-Book of the Letters wrote by himſelf, and an Original Letter of Mr. Harvey's, were found in the Priſoner's Cuſtody, and will be produc'd to you; and theſe were own'd and admitted by the Priſoner.

The Letters themſelves plainly ſpeak the Nature and traiterous Effect of this Correſpondence begun by Mr. Harvey, and carried on with the participation of the Priſoner. And Gentlemen, my Lords the Judges will tell you, that it is not couching ſuch a Correſpondence in the Cant of a Law-Suit, (as in the preſent Caſe) or otherwiſe, that will ſcreen an Offender from Publick Juſtice, in caſe a traiterous Correſpondence can be made manifeſt. If that would evade the Juſtice of the Law, it would be impoſſible for Traitors to be brought to Puniſhment. But that which puts this out of all doubt, is, that the Senſe which is put on these Letters by us, and by the Indictment; that very Sense, or Construction, has been put upon them by the Prisoner himself. For we shall lay before you the Examination of the Prisoner before the Secretary of State. In that he admits, that the Subject-Matter of the Letters wrote by D'Aulmay to him, to be communicated to Mr. Harvey, was the Design of the Pretender's Invading the Dominions of his Majesty. And those Letters being one Side of the Correspondence, (I mean that which came from Abroad) serves to evince or demonstrate the other Part or Side of the Correspondence, which came from hence.

I shall not enter into the Particulars of the Letters; or state and reason upon Matters in writing, without having them first read, whereby to lay a Foundation for Observing upon them. But the Letters will be read to you; And we who are the King's Council, don't desire you to put any forc'd or strain'd Construction upon them. Nay, we desire you to put no other Construction upon them, than what the Prisoner himself has done already.

I shall say nothing to you, Gentlemen, to aggravate the Nature of the Offence. I rather chuse to appeal to your Judgments, than to excite your Passions.

All that is desired of you, is, to give your best Attention to the Evidence; and to do Justice, and discharge your Consciences.

Mr. Att. Gen. MAY it please your Lordships, and you the Gentlemen of this Jury; I am also of Council against the Prisoner at the Bar. The Indictment has been at large opened and explained by Mr. Serjeant Jekyll. The Prisoner is charged with High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of his Majesty, in order to set the Pretender on the Throne. The Overt-Acts laid, are conspiring to levy that War and Rebellion that broke out lately; and in applying to Aliens, and others in France, for Men and Money for carrying it on.

It is notorious, that Preparations were making many Months for the Rebellion that broke out in Scotland, September 1715. under the Earl of Marr; and in Northumberland in October after, under Mr. Foster; and the like were design'd at Oxford, Bath, &c. in October 1715. And Men were listed and sent down for those Purposes; as hath appear'd on the Trials of the Persons who have suffer'd for those Treasons.

The Conspiracy was carry'd on with great Secrecy: And tho' it had been long in agitation in favour of the Pretender; yet was not publickly known, till his Majesty (upon the 20th of July 1715) was pleased to acquaint his Parliament, that he had certain Notice of the Pretender's Design to Invade this Kingdom; and that at the same time there were great Preparations here to assist that intended Invasion.

The Defendant lives in Plow-Yard in Fetter-Lane, and goes for a Jew. When the Duke D'Aumont, as Ambassador from the French King, in the Year 1713. was here, the Prisoner came acquainted with the Abbot Butler, called the Vidame of Cambray; and from that time he corresponded with him. The Abbot had a Relation of his Name, Barbara Butler, who had a Suit at Law depending here, which he recommended to the Care of the Prisoner; and that I believe might be the beginning of the Correspondence between them. There is a Gentleman that has been named, Mr. Harvey of Combe; he also then contracted an Acquaintance and Familiarity with the Duke D'Aumont, and Abbot Butler, and corresponded with both. These Correspondencies first began in the Queen's Time, and appear to have been carried on with great Secrecy and Caution, which induce a Belief they were then Criminal; but I don't mention this, as if what was done in the Queen's Time would affect the Prisoner upon this Indictment, for it is laid only for Treason committed against the King. These Correspondencies were carried on, from the going away of the Duke D'Aumont, till the Prisoner was seized, which was occasioned in this Manner:

My Lord Townshend, then Secretary of State, was diligent in his Enquiries, and on the 16th of September 1715. had a private Information given him, that Letters constantly came by the Post from France, to Francia, and Mr. Harvey; from the Duke D'Aumont, and Abbot Butler, and one Payen alias D'Aulmay de Coulange; and that the Subject of the Letters related to the Pretender, and that intended Invasion.

His Lordship was cautious, and did not immediately seize the Prisoner, but staid the coming in of two Posts from France, and gave Orders for stopping all Letters directed to the Prisoner, to see what further Discovery they would make, and having received further Information by those Letters, on the 19th of September 1715. his Lordship made his Warrant to Joseph Smith, one of the Messengers, to apprehend Francia, and seize his Papers. He having received the Warrant, went, together with Wilcox another Messenger, (who is since dead) to the Defendant's House, and there seized his Person, and at the same time his Copy-Book of Letters. And it is extraordinary to find therein entred the Copies of any Letters relating to a Matter of this Nature. When they seized that Book, he told them there was nothing in it, and that it was only his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correspondents. They seized also several Original Letters, wrote from France to him by D'Aulmay alias Payen, which will be read to you. They then seized also in his Custody an Original Letter of Mr. Harvey's to Abbot Butler, dated January 9. 1714. which was sent to Francia to be transmitted beyond Sea; but it seems Francia opened it out of Curiosity, or by Accident, and kept it. In it were Figures for Names and Things, which he well understood. The Prisoner was on September 22. 1715. examined before both Secretaries of State, and the Copy-Book of Letters was shewn him, and he owned it to be his Book, wherein he entred the Letters of his Correspondency, and that the Entries were made by himself or his Son. D'Aulmay's Letters were also shewed to him, and he owned that they were those that he received, and were found in his Custody.

He at first seemed to be open and ingenuous, and the Secretaries of State then thought him to be so. He told them in particular when the Correspondence began, how long carried on by covering Mr. Harvey's Letters; and when altered, and the Correspondence carried on only by Francia; and that the Subject of the Letters wrote to him by Payen, was, the Design of the Pretender to invade his Majesty's Dominions; and he named Persons, who were intended in them by initial Letters of their Names or Titles. That M. H.

was Mr. Harvey. My D D the Duke of Ormond; M B. Lord Bolingbroke; Dd. the Duke D'Aumont. He alſo explained Mr. Harvey's Letter, and the Figures therein. That 22 was the Duke D'Aumont; 6 the late French King; 17 the Tories; 8 the Pretender; and 9 his Majeſty King George; and ſigned his Examination, and was ſent back in the Meſſenger's Cuſtody. But it appearing after, on further peruſing of the Letters, that he had not been ingenuous, but had concealed a great Part of what he knew, he was further examined, and then changed his Note, and thereupon was committed to Newgate.

He was here twice before, in Order to be tried; the firſt Time he was adviſed by his Council, (and he was in the Right to follow it, and take all the Advantages the Law allowed him) to inſiſt, that in the Copy of the Indictment delivered to him, there was a Miſtake of an I for an A, and therefore he had not had a true Copy of his Indictment; and thereupon the Trial was put off. The next Time he came, he made uſe of another Privilege the Law allows him, and challenged ſo many of the Jurors, that there did not appear beſides enough to make a Jury. There were Accidents afterwards, which occaſioned the putting off the Trial twice by the King's Council, ſome of the Witneſſes being abroad on his Majeſty's Service.

The Indictment charges the Priſoner with compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King: And it's plain, a Conſpiracy to levy War, to dethrone or to deprive the King of his Liberty, is an Evidence of imagining his Death; for the War neceſſarily tends to that End. That this Tranſaction which he was concerned in, was a Deſign to have a Rebellion raiſed here, and to bring in the Pretender, we don't doubt but we ſhall give you Satisfaction of, when we produce the Letters, and you will obſerve that the Priſoner hath ſo explained them: And if he had not, every Body muſt ſo underſtand them.

The Correſpondence began in the Year 1713, and continued to the Time he was taken, which was on September 19, 1715. And ſo far we may read the Letters in the Queen's Time, to ſhew the Nature and Beginning of it. At firſt he carried on the Correſpondence, only as a Correſpondence between Mr. Harvey and Butler, by covering Mr. Harvey's Letters, and having the Anſwers ſent under Cover to him; what he wrote in the Covers, he has enter'd in his Book; for Mr. Harvey was cautious not to let his Letters go openly to and from him. And ſo for a good while Mr. Harvey's Letters were brought to Francia, which he covered and directed to Butler or to D'Aulmay, ſometimes by that Name, and ſometimes by the Name of Payen, and ſometimes by the Name of Coulange, which is a way uſed by many in France, to take the Name of the Place where they live inſtead of their Sirname. While the Correſpondence was carried on by covering Letters, Francia in his Covers wrote thoſe Matters that demonſtrate he was privy to the Correſpondence, and you will underſtand it by Mr. Harvey's Original Letter.

Mr. Harvey is not before the Court, and therefore we ſhall not meddle with him more than is neceſſary, to ſhew that while the Correſpondence was carried on under Francia's Covers, Francia well knew the Subject-Matter of the Correſpondence, and many Times gave Cautions to have to do with diſcreet Perſons, and to make uſe of People that do not babble.

The Correſpondence was carried on thus till about June, 1715. and then the way of Correſponding was changed. For Mr. Harvey was adviſed to be more careful, and not to write himſelf; but whatever was wrote, it was agreed ſhould be wrote to and by Francia. And ſo the Correſpondence was carried on between D'Aulmay and him, to the Time of the Priſoner's being apprehended. We have Entries of Letters of his for a conſiderable Time in his Copy-Book; and it is ſurpriſing to me, and will be ſo to every Man, that a Man ſhould enter Copies of Letters that carry ſuch an Evidence of Crimes in the Writer. In one of the Letters enter'd in the Copy-Book, he writes to D'Aulmay, dated April 7. 1715. "to be cautious, to avoid giving Umbrage to "thoſe in Power; and ſays, when I have any "thing particular to write to you, I will do it "by a ſtrange Hand, and will ſign Jacques Chrêtien. Take notice of this, and provided you "let me know you received this Letter without "its having been opened, I ſhall be eaſy.

From that Time there is no Entry of Francia's Letters in the Book; but we have a Chain of Letters from that Time wrote by D'Aulmay to Francia, in Anſwer to Letters written by Francia to him, wherein D'Aulmay takes notice, "That "Francia in his Letters had complained that the "Invaſion was delay'd; and reproach'd thoſe in "France with Backwardneſs, Neglect and Indolence; and the Cauſe he knew of, would be "undone for want of Care.

In the reading the Letters, we ſhall firſt produce that of Mr. Harvey, dated January 9. $17\frac{1}{1}\frac{4}{5}$. to Abbot Butler; which was found in Francia's Cuſtody, with his Explanation of it; by which it will appear, he was fully acquainted with the Subject of the Correſpondence, while he cover'd Mr. Harvey's Letters: And after that we ſhall produce the Letters from and to Francia, in the Order of Time they were written.

It is remarkable, that the Correſpondence was ſo cloſe, that ſcarce a Poſt paſs'd without Letters from the one or the other.

The firſt of Mr. Francia's Letters that we ſhall produce, is dated March $\frac{14}{24}$. $17\frac{1}{1}\frac{4}{5}$. He writes to D'Aulmay; "and deſires to know what was "in the Story of the Marriage between the Pre"tender, and one of the Arch-Dutcheſſes. For it "is eſſential to the Intereſt of your Wife." She was a Butler.

D'Aulmay anſwers that, March 20. 1715. and writes, "that no mention was made of late of "the Marriage of the Pretender: And that he "was of Opinion, that would not be a ſure Way "to bring his Affairs to a happy Iſſue. But that "a Party-War (that is, among ourſelves) would "be much more to his Advantage.

March 10. Francia writes, "That there was "a Letter from the Duke D'Aumont, which 'tis "wiſh'd may ſucceed better than the former; "which have not been anſwer'd, tho' entirely for "the Affairs. Beſides I am (by the way) to tell "you, that Perſons of 50 or 60 Thouſand Crowns "a Year can't with Prudence run the Hazard "of loſing ſuch Eſtates, unleſs more Encourage"ment be given them. And that the Misfor"tunes of a certain Perſon are more owing to "their being neglected on your Side of the Water, "than to the Party that is againſt him: So that " if this continue, your Wife muſt loſe all Hopes." This demonſtrates, that the Matter ſollicited for was criminal, for which the Perſons concerned might forfeit their Eſtates; and is plainly a ſolliciting for Succours.

April 2. 1715. D'Aulmay, in Anſwer to this, writes, " He had communicated the Complaints " in Francia's laſt Letter to the Duke D'Aumont; " and was aſſured all ſhould be amended.

March 17. 17$\frac{1}{2}$. Francia writes to D'Aulmay, " He ſhould be glad if he could find means to ſa- " tisfy Mr. Harvey——That to deal with him " as has been done, is no good Policy.

April 8. 1715. Francia writes to D'Aulmay, in Anſwer to his of the 20th; and tells him, " He " is ſatisfied; and conſequently we are now to " expect every thing from your Side the Water.

April 18. He writes again to D'Aulmay, " That Affairs are here in ſuch a Situation, that " great Precaution muſt be uſed, to avoid giving " Umbrage to thoſe who are in Power. When " I have any thing particular to write to you, I " will do it by a ſtrange Hand, and will ſign " Jaques Chrêtien. Take notice of this: And " provided you let me know you received this " Letter, without its having been open'd, I ſhall " be eaſy.

April 24. 1715. D'Aulmay writes to Francia, " That his Letter came ſafe to Hand; and bids " him be eaſy. If Mr. Harvey, in theſe trouble- " ſome Times, ſhould think fit to make uſe of " Mr. J. Chrêtien, he may.

Theſe Letters of Francia's are enter'd in his Copy-Book: But from this Time there are no Entries in the Copy-Book: Which is not to be wonder'd at; but rather that they were enter'd ſo long. But we have many Original Letters from D'Aulmay (alias Payen) to Francia; which appear to be Anſwers to Letters written by him: And by what of them is repeated in the Anſwers, it appears in his Letters, great Sollicitations were for the Pretender's Coming, and great Uneaſineſs expreſs'd at the Delay. And therefore, to quiet the Conſpirators in England, D'Aulmay gives frequent Aſſurances that all Things were preparing.

Auguſt 7. 1715. which was after his Majeſty had notice of the Invaſion deſign'd, and had acquainted the Parliament with it; D'Aulmay writes to Francia: " You are in the right to inveigh " againſt the Indolence you reproach us with; " but be perſuaded, 'tis only ſo in Appearance. " I even hope, that by this time, you have con- " vincing Proofs of it; and that ſuitable Re- " turns are made to the good Diſpoſitions on your " Side: And that at laſt God, bleſſing the Juſt " Cauſe of our Friend, will let him gain his Suit: " At leaſt, Aſſiſtance and powerful Sollicitations " ſhall not be wanting.

This needs no Explanation. The Suit of their Friend, appears plainly to be the Invaſion of the Pretender.

Auguſt 10. 1715. D'Aulmay, under the Name of Payen, acquaints Francia, that he received his of the 5th Inſtant. Says he, " Pray be eaſy; " before it be long you will be contented. The " Chief of the Name of our Friend the Abbot " arrived here on Tueſday Night, in good Health. " He is very well pleaſed; and has Reaſon to be " ſo. He is preparing to return Home with all " Expedition; and to take his Friends with him, " to paſs the Vacation there. I am this Moment " going to wait on him; and deſign to make " One in the Voyage with him, or to be with " him ſoon after his Departure.

Auguſt 21. D'Aulmay writes again to Francia, in Anſwer to two of his, of the 12th and 15th Inſtant; " Our Friend's Cauſe will ſoon be ready " (God willing) to be tried: All Preparations " are making for it. The Friend who is related " to my Wife has read your two Letters, and is " mightily pleaſed with them.

Auguſt 24. He writes again, " preſſing him " not to let a Poſt go, without letting him know " all that paſſes relating to the Cauſe of our " Common Friend. And he takes notice, that " he had been ſo buſy, that he had not had time " to write to Treacher, but would do it ſuddenly.

This ſhews the difference between D'Aulmay's own Suit againſt Treacher, and the Pretender's Deſign, which he calls the Cauſe of their Common Friend.

Auguſt 28. D'Aulmay, under the Name of Payen, writes to Francia, acknowledging the Receipt of his of the 22d Inſtant; and ſaith, " If " I could venture to acquaint you with the Par- " ticulars of all that paſſes on the Affair which " you know of, you would be more quiet than " you appear to me to be, and would accuſe us " of Negligence leſs than you do. I know there " are favourable Moments, which 'tis danger- " rous to let ſlip. But will you not grant too, " that 'tis the Part of Prudence to foreſee all In- " conveniencies; and to take proper and ſuffi- " cient Meaſures to enable us to ſurmount them " all? This is what we are doing: Be ſatisfied " of it: and that your Friends are more earneſt " and ardent than ever, to procure you all the " Satisfaction you can wiſh. Have Patience " therefore yet awhile.

September 3. Payen to Francia: " I received " this inſtant yours of the 29th paſt. We have " at laſt the Misfortune to loſe the Greateſt of " Kings. The German Journey might be very " proper; I wiſh it may be perform'd; the ra- " ther, becauſe for the Reaſons that you know " of. Our Preparations have been a little ſu- " ſpended, but not at all broken; Things go- " ing on always better and better. My (a) D D " and (b) M B are in a Houſe within half a " League of this Town, which a private Perſon " has lent them; where they receive all their " Friends, with whom they go to dine and ſup " every Day. They are both in perfect Health; " and think quite differently from what they are " reported to think: That is to ſay, they are " what they ought to be; you may aſſure your " Friends of this.

Septemb. 6. D'Aulmay writes to Francia; " I " have juſt now received your Letter of the ſe- " cond Inſtant. I deſire you to continue to write " to me directly; and if you had ſome truſty " Hand, other than your own, and that of your " Son, you would do well to employ it. I be- " lieve alſo, that a Cypher for the principal " Names, (which you might ſend me, and a " Copy whereof you might keep to make uſe of " yourſelf) would be very neceſſary: For I'll " avow to you frankly, that this Precaution " ſeems to me to be very neceſſary.

(b) Lord Bolingbroke.

Sept.

Sept. 14. D'Aulmay, under the Name of Payen, writes to Francia; "The Contents of your laſt "without a Date were very agreeable to me, as "well as to all our Friends, who give you Thanks "for it. We knew already Part of what you "tell us about the Cauſe of our Friend; which "will ſoon end (pleaſe God) to his Satisfaction, "or all Appearances would deceive. As to my "own Cauſe, I can't help telling you that my "Fate is very unhappy, to have to do with ſo "diſhoneſt a Man.

Here again he diſtinguiſhes between his own Cauſe, and the Cauſe of their Friend the Pretender.

There cannot be any Doubt of the Subject of this Correſpondence: Every Body that hears or reads theſe Letters, muſt underſtand them to relate to the intended Invaſion; and if there were any Doubt, (as there is not) Mr. Francia's Confeſſion ſufficiently explains them.

It cannot be expected we can produce Mr. Francia's Letters, to which the laſt are Anſwers, they being ſent away by him to France; but we inſiſt that the Anſwers to them take notice of his, and of the Contents of them, with their being taken in his Cuſtody, and owned by him on his Examination, to be thoſe he received; and that he knew the Deſign of them to be, the Deſign of the Pretender to invade his Majeſty's Dominions; is a full and ſufficient Evidence to prove the treaſonable Correſpondence charged in the Indictment.

The Secretary of State did right, in ſtopping the Letters at the Poſt-Office, which were directed to the Priſoner; but thoſe Letters having never been in the Priſoner's Cuſtody, we ſhall not offer them in Evidence.

In one of them D'Aulmay complains, that the Correſpondence was interrupted; and afterwards in another to Francia's Son, he bewails his Father's Misfortunes.

It can't be pretended that Francia was only a Hand to convey Letters from one to another; and that the Correſpondence was only Mr. Harvey's; and that Francia is only guilty of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, in concealing the other's Treaſon; for while he covered Mr. Harvey's Letters, he alſo wrote in the Cover thoſe Things that demonſtrate he was acquainted with the Subject of the Correſpondence, and aſſented to, and aſſiſted in the Treaſon: And the Law is plain in Caſe of High-Treaſon, that he that knoweth it before it be done, and aſſenteth to it, is Particeps Criminis, and guilty of the Treaſon.

What he did was not in the dark, but knowingly and openly, and he expreſſes himſelf concerned that the Buſineſs went on no better: That is making himſelf a Party and a Principal.

The Method of our Evidence will be this. Theſe Letters and Copy-Book were ſeized by the Meſſenger, who brought them to Mr. Walpole, Under-Secretary to my Lord Townſhend: They were laid before the Priſoner, in the Preſence of both Secretaries of State: He owned the Book to be his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correſpondents; and the Letters ſhewn him, to be thoſe he received, and that were taken in his Cuſtody; and that that Correſpondence continued till the Time of his being taken into Cuſtody; and that the Subject whereof was the Deſign of the Pretender to invade his Majeſty's Dominions. We ſhall for the better underſtanding of them, firſt read his Confeſſion, and then the Letters; and when we have done this, we do not doubt but you will will be ſatisfied, we ſhall have fully proved the Charge laid in the Indictment againſt him.

My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes. Set up Mr. Smith. John Forteſcue Aland, Eſq;

Then Joſeph Smith was ſworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You was ſent, I think, as a Meſſenger to Francia's Houſe: Pray give an Account of every Thing that paſſed there.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I have the Honour to ſerve his Majeſty as one of his Meſſengers: I was appointed to attend the Secretaries Office that Day, being my Day of waiting, which was September 19. 1715. I had a Warrant delivered to me againſt Mr. Francia, but it being late I did not go to execute it that Night. The next Day I went to his Houſe, in Plow-Yard in Fetter-Lane; Mr. Wilcox, another Meſſenger, went with me, and went into the Houſe firſt; he went up one Pair of Stairs, and I ſtaid below, and after he had been up a little Time, he called me up, and told me there was the Priſoner: He was then in Bed, and there was a Woman with him he called Wife: We told him, we had a Warrant againſt him for High-Treaſon, and bad him get up. I asked him if he had any Cloſet? And looking about, I ſaw one by the Fire-Place: I opened it, and the firſt Thing I obſerved over-againſt the Cloſet-Door, upon a Shelf, was a Parcel of Letters lying open in Folio; I ſaw they were in French, and directed to the Priſoner, and upon the Desk there lay a Paper-Book.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Look upon this Book; is this the Book?

Mr. Smith. This is the Book; it lay upon the Desk, and I looked into it, and obſerved this Writing at the one End of it: He ſaid it was his Son's Writing, and then I ſhut it again. I open'd the Desk, and looked over the Papers; I found there ſeveral other Papers and Letters folded up: I took them out, and laid them upon the Desk by the others. Then I ſearch'd the other Parts of the Cloſet, and laid all the Papers by the other Letters. I deſired then to go up Stairs, and I did ſo: And a Perſon I ſaw juſt now in Court, his Son, went with me; and I ſearched the Rooms and Boxes, and found ſeveral other Papers, and brought them down into the Chamber where the Priſoner was, with Mr. Wilcox; I put up all the Papers together, and ſaid I had taken all Things that I thought neceſſary, and deſired to be going. The Priſoner deſired to ſtay and drink ſome Coffee; we did ſo, and then brought him down to a Houſe at Weſtminſter. We carried the Papers to the Office, and deliver'd them to Mr. Horatio Walpole. When I was in the Chamber with him, he ſeemed to be under a Concern when I put up the Book; and I asked him what that Book was? He ſaid it was the Book of his Correſpondence abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this the Book?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay you ſaw ſeveral Letters there, did you look into them?

Mr. Smith. I ſaw they were directed to Francia: There was a Parcel lay open in Folio; and others that lay folded up in the Desk.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the Book and Papers after you had them?

Mr. Smith. We went with them and the Priſoner, and deliver'd the Priſoner into a Houſe at Weſtminſter; and then went to the Office, and ſtaid till Mr. Walpole came, and then delivered the Book and Papers to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you deliver any Papers to him but what were ſeized there?

Mr. Smith. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is become of Mr. Wilcox?

Mr. Smith. He is dead.

Mr. Cowper. What was it that the Priſoner ſaid about the Book?

Mr. Smith. He ſaid, that is my Copy-Book of my Correſpondence abroad, it ſignifies nothing. I afterwards obſerved ſome more Concern than ordinary in him; and he ſaid to me again, the Copy-Book of my Letters ſignifies nothing.

Mr. Ward. How long had you the Book and Letters in your Cuſtody?

Mr. Smith. I received them about Six or Seven o' Clock, and I deliver'd them the ſame Day to Mr. Horatio Walpole.

Mr. Hungerford. How can you be ſure this is the Book?

Mr. Smith. Becauſe I never parted with it.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it not out of your Poſſeſſion when you delivered it into the Office?

Mr. Smith. Yes, then it was.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you ſet any Mark upon the Book?

Mr. Smith. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he ſay that which was wrote in it, was wrote in it by him?

Mr. Smith. He ſaid, this is my Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correſpondents abroad.

Mr. Hungerford. But how can you be ſure this is the ſame Book?

Mr. Smith. I made a Remark of this * Writing as he ſat dreſſing himſelf.

Priſoner. Who was it that carried the Book and Papers to the Office, you or Wilcox?

Mr. Smith. I myſelf.

Priſoner. I know that to be falſe. How ſoon did you go out of Town after you had lodged me?

Mr. Smith. In a Day or two.

Priſoner. Did you not go that Moment?

Mr. Smith. No; not that Day.

Priſoner. To whom did you deliver them?

Mr. Smith. To Mr. Horatio Walpole.

Priſoner. Did you take no more Books?

Mr. Smith. There were ſeveral Books in your Houſe, but I don't remember that I carried any of them away but this.

Mr. Hungerford. Did the Priſoner own to you, that the Letters wrote in that Book were wrote by him?

Mr. Smith. He ſaid, that is the Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correſpondents abroad.

Then Mr. Horatio Walpole was ſworn.

Sir J. Jekyll. Pray Sir, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account of this Book and thoſe Letters; and how, and when they were brought to you?

Mr. Walpole. I remember the Warrant for ſeizing the Priſoner was dated the 19th of September, and that the Day after Mr. Smith and Mr. Wilcox came into my Room, and deliver'd to me a Copy-Book and a Parcel of Letters, which they ſaid they took at Francia's Houſe. I took them and kept them by themſelves, to be produced when my Lord Townſhend ſhould call for them. I remember that Night Mr. Buckley came into my Room, and I deſir'd him to ſit down and look them over with me, and accordingly he and I look'd into them. The next Day my Lord Townſhend ſent for the Priſoner, and I carried in the ſame Book and Letters, and laid them upon the Table, and particularly the Letters, they were laid open, and my Lord examin'd the Priſoner about them. They were wrote in French, and directed to the Priſoner. My Lord ask'd him whether he knew the Hand of thoſe Letters, and turn'd them all over, and ſhew'd him the Directions, ſaying, are theſe directed to you? He own'd it. He own'd that he received them. My Lord ask'd him again, is this your Book? He anſwer'd, it is; ſome of the Letters are enter'd by me, and ſome by my Son.

Sir J. Jekyll. Were they all the ſame Letters that were brought to you by Mr. Smith.

Mr. Walpole. The ſame.

Sir J. Jekyll. Pray look upon this Book; is this the ſame Book?

Mr. Walpole. I am ſure this is the Book: This is the ſame Book that Smith deliver'd to me, and ſaid he took it at Francia's Houſe.

Then ſeveral Letters were ſhewn to Mr. Walpole.

Mr. Walpole. I remember all theſe Letters to be the ſame that I received from Smith.

Mr. Att. Gen. After the Priſoner had been examin'd, what became of the Letters?

Mr. Walpole. I took them back again. I kept them under Lock and Key, till my Lord Townſhend had occaſion to uſe them, which was the ſame Night that my Lord examin'd the Priſoner; then I took them back, and I conſtantly kept them till I went to Holland for the Dutch Troops, and then I deliver'd them to Mr. Buckley.

Priſoner. And you can ſwear theſe are the ſame Letters that were deliver'd to you. By what Mark? You ſwear very home. What Mark did you put upon thoſe Letters, that you can ſwear to them?

Mr. Ward. Pray Sir, when they were in your Cuſtody, are you ſure they were never deliver'd out?

Mr. Walpole. I am ſure.

Mr. Ward. Do you remember one Jones the Gun-maker on the other Side the Water, when he was under Examination? Are you ſure they were not deliver'd out by Miſtake to him?

Mr. Walpole. I don't know that they were.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you put any Mark on thoſe Letters?

Mr. Walpole. No, I put no Mark on them.

Mr. Hungerford. Then how can you know them to be the ſame?

Mr. Walpole. I perus'd them ſeveral times. I remember the Hand, and Dates, and Directions.

Mr. Hungerford. Then probably you remember the Number too?

Mr. Walpole. No, I don't remember the Number.

Mr. Ward. Are you ſure theſe are all the Letters that were brought to you?

Mr. Walpole. No, there are not all the Letters.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall now call Mr. Buckley.

Then Mr. Buckley was ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Buckley look upon this Book and theſe Letters, and acquaint the Court what you know of them.

* George Francia's Name in large Church Text, at the End of the Book.

Mr. Buckley,

Mr. Buckley. My Lord, the Day the Priſoner was ſeiz'd, I came into Mr. Walpole's Room. He told me he had receiv'd that Book and thoſe Letters that were ſeiz'd at the Priſoner's Houſe, and deſir'd me to ſit down and read them with him. I did ſo. Afterwards, when Mr. Walpole went to fetch the Dutch Troops, he deliver'd this Book and theſe Letters into my Hand. Afterwards my Lord Townſhend directed me to look into them, and ſee which contain'd Paſſages moſt Criminal, and to extract ſuch Paſſages, which I did accordingly out of ſeveral of them. I will look over them again, and then I can tell you whether they are the ſame.

Priſoner. By what Mark?

Mr. Buckley. I can tell you by that which is ſtronger than any Mark, I copy'd Paſſages out of ſeveral of them.

Then he look'd over the Letters one by one. I had every one of theſe Letters from Mr. Walpole, and I know it certainly; for that from every one of theſe I extracted ſome Paſſages.

Mr. Cowper. Was you preſent at any time when the Priſoner was examin'd?

Mr. Buckley. I was.

Mr. Cowper. Were this Book and theſe Letters produced to him at the time of his Examination?

Mr. Buckley. He was examin'd by My Lord Townſhend and Mr. Secretary Stanhope, and I was call'd in to take his Examination in Writing, accordingly I did.

Mr. Cowper. Were the Book and Letters at the time of his Examination produc'd to him?

Mr. Buckley. I can't ſay that, for I was intent on my Paper, writing the Examination, and looking upon the Priſoner, and hearing what he ſaid. When I had written down what is in my Hand, [holding out the Original Examination.] I read it over to him diſtinctly and audibly; and he being aſk'd whether he was willing to ſwear to it, and anſwering, Yes, I offer'd him his Oath: And I offer'd him a New Teſtament to ſwear on. He ſaid he could not ſwear on that Book. But he took another Book out of his Pocket, and I ſwore him on that. I aſk'd him whether this was true: He ſaid it was. Then he ſign'd it; and afterwards my Lord Townſhend ſign'd it.

Mr. Cowper. Is the Subſcription of his Handwriting?

Mr. Buckley. It is.

Priſoner. You ſay I took an Oath? On what Book was it?

Mr. Buckley. Indeed I don't know, I believe it was an Hebrew Book; Mr. Secretary Stanhope look'd upon it.

Mr. Denton. Was he examin'd at any time after?

Mr. Buckley, Yes.

Mr. Denton. Was you preſent then?

Mr. Buckley. No.

Mr. Ward. How long were they in your Cuſtody?

Mr. Buckley. From the time that Mr. Walpole went abroad, till he came back again, and then I deliver'd them back to him.

Mr. Ward. Were they in your Cuſtody when Mr. Jones was under Examination?

Mr. Buckley. I can't tell; but I never did ſhew them to him.

Mr. Ward. Were they not deliver'd out on that Occaſion?

Mr. Buckley. No, they were not deliver'd out by me.

Mr. Ward. You ſay you read the Examination to him. Did not he deſire to read it himſelf?

Mr. Buckley. I don't remember it.

Mr. Ward. Was he not refuſed to read it?

Mr. Buckley. No, upon my Soul.

Mr. Ward. Was you with the Priſoner in Newgate?

Mr. Buckley. I was with him at his own Deſire; otherwiſe I had not gone to him.

Mr. Ward. Do you remember the Days?

Mr. Buckley No.

Mr. Ward. How often was you with him there?

Mr. Buckley. Twice.

Mr. Hungerford. Were there any Offers made by you to him?

Mr. Buckley. I deſire you would explain yourſelf.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you make him any Offers, that upon his ſigning any Paper, he ſhould have his Liberty?

Mr. Buckley. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you not mention to him his giving Evidence againſt any other Perſon?

Mr. Buckley. No, upon my Soul.

Mr. Att. Gen. Theſe Queſtions ought not to be aſk'd. It is an Iniquity to tamper with any Man; and therefore ſuch Queſtions ought not to be put. If you have any Witneſſes, you may examine them.

Mr. Hungerford. Then we will examine to it.

Priſoner. Is that the Book I ſwore upon? [ſhewing a Book he had in his Hand.]

Mr. Buckley. I don't know indeed; it was ſuch a ſort of Book.

Mr. Att. Gen. I don't take that to be material, if it were the Alchoran. He had it in his Pocket. But it is not his Oath, but his Confeſſion that is material.

Mr. Hungerford. Taking the Book into his Hands. I underſtand a little Hebrew. This is a Book to pray by, not ſwear by. It is a Collection of ſome Jewiſh Prayers and Rituals; I believe, taken out of Maimonides. You had beſt ſend it the learned Monfalcon in Paris, he is compiling ſome critical Obſervations upon the Eaſtern Languages.

Mr. Ward. Did you put any Mark on any of thoſe Letters?

Mr. Buckley. I did on ſome of them.

Mr. Hungerford. Where are the Extracts you made out of them?

Mr. Buckley. I have ſome of them here. [holding out ſome Papers.]

Mr. Hungerford. What did you do with the Letters, after you had made thoſe Extracts?

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. He tells you that he kept them till Mr. Walpole came back again, and then deliver'd them to him.

Mr. Buckley. Here is my Name on ſome of them. The two initial Letters of my Name.

Priſoner. When was that Mark made upon them?

Mr. Buckley. I don't juſtly remember.

Priſoner. That might be done yeſterday, or ſince they were deliver'd out of his Cuſtody.

Mr. Buckley. I did it while they were in my Poſſeſſion, and before I deliver'd them back again to Mr. Walpole.

Then the Lord Townſhend was ſworn.

Sir J. Jekyll. We muſt deſire your Lordſhip to inform the Court, what your Lordſhip knows in relation to the Priſoner at the Bar, as to the iſſuing out the Warrant againſt him, and what happen'd afterwards.

Lord Townſhend. My Lord, having receiv'd Information that there was a treaſonable Correſpondence carry'd on between the late Duke of Ormond, Duke D'Aumont, Coulange and Mr. Harvey, in which the Priſoner was concern'd, and was the Channel in which the Correſpondence was convey'd; and that the Pretence of it was a Law Suit, but that the Deſign of it was in Favour of the Pretender; and that when they talk'd of the Party, the Pretender was meant; and that they expected him to be ſoon here. Having reaſon to rely on this Information, I drew a Warrant to ſeize the Priſoner and his Papers. I had indeed before ſent an Order to ſtop all Letters that came from France directed to Francia, by which I receiv'd a Confirmation of the Intelligence which had been before given me. Upon the iſſuing out the Warrant, the Priſoner was ſeiz'd, and his Letters were brought to Mr. Walpole.

The next Day I ſent for the Priſoner to be examin'd, and order'd Mr. Walpole to bring me the Papers, and ſent for the Priſoner in. The Letters that Mr. Walpole brought in, were laid open upon the Table, and the Book lay by them. I aſk'd him whether he knew the Hand, and whether thoſe Letters were not for him? He own'd the Letters, but ſaid he could not help what was in thoſe Letters, and that what others wrote to him could not make him guilty. As for what I have wrote (ſaid he) I appeal to my Book. That is my Book, I appeal to that for my Innocency. He did not appear obſtinate, and I remanded him; and at Night I ſent for him again, and Mr. Secretary Stanhope was with me; I had in that time look'd into more of the Letters, I ſaw ſeveral initial Letters of Peoples Names, I aſk'd him the meaning of them; and he gave me the Account contain'd in this * Examination. He ſeem'd in a Diſpoſition to tell me all he knew; he gave me an Account how this Correſpondence began, and was carry'd on; and then he came to explain the initial Letters that were in thoſe Letters that were taken upon him, and in ſeveral other Letters that I had intercepted. I remanded him again that Night, having taken this Examination in my Hand.

A ſecond Examination was taken upon Mr. Harvey's Letter; (which Examination and the Letter thereto annex'd was ſhewn to his Lordſhip.)

This is the very Letter on which I examin'd him; he own'd to me how he came to ſtop the Letter, and not to forward it, and explain'd all thoſe Figures to me very diſtinctly. He proteſted that he knew no more, and made ſolemn Proteſtations that he had ſaid all he knew, and I was almoſt convinc'd he had; but in the Conſequence, I had reaſon to think he had not. But theſe two Examinations were taken before me, one I ſign'd alone, and the other Mr. Secretary Stanhope ſign'd with me. As to the Firſt, I believe Mr. Secretary Stanhope was gone out of the Room before it was ſign'd.

Sir J. Jekyll. I deſire to aſk your Lordſhip, whether all the Letters that were brought by Mr. Walpole were laid upon the Table at the time of the Priſoner's Examination?

Lord Townſhend. All that Mr. Walpole brought me were laid there, and I ſaw him take them back again.

Mr. Ward. I deſire to aſk your Lordſhip, whether you heard that Declaration read over to him?

Lord Townſhend. I dare ſay I did.

Mr. Ward. Did he not endeavour to excuſe himſelf from ſigning it, till he had read it himſelf?

Lord Townſhend. I don't remember that, I don't know that he made any Difficulty of ſigning it; but I am ſure it could not be becauſe he was refus'd to read it.

Priſoner. Was not there any Reluctancy in me to ſign it?

Lord Townſhend. What do you mean? Have not I anſwer'd that already?

Priſoner. Did not you offer me ſome Money to ſign it?

Lord Townſhend. I hope you can't ſay a thing of ſo much Infamy. After he had been examin'd, he complain'd to me of the Miſery he was reduc'd to, that his Wife and Family muſt ſtarve, and repreſented himſelf as if he were at a loſs for a Supper: I told him he had nothing to hope for, or any room to expect any Favour, but by making a clear Confeſſion. He went on begging, and ſaid that his Wife was ſtarving; I do not certainly know whether it was the very Night that he ſign'd his Confeſſion or not; but I am ſure it was not for that, but in pure Alms, and becauſe he begg'd ſo hard, I put my Hand in my Pocket, and gave him three, four, or five Guineas, I know not which, in Charity; and it was what I never could refuſe any Man that apply'd to me in that manner, and begg'd ſo hard. He ſaid his Brother would not look upon him, becauſe he was taken up for High-Treaſon, and he deſir'd me to give him ſomething in Charity, which I did.

Priſoner. I deſire to aſk you, whether you ever beſtow'd on any Body elſe the like Charity? Pray, my Lord, name the Man under your Examination, you ever gave five Guineas to before? [At which there being a Laugh round the Court.]

Priſoner. I muſt not be laugh'd out of my Life; you did not anſwer me.

Lord Ch. Baron. Propoſe your Queſtion to the Court?

Priſoner. I deſire to know who he ever gave five Guineas to beſides me?

L. Ch. Baron. My Lord ſays it was out of Charity.

Priſoner. And that he never refus'd any Body under his Examination the Sum of five Guineas?

L. Ch. Baron. He don't ſay ſo; he ſays, he never could refuſe his Charity to People that begg'd as you did.

Priſoner. I had leſs need to beg than ſome others.

Mr. Ward. I have but one Queſtion more to trouble your Lordſhip with, which my Inſtructions lead me to; and that is, whether at the time when this Examination was ſign'd by the Priſoner, he was not told of its being for ſome particular Purpoſe, but that it ſhould not be binding to him?

Lord Townſhend. He did deſire that it might not be made uſe of againſt him; I told him that depended on his Behaviour, if he was ingenuous, if he dealt frankly and fairly, and declar'd all the Truth, I would do all in my Power that he ſhould have Mercy; I don't know whether it is proper to give my Reaſons why I am convinc'd he did not deal candidly; but on the peruſal of the Letters, I found he was not a bare Conveyer of them, or came by Chance to the Knowledge of what he explain'd in them, but that he was wrote to, as one of the Managers: On that I ſent to him again, and told him plainly, he muſt know more of it. He ſtood it out that he did not, and then I ſent him to Newgate: Soon after he was committed, his Wife came, as Mr. Buckley inform'd me, and acquainted him that ſhe was perſuaded, if ſhe could ſee her Huſband, that ſhe could prevail with him to diſcover the whole: On that I gave Directions to put him into the Meſſenger's Hands again, which was done; about a Morning or two after, one Curtis, who was in the ſame Meſſenger's Houſe, brought a Letter to the Office, which he had found drop'd by his Man's Bed-ſide. It was directed to his Wife, and the Subject was to bid her not afflict herſelf, for he found better Company in Newgate than he expected, that the better half of them were in upon the Government Account; that he had ſaid nothing of Mr. Harvey that could hurt him, nor could he; that the Government had nothing againſt Mr. Harvey, but a general Suſpicion that he was againſt the Government, which three Parts in four of the Nation were; and that he himſelf laugh'd at any thing the Government could do againſt him the Priſoner: When I found a Man write in his Stile, I could not but think he had not dealt ingenuouſly.

Mr. Hungerford. I would propoſe to the Judgment of the Court, whether it is proper to give Evidence of the Subſtance of a Letter without offering the Letter it ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. This comes in Anſwer to Mr. Ward's Queſtion. He aſk'd my Lord Townſhend, whether there was not ſome Promiſe that this Confeſſion ſhould not be made uſe of againſt the Priſoner? His Lordſhip gives this Account, and juſtifies himſelf, how he came to make uſe of it, and gives this as the Reaſon.

Mr. Hungerford. But to give an Account of the Subſtance of a Letter without producing it, I apprehend, is not according to the Rules of Evidence.

Sir J. Jekyll. If the Council for the Priſoner deſire the Letter to be read, it ſhall be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you inſiſt upon the Reading of it?

Mr. Ward. If you will read it in the proper time you may.

Mr. Hungerford. If in the Courſe of the Evidence the Letter is not read, I don't preſs it.

Then Mr. Horat. Walpole was call'd again, and the Letter was ſhewed to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account what you know of this Letter, and how it came to your Hands?

Mr. Walpole. This Letter Curtis brought to me, and I made this * Mark on it: He told me it was found in Francia's Chamber near his Bed-ſide, and this is the Letter.

Mr. Ward. There is nothing prov'd yet of its being the Priſoner's Hand, its being found by his Bed-ſide will not affect him.

Then Mr. Buckley was call'd again, and the Letter was ſhew'd to him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray look upon this Paper, and tell us whoſe Hand-writing you take it to be?

Mr. Buckley. I never did ſee the Priſoner write but once, and that was upon my being ſent to him to take a Confeſſion he ſeem'd willing to make, and then I ſat by him while he was writing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long did he write then?

Mr. Buckley. About an Hour, and I read it over.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you believe this to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Buckley. I not only ſaw him write then, but I have read a great deal in this Book, which Mr. Walpole told me was taken at the Priſoner's Houſe; therefore being uſed to the Writing in this Book, and to what I ſaw him write, for thoſe Reaſons, and no other, I believe this Paper to be his Writing.

Mr. Denton. Are not the Letters of your Name on this Letter?

Mr. Buckley. Yes. When Mr. Walpole put into my Hands all the Letters, my Lord bid me ſingle out thoſe that were fit to be extracted, and I did mark them that were extracted, and I always kept them in my Hands till Mr Walpole return'd, and then I deliver'd them to him: Thoſe Letters that I extracted, I mark'd; ſome other Letters that were intercepted by my Lord Townſhend, I did not mark, becauſe they came to me at other times.

Mr. Denton. Did you mark that Letter?

Mr. Buckley. Yes.

Mr. Ward. Can you be poſitive that it is the Priſoner's Hand?

Mr. Buckley. No.

Mr. Ward. Do you rely on the Writing in the Book?

Mr. Buckley. By that, and by what I did ſee him write, from thence it is that I conclude this to be his Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. He attempts to prove his Hand by two Inducements, one that he ſaw him write, and the other is the Book; therefore let him fix on thoſe Parts of the Book, that he takes to be the Priſoner's Hand, and to be like this Letter.

L. Ch. Baron. The Book is not material; it is enough for a Man to ſay, that he ſaw another write for an Hour together, and then that he believes this to be his Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. If that was the ſingle Foundation, it was ſomething; but he makes another Foundation alſo.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. We are going out of the way, the Queſtion is, whether this ſhall be read? In order to that, the Method is to prove, that the Witneſs is acquainted with the Priſoner's Hand-writing, and believes this to be his Writing. He tells you he ſaw him write for an Hour. He gives you a further Reaſon, that it is like ſome Letters in the Book. If that were laid out of the Caſe, the other would be ſufficient without it.

Mr. Hungerford. A Man makes two Things the Foundation of his Judgment, his ſeeing him write, and the Similitude of Hands in the Book; the moſt concluſive Evidence would be, the Similitude of the Hand in the Book, which others may judge of as well as himſelf.

L. Ch. Baron. That is no Evidence at all; Similitude of Hands is no Evidence.

Mr. Hungerford. I am far from thinking it is, or that there is as yet any Evidence at all. Do you believe this to be his Hand, only from your having ſeen him write, or from what you have obſerv'd in the Book alſo?

Mr. Buckley. I ſay that from my having ſeen him write, and my having ſeen the Entries in the Book, I believe this to be his Hand.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. If you had never ſeen the Book, but had ſeen him write for an Hour; could you collect from thence that this was his Hand?

* Shewing a Mark upon the Letter.

Mr. Buckley. No, I would not affirm it.

Mr. Hungerford. Then it is with us, and makes it neceſſary to look into the Book.

Mr. Att. Gen. How come you to apprehend any one Part of the Book to be Francia's Writing more than the other?

Mr. Buckley. By my Eye-ſight, and comparing it with this Letter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it from your Knowledge of ſeeing him write?

Mr. Buckley. Yes, and this Writing being like this Book.

Sir J. Jekyll. I deſire this Matter may be conſider'd how it ſtands, my Lord Townſhend is examin'd touching the Confeſſion of the Priſoner, and was ask'd, whether there was not Hopes of Mercy given him? My Lord ſaid there were, upon his making a frank Diſcovery; but he tells you the Priſoner was not entitled to Mercy, becauſe he had not made ſuch a Diſcovery, and then gives an Account of this Letter: I thought the Council for the Priſoner appeal'd to that Letter, and would have had it produced, to check the Evidence given by my Lord.

Mr. J. Pratt. Since it is gone thus far, I think it would be proper to clear this Matter.

Priſoner. I deſire to know where Mr. Buckley ſaw me write for an Hour together?

Mr. Buckley. It was in the Meſſenger's Houſe.

Mr. J. Tracy. My Lord Townſhend was giving an Account in Anſwer to a Queſtion propos'd by the Priſoner's Council, and gave his Reaſon why he did not think the Priſoner was frank. I did not think ſo (ſays he) becauſe of a Letter which was found by his Bed-ſide. Says Mr. Hungerford, then that Letter ought to be produced.

Mr. Hungerford. If the Account is no more than that my Lord obſerved ſo upon that Letter, there is no great Harm in reading it: But I am ſtill in your Judgment, whether, when the Contents of a Letter is inſiſted upon, and repeated, and that upon Memory only, the Letter itſelf ought not to be produced?

Then ——— Curtis was ſworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Look upon that Letter, whoſe Hand-writing is it?

Curtis. I believe it is Mr. Francia's.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you ſeen him write?

Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And do you believe it to be his Writing?

Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Ward. How long have you been acquainted with the Priſoner?

Curtis. While he was in the Meſſenger's Hands.

Mr. Ward. How often did you ſee him write?

Curtis. Several times.

Mr. Ward. Was you in Cuſtody at the ſame time when he was?

Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did you find this Letter?

Curtis. In his Chamber by his Bed-ſide.

Mr. Hungerford. I don't hear that he gives an Account, whether he is ſo well acquainted with his Writing, that he can diſtinguiſh it from any others?

Curtis. He told me it was a Letter that he had wrote to his Wife.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Letter is in French; we have a Tranſlation of it; we muſt deſire that the Interpreters who tranſlated it may be ſworn.

Then Mr. Boyer and Mr. Ozell were both ſworn.

Mr. Cowper. Did you tranſlate the Letter?

Mr. Boyer. I did, and afterwards I compar'd it with Mr. Ozell.

Mr. Cowper. Is that a true Tranſlation of the Original Letter?

Mr. Boyer. I did make a true genuine Tranſlation of it, allowing for the Difference of Language and Stile.

Mr. Cowper. Was it the beſt and moſt exact Tranſlation you was able to make?

Mr. Boyer. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Ozell, have you compar'd this Tranſlation with the Original?

Mr. Ozell. Yes, and I believe it to be a true Tranſlation.

Note. That the Original Letter was deliver'd into the Priſoner's Hand, during the Time that the Tranſlation was reading; and Mr. Flint, who was permitted to ſtand in the Bar near the Priſoner, aſſiſted him in comparing the Original with the Tranſlation. The like Method was obſerved, when the Tranſlations of the Letters received by the Priſoner were read; and when the Letters wrote by him were read out of the Copy-Book, the Copy-Book was ſhewn to him.

[Clerk reads.]

My Dear,

ALL I exhort you to, is, to make yourſelf as eaſy as you can. I do the ſame, and am well, having ſlept well laſt Night; and the Company here is much better than I expected; they are all Tories, and the major Part for the Government, that is ſent hither for being ſo, according to their Informations. Although all ſhould fail, and my Lord Townſhend ſhould do nothing, the Buſineſs will be at an End in leſs than a Fortnight. You know upon what Account I am here, which cannot diſgrace me. Be therefore comforted, and do not grieve. God will aſſiſt us. I neither know, nor have ſaid any thing againſt Mr. Harvey, nor can they do any thing to him, unleſs he has other Affairs which I know not of; therefore you may aſſure that Frenchman, that's falſe, for I know nothing againſt that Gentleman, which is not intirely regular. He may only be ſuſpected of being a Friend to the Pretender; but that was well known before; and if all who are ſo were to be puniſh'd, above three fourths of the Nation would ſuffer. Therefore I laugh at any thing they can do to me, all my Sorrow is not to be with you; and I would not ſee you in this wretched Place, in which you can but grieve both me and yourſelf. Adieu.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray let me have the Letter; I have a little French, and I would willingly ſee how they render the Word Tories.

Mr. J. Pratt. When did you find this Letter?

Curtis. Upon the 27th Day of November.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord Townſhend, pray be pleas'd to give an Account of the Occaſion that this Confeſſion was not ſign'd by both the Secretaries?

Lord Townſhend. I ſuppoſe Mr. Secretary Stanhope might be gone out of the Room.

Mr. Hungerford. I would not willingly trouble my Lord Townſhend at any other Time, and therefore would take this Opportunity: I think your Lordſhip ſaid, that the Letters that were ſtopp'd at the Poſt-Office were laid on the Table with the other Letttes, when the Priſoner was examined?

Lord Townſhend. I did not ſay that. The Letters that were intercepted, I did firſt lay them before the King, and then put them into the ſame Hands with the other Letters.

Then Mr. Secretary Stanhope was ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Secretary Stanhope, we muſt deſire you to inform the Jury what you know about the Examinations of the Priſoner, and the Confeſſion he made.

Mr. Secret. Stanhope. I have here two Examinations, one ſign'd by my Lord Townſhend, the 21ſt of Sept. and the other dated the 22d of Sept. ſign'd by my Lord Townſhend and myſelf. I was preſent at both the Examinations: There has been an Account given of the firſt, which is perfectly agreeable to what paſs'd there, and my Name is to the ſecond.

There is annex'd to this ſecond a Letter, which we take to be Mr. Harvey's: I remember the Letter; the Hand is particular, and there are Figures by way of Cyphers. I remember very well this Letter. It has been before the Cabinet Council. It was ſhewn to Mr. Harvey at the Council-Table; he did not deny it, but ſhew'd the utmoſt Conſternation when it was ſhewn to him; and deſir'd that he might withdraw, and have the Liberty to ſpeak to one particular Lord. The manner of his Behaviour was ſuch, as to induce the Lords of the Council to be of Opinion, that he was inclin'd to confeſs what he knew; therefore they thought fit to let him withdraw, and go to the Meſſenger's Houſe; but his Agonies were ſuch, that he ſtabb'd himſelf that Night, or the next Morning.

I believe at twice we ſpent about two Hours in the Examination of the Priſoner, and theſe Examinations were taken from his own Mouth; and I can be poſitive there is not a Paſſage in them, that he did not repeat more than once or twice. The Reaſon why my Name is to one, and not to the other, may be, becauſe the Room where he was examined was next to the Room where the Council uſed to meet; and I believe I might be going in and out between the two Rooms, and might not be there when he ſign'd it; and therefore I might not think it proper to ſet my Name to what I did not ſee ſign'd: But I ſaw him ſign that to which my Hand is ſet; and I don't remember that he had any Reluctancy to ſign it. I read the firſt Examination more than once or twice to him, and did myſelf examine him to all the Particulars of it.

After the firſt Night's Examination, it is certain he behav'd himſelf like a Man not worth a Groat, intimating as if he did not know how to get a Supper: He repreſented himſelf in a pitiful Condition, and it was at his going out of the Room, that my Lord put his Hand in his Pocket, and gave him ſomething, what it was I don't know, but it was after he had ſign'd his Examination; for after it, there was a good deal of Converſation paſs'd between him and me. I aſk'd him ſeveral Queſtions, as to his being in France, and about the Countries he came from; and aſk'd him as to ſeveral Spaniſh Letters that were in the Book, and other Things of that Nature.

Mr. Ward. Did he not deſire to read over the Examinations before he ſign'd them?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I don't remember that he did; but they were read over to him, and he was ask'd to every Particular by myſelf, ſome one Particular might ſlip; but I did examine him, I think, to every Particular, in order to have it alter'd, if he objected to it, and he did not expreſs the leaſt Reluctancy. I ſaw him ſet his Hand to one of them; as to the other, I can't ſay, becauſe the Room was next to the Room where the Council was ſitting, and I don't know but that I might be there.

Mr. Ward. Do you remember any thing particular that was ſaid to him, that thoſe Examinations ſhould only be laid before his Majeſty, and no other uſe made of them?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I don't remember any ſuch thing.

Sir J. Jekyll. If he had deſir'd to have read theſe Examinations, would you have refuſed it?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. It never was denied to any Man to read his Examination before he ſign'd it, where I was preſent.

Sir J. Jekyll. Nor you would not have refus'd him, if he had deſir'd it?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. No, God forbid.

Mr. Hungerford. I am informed that the Priſoner wrote ſome Letters to my Lord Townſhend, complaining of ſome other Uſe being made of his Examinations, than was deſign'd?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I received ſome Letters from the Priſoner, but none that I thought were of any ſort of avail.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he complain of his not being ſuffer'd to read them?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I don't remember it; but I am ſure it was not ſo. If he did complain, it was without any Ground.

Priſoner. I deſire a Sight of the Original Letter, which Curtis ſaid I own'd. I never wrote one Word of it; it is forged ſince: Any Body will ſay it; it is not like my Hand. Which was ſhewn him accordingly.

Mr. Cowper. Before the Examinations are read, I deſire the Gentlemen of the Jury would take an Account in Writing of the initial Letters and Figures they will hear read, and then will obſerve who are the Perſons meant and intended by them, according to the Priſoner's Explanation, when he was examin'd. Gentlemen, it is neceſſary you ſhould underſtand, who are the Perſons that are intended by the Letters and Numbers. If you take them down, all the Letters will read to the Purpoſe.

L. C. Baron. Gentlemen, they deſire you will take notice of the Letters and Numbers that are explain'd in this Examination, becauſe you will the better underſtand the Letters that will be read to you: That is what they deſire, and it will be for your Satisfaction.

The Examination upon Oath of Francis Francia of London, Merchant.

Clerk reads. THIS Examinant ſaith, That about two Years ago he became acquainted with the Abbot Butler, otherwiſe call'd, the Vidame of Cambray, at the Time when the Duke D'Aumont was here; and afterwards, viz. ſoon after the Duke D'Aumont left England, this Examinant receiv'd a Letter from the ſaid Butler, then in France, recommending to this Examinant's Care a Law-Suit, in which one Barbara Butler, a Kinſwoman of the ſaid Abbot's, was concern'd; that this occaſion'd a Correſpondence between this Examinant and the ſaid Abbot Butler, which from a little before the late Queen's Death, hath laſted till within theſe few Days paſt; during which Correſpondence with the ſaid Abbot, this Examinant received from the ſaid Abbot ſeveral Letters directed to Mr. Edward Harvey of Combe, and convey'd back ſeveral Letters from the ſaid Mr. Edward Harvey to the ſaid Abbot, which Letters to the ſaid Abbot, from the ſaid Mr. Harvey, were ſometimes brought to this Examinant by the ſaid Mr. Harvey himſelf, and at other Times ſent by Mr. Harvey to this Examinant.

This Examinant further ſaith, That at ſuch Times during the ſaid Correſpondence, as the Abbot Butler was at Cambray, the ſaid Mr. Harvey uſually brought or ſent to this Examinant two Letters, one directed to the ſaid Abbot at Cambray, and the other, either directed by Mr. Harvey himſelf to the Duke D'Aumont at the French Court; or the ſaid Mr. Harvey deſired this Examinant to direct the ſame to the Duke D'Aumont, the ſaid Mr. Harvey telling this Examinant, that he did not ſend the ſaid Letters himſelf to France openly, becauſe he would not expoſe himſelf to be reflected on for having Friends in France, not that he car'd a Pin if it were known, becauſe we were in Peace with France, or Words to that Effect.

This Examinant further ſaith, that the Letters ſo delivered, or ſent to him by the ſaid Harvey, for the ſaid Abbot, or for the Duke D'Aumont, were by this Examinant ſent over to France under a Cover directed to Monſieur D'Aulmay, alias Payen at Paris, but about two Months ago that Method of Correſpondence was changed; for the ſaid Payen, inſtead of incloſing his Anſwers to the ſaid Mr. Harvey in Letters or Covers directed to this Examinant, wrote only to this Examinant, but order'd him to ſhew to Mr. Harvey, or to deliver to him, what he ſo wrote to this Examinant, which this Examinant did accordingly.

This Examinant further ſaith, that whereas in ſome of the Letters lately written to him by Monſieur Payen, to be communicated to the ſaid Mr. Harvey, and which were communicated to the ſaid Mr. Harvey accordingly, and which being taken in this Examinant's Cuſtody, were ſhewn to him; there are the Letters M. H. and my D. D. and M. B. which ſeem to be the initial Letters of Men's Names; he, this Examinant, underſtood that the ſaid Letters M. H. ſtand for the aforeſaid Mr. Harvey, and my D. D. for the Duke of Ormond, and M. B. for the Lord Bolingbroke; and this Examinant verily believes that the Subject of the ſaid Letters written to him by Payen to be communicated to Mr. Harvey aforeſaid, is the Deſign of the Pretender to invade his Majeſty's Dominions.

The further Examination of Francis Francia.

THIS Examinant being ſworn, ſays, That a Letter ſhewn to him, and mark'd by him, which is hereto annex'd, and is dated the 9th of January, 1714. and writ by Mr. Edward Harvey's own Hand, was ſent to him, this Examinant, by the ſaid Mr. Harvey, under a Cover, in order to be forwarded to the Abbot Butler in France: And that this Examinant in opening the Cover, accidentally broke the Seal of the ſaid incloſed Letter, which made him detain the ſaid Letter, and not forward it, leſt it ſhould be imagined that he had opened the ſaid Letter, out of a Curioſity to read it. And this Examinant further ſaith, that he verily believes that by N° (22) mentioned in the ſecond Line in the ſaid Letter, is underſtood the Duke D'Aumont; and that N° (6) mentioned in the thirteenth Line in the ſaid Letter, and where-ever the ſaid N° (6) is mentioned in the ſaid Letter, he, this Examinant, verily believes it ſignifies and is meant to ſtand for the late French King: And that by N° (17) mentioned in the ſaid Letter, is to be underſtood the Word Tories; and that where-ever (22) is mentioned in the ſaid Letter, the Duke D'Aumont is meant. And this Examinant further ſaith, he verily believes that by (8) is to be underſtood the Pretender; and by (9) mentioned in the ſaid Letter, is to be underſtood his Majeſty; but that this Examinant doth not well know what 24000, mentioned in the ſaid Letter, ſtands for; neither can he tell what (14) ſtands for, mentioned in the ſaid Letter.

Sir J. Jekyll. Now we will read Mr. Harvey's Letter.

Mr. Ward. You cannot read that Letter againſt the Priſoner.

Sir J. Jekyll. He hath made it Part of his Examination.

[Clerk reads.] The 9th of January, 1714.
Dear Sir,

WITH great Satisfaction I receiv'd yovrs of the 12 yovr Stile, and the next time I write vnto [a] 22 I will be ſvre to write on yovr behalf, jvſt as yov mention, and I wiſh it may have the Effect yov propoſe; but I remember very well the Advice yov formerly have given me, that your great ones are good at words and fair promiſes, but ſlow at performing, if Ever; therefore as I take yov to be my Friend, I ſhall lay out no more Money till I am repaid what [b] 22 was pleaſed to promiſe me long agoe ſhould be rymitted me if the Fau—en had not done it on notice I meane the 130: 4—0 ſo long due, itt being abovt halfe I have bin ovt of Pocket, and for my good will am ſufficiantly ſcandaliſed as a friend to [c] 22, and Pentionar to [d] (6) nay and yov from tyme to tyme have aſſvred me it ſhovld be done, and ſtill itt is the ſame, and ſo is like if you ſee itt not done.

Now if you pleaſe only to remind [e] 22 to ſend me a Bill if he pleaſes for the 130: 4—I ſhall be obleged very mvch to yov, or otherwiſe I ſee it is loſt, and yov only doe give me faire words, which realy is not like a trew Freind, for I am ſure I have not, or ever will omitt any one thing.

to ſerve [f] (6) [g] 22 nor yov pay'd or not, itt ſhall not trovble ſo I have [h] 22 Eſteem; wee are now in a hurrey on choſing of Parliament Men, and how thoſe things will goe, God above beſt dos knows; but this I will affirme ware thoſe that are to chvſe lefte to them ſelfes to chvſe no Money from Corte threats, nor any other indirect means vſed, all wovld be ovt of ſeght on the [i] 17 ſide; and as it is, I hope all will doe well if [k] (6) and [l] 22 ſticks to theire trew Friends, and on no accompt forgett them and all theire good intentions. I deſire you to lett [m] 22 know, if my Life lay att ſtake, I cannot get 30 ſuch Hovnds as I dare ſend to his Friend the Co—t of To—ovs he deſiers; but by March I hope I may, my good Friend Mr. B—ne that you mention in yovr Directions, has given me two of his beſt Bitches; they are fovre Years Hunting, and they ſhall be in Whelpe a're I take them; and one young one I dayly will look ovt, tho' it is a thing quite ovt of my way, but to ſerve [n] 6 or [o] 22 I will do any thing tho' to the hazard of my Life, and all I have.

I am.

Mr. Att. General. We will now ſhew the Nature of this Correſpondence, by their ſending Letters to and again, and ſhew when he came into it himſelf.

Mr. Ward. Are you going to offer any Letters?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, out of his own Book.

Mr. Ward. We muſt humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether they can offer any of theſe Letters in Evidence, the Charge of the Overt-Act is general, that he wrote ſeveral treaſonable Letters: Now a Confeſſion that there were ſeveral treaſonable Letters paſt, might ſupport that Allegation, or they may give Evidence in general, that he did write ſuch Letters. But we muſt be in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether they can produce any particular Letters, which are every one of them Overt-Acts themſelves, and are not laid in the Indictment.

We think the Law has guarded the Life of a Man by the Stat. 25 Edw. III. That tho' the Intention is the Crime, yet that muſt be declared by Overt-Act or Deed, which muſt be charged in the Indictment. And the late Laws ſince the Revolution ſays nothing ſhall be given in Evidence, but what is expreſly laid in the Indictment. Now if this be allowed of under ſuch a general Charge, to prove ſuch a number of Facts, which are not charged particularly in the Indictment, then all the Security of that Law will be eluded, and a Man will be no more able to make a Defence, than if it had been laid in general, that he conſpired the Death of the King; or it had been laid, that in order thereto, he had been guilty of ſeveral treaſonable Practices.

We inſiſt that they can't under this Allegation give any Evidence but what is correſpondent to it, as any Confeſſion or Proof in general; but they can't enter into any diſtinct Overt-Act, which ought to be laid, and can't be given in Evidence unleſs expreſly laid in the Indictment. If that Act has any meaning, it is to avoid any ſuch Artifice as this; and it obliges them that are concerned for the King to ſpecify in the Indictment the Overt-Act they will go upon.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I think we have an Objection to the reading theſe Letters that cannot be got over. The Law hath in all Ages guarded the Life of the Subject againſt Proſecutions for High-Treaſon, and with a great deal of Reaſon: The Offence is great; the Proſecutions ſupported with great Power and Influence, and the Conſequence great to the Party concerned; for it is not only the Loſs of his Life, but the Ruin of his Family and Eſtate; his Family muſt be infamous and his Eſtate forfeited; therefore the Law hath guarded the Life of the Subject in a more particular manner, againſt theſe Proſecutions, than againſt any other capital Offences.

Before that happy Law, 25 Edw. III. the Proſecutions in Caſes of High-Treaſon were ſuch, that no Man could be ſafe againſt them. There was ſcarce any thing a Subject could do, even any thing that did but give the umbrage of Offence, but might be drawn into the compaſs of High-Treaſon. In Truth, the Definition or Deſcription of High-Treaſon before this Act is ſo looſe that it gave a colour for this Proceeding. It was among other things, Si quis aliquid egerit vel agi procuraverit ad ſeditionem domini Regis vel exercitûs ſui, &c. And in purſuance of this Notion of High-Treaſon, impriſoning an Officer of Juſtice, and Officers cheating Soldiers of their Pay, killing a Perſon going to Liſt himſelf, &c. were before this Act

[f] The French King. [g] Duke D'Aumont. [h] Duke D'Aumont. [i] Tories. [k] The French King. [l] Duke D'Aumont. [m] Duke D'Aumont. [n] The French King. [o] Duke D'Aumont. adjudged High-Treaſon. And I can ſhew that ſome of thoſe hard Caſes happen'd the Circuit before the Act. And therefore the Legiſlature thought fit to aſcertain what Offences ſhould be Treaſon for the future. And our Hiſtorians remark, that from the Time of this Law, the Sword that before hung by a ſlender Thread over the Heads of the Subjects, was then removed; and for this Reaſon likewiſe the Parliament is called Benedictum.

It is true, that the bare Compaſſing, or imagining the Death of the King is Treaſon, and it ought to be ſo; for in that precious Life the Common Weale, the Happineſs of all the Subjects, is eminently concerned. But this Act of Parliament hath provided, that ſuch Compaſſing, &c. ſhall be proved by Overt-Act, that is, not by Inferences, ſtrained Conſtructions, or rhetorical Aggravations, and the like, but by plain Proof of Matter of Fact. And I am bold to ſay, the Intent of this Law was perverted for ſome Ages, by laying the Charges of High-Treaſon ſo looſe, that the Party could not tell how to apply his Defence: And of this, and other Kinds, there had been ſeveral irregular Proſecutions; ſuch as thoſe of Col. Sidney, my Lord Ruſſel, &c. And for theſe Reaſons the late Act for regulating Trials, &c. hath provided, that no Evidence of an Overt-Act ſhall be given but what is ſpecially laid in the Indictment: And ſuch a Certainty was intended, that the Party might know certainly and exactly to what Points to apply his Defence.

If it ſhould be admitted that what is done in this Indictment is ſufficient to anſwer this Act, the Intent of it will be eluded: For the Intent is, that the Criminal ſhall know how to apply his Defence. The Offence in this Caſe is ſuppoſed to be in the Letters; muſt not therefore the Letters, or the Subſtance be ſet forth? For my Part I think they muſt, or they cannot be given in Evidence. I can produce very ancient Authorities to this purpoſe: And as to the Modern ones, beſides that in Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe, I have one in my Eye, which is Mr. Attorney's own Authority (for which I ſhall always have a great Regard) in the Indictment againſt Gregg *, which was a Proſecution of Mr. Attorney's; there the Letter was ſet out at length.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was not in my Time; I was not Attorney then.

Mr. Hungerford. I beg Mr. Attorney's Pardon; but he has been in and out ſo often, that I may have been eaſily led into the Miſtake.

I have another very great Authority, and that was in the Caſe of Dr. Sacheverell: The Queſtion was put to all the Judges for their Solution, whether in all Informations and Indictments, for Offences in Speaking and Writing, the Words ought not to be particularly mentioned? This was the Queſtion propoſed, and it was anſwered, that it ought ſo to be: Your Lordſhip's Anſwer was, That you was of the ſame Opinion with your Brethren. You, my Lord, Mr. Juſtice Tracy, agreed in the ſame Opinion, and ſo did the Eleven Judges then preſent; which was, that the Words ſuppoſed to be criminal, whether written or ſpoken, muſt be expreſly ſpecified in the Indictment or Information. This I am ſure is the greateſt Authority that can be in any Caſe: It is the Authority of all the then Judges of England, who were but Eleven, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt being then lately dead; ſo, my Lords, to juſtify this Objection, we have the Precedents on our Side, particularly of Coleman, Fitzharris, Gregg and Sidney; in all which Caſes the Papers ſuppoſed to be Criminal, or the Subſtance of them, are inſerted in the Indictment. We have the Authorities for us, Ancient and Modern, and we have the Reaſon of the Thing for us. It being the higheſt Reaſon and Juſtice, that as the Priſoner is now to have ſome Days before his Trial the Names of his Judges, viz. the Pannel of the Jury, ſo he ſhould be apprized of his Charge with ſo much Certainty, as to know how to apply his Defence; and we don't doubt therefore but we ſhall have your Lordſhip's Opinion in favour of our Objection.

Sir J. Jekyll. We may offer this Book and theſe Letters, notwithſtanding this Objection. Mr. Ward did not go ſo far as Mr. Hungerford, that it is neceſſary to ſet them forth Verbatim. As to that, I believe it was never done in any Caſe: And as to Coleman's Caſe, thoſe Letters are not ſet forth; but it is alledged, that they were wrote to procure the Aid and Aſſiſtance of the French King, as it is here ſaid, that the Priſoner's Letters were to deſire Aſſiſtance from France to the Rebellion here. If it be neceſſary to ſet forth the Words in the Caſe of a Miſdemeanour for a Libel in the ordinary Courts of Juſtice, it is becauſe the Libel is the Crime; but in the Caſe of a treaſonable Correſpondence it is otherwiſe; for there the Letters are not the Crime, but the Overt-Act of the Treaſon, which is the Manifeſtation of the Crime. Beſides, let it be conſidered what Evidence are we going to offer; we offer the Letters ſent to him in anſwer to the Letters wrote by him, and to require us to ſet them out in the Indictment is impoſſible; when we make it part of the Charge that the Letters were ſent to France, it is to mock us to call upon us to produce thoſe Letters themſelves.

Mr. Ward ſeemed to admit, that the Clauſe mentioned by him in the Statute 7 Will. was grounded upon the 25 Edw. III. For that old Statute doth require, that a Man be attainted by Overt-Act; and what doth 7 Will. do in that Caſe? No more than to make plain what the Law was before: For the Words are, that no Evidence ſhall be given of an Overt-Act that is not expreſly laid in the Indictment; and from thence the Priſoner's Council would infer, that no Letters ought to be given in Evidence that is not laid in the Indictment: No, the Act requires only that the Overt-Act be expreſly laid in the Indictment. Not that the Evidence ſhall be expreſly laid in the Indictment. All that the Court is to conſider as to this Matter is, whether the Overt-Act is not ſufficiently laid in the Indictment; it will not be doubted, but that writing Letters to excite Rebellion is an Overt-Act. Then the Queſtion is, whether this Indictment doth not expreſly alledge this Overt-Act. The Words in the Indictment are theſe; Quodque prædictus Franciſcus Francia, ad dict' Prodicon' & Diabolic' & Proditor' Intencon' & propoſit' pred' ulterius perimplend' perficiend' & ad effectum redigend' poſtea ſcil' eodem primo Die Septembris, Anno ſupradicto nec non diverſis al' diebus & vicibus tam antea quam poſtea apud London' pred' in parochia & Ward' pred' malitioſe, diabolice & proditorie compoſuit & ſcripſit & componi & ſcribi cauſavit ſeparales proditorias Epiſtolas notifican' intention' & reſolution' ipſius Franciſci Francia & præd' al', proditor' Jur' præd' adhuc ignot' ad bellum præd' contra dictum Dominum Regem nunc movend, &c. This is ſurely an expreſs laying the Overt-Act of which theſe Letters are the Evidence.

I have been looking upon the Caſe of my Lord Preſton; which tho' it was before the Statute of 7 Will. yet my Lord Preſton was not without the Aſſiſtance of Council, tho' he was not allowed them in Court. It is there laid, that he wrote ſeveral Letters to inform the French King what the Forces of the Kingdom were; and the Indictment goes on to ſhew the Purport of thoſe Letters. But in that Caſe the Letters are not particularly ſet forth: And yet that was never made an Objection at his Trial, or before Judgment. In that Indictment is charged his writing Letters, and they are deſcribed, and that we have done. This we think is ſufficient, that is, that we are bound to lay the Overt-Act expreſly, but not the Evidence of that Overt-Act. Trial 146.

Mr. Attorney-General. This is a ſurprizing Objection; we admit there muſt be an Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and that is all that the Law requires; we muſt ſet it out ſo that we may apply our Evidence to it: And the Meaning of the Statute is, that when you lay one Overt-Act, you muſt not prove another.

The Inſtance that is given by the Serjeant is very ſtrong, and every Body remembers Coleman's Caſe, the writing Letters is an Overt-Act; but it is not neceſſary to ſet them out, that being the Evidence of the Overt-Act. In Gregg's Caſe there was but one ſingle Letter which was ſet out, and that was ſtopp'd at the Poſt-Houſe.

In the Caſe of Libels they muſt be ſet out; and that was the Opinion of the Judges in Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe in Proceedings at Law: But the Courſe of Parliament was held by the Lords to be otherwiſe. We have charged that he agreed to write Letters; that he did write them, and ſend them; and now they would have us to ſet out thoſe Letters that are ſent beyond Sea: And if that were Law, it would be impoſſible to convict any Man of a Correſpondence Abroad, becauſe the Letters are ſent Abroad.

If it was charged in the Indictment, that he wrote to great Numbers of Men, it would not be neceſſary to ſet out the Names of thoſe Men; this is a Matter we don't need to labour much; for this laſt Statute has not altered the Law, as to the laying the Overt-Act, but only as to the Proof, that when you lay one Overt-Act, you can't prove another. I don't know that it could have been done before; ſo that that Act, as to this Matter, was only a Declaration of what the Law was before.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We think none of the Caſes inſtanced prove what is inſiſted upon in this Caſe. That Caſe of Coleman is miſtaken, for the Letters in that Caſe are not ſet forth particularly, only the Subject-Matter and Nature of them, as is here done.

They can inſtance no Caſe where the Indictment is for writing treaſonable Letters, importing a treaſonable Correſpondence, that ever they were ſet out in the Indictment; and to what a length would ſuch an Indictment be carried, if it ſhould be done in this Caſe.

Col. Sidney's Caſe is againſt them; for there was a whole Volume wrote by him, and there was nothing put into the Indictment but the Subſtance of a very little Part; and that was Col. Sidney's own Objection: Says he, Am I to be found guilty for a little Part that is cull'd out of the reſt; when if the whole was put in, by comparing the whole together, it might not be poſſible to collect any Treaſon from it?

As to Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe, that is quite different from this; for that was in the Caſe of a Libel, where the Offence properly conſiſts in the Expreſſion. But even in the Caſe of Libels, I muſt beg leave to deny that the particular Words muſt be ſet out in the Indictment; for a Libel may be ſet out in Latin, which is the better and ſafer way; and then if you ſet out the Subſtance, it is ſufficient. And if you may ſet it out in Latin, it can't be true that you are bound down to the particular Words, for Latin Words and the Engliſh Words can't be the ſame.

The Act of Treaſons ſay, No Evidence is to be given but of the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment. Now what is that Overt-Act here? It is writing Letters, which is ſpecially expreſs'd, and the Subſtance of them ſet out, which ſhews them to be treaſonable. The Inconvenience objected is nothing, unleſs it ſhall be ſuppos'd, that the Priſoner may have wrote ſo many treaſonable Letters that he can't recollect them all.

Beſides, it is to be conſider'd, that all theſe Letters import a Correſpondence, and ſo are to be conſider'd as many, but as one Overt-Act, it is entire, and it is unreaſonable as well as unneceſſary, that the whole Correſpondence ſhould be ſet out. Therefore we think we have done what is ſufficient, and that they can't give one Inſtance of a Caſe where the Treaſon conſiſted in writing many Letters of Correſpondence, that the Letters themſelves were ſet out. For the Deſign of the Law before-mentioned was no more, than that it ſhould not be lawful to lay one Overt-Act, and give Evidence of another.

The Treaſon is, the Priſoner has imagined the Death of the King; and the Overt-Act is, he has wrote ſeveral Letters, that is expreſly and ſpecially laid; and then to diſtinguiſh theſe Letters from all others, the Subſtance of thoſe Letters are ſet out, notifying his Intentions to raiſe a Rebellion in this Kingdom, and inciting thoſe in foreign Parts, to aid, aſſiſt, and join with him.

But this Objection may receive another Anſwer, and that is, that there are two other Overt-Acts, beſides his writing of treaſonable Letters, which are conſpiring, conſulting, and agreeing to raiſe a Rebellion and Inſurrection in this Kingdom, and ſolliciting Aid and Aſſiſtance from France: And theſe Letters are very good Evidence to prove thoſe Overt-Acts; for I believe it will not be denied, but that theſe Letters are Evidence of a Conſpiracy, and therefore if they could not be read in Evidence to prove the writing Letters, becauſe they are not ſet out in the Indictment, yet they may be read as Evidence to prove a Conſpiracy.

Therefore we inſiſt that we are right both in Point of Reaſon and of Precedent.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I beg a Word or two by way of Reply: They ſay we have not mentioned one Caſe where the Treaſon is grounded upon Letters, where they have been ſet out in the Indictment: I believe they can't ſhew one Caſe where it has been otherwiſe; we inſiſt upon the Caſe of Colonel Sidney and of Fitzharris.

Colonel Sidney's Objection was, That they had not ſet forth the whole Book; but they had ſet forth intire Paragraphs, and that is what I inſiſt they ſhould have done in this Caſe.

They would have it believed, that the Act of Parliament, 7 Will. is nothing, and that the Law ſtands as it was upon 25 Edw. III. It was taken to be a great Point gained when that latter Act was paſs'd, and I am ſorry it is like to have ſo little Effect. But we inſiſt that what is now offer'd hath all the ill Effects that were before the making of the Act. It is not that a Man muſt be ſuppoſed to have wrote ſo many treaſonable Letters, that he can't remember them; but he don't know which of his Letters may be called ſo. And it was open'd that theſe Letters were of ſuch a Nature, that they could not be underſtood without producing them. Therefore they ought to be ſet out, that ſo a Man may know which of them to defend himſelf againſt.

There is one Caſe like this, which is the Caſe of the good Name of a Man: Every Witneſs that is produced may be examined to his Credit; but you will not ſuffer particular Facts to be prov'd upon him, becauſe he can't be prepared to maintain every Action of his Life. And that was intended in this Caſe; that a Man might be certain what he was to defend himſelf againſt, eſpecially in the Proſecutions from the Crown, which uſually come with a greater Weight than other Proſecutions. Agreeable to this have all the Precedents been when any thing have been founded upon Letters.

Mr. Attorney ſays, that the Letters are ſent into France: So that they can't be produced. I did not object that they ought to be produced. But they are going to produce a Copy-Book to prove that there were ſuch Letters, and by that they had the ſame Opportunity to ſet them out, as if they had the Letters themſelves.

There is no Inconvenience to the Crown by this Method, but the greateſt Inconvenience to the Subject by omitting it; for he may have all the Letters he ever wrote brought againſt him, and he muſt off-hand give an Account of them.

[Mr. Ward, who had an Hoarſeneſs upon him, clos'd with ſaying, that his Voice fail'd him, and that he could go no farther.]

Mr. Hungerford. The Gentleman who is join'd with me in the Defence of the Priſoner complains that his Voice fails him; (God be thanked) I have no Defect of that ſort, for I can ſpeak pretty audibly, but I have a greater, for I had my Inſtructions late laſt Night.

Mr. Sollicitor obſerves, that we are not entitled to have thoſe Letters ſet out either by Reaſon or by Precedent; as to the Reaſon of the Thing, I appeal to your Lordſhip, whether all the Laws relating to Trials of Treaſons, and ſome others, which are to take Effect three Years after his Majeſty's Acceſſion to the Throne, and the Death of the Pretender, have not been grounded on this great Reaſon, to guard the Subject againſt Proſecutions that have been ſometimes carried on with too much Severity. And as to what relates to the preſent Caſe, that the Overt-Act ſhould be ſo particularly laid, as to deſcribe the Offence with ſo much Certainty as to enable the Priſoner to apply his Defence.

What is the Intent of laying an Overt-Act at all, but that the Defendant may ſuit his Defence to it. If it is intended only that you ſhall not give Evidence of a different Overt-Act, as the King's Council would expound it, that will be of little avail to the Priſoner. It is of late grown to be the Practice to lay the Treaſon, to be in conſpiring the King's Death, and the Overt-Act, to be conſpiring to levy War, though by the way, that is making one Article of the Statute of 25 Edw. III. redundant and uſeleſs; for if every Intention of levying War doth imply an Intention to kill the King, there was no need of making levying of War a diſtinct Species of Treaſon at all, for at that rate it was comprehended in the former. And as to what is ſaid, that laying the Overt-Act is a ſufficient Certainty of the Charge, I think not; ſuppoſe the Overt-Act laid, be levying of War, or an Intention ſo to do; there are ſeveral Inſtances of levying War, one way may be by muſtering Men, another by ſeizing ſome of the King's Ships: Theſe are ſo different, that upon a general Charge of levying War, one perhaps may prepare to defend himſelf at Sea, and may be attack'd at Land; and ſo vice verſa; and by the general Charge he don't know what to defend himſelf againſt. Therefore the Intent of that Act muſt be to give a Man ſuch a Notice of the Matter laid to his Charge that he may know how to apply himſelf to his Defence.

I did not inſiſt that the Letters at large ought to be ſet out, but the Subſtance of them, or the Paragraphs in them, containing the Words ſuppoſed to be criminal, ſo that a Man may know how to apply to his Defence.

As to my Lord Preſton's Caſe, though he might have Council to adviſe him, yet in his Time he could not (as the Judges had determin'd the Matter) have a Copy of his Indictment; ſo that he was outed of any Obſervations that could be made upon it. Therefore if that Indictment is in the ſame manner with this, it will be no Authority, for it might be irregular, as we inſiſt this is, and yet there could be no Opportunity to obſerve it ſo to be.

As to what Mr. Sollicitor inſiſts, that to inſert the Letters at large, would make the Indictment long and tedious: For God's Sake, my Lord, is there any Competition betwixt the Charge of two or three Skins of Parchment, and a Man's Life?

As for the Precedents, I have here Coleman's Caſe, where the Date and Subſtance of the Letter is mentioned; and in Colonel Sidney's Caſe, the Title of the Book, and the Paragraphs inſiſted on are ſet out: In Fitzharris's Caſe, the Letter is ſet out Verbatim. As to what is ſaid of Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe, that it was only for a Miſdemeanour, I am bold to ſay, the Queſtion was aſk'd in general, whether in all Indictments or Informations, the Words or Writing ſuppos'd to be criminal, ſhould not be ſet out. And ſurely if in a Caſe of Miſdemeanour, where only Fine or Impriſonment is the Puniſhment, ſo much Certainty is required, much more Certainty ought to be requiſite in a Charge of High-Treaſon, where Loſs of Life, Eſtate, and Poſterity are the Conſequence of the Conviction. So that as I obſerv'd before, we have both Reaſon and Precedent with us, and they have neither of their Side; and thoſe Precedents that are of their Side, were before the late Act of Parliament.

L. C. Baron. The Objection made by the Council for the Priſoner, is, that tho' here is an Overt-Act laid, yet it is not laid ſo expreſly as it ought ought to be. The Overt-Act is, That he wrote ſeveral Letters to Foreigners, to move and excite a War, and ſent them to Foreigners beyond Sea for that purpoſe. I think this is a ſufficient Deſcription of the Overt-Act, and that is as much as is required by the Act of Parliament. That Act ſays, That no Evidence ſhall be given of any Overt-Act, that is not expreſly laid in the Indictment. None can ſay that here is not an Overt-Act expreſly laid. If it is expreſly laid, and ſufficiently deſcribed, ſure it is not neceſſary to mention all the Evidence that is to prove the Overt-Act, the Intent of the Law is no more, than that the Overt-Act ſhould be ſufficiently deſcribed and charged in the Indictment. It is here ſo charged and deſcribed, the Deſign and Intention of the Letters is ſet forth, and they go to prove that ſuch Letters, manifeſting ſuch Deſign and Intention, were written, and that they have laid that he wrote ſeveral Letters to move this War, then they go to produce the Letters. I am of Opinion, that they need not be more particularly deſcribed, and it would be endleſs to ſet out all the Letters.

As to what Mr. Hungerford inſiſted on in Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe (which made a great Noiſe formerly, and has made ſome Noiſe now) the Queſtion there put to the Judges, was concerning Crimes and Miſdemeanours, by Writing or Speaking. As the Crime of a Libel conſiſts only in the Words, and therefore they muſt be laid in the Indictment, he might as well have mentioned an Action upon the Caſe for Words. There the Words muſt be expreſly laid, and they muſt be prov'd as they are laid.

But here the Crime is compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and the writing and ſending of Letters to Foreigners to excite a War is the Overt-Act, and that Act is expreſly laid in this Indictment, which is ſufficient, without ſetting forth the Words of the Letters.

If it be laid, that a Man did conſult and agree to levy War, a Time and Place muſt be laid, but all the Times and Places when and where he met and conſulted, and all the Perſons Names with whom he met and conſulted, need not be mentioned in the Indictment, neither need the very Words of the Conſultation be ſet forth. Therefore I think this Overt-Act is ſufficiently laid, and, as Mr. Sollicitor obſerves, if there was no other Act laid, but conſenting and agreeing to levy War, they might prove it by Letters, although no Letters had been mentioned; but here the Overt-Act is more particularly deſcribed, that he wrote Letters for that Purpoſe. Thoſe Letters are now offer'd to be read, and I think they ought to be read.

Mr. Juſt. Tracy. I am of the ſame Opinion; I think they have ſufficiently ſet out the Nature of the Overt-Act, writing Letters, praying Aid of Foreigners to aſſiſt in a Rebellion. Some of thoſe Letters are ſent by the Priſoner beyond Sea, and they can't be ſet out; and whatever is alledg'd as certainly as the Nature of the Thing will bear, is certain enough.

But it is objected, you have the Copy-Book, and you might ſet them out by that. But they don't go on that only, but alſo on ſeveral Letters wrote to and received by the Priſoner; and to ſet forth all thoſe Letters in an Indictment, is againſt Reaſon. But this is not the Matter now, for Mr. Ward's Objection was againſt reading the Letters, which were offer'd to prove the writing and ſending the Letters as charg'd in the Indictment; but inſtead of ſhewing they are not Evidence, you have run into Exceptions againſt the Indictment itſelf; for Uncertainty in not ſetting out the Letters particularly, which is not the Queſtion now.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. I am of the ſame Opinion; many Things have been ſaid of the great Care of the Laws to preſerve the Life of the Subject. I hope we ſhall always take a due Care to put thoſe Laws in Execution; but we muſt take Care of that precious Life, as Mr. Hungerford calls it, not to hazard it, by making it too difficult to convict any Man of ſuch a Correſpondence. And if we ſhould make ſuch a Conſtruction of the Act, as they contend for, it would be impracticable to convict any Man in any Caſe.

The Act ſays, the Overt-Act ſhall be expreſs'd, and is it not ſo here? It is writing Letters, and with an Intent to levy War againſt the King; ſo that it is mentioned that there were Letters, and the Purport of thoſe Letters is ſet forth. And whatever has been ſaid of that Caſe that was in the Houſe of Lords, none of you can ſay, but that it is ſufficient in Informations for Libels, if they are ſet forth in Latin, to ſet out the Subſtance of the Words. If a Man ſets it out Verbatim, he is tied up to the very Words, and by a Letter or Syllable miſtaken, he may be gone: Therefore the beſt way is to ſet out the Subſtance only. Now what would you be the better, if you had what you ask, if there are ſeveral Letters to the ſame purpoſe? It would only be ſetting out the ſame thing over and over again. This ſatisfies the Meaning of the Act as fully as if they had been ſet out at large. But to ſay that a Man ſhall be bound to ſet out the Letter itſelf, when it is gone from him, when it is gone beyond Seas, how can he come at it? If that were to be the Caſe, a Man might carry on a Correſpondence, and you could never convict him.

I think this is ſufficient to anſwer the Intent of the Act. They offer you Letters that correſpond with the Indictment, and if they offer any that do not, they will not be proper to be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will read our Letters as they are in Time and ſhew the Nature of the Correſpondence.

Mr. Ward. I am inform'd there are different Hands in that Book: Now whether your Lordſhip will admit them to read it under a general Proof of his owning it to be his Copy-Book, or whether you will not expect that that which is his Writing ſhould be prov'd, and what is wrote by any other, to be wrote by his Direction, or Privity; for a ſmall Variance in the Expreſſion may turn a Man out of his Life.

Mr. Hungerford. All that the Witneſſes ſaid was, that the Priſoner ſaid it was his Copy-Book. Now whether he is to be affected by every Word in that Volume, is what we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip; and whether they ought not to ſingle out which were wrote by him, and which not; for his ſaying that is his Book, that is, the Volume is his, the Cover is his, and the Paper is his, but it will not imply that he is the Author of all thoſe Letters.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lord, when they objected to our reading the Copy-Book, they ought to have made all their Objections together; but this being being in the Caſe of Life, I won't ſtand upon that.

It is plain, it ought to be read; for you obſerve the Letters, of which theſe are Copies, are ſuppos'd to be ſent to France; and it is impoſſible to have them; then what Certainties have we touching theſe Letters? We have the taking the Book in the Cuſtody of the Priſoner, and if there had been no more than its being found in his Cuſtody, I apprehend we might have been let in to read 'em. But it goes a great way farther; for ſeveral of the Witneſſes ſwear that he own'd it was his Copy-Book of his Letters.

Let's conſider how this Evidence would have been, if it had been given to every Letter in particular. If we had produced one ſingle Copy of a Letter, and he own'd that was a Copy of a Letter wrote by him, will any one doubt but that it might be read? No, the Evidence ſay that he own'd this to be the Copy-Book of his Letters.

Mr. Juſt. Tracy. Where the Court is in no doubt, we muſt not ſpend our Time in arguing Points that have nothing in them.

L. C. Baron. It is no matter whether any of them are of his Hand-writing or not, I think they may be read.

Then the Original Letters and the Tranſlations were ſhewn to Mr. Boyer, and to Mr. Ozell, who prov'd them to be true Tranſlations.

[Clerk reads.] This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated Paris Feb. 26. 1715.

Sir J. Jekyll. This is dated at Paris, Feb. 1715. but that is in our Stile 1714.

SIR,

THE baſe Dealing of the Sieurs Treacher and Robinſon with me, made me always believe that you would not otherwiſe bring them to Reaſon, than by preſſing them without Mercy. Since you have taken the Trouble to begin, be pleaſed to continue to the laſt the ſame Attention to my Concerns which you have had hitherto, and never conſent to any Accommodation till they have remitted not only my Diſburſements, as you tell me by your laſt of the 18th Inſtant, but alſo the whole of what may come to my Share, either in Money or Wine, ſuppoſing there remains any unſold, which I cannot believe. As for the fourth Share I have in the fifty odd Hampers, which I bought for them of my Friend, the Count de Sillery, if, in order to enter upon an Accommodation, you ſhould content yourſelf with their conſigning into the Hands of Mr. Harvey the 2500 and odd Livres diſburs'd, be perſuaded, Sir, that to get the Remainder, you'll find yourſelf under the Neceſſity to begin anew, to give yourſelf the ſame Trouble which you have taken hitherto. Therefore while you hold them, I beg the Favour of you to make an End of the Matter with them at once, and in order thereto, not to give them any Quarter. They have render'd themſelves unworthy of it upon all Accounts. If in this Matter you think the Intereſt of the Chevalier (Sir Thomas) Hanmer, Speaker of the laſt Parliament, may be uſeful to you; he does me the Honour to be one of my Friends: Viſit him from me; and I flatter myſelf he will readily grant you his Aſſiſtance, when you have inform'd him how the Caſe ſtands, and of the unfair Dealing of thoſe Merchants towards me. I am ſo ſenſible of Mr. Harvey's Favours, that I would do any thing to ſhew him my Gratitude. Acquaint me therefore with the true State of his Affair with the [a] D. D. and write to me about it in ſuch a manner that your Letter may warrant my ſpeaking; after which I ſhall do my beſt to procure him the Satisfaction he deſires; be pleaſed to aſſure him of it from me. I hope that e're it be long you will acquaint me with the Concluſion of my Affair; in the mean time, I ſtill aſſure you that 'tis not poſſible for any one to be more perfectly than myſelf, Sir, your moſt humble and obedient Servant,

D'Aulmay.

Sir J. Jekyll. We read this only for the ſake of the Poſtſcript, which we will read preſently.

Priſoner. This is not a true Tranſlation.

L. C. Baron. What is your Objection to the Tranſlation?

Priſoner. There is not one Word true in it.

L. C. Baron. Who do you depend on to tranſlate it for you?

Priſoner. Upon Mr. Flint.

L. C. Baron. Tell us your Objection to the Tranſlation; tell us in any one material Part wherein the Tranſlation don't agree with the Original.

Mr. Flint. One can't carry it in one's Head.

Priſoner. I hope you will not take it for a true Tranſlation when it is falſe.

L. C. Baron. We ſhall if you don't ſhew wherein it is falſe.

Sir J. Jekyll. We will read the Poſtſcript, let them ſhew any Miſtake in that.

[Clerk reads.]

As I have Reaſons of private Concern to know what paſſes in the Country you live in, you will ſenſibly oblige me in informing me of it now and then. Be perſuaded of my Diſcretion, and that the State is no ways concern'd in my Curioſity; nothing raiſes it but the Concerns of my Wife and her Family, who is Iriſh.

Priſoner. That is wrong tranſlated.

L. C. Baron. How do you tranſlate it?

Flint. You will oblige me ſenſibly to inform me of the ſame. Be perſuaded of my Diſcretion, and that the State has nothing in my Curioſity: The Intereſt of my Wife, who is Iriſh excites me.

Sir J. Jekyll. That is to the ſame Effect as we read it. We will now read a Letter from the Priſoner to D'Aulmay, out of his Copy-Book.

[Clerk reads.]

London, March $\frac{1}{1}\frac{3}{4}$, 1714.

I Received the Honour of yours of the 26th paſt. I ſhall no ways ſpare the Sieur Treacher, but proſecute him to a final Judgment, which cannot be 'till July. He makes an Apothecary's Bill, ſets down the Wines that are ſold, for the moſt part, at half a Crown per Bottle, but I ſhall prove him the contrary. I am very ſorry this Buſineſs ſhould go ſo far, but it is according to the Laws of this Country, where we have no need of Sollicitations; without which he will, within that Time, be certainly adjudged to pay. You muſt in the mean time tranſmit hither the Original Paper you have of your Partnerſhip in the Wine; and without flattering you, a Letter of Attorney; for a Letter of Order will not be ſufficient. You may leave a Blank for the Name of your Attorney, which Mr. Harvey ſhall cauſe to be fill'd up as he ſhall think fit: But if you come to this Town before the Trial, as you told me, you may avoid all this. I ſhall take the Care I have promiſed you without any queſtion. As for the Buſineſs of Mr. Harvey, with the [a] D. D. the Matter is, that he has diſburs'd about 200*l.* Sterling: And that altho' the [b] D. D. had ſent to pay him what he had advanced, it happens that the Perſon whom he intruſted with it did not do it: Therefore, if there were Means to give the ſaid [c] D. D. to underſtand, without hinting that it comes from hence, that 'tis not juſt Mr. Harvey ſhould be ſo long out of Pocket, that would undoubtedly have the deſired Effect; for which I would, in particular, be very much obliged to you, &c. As for News from this Country, I learn ſometimes more in the Paris Gazette than here, where the greateſt Part of the Houſe murmurs to ſee the Low-Church flouriſh. The latter are very eager for a War, but they want the Emperor and Money. 'Tis ſtrongly reported, that a Match is very forward between the Prince who is at Lorrain, and one of the Arch-Dutcheſſes: Let me know what's in it, ſince that's eſſential to your Wife's Intereſt. If, as I doubt not, an Ambaſſador comes hither, I deſire you to ſend me, by one of his Domeſticks, 20 Ells of fine Ras—de—St. Maur, very black, and at the cheapeſt Rate, and order the Bearer to receive the Account, or acquaint me with it, that I may remit it to you. Forgive, I beſeech you, this Trouble, and believe me with a great deal of Devotion.

Priſoner. He that commits a Fault in any eſſential Matter, may do ſo in the reſt. They have opened all my Letters at the Poſt, and they have made this Book for me; there is not one Word of my writing.

SIR, Paris, March. 20. 1715.

I Received yeſterday the Honour of your Letter, dated the 14th Inſtant; I confeſs to you that it is a very melancholy thing for me to be obliged to give you ſo much Importunity upon the account of a Knave, from what you wrote to me in your former. I hoped a ſpeedier Concluſion of my Affair. Notwithſtanding which, you tell me we muſt ſtill wait till the Month of July. This is a very long Delay: But if there be an abſolute Neceſſity for it, we muſt e'en ſubmit. Be that as it will, I beg the Favour of you, Sir, not to give any Quarter to ſuch People who deſerve none, for their Diſhoneſty which they ſhew in its full Latitude. As for the Papers I have, I ſhall ſend you ſuch as will be neceſſary for you, as ſoon as you ſhall write to me for them. But as for a Letter of Attorney, I have ſigned a general and very extenſive one, on the 7th of Auguſt laſt, which is as particular and as ſtrong as poſſible; there is a blank for the Name, and it was ſent to Mr. Arthur at London, by Mr. the Chev. Cantillon of Paris. The ſaid Mr. Arthur having made no uſe of it, you may get it out of his Hands and uſe it in your Name, or in the Name of ſuch a Perſon which you and Mr. Harvey ſhall think fit to pitch upon. I believe it may be ſufficient, and that the ſaid Mr. Arthur will make no difficulty to deliver it to you when you ſhew him this Letter. However, I would cauſe Mr. Cantillon to write to him if it were neceſſary.

You may aſſure Mr. Harvey, that I ſhall do my utmoſt to procure him Satisfaction in the Matter you write to me about, without expoſing him to any Inconveniencies. I have followed the Court too long to be ignorant how to deal with our Grandees.

Flint. It is how to deal with our Lords.

Clerk reads.] I ſhall endeavour to know preciſely the time of the Departure of the Marquis d'Allegre, who is to go Ambaſſador to London; and I ſhall charge ſome Body in his Retinue with the 20 Ells of black Ras de St. Maur, which you aſk of me; if there be any thing elſe for your turn, let me know it. As you tell me you learn the News of England in the Paris Gazette; ſo I [d] you that I learn from you the Marriage of the Chevalier de St. George with the Arch-Dutcheſs.

Priſoner. Is it Chevalier de St. George there? It is not ſo in the Original.

Cl. of Arr. It is Ch—— de St. G——.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is Chevalier de St. George.

Mr. Ward. That is no part of the Key that was given by the Priſoner.

Sir J. Jekyll. Read it as it is.

Mr. Hungerford. Let it be read then without a Comment.

Mr. Ward. I wiſh the Jury take ſufficient Notice, that ſome of theſe Letters are not wrote by the Priſoner, but only directed to him.

Cl. reads.] I learn from you the Marriage of the Ch—— de St. G—— with the Arch-Dutcheſs. 'Tis true, there was ſome talk of it when the Peace was made with the Emperor, but ſince that Time no mention has been made of it. That in my Opinion would be no proper way to bring his Affairs to a happy Iſſue. A Party War would beſt ſuit with his Affairs. God is above all; but I hope ſtill, neither do I believe my Hopes altogether ill grounded. I ſhall be glad in the mean time to ſee what Turn Affairs will take before I croſs the Sea. Wherefore I ſtill deſire you to inform me. I aſſure you, Sir, that I am more than any Body elſe in the World,

Your moſt humble and

Sir J. Jekyll. The former Letter from Francia deſires to know what there is in the report of the Marriage of the Prince at Lorrain, with the Arch-Dutcheſs. and that I ſhall get you [b] between this and July, or he ſhall fly his Country. Here is a Letter for Mr. le [c] D. D. which, 'tis wiſh'd, may ſucceed better than the former, which have not been anſwered, though intirely for the Affairs: Beſides which, I muſt needs tell you by the Bye, that Perſons of 50 or 60 Thouſand Crowns a Year cannot with Prudence run the hazard of loſing ſuch Eſtates, unleſs more Encouragement be given them. You will be perfectly underſtood if you ſay this to ſome Perſon familiar with that Lord, or to himſelf: And I add from my ſelf, that the Misfortunes of a certain Perſon are more owing to Neglect on your ſide of the Water, than to the Party that's againſt him. So if this continues, your Wife muſt loſe all hopes.

Priſoner. If this had not been tranſlated wrong on purpoſe, and with deſign to take away my Life, there could not have been ſuch a Miſtake made. There is a ſcratch at the bottom of the S to make it an L. It was Ses Affaires, His Affairs, and it is made, Les Affaires, The Affairs.

Whereupon the Original was ſhewn to the Interpreter, and viewed by the Court, and appear'd to be a very plain L, and not alter'd from an S.

SIR, Paris, April 2. 1715.

I Have deliver'd to M. le [d] D. D. the laſt Letter you directed to me for him; and when I inſinuated that there was in it a Complaint for not having receiv'd an Anſwer to the former, I was particularly aſſured, that an Anſwer had been written, and even in relation to what is due to Mr. [e] H. That the ſame expreſs'd a Sorrow for not having clear'd with him ſooner; that ſome Miſunderſtandings had been the Occaſion of it: But that however he was deſired to mention the exact Amount of his Diſburſements, as well for the private Account, as for that of Count de Thoulouſe, and that the whole would be immediately put into the Hands of the Chevalier Cantillon, to be paid in London to Mr. [f] H. This, Sir, is what I was told Yeſterday, and which I deſire you to repeat to Mr. [g] H. aſſuring him, that if he thinks me proper to ſerve him in ſomething elſe, he will do me a real Pleaſure in employing me.

The Marquis d'Allegre does not ſeem yet very forward to ſet out for London; therefore if you are in haſte for the black Ras de St. Maur, which you have wrote to me for, let me know which way you deſire I ſhould ſend it to you, and I ſhall do it immediately; you may depend upon it.

I ſhall add nothing to the laſt Letter I writ to you concerning the Rogues our Merchants; but I ſhall continue ſtill to deſire you to rid me of that Affair as ſoon as you can.

We have nothing new here; the Works of the Canal of Mardyke are, by Orders from Court, redoubled. I know not what Succeſs Mr. Cadogan's Journey to Vienna has had; but we ſeem not to be very much uneaſy at it: I have ſpoken, as you deſired me, to the Perſon for whom you ſent that Letter which you directed to me, and who has made me the faireſt Promiſes in the World; pray acquaint me with what paſſes in relation to Mr. Prior, ſince his return to London; and believe me ſtill moſt perfectly,

SIR,

Your moſt humble,
and moſt obliged Servant,
D'AULMAY.

Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.

London, March $\frac{1}{2}$. 1715.

I Receiv'd the Honour of yours of the 20th Inſtant: I can aſſure you had the King himſelf to do with the Sieur Treacher, it would not be in his Power to get him adjudged to pay before the Month of July, and even in caſe the ſaid (Treacher) do not appeal to the Chancery, which 'tis not probable he will do, becauſe in ſuch a Caſe a Merchant entirely loſes his Credit, and beſides he ſhould be obliged to depoſit 300 Pounds, for which I formerly arreſted him, which would not at all ſuit with him: Therefore, Sir, be aſſured that I ſhall do all that can be done, notwithſtanding all his Threats againſt me, for having been, ſays he, ſo bold as to ſue him. I am only ſorry, not to have begun ſooner, and to have ſhewn him any Civility. Mr. Harvey and I ſhall be very much obliged to you, if you can find an opportunity to have Juſtice done him. I am perſuaded, that to deal with him in this manner is no good Policy, and if ever I have the Honour to confer with you, I ſhall convince you, how by neglects (which however are not uſual with Men of your Nation) moſt ſerious Affairs have miſerably miſcarried. As for News, we hear nothing but an approaching War. 'Tis even pretended that the Emperor is coming again into our Meaſures, but I do not believe it: Nor do I ſee any poſſibility of raiſing Funds for a new War, at a time when People are at their Wits ends to pay the bare Intereſts of the Debts contracted in the laſt. I am very much obliged to you for your intention to ſend me 20 Ells of Cloth of St. Maur, by the opportunity of the Marquis d'Allegre, or otherwiſe by any other that may offer: I likewiſe offer you whatever there is in this Country, and if it were a thing of ſmall bulk, we have often opportunities of Friends who go over into France. Our Parliament will begin their Seſſion very ſoon, they meet this Day to chooſe a Speaker: We are going to ſee what will be the upſhot of all the Threats. I kiſs your Hands, and am——

You may deſire Mr. Cantillon to write to Mr. Arthur, to deliver to Mr. George Francia the Letter of Attorney he has in his Cuſtody; for I have reaſons not to demand it my ſelf of the ſaid Arthur.

Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.

London, $\frac{\text{March 28th,}}{\text{April 8th,}}$ 1715.

I Have the Honour to tell you that yours of the 2d Inſtant is come to my hands, and that I have given [a] Mr. H. an account of the Subject Matter of your Negotiation. He is, as well as my ſelf, the more obliged to you for it, in that we believe we ſtill have occaſion for the Continuation of your good Offices with the [b] D. D. What you ſay at the end of your Letter, of your having ſpoken conformably to what I had deſired of you, is ſufficient, and therefore every thing ought now to be expected from your ſide of the Water, that is to ſay Explanations, &c. I was adviſed in order to prevent the Sieur Treacher's removing the Law-Suit to Chancery himſelf, in which Caſe he would become Plaintiff, to call him before that Court, that he may anſwer the Interrogatives I ſhall put to him; which I have done, and he muſt anſwer the ſame within a Month at fartheſt, and I ſhall purſue him cloſe: 'Tis the moſt able Lawyer in this Countrey, who does me the Favour to give me this Advice, which will hinder him from Appealing, in caſe he ſhould have a mind to it, which might have kept you in Play ſeveral Years.

We ſee by the King's Speech to his Parliament, that there are yet no Alliances made; and by the Addreſſes of the Lords and Commons, we perceive plainly that they have an itching towards a War; but at the ſame time they give to underſtand, that they know not which way to go about it: And beſides the Party of the Pacifick is far more numerous than the others, altho' the others have at preſent the majority of Votes in the Parliament; of which three Parts in four of the Houſe are highly incenſed, and yet more to ſee they pretend to impeach certain Perſons of the laſt Miniſtry, which will infallibly make a great Noiſe: And if the Whigs would follow my Advice, and I were willing to give them a good one, they ſhould lie ſtill. Mr. Prior is one of theſe pretended Victims; his Papers are looked over with malicious Eagerneſs; he is taxed with having received great Preſents in France; particularly a great ſett of Silver-gilt Plate; I believe that if it be ſo, he is ſo much the richer for it. This is all that occurs at preſent, and that I am without reſerve.

Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.

London, April $\frac{7}{17}$ 1715.

I Am ordered to tell you from Mr. Harvey, that you will oblige him in deſiring Mr. Le [a] D. D. from him, to ſend hither ſome Body to fetch the Horſes and Dogs which he has had ſo long, or elſe to give order to ſome Body to take them. Things are here in ſuch a poſture, that great Caution ought to be uſed, not to give Umbrage to thoſe in Power, who may put a wrong Conſtruction upon the leaſt Trifles, eſpecially ſince the departure of my Lord Bolingbroke, who is looked upon here as innocent, and People do not ſee how he could be any ways hurt, notwithſtanding the Superiority of the Low Party in Parliament, which however is divided into two, who terribly croſs each other, one of which Parties will at laſt join with the Tories, if the latter are willing: We may draw Conſequences: The Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, who is at preſent here, gives a great deal of Offence, as I am inform'd, by pretending to prove that the late King James had poiſon'd his Brother Charles; it was not expected, that after ſo many Years Retirement into France, ſhe ſhould come hither to revive that vulgar Report, which at ſo critical a Time cannot be for any good Purpoſe.

I have nothing to add to the Affair of your Merchants, but what I have already acquainted you with. On the other hand, I confirm to you all that I have recommended to you to tell the Perſon I wrote to laſt. Kiſſing your Hands, I remain ——

We expect here ſhortly the Marquis d'Allegre, for our Ambaſſador at your Court has Orders to take a Character upon him. I hope you will find means to charge ſome Body in the Retinue of the former with the 20 Ells of Ras de St. Maur, and 20 Ells of Taffety, with blue and white Stripes, for a Woman's Summer Suit; leſs than 20 Ells would do, if it be broader than half Ell, and if it be poſſible, to ſend at the ſame time a Scarf made of a good black Silk pinked, for a Woman of a moderate Size, and ſlender, you will oblige me, and when you ſhall acquaint me with the Price of the whole, I ſhall either pay it to the Perſon who ſhall be charged with it, or ſhall remit it at your choice, &c. As for the Scarves, they are ſold ready made at the Palace ——

Since what's above written, the Honour of yours of the 12th Inſtant is come to my Hands. I ſhall cauſe your Letter of Attorney to be got out of Mr. Arthur's Hands. There are at preſent great Debates in the Parliament: There was a Member of the High Party, who had the boldneſs to ſuggeſt, that this preſent Parliament was illegally aſſembled, ſince the King in his Proclamation gave the People to underſtand, that it would be a great Satisfaction to him if they choſe Whigs, which he ſaid is againſt the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; whereupon there aroſe high Debates, and by the Majority of Votes, to the great Surprize of the Publick, who expected that that Member ſhould be ſent to the Tower, it was carried by a hundred Voices, that the ſaid Proclamation ſhould be examined; which 'tis thought will cauſe great Diviſions. When I have any thing particular to impart, I ſhall do it by a ſtrange Hand, and ſubſcribe James Chrêtien, which you muſt take notice of, and provided you acquaint me that you have received this preſent Letter, without being opened, I ſhall be eaſy.

Directed to Francis Francia, and dated

SIR, Paris, April 24. 1715.

I Have received your two Letters of the 8th and 18th Inſtant. I am very much obliged to you for having removed to the Chancery the Law-Suit I have with Treacher, ſince you think it the moſt expeditious way to make an end of it: I ſtill beg of you the continuation of your Care, in order to compaſs the ſame; as alſo to acquaint me how that Affair ſtands at preſent. I reckon that Mr. Arthur has by this time delivered to you my general Letter of Attorney, according to the Order he has for it from the Chevalier Cantillon, of which you will alſo be pleas'd to inform me.

The Time of the Marquis d'Allegre's departure for London is not yet known here. I ſhall not then fail to deſire ſome Body in his Retinue to charge himſelf with the Ras de St. Maur, Luteſtring and Scarf which you have deſired of me.

Your laſt was delivered to me very ſafe yeſterday in the Evening: Be eaſy as to that Matter, as well as to whatever Mr. James Chrêtien may write to me; pray deſire him when he does me the pleaſure to write to me, to be very particular as to Facts, and to be well informed before hand: In all which I rely on your Prudence. If during theſe troubleſome Times Mr. [b] H. ſhould think fit to make uſe of Mr. J. Chrêtien, he may: But his Letters ſhould be directed to my ſelf, and I ſhould afterwards make what uſe of them he ſhould think fit. Aſſure him ſtill of my readineſs to ſerve him, and that I ſhould be very glad to give him Marks of my Gratitude, for the Trouble he takes, as well as your ſelf, in my Affair with Treacher.

[a] Duke D'Aumont.

[b] Mr. Harvey.

When the Character of the Dutcheſs, who is lately gone to London, ſhall be well known, People will not be ſurpriz'd at the Part ſhe actually plays there; but I hope it will produce a different Effect from what ſhe expects, and that we ſhall come at laſt to a happy Unravelling.

[a] Mr. le D. D. was to ſend about a Fortnight ago one of his Men to London, to bring him his Horſes and Dogs. If he is not yet gone, I ſhall not fail preſſing for that Matter.

Pray let us hear from you as often as poſſible, and ſtill believe me moſt perfectly,

SIR,

Your moſt humble,

and moſt obedient Servant,

D'AULMAY.

My Lord Stairs has not yet taken any Character.

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

SIR, Paris, May 1. 1715.

I Have received yours of the 25th paſt, with that of Mr. [b] H. for the [c] D. D. which I have ſent to him into the Country, where he is at preſent. At his return, I ſhall not fail telling him what you tell me about what is due to the ſaid Mr. [d] H——, and in what manner he deſires the ſame to be remitted to him. Aſſure him that in this, and every thing elſe, I ſhall ever do my utmoſt to do him Service.

By your Letter of the 8th of April laſt, you acquainted me with the Care you had taken to remove to the Chancery my Law-ſuit with Treacher, by which means he would be obliged to anſwer within a Month, and therefore I hope that in a ſhort Time you will acquaint me with the Concluſion of that Affair, for which I ſhall be very much obliged to you: I little know how Juſtice is adminiſter'd in ſuch a Caſe in England: But this I know, that in France, that honeſt Fellow would long before now have been brought to Reaſon; however, we muſt wait with Patience to the End.

Pray aſſure Mr. J. Ch. that I am, and ſhall be very much obliged to him for what he ſhall write to me: He may likewiſe depend upon it, that I ſhall make good uſe of it; therefore let him continue to let me hear from him the oftenеſt he can; but above all let his News be certain, and very particular.

There's yet no Talk here of the Earl of Stairs being near taking his Character. I muſt alſo add, that 'tis not yet known, when the Marquiſs d'Allegre will ſet out, but what's believed as certain is, that they will out of hand work upon the Fortification of Mardyke: Draw your Conjectures upon it.

I am very impatient to know what paſſes relating to the Proſecution of the late Miniſtry, particularly concerning the Duke of Ormond, whoſe Name my Wife bears, and is his near Relation, her Name is Butler of Kilcom: That Family may not be unknown to Mr. [e] H—— however the Ch. (Sir Thomas) Hanmer knows it perfectly well.

We have at preſent no important News in this Country, unleſs it be conſiderable Bankrupcies among thoſe called Agioteurs (or Stock-Jobbers) of which there are daily a great Number, and ſuch a Scarcity of Money, as paſſes all that can be expreſſed. I am ſtill,

Your moſt humble,

And moſt obedient Servant.

Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.

London, $\frac{\text{May 30th,}}{\text{June 10th,}}$ 1715.

MY laſt to you was of the Inſtant; this is to tell you, that without loſs of Time you muſt ſend another Letter of Attorney, with a Blank for the Name; for Mr. Arthur, after having kept us long at a Bay, ſaying he would look for it, now ſays it is loſt: Be that as it will, you muſt revoke that Letter of Attorney, for we are here in Danger, if Treacher ſhould bethink himſelf of asking by what Authority he is Proſecuted, leſt, not being able to produce any Letter of Attorney, this Suit ſhould be diſmiſs'd with Coſt; you therefore ſee the Conſequence: As for the reſt, the Affair is on a good Foot, and I believe he'll not ſtay till he's caſt. Yeſterday in the Evening, being the Anniverſary of the Reſtauration of King Charles II. there were here great Riots; nothing was heard among the People but Curſes againſt the preſent Miniſtry, and long live James the Third, and the Duke of Ormond. This being ſo publick, that it cannot fail reaching your Parts, I acquaint you with it, and aſſure you that I am, &c.

Mr. Harvey ſalutes you, and bid me tell you, that when there is any thing New, if he cannot write to you himſelf, he will cauſe the Sieur J. C. to do it for him.

This is directed to Francia, and dated,

SIR, Paris, Auguſt 7. 1715.

AT this very Inſtant I receive your laſt of the firſt Inſtant. I will not ceaſe returning you Thanks for the Care you are willing to take of my Affair, deſiring you ſtill to continue to the End.

You have Reaſon to be angry at the Indolence (or Supineneſs) you expoſtulate about, but be perſuaded 'tis only ſo in Appearance. I even hope that by this Time you have convincing Proofs of it, and that ſuitable Returns are made to the good Diſpoſitions; ſo that with God's Bleſſing upon our Friend's good Cauſe, he will at laſt caſt his Adverſary, at leaſt no Succours, or powerful Sollicitations ſhall be wanting. Let me hear, I beſeech you, about it as often as you can; and depend upon it, that by ſo doing you will oblige Perſons, who in a proper Time and Place will be thankful to you for it. The Poſt (going off) preſſes me, therefore I conclude, assuring you still, that no Man can be more truly than I am,

SIR,

Your most humble,

And most obedient Servant,

D'AULMAY.

Prisoner. That is wrong translated. In the French it is Gagner sa Cause, which is gain his Suit; and they have translated it, cast his Adversary.

Mr. Cowper. He talks of powerful Sollicitations on our Side, that is in France; and what could that be to a Law-Suit here?

[Clerk reads.]

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

SIR, Paris, August 10. 1715.

LAST Night I receiv'd your last of the fifth Instant; pray be easy, and e're it be long you'll be satisfied.

The Chief of the Name of our Friend the Abbot, arrived here on Tuesday Night in good Health. He is very well pleased, and has Reason to be so. He prepares to return Home with all speed, and will carry thither his Friends to spend the Vacation Time. This very Moment I'm going to wait upon him; I reckon to attend him in his Journey, or to be with him soon after his Departure. Pray continue informing me the oftenest you can, of your Health, and of that of our Friends: You know how dear they are to me, and what Concern I have in them; therefore do not deny me that Favour, nor that of believing me perfectly as I am,

SIR,

Your most humble,

And most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Mr. Cowper. Tho' this Letter is sign'd Payen, yet it comes from D'Aulmay; he says the Chief of the Family is arrived here; that is, the Duke of Ormond. And that he was to return from thence, and keep his Vacation in England. Hitherto the Correspondence was with the Duke D'Aumont, but from this Time it is with the Duke of Ormond.

[Clerk reads.]

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

SIR, Paris, August 21. 1715.

THIS is in Answer to your two Letters of the 12th and 15th Instant. I should have sooner answered the first, had it not been deliver'd to me after the Departure of the last Post. Our Friend's Law-Suit will shortly, God willing, be ready for Trial, every Thing is preparing for it. The Friend, my Wife's Relation, has read your two Letters, with which he is very well satisfied. He desires you, as well as myself, to let us hear from you as often as you can. Since his Arrival he has had two Fits of a tertian Ague, of which the Bark has rid him. He was purged Yesterday Morning, and in the Afternoon went to take the Air, so that he is now in perfect Health, and in a Condition to attend his Affairs with full Liberty. I have not heard from Mr. [a] H. and I do not believe he has changed his Habitation; at least it is not come to my Knowledge. The King has been indisposed for some Days past, but without Appearance of any ill Consequence. Thanks be to God, who will preserve him to us a long Time in his Mercy.

Half a dozen Souls of Lower Normandy, and as many of Mans, must needs possess the Body of Treacher, and inspire him with all the Chicanes he plays me. I shall write to him by the next Post, in the Stile you advise me, and agreeably to my own Thoughts; for I swear to you, there's nothing I shall leave undone to get my Right of so great a Knave; I hope you will second me, and that you'll give him no Quarter. Pray acquaint me with what you have done upon this last Incident.

Sir, I salute you, and am perfectly,

Your most humble,

And most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Mr. Cowper. This explains that there was another Cause depending, besides that of the Law-Suit: For he says, our Friend's Cause will soon be ready to be tried, all Preparations are making for it. Now there was no Cause depending in France, for this is a French Letter from D'Aulmay, and it is not pretended that there was any Law-Suit depending on that Side the Water.

[Clerk reads.]

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

August 24, 1715.

I Am very much surprized not to have heard from you by the Post that came in Yesterday. Our Friend was at my House expecting the same. We desire you both, Sir, not to let one Post go off without writing to us, and acquainting us with what passes with Relation to our common Friend's Law-Suit. When you see Mr. [b] H. assure him that all our Friends are perfectly well. The King's Health grows better and better, Heaven be praised.

I have had so much Business for some Days past, that I could not write to Treacher: I would do it speedily, but I still desire you not to give him any Quarter, and to believe me perfectly,

SIR,

Your most humble,

And most obedient Servant.

PAYEN.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This shews a Distinction between the Cause of their Common Friend, and the Cause of Treacher.

than to me you appear to be, and charge us with leſs Negligence than you do. I know there are favourable Moments, which 'tis dangerous to let ſlip; but then will you not agree with me that 'tis Matter of Prudence to foreſee all Inconveniencies, and in order to that to take ſuch right Meaſures as to be able to ſurmount them all? This is now doing, be perſuaded of it, and that your Friends are more zealous than ever to procure you all the Satisfaction you may deſire, therefore be eaſy ſome time longer. You did me the Pleaſure to acquaint me, that on the 29th paſt, Treacher was adjudged to deliver to us his Account within a Fortnight, that he had ſince made a new Chicane, demanding Security for his Charges, and with the Meaſures you were pleas'd to take upon this Demand. I therefore believed that after this we might hope to ſee an End of this Affair, and that nothing now remain'd but to perform the Judgment or Rule of the 29th of July, nevertheleſs we are ſtill put off to the Month of October. Pray acquaint me with the Cauſe of it.

We are here in a cruel Uncertainty about an Affair of the laſt Importance, God grant it may have a happy Iſſue. Pray continue writing to me every Poſt, and believe that I am ever with all my Heart, Sir, your moſt humble and moſt obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Mr. Denton. This appears to be a Letter in Anſwer to Francia's, wherein he complains that Things are not carried on with Vigour; I know, ſays he, there are favourable Moments that are not to be let ſlip; and then at laſt he concludes with the private Affair of Treacher.

[Clerk reads.]

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

SIR, September 3. 1715.

I Received this very Inſtant your laſt of the 29th paſt, and as the Poſt is going off, I have only Time to write an Anſwer. I did not write to you by the laſt Poſt, neither did I receive any of your Letters. I am extream ſorry for all the Trouble I give you with reſpect to the Law-Suit I have with that Rogue, I ſhall ſtill hope that thro' your Care we ſhall both be ſhortly rid of him.

We have at laſt had the Misfortune to loſe the greateſt of Kings, who, as undoubtedly you know it already, died on Sunday laſt at a Quarter paſt Eight in the Morning, with all the Sentiments of Religion and Greatneſs that were ever obſerv'd in the greateſt Heroes; and indeed 'tis generally acknowledged, that he never was greater than in the laſt Moments of his Life. Monday Morning my Lord Duke of Orleans, accompanied by the Princes of the Blood, and the Dukes and Peers, repair'd to the Parliament, where he was declared Regent of the Kingdom with all the Authority due to that Dignity and his illuſtrious Birth. All France is over-joy'd to be under his Government, from which they can certainly expect nothing but happy Days, ſince no Perſon in the World has more Grandeur, Equity, Penetration, and Virtues in general, than that Prince. The Journey to Germany would be proper enough, and I wiſh it may be performed, the rather becauſe for the Reaſons you know; our Meaſures have been ſomewhat ſuſpended, tho' not in the leaſt broke, Things going on ſtill better and better; be perſuaded of it, as alſo that due Notice is taken of your good Will. In particular [a] Mr. H—— muſt undoubtedly be where you were told, for he has not appear'd here. 'Tis true my [b] D. D. and [c] M. B. are in a Houſe within a ſmall half League of this City, which a private Perſon has lent them, but they receive there all their Friends, with whom they go to dine and ſup every Day; they are both in perfect Health, and their Thoughts are very different from thoſe that are aſcribed to them, I mean that they are ſuch as they ought to be; aſſure their Friends of it. It is not poſſible for me to ſend to you to Day what you deſire of me, 'twill be for the next Poſt. Let no one ſlip without acquainting me of your Health, for which you know I am more concern'd than any Body elſe, and be perſuaded that I am, more than any Man, Sir, your moſt humble and moſt obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Mr. Cowper junior. This Letter gives an Account of the Death of the French King, and tho' Things may be ſuſpended, ſtill they will go on, and it will be for the better.

Mr. Denton. The next Letter is not directed to any Body, it came under a Cover, which is loſt; it appears to come from D'Aulmay, but not to be directed.

L. C. Baron. Is this one of them that was found in his Houſe?

Mr. Denton. This is one of them found there, and owned by him.

SIR, September 6. 1715.

YOUR Letter of the ſecond Inſtant was juſt now deliver'd to me. My laſt inform'd you, that 'twas only on the firſt Inſtant we had the Misfortune to loſe the greateſt of Kings, but that for the Comfort of France, God had reſerv'd M. the Duke of Orleans for our Regent. I cannot write any thing that can be depended upon in relation to what you deſire of me by your two laſt, as ſoon as there is any thing I ſhall inform you of it. Since the Abbot B—— came into this Kingdom, he has been very often in the Country; he is ſtill actually there; as ſoon as he is return'd I ſhall not fail ſpeaking to him according to what you write; as I have no Intimacy with any Merchant, and he muſt be one that I can depend upon to make uſe of his Direction, I cannot give it you this Day, but I hope I may by the next Poſt; in the mean time pray continue writing directly to me, and if you have any truſty Hand, other than your own and your Sons, it would not be amiſs to make uſe of it; I even am of Opinion, that a Key or Cypher for the principal Names which you may ſend me, and of which you ſhould keep a Copy for your own Uſe, would be neceſſary, for I will ingenuouſly own to you that ſuch a Precaution appears to me very neceſſary. You'll find here enclos'd the Picture you have deſired of me; it being impoſſible to ſend it to you without folding, when you have received it you muſt wet a Cloth, which you'll lay on a Table, and will lay alſo the Print upon it, which will take the Plaits away. The Post (going off) presses me, and I have but just Time to tell you that I am your most humble, and most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Prisoner. My Lord, this Letter is another Hand, and there is no Direction on it.

L. C. Baron. It was found among your Papers, and you own'd it; that is prov'd by the Secretaries.

Prisoner. This was pretended to be stopp'd at the Post-Office.

L. C. Baron. No, it was found among your Letters.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The next Letter is very particular; he says the Cause of the Common Friend will be at an End in a little Time; but as to his own particular Cause, he was unhappy to have to do with so troublesome a Man.

I Did not write to you by the last Post, by reason I did not receive your last Letter, which by the by is without Date, till the Day after its Departure. Nor did I receive any from you by the Post that came in Yesterday, so that you owe me Answers to my two last, which I expect with Impatience, particularly an Answer to my last, by which I sent you what you had desir'd of me. The Contents of your last without Date have given me a great deal of Satisfaction, as well as to all our Friends, who return you Thanks for it, and have charged me to assure you of it, and desire you to continue. We knew already Part of what you write about our Friend's Cause, which with God's Blessing, will soon end to his Satisfaction, otherwise all Appearances would be very deceitful. As for my own Cause, I cannot forbear telling you, that I am very unfortunate in having to do with so dishonest a Man; after having trusted my Goods with him, and loaded his Partner with Services and Civilities during his Stay here. But my Comfort is, that you will not give him a Moment's Respite, and that you will at last rid me of his unworthy Chicanes. I could have wished the Abbot had not embark'd me with such People; although I am persuaded he did not do it with any ill Intention, yet I find myself embarrass'd with those Scoundrels, whom I trusted only at his Desire.

The King went the Day before Yesterday to the Parliament to hold his Bed of Justice, where the Regency was confirm'd to the Duke of Orleans, with all the Authority which such a Dignity deserves. We have nothing else new at present. If any thing happens I shall not fail acquainting you with it. I am most perfectly, Sir, your most humble, and most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

As we go at this time pretty often into the Country, be not uneasy if perchance I should fail some Post or other, answering your Letters regularly, which however will not be, except when I shall be absolutely obliged to it.

Here's a Direction which you may use for the future if you think fit. But in case you do, you must conform yourself to this Model, and mark two Strokes both before and after the Word Paris.

To Madam, Madam the Widow de Beaugé, Merchant, at the Fair Star, Rue Tirechape. =Paris=

Mr. Att. Gen. The Correspondence now began to be dangerous, and therefore it was to be directed to a Woman, that there might be the less suspicion.

YOUR last of the 9th Instant, which I should have had on Friday last, was not deliver'd to me till Sunday in the Evening. I ascribe this Delay only to the Winds, which may have hinder'd the Packet-Boat from having as quick a Passage as usual. I have caused the three Letters which you have directed to me, to be put into the Post-House.

My [a] D. D. had already shew'd me the Epitaph you have sent me, which with Gentlemen will ever pass for the Spring of Cerberus. I hope also that infamous Author will sooner or later be rewarded according to his Deserts. His Insolence may even be attended with some unexpected Consequences. We have, Thanks be to God, a just and equitable Regent, from whom we may hope every thing, he has already given us Proof of it, by the good Order he has settled in all Affairs, which indeed had a great Occasion for it.

You must undoubtedly have received by this time the Picture you desired of me, and I hope you will acquaint me with it by the next I shall receive from you.

All our Friends are, thank God, in perfect Health, My [b] D. D. had some Days ago a slight Fit of an Ague, which had no Consequence. We are here, as well as you, impatient to attain the End propos'd. But we must take Patience, and be ruled by those who are at the Helm. I still assure you, Sir, that I am with Sincerity your most humble, and most obedient Servant.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We shall conclude the Letters with a very particular one from D'Aulmay, which taxes Francia with Impatience, and takes notice, that Mr. Harvey was eager for going into France, but it was the Duke of Ormond's particular Advice, that he should not go, because probably they might come over to him.

patience,

patience, especially [a] M. H. to whom you shall communicate this Letter as soon as you have receiv'd it, and tell him he must by no Means think of coming hither, as by your last you acquainted me he is preparing to do. 'Tis my [b] D. D. who charges me expresly with what I write to you, and who desires him to stay. He may easily guess at the Reason, which will give you all to understand, that this is not a time to be impatient, but to shew more Resolution than ever.

Perhaps some Letters for me will be delivered to you; as soon as you have received them, I desire you to forward them to me, either with the Directions I have sent you, or directly with my own.

You know perhaps by this time, that 'tis pretended that there are at Havre-de-Grace two Ships on Board of which are Arms, which has alarm'd some People, but without ground. For if that News be true, they must be Arms that are sent as a Present to the King of Persia, as I am told; therefore this ought not to make any Body uneasy. As for the rest, Sir, let all of us recommend our selves to God, and hope we shall soon be quiet, you at home after your wise Government, shall have dissipated all the Feuds that disturb the Tranquillity, and we by the paternal and indefatigable Care which my Lord Duke of Orleans takes upon him to procure us, the Repose which we have so great Occasion for, and of which we have so long been depriv'd.

You will judge of it by the List I send you of the Councils he has lately establish'd, and which are certainly made up of the most able, and most worthy Persons in the Kingdom. I expect to hear from you, and ever am, Sir, your most humble and most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Whereabouts are we with our honest Man? I hope you will acquaint me by your next.

Mr. Denton. My Lord, the time when the King was pleas'd to acquaint the Parliament with the Design of the Invasion, was the 20th of July.

We have a Copy of the Speech examined.

Then Mr. Paxton was sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you examined this, and is it a true Copy?

Mr. Paxton. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did you examine it?

Mr. Paxton. At the Parliament Office.

Mr. Hungerford. What did you examine it by?

Mr. Paxton. By the Journal of the House of Lords.

Clerk reads. Die Mercurii 20 Julii 1715.

His Majesty after conferring with the Lord Chancellor, spake as follows.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Have given Direction to my Lord Chancellor to declare to you in my Name and Words, a Matter I think of the greatest Importance.

Then the Lord Chancellor spake as follows;

I have received his Majesty's Commands, to deliver to you in his Majesty's Name this his Majesty's Speech now put into my Hands by his Majesty from the Throne.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THE Zeal you have shewn for preserving the Peace of my Kingdoms, and your Wisdom in providing so good a Law to prevent all riotous and tumultuous Proceedings, give me great Satisfaction, but I am sorry to find that such a Spirit of Rebellion has discover'd it self, as leaves no Room to doubt, but these Disorders are set on Foot and encourag'd by Persons disaffected to my Government, in Expectation of being supported from Abroad.

The Preservation of our Excellent Constitution, and the Security of our Holy Religion, has been, and always shall be my chief Care; and I cannot Question, but your Concern for these invaluable Blessings is so great, as not to let them be exposed to such Attempts as I have certain Advices are preparing by the Pretender from Abroad, and carrying on at Home by a restless Party in his Favour.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

In these Circumstances I think it proper to ask your Assistance, and make no doubt but you will so far consult your own Security, as not to leave the Nation under a Rebellion actually begun at Home, and threatned with an Invasion from Abroad in a defenceless Condition; and I shall look upon the Provision you shall make for the Safety of my People, as the best Mark of your Affection to me.

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lord, We shall not trouble the Court nor the Jury, with reading any more Letters; I only take leave to observe shortly upon the Letters which have been read. The Correspondence began with a Desire from D'Aulnay to have some Correspondence about Affairs here, because his Wife was related to the Duke of Ormond. Francia tells him, there was a Discourse about the Marriage of the Pretender with the Arch-Dutchess, which, says he, is essential to the Interest of your Wife. D'Aulnay writes in Answer, that there had been some talk of that Marriage but he don't care to come into it: He thinks a Party War would be much better. Francia writes again, that it can't be expected that Persons of Fifty or Sixty Thousand Crowns a Year should run the hazard of losing such Estates, unless more Encouragement were given them. And that is followed by another Letter from Francia, wherein he writes, that now we are to expect every thing from your side the Water, that is Explications, &c. Then he desires him if he thinks proper, that he would change his Name, and write by a strange hand.

There is this observable in these Letters, that the Prisoner plainly shews his desire that there should be an Assistance for the Pretender from France; and so all the Letters taken upon him fall into that Design; nay, he was anxious and impatient for the critical Minute. The Death of the French King is taken notice of to be a great Loss, yet he is assured that things will revive again; for that Person that succeeded in the Government, had favourable Thoughts and Intentions.

The Letters that are entered in his Copy-Book speak very plainly; and Gentlemen, what can be the purport of those Letters of the Prisoner's that are not entred, that can't be sought for any where but in those Letters which were sent hither in Answer to them; and he is so far from pretending that these were not Letters sent in Answer to his Letters, that when he came to be examined, he told what the Deſign of them was; that it was the Deſign of the Pretender to invade his Majeſty's Dominions; and therefore it now appears plainly to you, that he did ſollicite Aid and Aſſiſtance in order to an Invaſion from Abroad, and an Inſurrection at Home, in favour of the Pretender, and in order to depoſe his Majeſty.

[a] Mr. Harvey.

[b] Duke of Ormond.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall leave it here, and ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury, upon the Evidence we have offer'd.

Mr. Ward. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the Priſoner, and what I ſhall humbly offer to your Lordſhip before we go into our Evidence, is a ſingle Point, we ſhall lay before you and inſiſt upon; a particular Circumſtance in the Indictment, which is ſuch, that conſidering the Circumſtance of my Client, it is impoſſible as the Law ſtands, that he ſhould be guilty in ſuch manner as is charged in the Indictment.

The Priſoner happens to be an Alien born, he was born at Bourdeaux in France; he came from thence into England, and never was Naturaliz'd. He owes therefore no natural Allegiance, nor can be guilty of any Treaſon againſt the King as his natural Liege Lord, as it's laid in this Indictment.

There is a Diſtinction of a double Allegiance, one that is due from a natural born Subject, and the other that is due from an Alien. The latter owes only a local Obedience with reſpect to his Protection, whereas the former owes it in reſpect of his Birth. This is a Diſtinction well known in Calvin's Caſe. It appears, that if an Indictment for Treaſon be againſt an Alien, it muſt be charged to be againſt his Allegiance in general, but not againſt his natural Allegiance. This is taken notice of in a great many Caſes. In the Reports of my Lord Hobart, Vaughan, and Keyling, there are ſeveral Caſes which ſhew this Diſtinction.

In my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt's time, in the Trial of Cranborn and Lowick, April 22. 1696. an Exception was taken to the Indictment; that it was not ſaid Contra naturalem ligeantiam; and in that Caſe, Calvin's Caſe was agreed to be Law. It was held, that in caſe of an Alien, he ow'd only a general Allegiance; and it was agreed, that in caſe of an Alien, it muſt not be Contra naturalem ligeantiam; and my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt ſays, if it were ſo, it would be ill. And it may be given in Evidence, that he is an Alien, in order to acquit him of a Crime, charg'd to be againſt his natural Allegiance; there is none ſuch due.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the Objection is founded on a Fact. If the Fact is admitted, we will argue upon it; if not, we will call ſome Witneſſes to prove it.

Then Simon Francia was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give an Account what you know of the Priſoner, what Countryman he is, and where he was born?

Simon Francia. He is my Brother, he was born in France at Bourdeaux.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you Elder or Younger than he?

Simon Francia. I am Four Years Elder.

Mr. Att. Gen. How then can you remember what was done when you was Four Years old?

Simon Francia. I can't remember the Day of his Birth, but I was bred up with him at Bourdeaux, we were all born in the ſame Houſe.

Mr. Hungerford. What Age was you of when you firſt remember him?

Simon Francia. I remember him when I was about Six Years old.

Mr. Hungerford. And you don't remember that your Father and Mother came to England in that time?

Simon Francia. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did your Father and Mother live at Bourdeaux when you was about Six Years old?

Simon Francia. Yes.

Then Jaques Gonſales was ſworn on the Books of Moſes. And an Interpreter was ſworn, becauſe the Witneſs ſpoke Engliſh very imperfectly.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give an Account what Countryman the Priſoner is, and where he was born?

Gonſales. The Priſoner is the Son of George Francia, and Mary Gonſales my Siſter. He was born at Bourdeaux the 26th of March, New Stile, 1675.

Sir J. Jekyll. How do you know he was born there?

Gonſales. Becauſe I was preſent when he was born. My Houſe was over-againſt my Siſter's, who was the Priſoner's Mother; afterwards he was baptized in the Church of St. Andrew.

Mr. Hungerford. We have two or three Witneſſes more, his Godfather and Godmother; but I think it plainly prov'd by theſe Witneſſes, ſo that we need not go any further. Mr. Attorney, do you admit it, or ſhall we examine more Witneſſes?

Mr. Att. Gen. Prove what you can.

Mr. Hungerford. Then Mr. Attorney, you admit what we contend for. I am ſure if he be a good Engliſhman, he cannot be a falſe Traytor.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſpeaks good Engliſh.

Then Emes Lamira was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Give an Account whether you know where the Priſoner was born?

Lamira. He was born at Bourdeaux, I liv'd there when he was born.

Then Jaques Gonſales was call'd again.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long hath the Priſoner liv'd in England?

Gonſales. I can't tell poſitively.

Mr. Att. Gen. As near as you can?

Gonſales. I can't tell, for he has liv'd at one part of the Town, and I at the other.

Then Simon Francia was call'd again.

L. C. Baron. How long ago did your Brother come into England?

Simon Francia. He hath been here twice. He was here about Twenty Years ago, and this laſt time, he hath been here about Six or Seven Years.

L. C. Baron. How long did he ſtay when he firſt came?

Simon Francia. About Eight or Nine Years.

Then Cecilia Ceres was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of the Priſoner? What Countryman is he?

Ceres. I went to School with him at Bourdeaux.

Mr. Hungerford. Where was he reputed to be born?

Ceres. At Bourdeaux, in the ſame Street where I was.

Mr. Hungerford. How old was he when you knew him firſt?

Ceres. We were both Children.

Mr. Hungerford. I think the Place of a Man's Birth can't be better prov'd, it is prov'd by ſome that were in the Room at his Birth, ſome that went went to School with him, and ſome that knew him there a Child.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Jury ſhould be ſatisfied with this Evidence, it will not acquit the Defendant, the Opinion in Cranborn's Caſe being, that the Word Naturalem was not neceſſary to be in the Indictment; and adding an immaterial Word will not therefore make the Indictment bad. If this does not ſatisfy the Defendant's Council, I ſhall inſiſt that this Point be found ſpecially.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. If you inſiſt that you have given a ſufficient Evidence to ſatisfy the Jury, and indeed it is a ſtrong Evidence, Mr. Attorney ſays, if the Evidence is to the Satisfaction of the Jury, he is willing to find it ſpecially. Therefore are you willing to leave it to the Jury on that ſingle Iſſue?

Mr. Hungerford. That is giving up all the reſt. I would a little enforce and apply this Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. I believe, if Mr. Attorney-General deſires it to be found ſpecially, it was never known to be denied.

Sir J. Jekyll. I deſire it may be found ſpecially.

Mr. Hungerford. I will be bold to ſay, this Objection is in all the Authorities which we have in the Law touching this Matter, held good: A Man who is not a natural born Subject cannot owe a natural Allegiance: And it is very hard, that without offering any Reaſon, to raiſe a Doubt, but upon bare aſking to have a Matter found ſpecially, it muſt be ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you have a mind to it we will debate it with you now.

Mr. Hungerford. With all my Heart, I am ready to ſpeak to it now.

Sir J. Jekyll. If we were to expect the Judgment of the Court upon it now, I would debate this Matter now, and I ſhould not doubt but to be able to ſatisfy the Court that the Indictment is well fram'd againſt the Priſoner, notwithſtanding he is an Alien born.

Mr. Hungerford. I would be glad to hear one Authority to ſupport Sir Joſeph's Opinion.

Mr. Ward. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am Council for the Priſoner, who ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon. The Charges in the Indictment (beſides the general Charge of imagining the King's Death) are conſpiring to levy War, ſolliciting Aid from Abroad, and writing Letters for that Purpoſe into Foreign Parts.

What they have gone upon has been a long Courſe of Letters between the Priſoner and D'Aulmay, alias Payen, at Paris. They have produc'd a Copy-book of Letters, which they ſay he wrote, and have read ſome Letters out of it, which we muſt ſubmit to you, whether there is any thing contain'd in them that amounts to Treaſon. They have alſo produc'd Letters to him from D'Aulmay, but we muſt ſubmit that likewiſe, whether they can any ways affect him; he can anſwer only for what he wrote himſelf.

We did inſiſt upon it, that they ought not to produce any Letters that were not ſpecify'd in the Indictment, and tho' we were over-rul'd in that, yet your Lordſhip will be pleas'd to conſider the Priſoner under this Diſadvantage, that he ſtands indicted for writing treaſonable Letters, without one Letter ſpecify'd, or the Date, and much leſs the Subſtance of it, ſo that he can't be ſuppos'd to be ready to offer any Evidence, or to give any Anſwer, to explain all the Letters that in the Courſe of his Life he may have wrote, and perhaps ſome of them may be ſo darkly penn'd, as not to be capable of an Explanation on a ſudden.

It may be neceſſary alſo to ſhew your Lordſhip the Difficulties we have been under ſince we were taken up, and that will make it neceſſary to ſhew, that when we were committed, it was to a ſtrict Confinement; we were prohibited from any Body coming to us, and from Pen, Ink, and Paper; no Body had Acceſs to us, unleſs ſome Perſons from the Secretaries Office, to preſs us to ſome Diſcoveries, which we declar'd we could not make. We will ſhew by them that were by at thoſe Times what we were preſs'd to, and that will be an Evidence of our Innocence, when we withſtood ſuch Importunities.

They have offer'd ſome things, which will, I hope, go a great way to ſhew that he was not guilty of Treaſon. My Client was a Stranger, born in France, came here to Trade, and his Buſineſs not being very ſucceſsful, he was willing to undertake ſomething of leſs Value, and ſo engag'd in ſending Letters from the Gentleman that has been nam'd, for the Profit of double Poſtage, which is allow'd in thoſe Caſes.

It was obſerv'd by the King's Council as a very ſtrange thing, that a Man ſhould enter in his Book Letters of a treaſonable Nature, we ſay the ſame, and that is a Circumſtance to ſhew that they were not of that nature; beſides, the Entry of a Letter in a Copy-book is not like a Copy that the Law allows to be given in Evidence, that muſt be carefully examin'd; but in thoſe Entries of what a Man writes over to his Correſpondents, there may be Miſtakes in them, and ſuch as a Man's Life, in Caſe of High-Treaſon, may be loſt upon; therefore you can't found ſo great a Certainty upon this Book as upon the Letters themſelves or Copies examined and legally proved.

Another Circumſtance to ſhew how unlikely it was that this was a treaſonable Correſpondence, or any thing that the Priſoner was concern'd to conceal, is, that he never took care of attending at the Poſt-Office, or engaging any one to attend there, to diſpatch or take care of his Letters, but reſted at Home till the Letter Carriers brought them about, or elſe they were left at one Everald's a Watchmaker in the Strand, where he had lodg'd, and they have been obſerv'd to lie there on a Table in a common Room for a Week together before they have been call'd for, or they have been ſent to him.

It has been obſerv'd by the King's Council, that towards the latter End of the Correſpondence, when he began to write more openly, that he neglected to enter his Letters in the Book; but there is no reaſon for that Surmiſe, for it appears upon one of the Letters they have produc'd from D'Aulmay, that he complains he had not heard from the Priſoner in Three Months Time; and to ſuppoſe thoſe Letters which do not appear, worſe than thoſe which do, is a Preſumption, we hope, will never be admitted in a Caſe of Life.

As the Priſoner himſelf could not apply himſelf to conſider of any Account or Explanation of theſe Letters, much leſs can it be expected that we who are his Council can be of any Service to him in that Point, becauſe we only hear thoſe Letters read that the King's Council think fit to produce; there were others before and after, and thoſe we are Strangers to; whatever there may be in them that may clear up the Expreſſions in thoſe that are produc'd by the King's Council, we are entirely depriv'd of the Benefit of them; for the Priſoner has not been admitted to peruſe his own Book, or to have recourſe to any of his Papers. The Power of ſeizing Papers, that may be of uſe to a Man in his Defence, ſeems to me ſomething dark; but I ſhall ſay nothing to it in this place.

We ſhall give your Lordſhip an Account of the Priſoner's Character and Circumſtances. He was under low Circumſtances, even to the pawning his Cloaths and Goods. People that are concern'd in Things of this Kind are uſually better ſupported than he ſeems to have been. And we ſhall ſhew that he has at all times given all Inſtances and Proofs of his being quiet under the Government, and well affected to it.

Under theſe Circumſtances, if there was ſtronger Evidence than is in the Copy-book, it would not be ſufficient. I hope, Gentlemen, you have diſtinguiſh'd between thoſe Letters in the Copy-book and thoſe that were ſent to him, which latter, how criminal ſoever they may be, can't be made uſe of to his Prejudice.

If we prove theſe Circumſtances, which is all that can be expected from us, we hope you will not think any thing in theſe Letters a ſufficient Evidence to find him guilty of this Crime. And, Gentlemen, if any of thoſe Letters can have ſuch a Conſtruction, yet, conſidering the nature of the Copy-book, and the manner of keeping ſuch Books (which has fallen more under your Obſervation than mine) and how void of Care he was in managing thoſe Letters that came to him, you will not think it probable that he was engag'd in a Correſpondence of ſuch a nature; and if any thing looks that way, it may either be a Miſtake in him that enter'd the Copies, or might be explain'd, if we were Maſters of the reſt of the Letters, and of the Book.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I ſhall take up but a very little of your Time till we have gone through our Evidence, and then ſhall apply my ſelf to make ſome Remarks upon it. But in general, the Accuſation contained in this Indictment is, that this Man has conſpir'd to take away the Life of the King; the Overt-Acts laid are, that he conſpir'd to levy War, and endeavoured to engage Aſſiſtance from Abroad, and wrote Letters, and ſent them to divers Perſons beyond Seas for that Purpoſe.

Gentlemen of the Jury, I am ſure you muſt obſerve, that as to a direct Proof of his intending to take away the truly precious Life of the King, there is none, but what is endeavour'd to be inferr'd from theſe Letters. If there were, I am ſure I ſhould not, and, I believe, none of my Profeſſion would have ſpoke one Word for him. But all that is ſaid ariſes from himſelf. There is no Conſultation appears, but that this Man conſulted with himſelf and his Compting-Houſe to take away the Life of the King. As to any of thoſe Letters, there is nothing in them that looks that Way. And as to what is contained in the Letters received from France, they cannot affect him. All that can be inferr'd from them is, that he was privy to what was contained in thoſe Letters: And if that were High-Treaſon, yet it can only amount to Miſpriſion of Treaſon in the Priſoner. You who live in this great Trading City, the moſt eminent for Trade and Commerce in the World, in which, I believe, you are very much concern'd, know that a great Part of the Commerce is carried on by Letters, and all or moſt of them are entered in Books; you muſt have a due Apprehenſion of the Conſequences of ſuch a Tranſaction as this is. To have a Man living in his Houſe in Peace, under the Protection of the King's Laws, to have his Books and Papers taken from him, and thoſe Books and Papers turn'd againſt him, to the Deſtruction of him and his Family.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deſire you would forbear inveighing in this Manner. This is not a proper Manner of proceeding.

Sir J. Jekyll. You have had an Account that an Information was given to the Secretary of State, of a treaſonable Correſpondence carried on by this Man, and here is an Harangue complaining that his Perſon and Papers are ſeiz'd. You know if there had been an Information given to the meaneſt Officer in the Kingdom, he could not have juſtified himſelf, without doing the ſame Thing.

L. C. Baron. You are not to arraign thoſe Proceedings.

Mr. Hungerford. I don't doubt but that noble Lord had Grounds for what he did, but what Grounds he had doth not appear: And ſurely I have a Right to obſerve, that all the Evidence that appears againſt the Priſoner, ariſes from thoſe Letters and Books that were taken away from him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Hungerford act within the Bounds of your Profeſſion.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Attorney, I am to be corrected by the Court, and not by you. I owe Duty to my Lords the Judges, and I ſhall always pay it.

Mr. Juſt. Tracy. You ought not to reflect on that Matter of ſeizing the Papers.

Mr. Hungerford. I am not underſtood. I ſay all that is offer'd againſt him is from the Papers found in his Cuſtody.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. If that was all that you had ſaid you ought not to have been interrupted; but I never knew in my Life, but what was done in this Caſe was ordinarily done in the like Caſes, and ought to be done, and you ought not to go on with Invectives to the Jury, complaining that his Papers are ſeiz'd, and then that thoſe Papers are turn'd againſt him. When a Correſpondence is carried on by Letters, ought they not to be ſeized? and if they appear to be treaſonable, ought they not to be kept and made uſe of againſt him? We muſt not ſit here to hear Invectives againſt Magiſtrates of the higheſt Quality, for doing that, which if they had not done, they had failed in their Duty.

Mr. Hungerford. I have not ſaid any thing to impeach the Legality of what was done. All I ſaid, and do ſay, is, that the Evidence is from the Papers found in his own Cuſtody,

You have heard the Letters read, and you obſerve, that great part of them is about Dogs and Horſes, and a Sum of 130*l.* 4*s.* and about a Suit that was carrying on in the Court of Chancery. As to the Book, I ſhall touch no more upon it now, but I believe we ſhall be able to offer Proof that there is not any Part of it wrote by himſelf. How that will agree with the Evidence already given, we muſt ſubmit. We ſhall likewiſe give ſome Account of ſome Diſcourſes that have been had with the Man himſelf. And, I believe, I need not obſerve to Gentlemen of your Figure and Circumſtances, that the Mr. Harvey, who is repreſented by the King's Council, to be the firſt Promoter of, and carried on this treaſonable Corre-ſpondence, is at Liberty, even without a Trial; and what the Law hath done for him without a Trial, I hope ſhall, by your Juſtice, be done for the Priſoner, now upon his Trial, that is, that he ſhall be acquitted.

Mr. Ward. Though it is difficult for us to be put to explain any of thoſe Letters, yet we will call ſome Witneſſes to explain one, which mentions Perſons of 50 or 60 Thouſand Crowns a Year, and ſhew that it was meant of one that was concerned in the Revenue in France, and ſuffered by it.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. If you are going to explain that Letter, it will be neceſſary to read it again to the Jury.

Which was done accordingly.

Mr. Ward. We will ſhew it was meant of one George Francia, who had been concern'd in the Revenue in France.

Simon Francia being ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you know George Francia?

S. Francia. Yes.

Mr. Hungerford. Was he concerned in the Revenue in France, and had he any Loſs there?

S. Francia. Yes, he loſt all he had.

Mr. Hungerford. By what Occaſion was it?

S. Francia. I don't know.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it by his own Management, or depending on others?

S. Francia. I don't know, but I know he had an Eſtate and loſt it all.

Mr. Ward. We offer this only as a Sample for the reſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was this Man worth?

S. Francia. I computed him to be worth Eight or Ten Thouſand Pounds.

Mr. Att. Gen. Doth he anſwer the Deſcription in the Letter of a Perſon of Fifty or Sixty Thouſand Crowns a Year?

Sir J. Jekyll. Had he any Eſtate in Land?

S. Francia. No, only in Money.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know of any Offers that have been made, or Threats uſed to the Priſoner?

S. Francia. I know of ſome.

Mr. Hungerford. By whom?

S. Francia. By Mr. Buckley. That if he would ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey of Comb, he ſhould have a good Reward.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know of any other?

S. Francia. Yes, my Lord Townſhend told me he had given my Brother five Guineas, and he would give him more if he would ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Hungerford. Where did he tell you ſo?

S. Francia. In the Office at the Cockpit.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know any thing of two Warrants that Mr. Buckley brought, one for his Releaſement, and the other for his Confinement?

S. Francia. I don't know any thing of that.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came this Diſcourſe between my Lord Townſhend and you?

S. Francia. I was ſeveral Times with him at the Office about my Brother.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope it will be proper at this Time that my Lord Townſhend and Mr. Buckley may be ask'd to this Matter.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. I ſuppoſe you was preſent when this paſt between Mr. Buckley and the Priſoner?

S. Francia. It was between my Lord Townſhend and me, and Mr. Buckley and me.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. Who elſe was by, beſides Mr. Buckley and you?

S. Francia. No Body elſe?

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. Who was by when that which you mention'd paſt between my Lord Townſhend and you?

S. Francia. No Body elſe. The firſt Time I applied to my Lord Townſhend, I think there was another Secretary there.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. But at that Time that you ſay this Offer was made, was any Body preſent?

S. Francia. Indeed I don't remember that there was.

Mr. Cowper. I think you ſay, the firſt Time you was with my Lord Townſhend, there was the other Secretary there?

S. Francia. Yes, there was.

Mr. Cowper. Where was this, in what Room?

S. Francia. In the Cockpit.

Mr. Cowper. What is your Relation to the Priſoner?

S. Francia. I am his Brother.

Mr. Hungerford. You ſay there was another Secretary by, was it the other Secretary of State?

S. Francia. I know not who it was, there was another Gentleman.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſaid another Secretary of State.

L. C. Baron. What did my Lord Townſhend ſay to you?

S. Francia. He ſaid he had given my Brother five Guineas, and he would give him more, if he would ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey.

L. C. Baron. You ſay at that Time there was another Secretary?

S. Francia. No, no, not at the Time of that Diſcourſe.

L. C. Baron. Nor there was no Body with you and Mr. Buckley?

S. Francia. No.

Then Lucy White was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Was you by, or in hearing, when any Offers were made to the Priſoner.

White. Upon the Seventh of September I went to ſee the Priſoner in Newgate. He told me Mr. Buckley was to be there with him, and deſired me to conceal myſelf in the Room, that I might hear what paſt, and I did ſo. When Mr. Buckley came he ſpoke about one Flint; and afterwards Mr. Buckley ask'd him ſeveral Queſtions about Mr. Harvey. He ſaid he knew nothing but that he was innocent. Mr. Buckley told him he muſt ſwear right or wrong for the Government; if he would not, he himſelf would ſwear High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner; for he had taken Money of my Lord Townſhend, and done nothing for it.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you ſee any thing of two Warrants Mr. Buckley had at that Time?

White. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did Mr. Buckley ſee you?

White. No, I conceal'd myſelf under the Feet of the Bed.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay this was the Seventh of September. What Year?

White. In the Year 1716.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was he then?

White. In Newgate.

Then Mary Meggiſon was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know of any Offers that were made to the Priſoner, and by whom?

Meggiſon.

Meggiſon. Upon the Twenty Eighth of September laſt I was in Mr. Francia's Room, and Mr. Buckley came in and told him he ſhould be tried ſuddenly, and there were a great many Witneſſes againſt him; and he would ſwear againſt him, becauſe, ſays he, you have cheated my Maſter of five Guineas, and won't ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you in the Room then?

Meggiſon. I ſat upon a little Box at the Bed's Feet, and it was ſo dark he could not ſee me.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to Newgate?

Meggiſon. I have been a great many Times in Newgate.

Mr. Att. Gen. You dwell there ſometimes, don't you?

Meggiſon. No, I never did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a married Woman?

Meggiſon. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is your Husband?

Meggiſon. A Dealer, but he is not in England now.

Priſoner. What Room was I in?

Meggiſon. A little dark Room.

Priſoner. What do they call it?

Meggiſon. The Lion's Den.

Priſoner. Every Body knows that Room is a dark Room, that People can't eaſily be ſeen in it.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you hear Mr. Buckley ſay any thing more?

Meggiſon. Nothing, but that he would bring my Lord Townſhend into Court, on purpoſe to influence the Jury by his Preſence.

Mr. Hungerford. As to theſe two Witneſſes, we have ſeveral to ſpeak to their Reputations; but I believe you have no doubt as to that.

Sir J. Jekyll. I dare ſay no one Perſon in Court believes a Word they ſay.

Then Mr. Buckley was called again.

Priſoner. I deſire to know whether you was not with me in the Lion's Den.

Mr. Buckley. My Lord, the Priſoner ſent to me by Revell the Turnkey, and deſired to ſpeak with me; when I came to him, he ſpoke to me firſt about Flint, and deſired he might be releas'd from his ſtrait Confinement; and then about his own Affairs. He thank'd me for my Humanity in coming to talk with him, ſo we parted immediately. I told my Lord Townſhend what had paſt; Flint had the Benefit of it. He had been confined cloſe, but Francia ſpeaking on his behalf, he was releaſed from that Confinement; and that was the Buſineſs I went about. The Room is a little dark Room, but if any Body had been at the Foot of the Bed, I believe I might have ſeen them.

L. C. Baron. Did you ſay thoſe Words?

Mr. Buckley. No, my Lord, it is impoſſible I ſhould.

Mr. Hungerford. Not impoſſible ſurely?

Mr. Buckley. Yes, impoſſible, I appeal to my Character: I entirely and utterly deny it. I deſire that Revell may be called.

Mr. Ward. We are now in our Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Priſoner calls a Witneſs that has been called before, and he to make his Evidence entire, appeals to Revell, we ought to call him now, for it would have been improper before.

Mr. Hungerford. If it be nothing but that he was ſent for Mr. Buckley, there is no great Harm in it. Otherwiſe we are in the Courſe of our Evidence.

Then Revell was ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know the Occaſion of Mr. Buckley's coming to Francia in Newgate? Give an Account of what you know of it.

Revell. My Lord, Mr. Francia called to me one Day, and I think it was when I was in the Chapel, and told me, I believe I can do a Piece of Service to the Government: I believe I can ſuppreſs the publiſhing of the Shift-Shifted, I am ſure I can: Pray let me ſpeak with Mr. Buckley. Says I, if you would have me, I will go to him, and deſire him to come. When would you ſpeak with him? At any time, ſays he; then I believe the Morning is the beſt to meet with him; and the next Morning I went to him.

Sir J. Jekyll. Did you tell him the Occaſion of Francia's deſiring to ſpeak with him?

Revell. Yes.

Sir J. Jekyll. Was you in the Room with them?

Revell. No, but afterwards he ſaid to me, I think I have done the Government ſome Service; you don't hear it come out as it us'd to do.

Priſoner. I deſire to know whether Mr. Buckley was not angry with you that you did not ſtand at the Door?

Revell. He order'd me to be about the Door, but there came ſome Workmen to ſurvey the Chapel, I was obliged to go with them, and he came out and was angry that I was not there; and after that I ſtood there till they had done, but I did not hear what Diſcourſe paſt.

Then the Lord Townſhend ſtood up.

Lord Townſhend. My Lord, Mr. Buckley came to me, and told me of the Meſſage he had receiv'd from the Priſoner about the Shift-Shifted, a ſcandalous Paper that was ſent about the Kingdom. He ask'd me if he ſhould go: I told him I thought it was right to go, but I told him he muſt be cautious, for I did not doubt but that the Priſoner was capable of that Villany I now find he is. He came back to me, and told me what he has now ſaid; and I believe it to be all that paſt between them, for I have always found him faithful and honeſt. I thought it was a Service to put a Stop to that Paper; and I did give ſome Eaſe to that Man that is named.

I am amazed how there can be ſuch Villany as is in the Brother. He came to the Office two or three Times with Petitions. I never ſaid any thing more, than that it was not in my Power to do any thing; that he muſt deal ingenuouſly, tell all that he knew, and ſhew that he would ſpeak all the Truth; that that was the Way to recommend him to the King's Mercy; that I could not do any thing without it. And I believe the manner I treated Mr. Harvey will juſtify me, with all that know any thing of it, from the Suſpicion of ſuch Intentions againſt him. All that I did was in regard to the Priſoner's wretched Circumſtances, and before Mr. Stanhope; and I never deſir'd any thing of him, but to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth.

Priſoner. You told me I ſhould be hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd; and your Lordſhip told me many a time, Damn you, you Dog, now I have got Mr. Harvey in my Clutches, and you will let him go from me. If there was no particular Animoſity againſt me, why ſhould I be diſtinguiſhed, for none were put in Irons for treaſonable Practices, but me.

Lord Townſhend. I would not take up your Lordſhip's Time, but only to ſay, that the Warrant for Irons, and to be kept without Pen, Ink, and Paper, was after that Letter had been deliver'd to me, the Contents of which will ſufficiently juſtify the Precautions uſed in that Warrant. I was ſorry to ſee the ill Uſe he made of the Liberty that I had before given him, and I did uſe that Warrant in that manner. Treaſonable Practices were then no more bailable than Treaſon; and it's no new Thing to fetter State-Priſoners under ſuch an Accuſation.

Mr. Ward. I beg leave to ask your Lordſhip one Queſtion, Whether you apprehend that Curtis deſerv'd any Credit?

Lord Townſhend. I can ſay no more, than that he made ſome Diſcoveries, and there was no Proſecution againſt him. I knew nothing of the Man before, and I know nothing more of him now.

Mr. Ward. Did thoſe Informations appear to be true?

Lord Townſhend. A great Part did, by the Confeſſion of one of the Perſons he accuſed.

Mr. Hungerford. As to the two Women that were examined juſt now, there was a Remark made, that their Teſtimony was extraordinary; I have five or ſix People to ſpeak to their Reputation, if it ſticks with Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. Perhaps ſuch as themſelves; but however call them.

Then Mr. Everall was called.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of White or Meggiſon?

Everall. I know nothing of them.

Mr. Ward. Do you know where the Priſoner's foreign Letters uſed to be left?

Everall. His Letters always came to my Houſe.

Mr. Ward. Was he uſually watchful for the coming in of his Letters, as if there was any Thing of Concern in them?

Everall. No, they often uſed to lye ſome time before he call'd for them.

Mr. Ward. How long did they uſe to lye?

Everall. Sometimes three or four Days.

Mr. Ward. Were they kept up cloſe till he called for them?

Everall. No, they lay in a publick Room, ſo that any one might ſee them.

Then Mrs. Everall was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of any Letters directed for Mr. Francia; where were they left?

Mrs. Everall. They uſed to be brought to our Houſe, and they have lain two or three Days together on a publick Table before they have been fetch'd away.

Mr. Cowper. How long ago was that?

Mrs. Everall. About ſeven Years ago.

Mr. Cowper. Have any been directed to your Houſe of late?

Mrs. Everall. No.

Mr. Ward. We ſhall now examine ſome Witneſſes to the Copy-Book, to prove that it is not of his Hand-Writing; and I don't doubt but that will have its Weight.

L. C. Baron. He own'd it to be his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correſpondents.

Mr. Cowper. We lay the Streſs upon this, that he ſaid it was his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correſpondents Abroad.

Mr. Ward. But you know Mr. Buckley laid a Streſs upon its being his Hand-Writing.

Then one Raſter was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Shew him the Copy-Book, look upon it, are you acquainted with the Priſoner's Hand-Writing?

Raſter. Yes.

Mr. Hungerford. Is any Part of that Book his Hand-Writing?

Raſter. No, I take it to be his Son's, George Francia's: The Priſoner writes a ſmaller Hand. I take no Part of it to be his Hand ſo far as I have gone.

Mr. Hungerford. I believe it may be of uſe for all the Witneſſes to look it over; we have four or five to this Point; and if I am rightly inſtructed, there is not one Word in that Book wrote by the Priſoner.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. If it is not his Writing, whoſe do you take it to be?

Raſter. I don't take it to be his.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. Whoſe do you take it to be? Are you acquainted with his Son's Hand?

Raſter. I don't know whether it is his Son's or not.

Mr. Juſt. Pratt. Are there any other Perſons that write for him?

Raſter. He had ſometimes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Letter of his own Writing; pray let him look on that, and ſee whether that is his Hand; do you believe that to be his Writing?

Raſter. No, I don't think it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Curtis has prov'd that he own'd that Letter.

Priſoner. What Letter did I own?

Then Simon Francia was called again.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you ſay to that Book?

S. Francia. There is not one Syllable of his Writing in this Book; I have known his Hand-Writing about twenty Years.

Then Barwell was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Are you acquainted with the Priſoner's Hand-Writing? Is any of that Book of his Writing?

Barwell. None of it is his Writing.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know what Condition of Health he was in about the latter End of the Year 1714, and 1715?

Barwell. He was ſick.

Mr. Hungerford. For a Year before he was taken, what Condition was he in? Was he able to write Letters?

Barwell. He was ſick.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he uſe to write Letters in that Time?

Barwell. I don't know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe Hand do you take it to be?

Barwell. How do I know that?

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you acquainted with his Son's Hand?

Barwell. No, not at all.

Then Simon Francia was called again.

Mr. Att. Gen. You have look'd on the Book; whoſe Hand-Writing do you take it to be?

S. Francia. I don't know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know his Son's Hand-Writing?

S. Francia. I never had any Correſpondence, or great Acquaintance with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever ſee him write?

S. Francia.

S. Francia. I don't remember that I did.

Mr. Ward. We will trouble you with but one Piece of Evidence more; we will call Dr. Cade, who attended him in his Sickneſs. We have offer'd Evidence, that no Part of that Book is his Writing; we will now offer ſome Proof that he was not capable of writing at that Time.

Then Dr. Cade was ſworn.

Mr. Ward. Pray Doctor, did you attend the Priſoner as his Phyſician at any Time?

Dr. Cade. My Lord, I was ſent for to him on the ſecond Day of November, 1714. I attended him till the 18th of the ſame Month, and within that Time I viſited him nine Times, I found him in a great deal of Pain, and he was lame in his Hand; ſome time after my coming he grew better.

Mr. Ward. Was he confin'd to his Bed?

Dr. Cade. Sometimes he kept his Bed, and ſometimes he ſate up.

Mr. Ward. You ſay he was in Pain, and lame in his Hand; which Hand was it?

Dr. Cade. I don't remember which; nor do I know any thing of him, only at that Time.

Sir J. Jekyll. Every one of the Letters were wrote after that Time.

Priſoner. What Condition did you leave me in?

Dr. Cade. In a very bad Condition.

Priſoner. Did you not hear of the Condition I was in afterwards?

Dr. Cade. I don't remember that I heard any thing of you after that.

Mr. Ward. We will call a few Witneſſes to prove what Circumſtances he was in, and that he was well affected to the Government.

Mr. Hungerford. By my Inſtructions he appears to be a Foreigners and ſo diſintereſted in thoſe unfortunate Diviſions that are amongſt us: And accordingly there is nothing of Whig or Tory in his Letters.

Mr. Att. Gen. Don't you remember when he came to Newgate he wrote he liked his Company, for he found them all Tories.

Mr. Hungerford. We ſhall ſhew you that he was zealous for the Good of the Kingdom, and was againſt all that was diſadvantageous to Trade in the late Treaty of Peace. That he never went into any publick Places, except to the Grecian Coffee-Houſe, which is a Place ſure not tainted with Sedition.

Then Mr. Everall was called again.

Mr. Ward. How long have you known the Priſoner?

Everall. Several Years.

Mr. Ward. Has he been peaceable, and eaſy in his Converſation, with Reſpect to the Government?

Everall. I remember at the proclaiming the Peace he ſaid, he thought the Nation was ruin'd, for he thought it a ſcandalous Peace.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is much; for you make him a Frenchman, ſure he might have approved it.

Mr. Hungerford. This is not what I have in my Brief, but perhaps he may recommend himſelf to your Eſteem by it: He doth not to mine. My Lord, I will take up your Time only with this Remark: The great Foundation of this Evidence is the Confeſſion made by the Man himſelf. Without the Key made by him, this had been applicable to no Body. I remember Sir Joſeph Jekyll was pleas'd to ſay, he would not excite the Paſſions of the Jury, but rather appeal to their Judgments, ſo will I. Great Part of this Correſpondence relates to Mr. Harvey, and one would have thought they had ſomething extraordinary to have charged on him, conſidering the Length of his Reſtraint; but I need not obſerve to the Jury that he is at large. He was under Reſtraint, nothing could be imputed to him, and he is diſcharged.

L. C. Baron. Francia, have you any Thing more to ſay?

Priſoner. As for my Nativity I have more Witneſſes. I have more Witneſſes as to my Character. I have more Witneſſes to prove that I was a quiet Man, and never diſaffected to the Government.

Then Mr. John Slater was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of the Priſoner's Behaviour?

Mr. Slater. I have known him about four or five Years. There being a Commiſſion of Bankrupcy againſt him, I was recommended to aſſiſt him in that Commiſſion. I did give him the beſt Aſſiſtance I could, and I ſeveral Times met him, ſometimes at the Grecian Coffee-Houſe, and ſometimes at my own Houſe. I took him for a Frenchman, he uſed very much to eſpouſe the Intereſt of the King of France, which I uſed to chide him for. As for Parties here, I had ſome Diſcourſe with him, and he uſed to think we were a ſtrange People to fall out among ourſelves.

Then Thomas Richardſon was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of the Priſoner and his Behaviour?

Richardſon. I have known him five or ſix Years, and I believe I have taken five or ſix Pounds of his Money. When he was ſick he took a Liking to me, and would not be quiet unleſs I came often to ſee him, and I uſed often to ſit with him in an Evening and bear him Company, and it was a great Surprize to me when I heard he was taken up, for he uſed often to drink a Health to King George, and hoped he ſhould get up to ſee him, and hoped this would be a quiet Nation again. He was then ſo weak that he could not ſtir Hand or Foot. But he uſed to call me Vulcan, and bid me drink King George's Health.

Mr. Hungerford. How long is it ſince he was ſo weak that he could not ſtir Hand or Foot.

Richardſon. About a Year and five or ſix Months. And when he got abroad I then was forced to follow him for what he owed me, and I have gone after him ſeveral Times to the Grecian Coffee-Houſe.

L. C. Baron. Have you any thing more to offer?

Priſoner. No.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I muſt beg Leave (by Way of Reply to what has been offer'd, on Behalf of the Priſoner) to ſay, That this is a Cauſe of very great Concern to the King, to the Royal Family, and to the whole Kingdom in general; and I may with Juſtice affirm, that this Day one of theſe two Points muſt be determin'd; either that the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of High-Treaſon, or that no Man can, as the Law now ſtands, be convicted of holding a foreign, traiterous Correſpondence, if this Evidence be not ſufficient; for here has been the ſtrongeſt Evidence given of ſuch a Correſpondence, as I believe ever was, or perhaps ever can be given, according to the Nature of the Thing.

The Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider the Nature of the Treaſon, as it is laid in the Indictment, it is for compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; now, that reſts in the Imagination, and is compleat in the Mind; but there muſt be ſome open or publick Act that muſt appear to you in Proof, to convince you that the Priſoner had that Imagination. There are three Overt-Acts laid in this Indictment, and we have produced Evidence ſufficient for the Proof of two of them, tho' if any one of them be prov'd, it is enough. The firſt is, conſpiring, conſenting and agreeing to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion within this Kingdom, in Favour of the Pretender; and for conſpiring, conſenting, and agreeing to ſollicit and procure from France, Arms, Ammunition, Men and Money, to aid and aſſiſt in ſuch Rebellion; and the laſt is for compoſing and writing ſeveral treaſonable Letters, declaring his Intention and Reſolution to levy that War, and to raiſe that Rebellion.

The Evidence that has been given is of two Sorts; it conſiſts firſt, of Letters wrote by the Priſoner himſelf to his Correſpondents in France; and ſecondly, of Letters wrote to him by ſuch Correſpondents, ſignifying the Receipt of Letters wrote by the Priſoner to him, touching this traiterous Deſign. For Proof of the Letters wrote by the Priſoner, we have produced his Copy-Book of Letters, wherein they are enter'd, prov'd to be Part his own Hand-Writing, and the reſt his Son's; and indeed, it is a ſurprizing Thing, that that Copy-Book ſhould remain, which indeed is ſo rare a Way to perpetuate the Teſtimony of Treaſon, as I believe the like Evidence is never to be expected again; and it is abſurd to expect, when a Traitor writes into a foreign Country, that he ſhould be able to produce the Original Letters. The Proof of this Copy-Book to be his is beyond doubt; it is proved by his own Confeſſion, before three Witneſſes, and in very ſtrong Terms, This, ſays he, is my Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correſpondents abroad. Is it poſſible that ſtronger Evidence can be given? Nay, he goes farther, as a Noble Lord inform'd you; for when he was examining the Priſoner, and the Priſoner pretended, that he was only a Conveyer of Letters, but did not write himſelf; ſays he, As to what I have wrote, I appeal to my own Copy-Book of Letters. They have brought indeed ſome Witneſſes to ſay, That they believe that the Copy-Book is not of his Hand-Writing, tho' they don't tell you whoſe Hand it is. But that is not material, nor of any Weight, for Copies of Letters are ſometimes enter'd by the Parties themſelves, and ſometimes by their Servants, or others whom they appoint, and that is the ſame thing: but to anſwer that fully, the Priſoner has confeſs'd that part of this Copy-book was of his own Hand-writing, and the reſt of his Son's.

As to the other Letters from D'Aulmay, his French Correſpondent to him, which are many in Number, we have given the beſt Proof the Thing is capable of; we have produc'd the very Original Letters themſelves, directed to him, with the Poſt-Mark from France, found all in his Cuſtody, and confeſſed to be his Letters which he receiv'd from France, before three Witneſſes. This ſhews evidently that there was a traiterous Correſpondence, and is a plain Evidence, that the Priſoner ſent thoſe Letters mention'd to be receiv'd in D'Aulmay's Letters to him, to which theſe were Anſwers, and the Letters exactly tally as to Dates, Circumſtances and Subject. If there had been but one of thoſe Letters ſent to the Priſoner, containing treaſonable Matter, it would have been Miſpriſion of Treaſon, if he had not diſcover'd it; but his going on with the ſame treaſonable Correſpondence for Months together, and in ſo many Letters, in every one of which he charges the Priſoner with writing High-Treaſon, and he preſerving all thoſe Letters, concealing and keeping them cloſe; this is a ſtrong Evidence of his Approbation and Aſſent to that Treaſon and traiterous Correſpondence. And ſo it is in the common Caſe, if a Man meet accidentally, not knowing of the Deſign, and light into the Company of Traitors, and hear their Diſcourſe and ſay nothing, if he don't diſcover it, he is guilty of Miſpriſion of Treaſon only, as a bare Concealment; but if he comes a ſecond time into their Company, and meet them again and hear their Conſultations, or the ſame Treaſon is propos'd and talk'd of, and he conceals it, he is guilty of High-Treaſon; becauſe it ſhews a Liking and an Approbation of their Deſign, and ſo it was reſolved in Sir Everard Digby's Caſe. So here, all theſe Letters that came from D'Aulmay, and were kept up cloſe by the Priſoner, containing treaſonable Matter, ſhew his Approbation of the Treaſon, and are a ſtrong Evidence, that he ſent thoſe Letters to his Correſpondent D'Aulmay, to which theſe are Anſwers: It has been ſaid, that admitting theſe Letters were ſent by D'Aulmay to the Priſoner, yet he is not anſwerable for what others write: That, ſurely, is a great Miſtake; for if what he writes be Treaſon, it is his Duty to diſcloſe it; and if he do not, but continue to receive ſuch Letters, this is a clear Proof of his traiterous Correſpondence, and by that he makes the Treaſon his own. They object farther, that the Priſoner was only a Conveyer of Mr. Harvey's and the Duke D'Aumont's Letters; but that this is otherwiſe, appears from the Letters themſelves, for moſt of them relate to himſelf, and are meant of himſelf, and of a Correſpondence with him; for it appears from his own Confeſſion in his Examination prov'd by three Witneſſes, that this French Correſpondence held from a little before the late Queen's Death, 'till a few Days before his Examination; which ſhews that the Correſpondence was his own and carry'd on by himſelf.

In the next place we come to conſider the Expoſition and Meaning of theſe Letters, whether the Subject Matter be Treaſon or not; one of the Council for the Priſoner ſaid, there was nothing in them but about Dogs and Horſes; but that is a Miſtake, for thoſe were Mr. Harvey's Letters, which talk'd ſometimes of Dogs and Horſes; but give me leave to ſay, there ſeems even in them to be a good deal of Treaſon, intermixt with the Diſcourſe of Dogs and Horſes. Let us examine ſome of his own Letters, and ſee whether the Subject Matter be not treaſonable. It is not to be expected that Men will in theſe Caſes ſpeak out plain; no, the Treaſon is always to be dreſs'd up in a Cant, and many of theſe Caſes have appear'd in this place. In my Lord Preſton's Caſe, the Overt-Act charg'd there, was ſending treaſonable Letters to France, to give the Prince of that Nation an Account of our Strength and Forces here; thoſe Letters run all in a ſort of Cant, and it was in that Caſe pretended, that the Meaning was uncertain, and that no Body knew what to make of ſome of the Expreſſions in them; but notwithſtanding that, both Judges and Jury took upon them to underſtand them, and he was found Guilty of High-Treaſon.

In the Letter of the 26th of February, D'Aulmay writes to the Priſoner, and deſires to know ſome News, becauſe the Intereſt of his Wife and Family, which, ſays he, is Iriſh, is concern'd in it, his Wife being a Butler, and of Kin to the Duke of Ormond. Francia, in Anſwer to that Letter writes him word, as for News, that he heard there was a Marriage in good forwardneſs between the Prince in Lorrain and one of the Arch-Dutcheſſes. " Let me know, ſays he, what there " is in it, ſince 'tis eſſential to the Intereſt of your " Wife, that is to ſay, that Ireland as well as " England was concern'd in the Pretender's Mar- " riage; for every one knows who is meant by " the Prince in Lorrain. Now ſee what Anſwer D'Aulmay ſends back, he gives his Opinion freely, and thinks that this intended Marriage of the Chevalier de St. George (which by the way explains who the Prince in Lorrain was) with the Arch-Dutcheſs, would not be a ſure way to bring his Affairs to an happy Iſſue. What was to be done then? Why, ſays he, a Party-War would be much more to his Advantage. Is not this eaſily to be underſtood? Is not this Party-War a Civil-War, an Inſurrection, a Rebellion? D'Aulmay then giving his Opinion, that a Rebellion was the moſt eligible Way; what is the Priſoner's Anſwer? why he cloſes with the Advice, but ſays, That Perſons of Fifty or Sixty Thouſand Crowns a Year can't with Prudence run the Hazard of loſing ſuch Eſtates, unleſs more Encouragement be given them: What is this but ſolliciting Aid and Encouragement from France, for an Enterprize in which Men of Eſtates muſt run the Riſque of loſing them? It is ſaid Perſons in the Plural Number, not one ſingle Perſon, tho' the Priſoner's Council endeavour'd to put ſuch a Colour upon it; but it is plain in a Party-War many muſt be concern'd.

In his Letter of the 28th of March, after he had expreſs'd a great deal of Uneaſineſs and Impatience, the Negligence and Delay of this Aſſiſtance from France, not uſual in that Nation, after he had wrote again and again, and wonder'd the Delays were ſo great; at laſt, ſays he, We are now to expect every thing from your ſide of the Water. What can be the meaning of this, but that the deſign'd Rebellion here was to be encourag'd from France. And this ſurely is as much as can be expected in an Affair of Treaſon, unleſs People were to write out plain, which is never to be expected, unleſs from Fools and Ideots who cannot commit Treaſon. All D'Aulmay's Letters to the Priſoner tally with thoſe of the Priſoner's own, and purſue the ſame Deſign, tho' under a Cant which runs thro' moſt of them, as was in the Lord Preſton's Caſe. In that Caſe there was the Cant of a Law-Suit, as in this; but my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Pollexfen ſaid, that would not acquit his Lordſhip of Treaſon, if the Jury underſtood them in that Senſe as every Body elſe would. And why Words and Letters are not to be underſtood in Court, as every Body underſtands them out of Court, is a hard Matter to be explain'd.

It was indeed inſiſted by the Council for the Priſoner, that there really was a Cauſe recommended to the Priſoner's Care, that is very true; but then the Diſtinction between this private Cauſe, and the publick Cauſe of the Pretender, appears from many of D'Aulmay's Letters; ſometimes he calls it our Cauſe, ſometimes the Cauſe of our Common Friend, and in a very remarkable Letter of D'Aulmay's, dated from Paris, 7 Auguſt 1715. he ſays, The Priſoner was in the right to inveigh againſt that Indolence he reproached them with; but be perſuaded, ſays he, 'tis only ſo in Appearance. I even hope, that by this time you have convincing Proofs of it, and that we make ſuitable Returns to the good Diſpoſition on your Side, and that at laſt, God bleſſing the juſt Cauſe of our Friend, will let him gain his Suit. To explain this Letter, the Time is very material, for on the 20th of July before his Majeſty inform'd his Parliament, that he had undoubted Intelligence of the Pretender's Deſign to invade theſe Kingdoms from Abroad. And in other Letters he diſtinguiſhes between the private Cauſe, and the Cauſe of the Pretender, and calls it my Cauſe. And in a Letter of the 14th of September 1715. We know already, ſays he, what you tell us about the Cauſe of our Friend, which will ſoon end to his Satisfaction, or all Appearances will deceive us; and then ſays, as to my own Cauſe, I can't help telling you, that my Fate is very unhappy to have to do with ſo diſhoneſt a Man; if Treaſon be not meant by thoſe Letters, what is? Let the Priſoner tell us the Meaning of them. Neither he, nor his Council, have offer'd at any other Interpretation, nor have they offer'd to explain but one ſingle Letter in the whole Packet; and that has been obſerv'd was a poor Interpretation, and contrary to the very Grammar and Senſe of the Letter. But what puts this Matter beyond doubt, if there could be any, about the Meaning of theſe Letters, is, that he himſelf tells you in his Examination, in expreſs and poſitive Terms, that the Subject Matter of the Letters that were to be communicated to Mr. Harvey, which are the Letters now produc'd in Evidence, was the Intention of the Pretender to invade his Majeſty's Dominions; and when he himſelf has allow'd this, who is to gainſay it? Can you have a better Witneſs than himſelf, to the Subject of his own Letters, and to explain his own Meaning?

There have been ſome Reflections offer'd which by no means ought to have been, and I think were very improper on this Occaſion; and it is our Duty to take notice of them when they are offer'd. It was ſaid, by way of Reflection, that firſt of all, the Priſoner's Books and Papers were ſeized, and then they were turn'd upon him, and made uſe of againſt him, as if this was illegal, unuſual, and new; when every Body knows in thoſe Caſes, there can be no other Evidence; and is the ſame that has been done in all Ages paſt, and muſt be done in all Ages to come. I am ſure they have no reaſon to charge the Government with Inclemency; there has been ſhewn, even in this very Caſe, as much Clemency and Tenderneſs as was poſſible. When the Noble Lord, my Lord Townſhend, had the firſt Information of treaſonable Practices againſt the Priſoner, he had been juſtified, if he had immediately ſent his Warrant and ſent him to Newgate for High-Treaſon; but inſtead of that, he was cautious, and was willing to be further inform'd before he committed him; and therefore he ſends to the Poſt-Office and orders his Letters to be ſtop'd, in which he found the treaſonable Correſpondence confirm'd; and then he was taken into the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger only, in order to be examin'd. His Lordſhip thereupon gave him all the Opportunities he could deſire, of throwing himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet; but he groſly prevaricated with his Lordſhip, as appears by that Letter wrote to his Wife; wherein he takes notice, that in Newgate they were all Tories, and the Majority for the Government, i. e. ſent thither upon that Account: "You know, "ſays he, why I am here, which can't be a Diſho- "nour to me, be then at eaſe; I have not ſaid "any thing againſt Mr. Harvey, nor nothing can "be done to him; he can only be ſuſpected to "be the Pretender's Friend.

And now give me leave to take notice, that in this Letter he gives a further Explanation of this Buſineſs; for he ſays, According to their Information, i. e. the Tories, though every thing ſhould fail, my Lord Townſhend could do nothing, for Affairs will be at an end in leſs than a Fortnight. Now the time is very material, every one knows that the Rebellion was juſt then breaking out; it began in Scotland in September, and in England in October following. They have call'd ſome Witneſſes to the Priſoner's Reputation, but they have not proved any thing material on that Head, nor given a tolerable Account of him. But if they had, it would in this Caſe be of little or no weight; when a thing is doubtful, Reputation may ſway a little, but in Caſes where the Evidence is ſo full and plain as in this Caſe, it can have no Signification or Weight. It was obſerv'd by us, that when the treaſonable Correſpondence began to be more plain and full, then the Priſoner deſiſted from entering his Letters in his Copy-book; in Anſwer to which, it was urg'd by the Priſoner's Council, that it was improbable it ſhould be ſo, for that the Correſpondence was entirely interrupted for ſeveral Months together, becauſe as they inſiſted in one of D'Aulmay's Letters, dated 17th September, he complains he had not heard from the Priſoner in three Months; but that is grounded on a Miſtake, for the Perſon that uſes that Expreſſion, is not D'Aulmay, but another Perſon, and it is wrote in French in a Poſtſcript under D'Aulmay's Letter; for in the Beginning of the Letter it ſelf, D'Aulmay expreſly ſays, he had received the Priſoner's Letter of the Ninth Inſtant, which ſhews the Correſpondence continued, but was too groſs to enter ſuch Letters in his Copy-book, or to write under the ſame Name; for now, he ſays, when he has any thing material, he would write in a ſtrange Hand, and would ſign it by the Name of Jacques Chrêtien, and that Mr. Harvey might write under the ſame Name too; but none of theſe Letters appear.

Thus I hope I have anſwer'd every thing that has been materially objected by the Priſoner's Council, and if you, Gentlemen of the Jury, do believe that the Priſoner at the Bar wrote theſe Letters, the Copies whereof have been produced to you, and that thoſe Letters produced from his Correſpondent D'Aulmay, were receiv'd by the Priſoner, and that he wrote the Letters therein mentioned, and that he has therein carried on a traiterous Correſpondence, you will acquit yourſelves to your King and Country, and find him Guilty of the High-Treaſon charg'd upon him.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, it may be proper on this Occaſion, Mr. Sollicitor having repeated the particular Parts of the Evidence, to take notice of ſome Things, that have appeared in general in the Courſe of this Trial: We think it of Importance to the Publick, that this traiterous Correſpondence ſhould appear in a proper Light, that the deluded Populace may be no longer to ſeek, who were the Perſons that incited, and fomented the late unnatural Rebellion.

The Gentlemen of the Jury will obſerve, that our Evidence begins with a ſecret Information which was given to a Noble Lord who was then Secretary of State, of a traiterous Correſpondence carried on by the Priſoner, and his Accomplices: That Information was not immediately or haſtily relied upon, but Orders were given that all Letters, directed to Francia the Priſoner, ſhould be intercepted at the Poſt-Office; accordingly you have heard, that ſeveral Foreign Letters from France, directed to the Priſoner, were ſtopp'd, and ſent to the Secretary's Office; thoſe Letters fully diſcloſing the Treaſon, it was thought Time to iſſue a Warrant, and ſend a Meſſenger to ſeize the Priſoner and his Papers; and it is to us wonderful, that one of the Council for the Priſoner ſhould undertake to cenſure that Proceeding, the Neglect of which muſt have been cenſured, if it had not been done: After an Information receiv'd, of ſo vile and dangerous a Conſpiracy, confirmed and made evident by Letters intercepted, was it poſſible for one, entruſted in ſo high a Station, under his Majeſty, to do leſs than to cauſe the Perſon and Papers of the Priſoner to be ſecured?

You have heard, Gentlemen of the Jury, that from the Time of ſeizing the Letters, and Copy-Book of Letters, in the Lodging and actual Cuſtody of the Priſoner, there is a regular and certain Proof, as to the Identity of the Book, and Papers produced at this Time, and given in Evidence; they were carried by the Meſſengers juſt as they were taken, to Mr. Walpole, who deliver'd them to Mr. Buckley, and the Witneſſes all ſpeak likewiſe, to the Book and Papers themſelves, ſo that there remains no Manner of Diſpute concerning them.

Amongſt theſe Papers, Gentlemen, you will obſerve, there is one Letter that relates to Mr. Harvey, which is now produced becauſe it is Evidence againſt the Priſoner Francia: He, it ſeems, was to manage Mr. Harvey's Correſpondence, and did ſo for a conſiderable Time, but at laſt Curioſity prevail'd; and it is very remarkable, by what Accident that Original treaſonable Letter happens to appear now in this Place: It ſeems the Priſoner, in Breach of the Truſt and Confidence which was repoſed in him, and to gratify his Curioſity, opened the Letter, and finding he could not ſeal it up, and put it together again in that manner, but that it might be ſuſpected he had opened it; for that Reaſon he himſelf kept the very Original Letter under Mr. Harvey's own Hand. When that Letter comes to be read, it appears to be myſterious, as to the Figures and Numbers made uſe of, inſtead of the Names of Perſons, but the Priſoner's Examination explains it, which ſhews he was Maſter of the Key, and of the Secret.

This Diſcovery was attended with Circumſtances that will have their Weight, in a Cauſe of this Nature, when this Letter found upon the Priſoner, is produced to the Perſon that wrote it, before a Committee of the Lords of the Council, you have heard that he was in the utmoſt Diſ-order, as indeed well he might, that he expreſs'd himſelf ready to diſcloſe all that he knew; for what Perſon being in his Condition, and ſeeing one of his own Letters, which he believed ſafe in the Hands of his Correſpondents Abroad, would not have believed the Government Maſters of the reſt; I dare ſay Francia's impertinent Curioſity was then unthought of and unſuſpected. I am ſorry, Gentlemen, to mention a particular Accident, which, however, ſerves to ſhew that the Correſpondence was of a dangerous Nature, otherwiſe what Account can be given, that that Gentleman ſhould, in about twelve Hours after, make a deſperate Attempt upon himſelf?

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I apprehend that nothing of this Matter ought to be mentioned here; whatever Mr. Harvey was liable to, he is now at Liberty.

Mr. Cowper. I ſay, my Lord, it had that Conſequence, and if it had not been a Diſcovery of the utmoſt Importance, if it had not been thought very dangerous in its Conſequence to himſelf, that Attempt upon himſelf had never been made: But ſo it was, and it is ſo far material, as it was occaſioned by Part of that Correſpondence which the Priſoner was employed to tranſmit to the Conſpirators in France.

You have heard, Gentlemen, that Francia, when he was firſt examined, capitulated for himſelf; that he promiſed to make a full Confeſſion, and accordingly gave in a firſt, and ſecond Information, which have been read to you; and I dare ſay, when he ſigned thoſe Examinations, he really intended to ſave himſelf by a Diſcovery of his Treaſon; but when he had taken Counſel with his Party and Fellow-Priſoners in Newgate, you find by his Letter to his Wife, he changed his Mind, and the Expreſſion is to this Effect, He hopes he had ſaid nothing that could hurt either himſelf or Mr. Harvey, and that he laugh'd at any thing the Government could do to himſelf.

Your Lordſhip has heard how artificially and maliciouſly it has been inſinuated, that the Noble Lord, the Secretary of State, gave ſome Hopes of Interceſſion to be made in Favour of the Priſoner; I firmly believe, no Man living that knows that Lord, but thinks he would have been better than his Word, if the Priſoner had honeſtly deſerved it. Whatever was ſaid upon that Occaſion, proceeded from the Priſoner's Aſſurances, that he would make a full Confeſſion, that was the Ground and Condition upon which the Priſoner was told he ſhould be recommended to Mercy. But let the World judge, whether that Noble Lord could juſtify it to his King, his Country, or to himſelf, to interpoſe in his Favour, when he came to diſcover by a Letter under the Priſoner's own Hand, that he was reſolved to conceal all that he knew: Surely, the Condition being broke by the Criminal himſelf, it became the Duty of the Noble Lord not to intercede for an obſtinate Offender; one, that was determined to abide every Extremity, rather than do his Duty, by diſcloſing thoſe Treaſons that were latent in his Breaſt; ſo that we owe the Diſcovery which is made by the Examinations to the ſame Providence that has brought to Light the reſt of the Evidence in a ſtrange and wonderful Manner.

After ſo much Time has been ſpent, it would be tedious to obſerve the particular Paſſages of the Letters which have been given in Evidence, only this I would obſerve, that when the Rebellion was not ſo near at hand, there ſeems to be ſome little Caution uſed in penning the Letters which have been read out of the Copy-Book; but as the Time grew near, the Correſpondence alſo grew more warm and open, as may be perceived by the Letters from Abroad; which is the Reaſon, Gentlemen, you find him diſcontinue entering his own Letters in his Copy-Book. It has been ſaid by his Council, Can it be imagined that a Man would copy and enter Letters of a criminal Nature? but Gentlemen, the Queſtion is, Whether he has done it? And you hear it proved by three Witneſſes, that he owned it to be his own Copy-Book of Letters to his Correſpondents Abroad; ſo that there can remain no doubt, but that every Letter in that Book is a Copy of the Original wrote by the Priſoner: Whoever will obſerve the Time when he diſcontinues entering his Letters as formerly, which was juſt as the Rebellion was breaking out, will think it a ſtrong Evidence, if Evidence were wanting, that the Letters enter'd, contained a criminal and traiterous Correſpondence.

Had the Correſpondence been innocent, the ſame Method would have been continued; for the Rebellion had nothing to do with the ſham Law-Suit. But as the Rebellion grew nigh, it became neceſſary to be more expreſs and plain, as appears by all the Letters to Francia from abroad; which is the true Reaſon he diſcontinued entering his own Letters. Can any Body that can hear or read, doubt, but that the Priſoner continued to write to his Friend Payen? I think there is not one Letter directed to the Priſoner that don't in the firſt Line of it acknowledge the Receipt of the Priſoner's, Yours of ſuch and ſuch a Date I have received; and ſome of them acknowledge the Receipt of two Letters from the Priſoner at the ſame Time, which ſhews his Diligence, and proves, that he writ oftener to his Correſpondent than his Correſpondent to him. You ſee, Gentlemen, the Letters from D'Aulnay, alias Payen, to the Priſoner, make it manifeſt he went on to the laſt in the ſame traiterous Correſpondence; but it can't be expected his Original Letters ſhould be produced. D'Aulnay's Letters plainly intimate the Tenour of the Priſoner's: I will trouble you but with an Inſtance or two amongſt many that might be obſerved.

Of this kind are all thoſe Letters which diſſuaded the Priſoner from being impatient; that give him Aſſurance they are not dilatory; that promiſe him every thing will anſwer his Expectation. All theſe, and many other Expreſſions of the like kind, manifeſt, that he was ſoliciting Aid from France, and that he did what in him lay to incite, promote, and encourage an Invaſion from Abroad, and the Rebellion at Home.

This, Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Evidence that has been laid before you: The Diſcovery was accidental, the tracing of it is ſtrange and wonderful. Deep and ſecret are the Councils of Traytors; and yet we ſee, let them be never ſo cautious, whatever Method they may take to diſguiſe their Treaſon, whatever ſubtile Inventions may be uſed to carry on their Conſpiracy, yet the ſame Providence that has placed his ſacred Majeſty upon the Throne of his Anceſtors, will continue to guard and protect him, and to baffle the Devices of his Enemies. Upon the whole Matter, we think we have fully prov'd the Treaſon and the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment.

We think it may reaſonably be concluded from the Evidence, that the Priſoner has conſpired, conſulted, and agreed to raiſe and levy War within this Kingdom, to depoſe and murder the King; that he has written to and received from his Correſpondents Abroad many Letters to procure foreign Aſſiſtance for that Purpoſe; and the Court will inform you, Gentlemen, that this is Treaſon in the Priſoner at the Bar.

L. C. Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, Francis Francia ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon, for compaſſing and imagining the King's Death; contriving to depoſe him from the Throne, and to advance the Pretender to the Crown. And there are laid in the Indictment ſeveral Overt-Acts; one is, that he conſulted and agreed to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt the King: And that for that Purpoſe he wrote Letters to divers Foreigners, to ſollicit and procure Arms, Men and Money, and to cauſe an Invaſion; and cauſed thoſe Letters to be ſent to divers Foreigners in France.

This is the Subſtance of the Indictment, and to prove this, it has been ſhewn you how he was taken and ſeized. And Mr. Smith tells you, it was upon the Nineteenth Day of September, 1715. that he had a Warrant to ſeize him: That he went with another Meſſenger, ſince deceas'd, whoſe Name was Wilcox, and found him and a Woman in Bed. The Priſoner in a little time got up. He tells you there was a Cloſet in the Room, the Door whereof he caus'd to be open'd, and in it, upon a Shelf, found a Parcel of Letters lying open in Folio, wrote in French, and a Book, that has been produced, lying upon the Deſk. He put up the Letters and the Book together; when he had ſo done, ſays the Priſoner, What do you take that Book for? That is my Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correſpondents, and there is nothing material in that. The Meſſenger took notice of a ſort of Writing at the End of it, that he knew it by again, and the Priſoner ſaid, That was his Son's Writing. It has been deduced to you, that the Book and the Letters that have been produced to you, are the ſame Book and Letters that were ſeized in the Priſoner's Houſe, and carried to my Lord Townſhend's Office.

Mr. Walpole tells you on what Day the Warrant was granted, and that the next Day the Book and Papers were deliver'd to him by the Meſſenger; that he look'd over them with Mr. Buckley, and then he carried them to my Lord Townſhend; and that the Priſoner owned the Letters upon his Examination before my Lord, and ſaid, This is my Book of my Letters to my Correſpondents; ſome of them were enter'd by me, and the reſt of them by my Son. This is prov'd to be the ſame Book; and upon peruſal of the Letters, Mr. Walpole proves them to be the ſame that were brought to him by the Meſſenger.

Mr. Buckley ſays, that when theſe Letters were brought to the Office, he read ſeveral of them; and that when Mr. Walpole went to Holland, they were left with him, and he copied ſeveral Paſſages out of them. Mr. Buckley was preſent at the Priſoner's Examination, but can't ſay any thing as to the Book's being ſhewn to him, becauſe he was buſy in taking the Examination; but ſays, that Francia, upon his Examination, would not be ſworn upon a New Teſtament; but took a Book out of his Pocket, and was ſworn upon that, that his Examination was true. He ſubſcribed his Name to it, and it was read over to him. It was objected, that he was refuſed the Liberty of reading it: But there was no ſuch Thing; he might have read it, and it was read to him, and he was never refuſed to read it.

My Lord Townſhend informs you, that he having received an Information, that a Correſpondence was carried on between the Duke D'Aumont, the late Duke of Ormond, and Mr. Harvey, and that Letters paſt between them by means of the Priſoner, there were Orders ſent to the Poſt-Office, to ſtop all Letters directed to Francia; that the Priſoner being examin'd before my Lord, own'd all theſe Letters. And ſays he, As to my own Letters, I appeal to my Book which will ſhew them, theſe are ſo many Evidences, that he own'd this Book to be the Book of his Letters. What others write to me, ſays he, can't affect me; but as for my own Letters I appeal to my Book. My Lord ſays, there ſeem'd to be a Diſpoſition in him to tell all he knew, and he offer'd to explain the Letters there produced; that at the next Time Mr. Harvey's Letter was produced, and he explain'd the Figures in that Letter; and my Lord Townſhend then took him to be ſincere, but he found afterwards, that he had not diſcover'd all he knew. Theſe Letters were laid upon the Table during the Time of the Examination, and were taken back again. The Priſoner ask'd ſeveral Queſtions about Money being given him, and more offer'd to him, by my Lord Townſhend. My Lord gave an Account of that, and ſays, that the Priſoner pretended to be in a miſerable Condition, his Wife ſtarving, and he begg'd hard for ſomething, pretending to be miſerably poor; and as he was going away, as meer Alms, my Lord gave him three, or four, or five Guineas, not as any Encouragement to him to ſwear any Thing, but as meer Alms, becauſe he begg'd ſo hard, and pretended to be in ſo miſerable a Condition. Then he deſired to know, whether it was not promis'd him, that his Examination ſhould not be produced againſt him. He was told, that if he was candid there ſhould be no Advantage taken againſt him, and that my Lord would intercede on his Behalf; and if he had been ſo, no doubt, my Lord would have done what he could to incline the King to be favourable to him; but after this, my Lord found he knew a great deal more than he would diſcover. His Wife came indeed to my Lord, and pretended ſhe could prevail upon him to diſcover, if ſhe might be admitted to him; but after this, when he was in Newgate, a Letter was found directed to his Wife, in which he ſaid, he met with good Company in Newgate, and hoped he had ſaid nothing againſt Mr. Harvey which would prejudice him; and upon this, my Lord Townſhend did not think him ſo ſincere as he pretended to be at firſt. Mr. Buckley proves that Letter to be of his Hand-Writing. In it he deſires his Wife to make herſelf eaſy, They were all Tories that were there; he had good Company, and the Buſineſs will be at an End in a Fortnight. What Buſineſs could he mean? Nothing but that about which the Correſpondence was, and God will aſſiſt us; I know nothing againſt Mr. Harvey, he is only ſuſpected to be for the Affair, he was well known to be ſo before; and if all were here that are ſo, he believed three Parts of the Nation would be there. So that he had a good Opinion of the Cauſe, and that it would be over in a Fortnight.

This

This Examination was alſo prov'd by Mr. Stanhope, who ſays, that the Letter of Mr. Harvey annexed to it, was produced at Council to Mr. Harvey; that he was in the utmoſt Confuſion, chang'd Countenance, deſir'd to withdraw, and to have liberty to ſpeak to a certain Lord: My Lord Townſhend, and Mr. Stanhope, both thought him in a good Diſpoſition to diſcover, but that very Night he ſtabb'd himſelf. As to the Examination, he pretended he was not ſuffer'd to read it; but Mr. Stanhope ſays, that every thing of Conſideration was repeated more than once or twice; and after the firſt Night's Examination, he repreſented himſelf to be in a miſerable Condition, and thereupon my Lord Townſhend did give him ſome Money, what it was he knows not; and this was after he had ſign'd his Examination, and ſhew'd no reluctancy to it; and ſays, that he would not have been denied to have read it, if he had deſir'd it. This Examination being thus proved, it appears to have been taken as fairly and carefully in all reſpects, and with as much Kindneſs to the Priſoner as could be: Things were gone over and over again. It has been read, and there are ſome things in it that explain this Correſpondence, and tell you how it was begun and carried on.

It was begun by means of a Law-Suit that was recommended to him to manage here, and that brought on the Correſpondence between him and the Abbot Butler: This begun a little before the Queen's Death, and it continued 'till within a few Days of the Priſoner's Examination. During that Correſpondence he received ſeveral Letters from the Abbot, directed to Mr. Harvey, and ſeveral were convey'd to the Abbot from Mr. Harvey, which were ſometimes brought by Mr. Harvey himſelf, and ſometimes ſent by other Hands. The Priſoner alſo explains the initial Letters and Numbers in Mr. Harvey's Letter, and then tells you, that he believes the Subject Matter of the Letters wrote to Mr. Harvey, by Payen alias D'Aulmay, was the Deſign of the Pretender to invade theſe Kingdoms; this he could not know unleſs he had been privy to the Deſign. If a Man is privy to a treaſonable Deſign, and contributes to carrying it on, it is not then barely a Miſpriſion: If he comes to the Knowledge of Treaſon, without being otherwiſe concern'd in it, and does not diſcover it to a Magiſtrate, this is Miſpriſion of Treaſon; but if he aſſents to the Treaſon, or acts in carrying it on, it is High-Treaſon.

In the next Examination it is, that he ſhews what the Marks in Mr. Harvey's Letter ſignify: That 22 is the Duke D'Aumont, 6 the French King, 17 is the Word Tory, and believes that by 8 is to be underſtood the Pretender, and by 9 is to be underſtood his Majeſty. There are ſome Marks that he don't know, but his knowing thus far the Signification of theſe Marks, ſhews that he was privy to the Deſign.

Mr. Harvey's Letter is annex'd to this Examination, and that has been read to you; there are ſome Things remarkable in that Letter, tho' a great part of it ſeems to be about ſome Money that he wanted to be paid him; yet at the end he ſays, Preſs 22 to think of his Friends; it will be well for 6; all Things look well for 8, and in my heart, I think better than ever; 9, ſays he, Every Day loſes himſelf, and for the 24000 that makes for 8 and 6, that is, for the Pretender and the French King. He ſays, that opening the Cover the Letter ſtuck to the Seal, and that was the reaſon that he kept it by him, and did not ſend it forward. If this Man had not been for carrying on the Deſign, it had been his Duty to have carried this Letter to the Secretary of State, he ought to have diſcover'd it to a Magiſtrate; but inſtead of that, he owns, that he has ſince written other Letters that have been read to you.

At the beginning of the Correſpondence D'Aulmay deſires to have ſome News, and Francia tells him, there was a Diſcourſe of a Marriage in Forwardneſs between the Prince at Lorrain and the Arch-Dutcheſs. " Let me know, ſays he, what " is in it, for it is for the Intereſt of your Wife, " for he had married a Wife whoſe Name was " Butler. D'Aulmay writes word again, As for " the Marriage of the C——r St. G——e; but it is in Anſwer to the former Letter, and it is known that he was called by the Name of the Chevalier St. George; ſo that it muſt be the ſame Perſon. He ſays, there had been ſome talk of that Marriage, but no mention had been made of it lately, I am of Opinion, ſays he, that it will not be a ſure way to bring his Affairs to a happy Iſſue; a Party War would be of more Advantage. Francia writes again to D'Aulmay, and complains, that ſome Letters had not been anſwered, tho' entirely for the Affair. And what that Affair is, muſt be left to you to judge. Beſides, ſays he, I muſt tell you, that Perſons of Fifty or Sixty Thouſand Crowns a Year won't run the Hazard of loſing ſuch Eſtates unleſs more Encouragement is given them; you will be underſtood if you mention it to that Lord. And I muſt add, that the Misfortune of a certain Perſon is more owing to your Delays on the other Side the Water, than to the Party that is againſt him. They would have you think, that by Perſons of Fifty or Sixty Thouſand Crowns a Year, was meant a Perſon in France, that had ſuffered by being concern'd in the Revenues; but it is plain, it is meant of Perſons here, that would not Hazard their Eſtates: And he adds, You will be underſtood if you mention this to Duke D'Aumont.

There are other Letters from the Priſoner; in one he tells D'Aulmay, He would adviſe them to ſatisfy Mr. Harvey, I am perſuaded to deal with him as has been done is no good Policy; and if ever I have the Honour to talk face to face with you, I will ſhew you clearly, how unhappily, thro' Negligences, very important Affairs have miſcarried; this muſt be the Affair of the Pretender, and not of the Law-Suit. The Affair that concern'd Mr. Harvey, for Mr. Harvey had nothing to do with the Law-Suit, but by his Letter ſhews himſelf to be concern'd for what makes for 8 and 6, that is, for the Pretender and French King.

There is another Letter from Francia, wherein he writes, What you tell me at the end of your Letter, of your having ſpoken in the manner I deſir'd you, is ſufficient, and conſequently we are now to expect every Thing from your Side of the Water, that is to ſay, Explications, &c. I muſt leave it to you, to conſider what he meant by that.

In another Letter he ſays, I am order'd to tell you, on the part of Mr. Harvey, that you will do him a Pleaſure in deſiring the Duke D'Aumont, in his Name, to ſend hither ſome Perſons to fetch the Horſes and Dogs he has had ſo long, or elſe to ſend Orders to ſome Body to take them: Affairs are here in ſuch a Situation, that great Precautions muſt be uſed to avoid giving Umbrage to thoſe who are in Power. When I have any thing particular to write to you, I will do it by a ſtrange Hand, and will ſign Jacques Chrêtien. Take Notice of this, and provided you let me know you received this Letter, without its having been opened, I ſhall be eaſy. There then began to be more Difficulty, and therefore the Correſpondence muſt be carried on in that Name, and in a ſtrange Hand.

In another Letter he writes, Mr. Harvey gives his Service to you, and bid me tell you, when any thing new offers, if he cannot write himſelf, he will get J. C. to write for him. That muſt be Jacques Chrêtien.

Then there are other Letters from D'Aulmay to Francia, which were found in the Priſoner's Cuſtody; and ſeveral of them import his having received Letters from Francia. In one of them D'Aulmay ſays, You are in the right to inveigh againſt the Indolence you reproach us with; but be perſuaded, 'tis only ſo in Appearance. I even hope, that by this Time, you have convincing Proofs of it, and that ſuitable Returns are made to the good Diſpoſitions of your ſide. This grew near the Time of the Rebellion. This Letter was dated the 7th of Auguſt, and the Rebellion broke out in October. He goes on, And that at laſt, God Bleſſing the juſt Cauſe of our Friend, will let him gain his Suit; at leaſt, Aſſiſtance and powerful Sollicitations ſhall not be wanting.

There are other Letters which ſhew he knew the Deſign, and was privy to it; Our Friend's Cauſe will ſoon be ready, God willing, to be tried. That could not be the Law-Suit depending on this ſide the Water; for that Letter was wrote from France; and he ſays, All Preparations are making for it. The Friend who is related to my Wife, that is, the Duke of Ormond, has read your two Letters, and is mightily pleas'd with them. Which implies, that he had wrote Letters, tho' they are not entered in the Copy-book.

Then he writes upon the 24th of Auguſt, under the Name of Payen; I am very much aſtoniſh'd I did not hear from you by the Poſt which arriv'd Yeſterday. Our Friend was at my Houſe expecting it. We both of us deſire you not to let one Poſt go without writing to us, and letting us know all that paſſes relating to the Cauſe of our Common Friend. That can't be the Cauſe of Butler's or D'Aulmay's Friend that was depending here. There are ſeveral other Letters which have been read to you, which mention both thoſe Cauſes, and ſhew that he made a Diſtinction between them.

On the 14th of September, ſays D'Aulmay, The Contents of your laſt without a Date were very agreeable to me, as well as to all our Friends, who give you Thanks for it, and have order'd me to tell you ſo, and to deſire you to continue. We know already Part of what you tell us about the Cauſe of our Friend, which will ſoon end (pleaſe God) to his Satisfaction, or all Appearances would deceive us. As to my own Cauſe, I can't help telling you, that my Fate is very unhappy to have to do with ſo diſhoneſt a Man.

I think this is the Subſtance of moſt of the Letters that have been read to you, which relate to his Correſpondence, in endeavouring to procure the Pretender to make an Invaſion here.

Upon theſe Letters it has been obſerv'd, that the Cauſe of the Pretender is one, and the Cauſe of the Law-Suit is another; but in all theſe Letters there is plain Mention made of the Pretender; adviſing how to bring it on, and giving Intelligence about it. And theſe Letters being in the Priſoner's Cuſtody, and written to him, and having ſuch Treaſon in them as is mentioned; and he keeping theſe Letters by him, is a great Evidence that he aſſented to the Tranſaction, and to the endeavouring to bring the Pretender over, and to contrive, as well as he could, to carry on the Affair. If he had receiv'd but one Letter, and did not deſign to promote the Cauſe, he ſhould have carried it to the Secretary of State, and then he had done his Duty. But to receive ſo many Letters, and to keep them ſo long, is an Evidence that he aſſented to the Matter, and that he did write ſuch Letters as are mentioned to be received from him.

On the Behalf of the Defendant, there was an Objection made by his Counſel, that the Defendant is an Alien born; and that is an Objection to the Indictment. He is indicted as a natural born Subject, and they have examined ſeveral Witneſſes to prove him an Alien. The Proof is ſtrong, and you will find him an Alien, and ſo that matter muſt be left ſpecially for the Judgment of the Court, and you muſt find the other Fact: And if you believe that he did promote the Invaſion, or conceal and aſſent to that Deſign, that is, a conſpiring the Death of the King, then he will be guilty of the Treaſon charg'd in the Indictment.

It has been objected, that in one of the Letters, the Perſon who wrote thoſe Letters complains, that he had not heard of the Priſoner in three Months; but that is a Miſtake, for that was in a Poſtſcript wrote by another Perſon, and in a different Hand; for the very ſame Letter ſhews, that there were Letters received from him within that Time.

They ſay, there is no direct Proof that he intended the Life of the King; but if he kept a Correſpondence, and promoted the intended Invaſion, that is in Law conſpiring the Death of the King.

They have produced ſome People who have given an extraordinary ſort of Evidence, of what Mr. Buckley and my Lord Townſhend ſhould ſay about this Matter, as if they promiſed him great Things, if he would ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey. Simon Francia ſaid, that Mr. Buckley told him, if his Brother would ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey, he ſhould have a good Reward; and that my Lord Townſhend ſaid, he had given him Five Guineas, and he ſhould have more.

Lucy White ſaid, that ſhe was in Newgate, and Francia deſir'd her to conceal her ſelf when Mr. Buckley came: That Mr. Buckley told him, he muſt ſwear right or wrong for the Government; and if he did not ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey, Mr. Buckley would charge him with High-Treaſon, for he had cheated my Lord Townſhend of his Money, and done nothing for it.

Mary Meggiſon ſwears, that Mr. Buckley ſhould ſay, he would ſwear againſt him, becauſe he had cheated my Lord Townſhend of Five Guineas, and would not ſwear againſt Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Buckley was called again, and he denies it: He ſays there was no ſuch Thing. And it ſeems improbable that a Man of his Credit ſhould talk thus to the Priſoner; therefore the Credit of Mr. Buckley muſt be left to you, againſt the Credit of thoſe two Women. He tells you that Francia ſent to him, to deſire to ſpeak with him, not about Mr. Harvey, but on Behalf of one Flint, who is a Priſoner in Newgate, and was concern'd in writing the Shift Shifted; and Francia ſent a Meſſage to Mr. Buckley, that he could do a Service in ſuppreſſing it. Mr. Buckley went to him, and he deſired ſome Favour on Behalf of Flint, which was granted: And Mr. Buckley denies he had any Diſcourſe with the Priſoner about Mr. Harvey.

Francia

Revell was called, and he proves, that Francia ſent him to Mr. Buckley, to deſire he might ſpeak to him. That he order'd Revell to ſtand at the Door, and he did ſo, but did not hear what they ſaid.

My Lord Townſhend tells you, that Mr. Buckley gave him an Account, that Francia had ſent to him, for the Purpoſe which he mentioned before: That my Lord ordered him to go: That he went accordingly, and he gave my Lord an Account what he had done about the Matter, and Flint had ſome Favour ſhewn him.

As to Simon Francia, my Lord ſays, he was ſeveral Times with him, but my Lord never propoſed any Reward for Swearing againſt Mr. Harvey; but told him, his Brother muſt deal openly, and tell all he knew, and that was the way to recommend himſelf to Favour.

As to the two Women, their Credit muſt be left in Oppoſition to my Lord Townſhend and Mr. Buckley, which of them you will believe, for they deny what the others have ſworn.

Then they call another Witneſs Everall, he tells you, that the Priſoner's Foreign Letters were brought to his Houſe; that they lay in an open Window, and ſometimes remained there ſome Days, and any Body might ſee them; and from thence they infer that they muſt be of no great Conſequence: But how can you infer that? Who can tell by the Superſcription of a Letter who it comes from, or what are the Contents of it; but theſe People can't ſay that theſe were all the Letters that were ſent to him.

There is an Objection made to the Book; a Witneſs ſays, he has look'd upon it, and that none of the Book ſeems to be of his Hand-writing; he ſays, Francia writes a fuller Hand. Simon Francia has look'd upon it, and ſays, not a Syllable is of his Writing; and others tell you, they believe it is not his Hand, and that he was three Months lame of a Rheumatiſm. As for that, it is not material whoſe Writing it is, if it contains the Copies of his Letters, and he has owned before three Witneſſes, That it is the Copy-book of his Letters.

Dr. Cade tells you he was ill, and thence they infer, that it is not probable that he ſhould write Letters ſo conſtantly as he did. He tells you, that from the Second of November 1714. to the Eighteenth of the ſame Month, he was in pain in one of his Hands, but does not know which of them, nor whether he was able to write: But this was before this Correſpondence by Letters that have been read to you began.

Then they call ſome Witneſſes to his Reputation: One tells you, that in Diſcourſe with him about the late Peace, he ſaid, it would ruin the Nation; that ſort of Evidence is of no Signification. Mr. Slater has known him four or five Years; there was a Commiſſion of Bankruptcy againſt him, on which Occaſion he became acquainted with him. He ſays, he always ſeem'd to eſpouſe the Intereſt of the King of France, but he always laugh'd at our Parties among our ſelves. Thoſe that were for the Intereſt of France, would of Conſequence laugh at our Diviſions.

Richardſon ſays, that he uſed to go to the Priſoner often in his Sickneſs, and knows no harm of him: That Francia liked him, and called him Vulcan, and bid him drink King George's Health, and drank it himſelf.

This is the Subſtance of the Evidence that has been given on both Sides: Now, if you believe theſe Letters were wrote to him and by him, and that they contain a Correſpondence of a treaſonable Nature, inciting or incouraging any Perſons to levy War againſt the King, or any thing which ſhews that he was privy and aſſenting to it, then he is guilty of High-Treaſon. If you don't believe thoſe Letters were his, or that they don't amount to ſuch a Correſpondence, then you muſt acquit him.

If you find him Guilty, then you muſt alſo find that he was born in France, and is an Alien.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict; and when they returned into Court were called over, and anſwer'd to their Names.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Francis Francia, Hold up thy Hand.

Which he did.

Look upon the Priſoner, how ſay you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Whereupon the Priſoner was diſcharg'd.

CLXXXV. Proceedings in Parliament againſt Robert Earl of Oxford, upon an Impeachment for High-Treaſon, and other High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, June 24, &c. 1717. 3 Geo. I.

THE Earl of Oxford having been impeached by the Houſe of Commons, and been confin'd near two Years in the Tower, without being brought to a Trial, preſented a Petition to the Houſe of Lords, ſetting forth his long Confinement, ſubmitting his Caſe to their Lordſhips Conſideration, and praying that his Impriſonment might not be indefinite.

Upon this Petition ſome of the Lords urged, That the Impeachment was ipſo facto deſtroyed and determin'd, ſince he was not brought to Trial the ſame Seſſion in which he was impeach'd, and that the Prorogation was an actual Superſedeas to the whole Proceedings; however, the Vote of the Houſe paſs'd to the contrary, and the Earl of Nottingham, who had inſiſted ſtrenuouſly upon it, enter'd his Proteſtation againſt it.

This being over-ruled the Duke of Buckingham moved to appoint a ſhort Day for the Earl's Trial, which after ſome Debates was fix'd for the 13th of June, and afterwards at the Deſire of the Houſe of Commons was deferr'd till Monday the 24th, on which Day the Lords came from their Houſe at twelve o' the Clock in their Robes and went into the Court in Weſtminſter-Hall, in their uſual Order.

The Lords being ſeated in their Places, (and the Commons in a Committee of the whole Houſe being in their Seats, and the Managers for the Houſe being alſo in Places appointed for them;)

The Houſe was reſumed.

Then Proclamation was made as follows, viz.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth ſtrictly charge and command all Manner of Perſons to keep Silence, on Pain of Impriſonment.

Then the Commiſſion for appointing a Lord High-Steward was (after three Reverences made in coming up from the Clerk's Table) preſented to the Lord High-Steward ſitting upon the Woolſack, by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on his Knee; and the ſame being brought to the Table, Proclamation was again made for keeping Silence.

William Lord Cowper. L. H. Steward. My Lords, his Majeſty's Commiſſion is about to be read; your Lordſhips are deſired to attend to it in the uſual Manner, and all others are likewiſe to ſtand up uncovered while the Commiſſion is reading.

Then the ſaid Commiſſion was read (all the Lords and others ſtanding up uncovered) as follows.

Then the Herald and Black-Rod, making three Reverences as they came up, preſented, kneeling, the Staff to the Lord High-Steward; who thereupon ſtanding up, made a Reverence to the Lords; and then, being attended by the Herald, Black-Rod, and Purſe-Bearer carrying the Purſe, proceeded to the Chair placed on the ſecond Step of the Throne.

Who having again made a Reverence to the Lords, he ſeated himſelf in the ſaid Chair, and gave the Staff to the Black-Rod on his Right-Hand, the Purſe-Bearer ſtanding on his Left.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. (as before.)

Lord High-Steward. Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower of London to bring the Priſoner to the Bar.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Priſoner to the Bar, according to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

Then the Earl of Oxford came to the Bar, and kneeled for ſome time.

L. H. Steward. Your Lordſhip may riſe.

Then the Earl of Oxford roſe up.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. (as before.)

L. H. Steward. Clerk read the Articles of Impeachment.

The Clerk read the Articles, as followeth.

ARTICLES of Impeachment of High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours, againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer.

WHEREAS many ſolemn Treaties and Alliances have been formerly entred into between the Crown of England, and other Princes and Potentates of Europe, for their mutual Safety, and from the Conſiderations of the common Danger, which threaten'd all Chriſtendom, from the immoderate Growth of the Power of France. And whereas the preventing the Monarchy of Spain from coming into the Hands of the Houſe of Bourbon, has for many Years been a fundamental Principle and Maxim of Union among the Allies, in order to preſerve a juſt Ballance of Power in Europe: And to that end, as the Deſigns of France on the Monarchy of Spain have from time to time appear'd, new Treaties and expreſs Stipulations have been enter'd into amongſt the Allies, to ſtrengthen themſelves againſt that approaching Danger: And, on this Foundation, a Treaty for an intended Partition, whereby a ſmall Part only of the Dominions of the Crown of Spain was allotted to the Houſe of Bourbon, was condemned by the Wiſdom of Parliament, as being highly prejudicial, and fatal in its Conſequences to England, and the Peace of Europe: And whereas the Duke of Anjou, Grandſon to the King of France, on the Demiſe of Charles the Second, King of Spain, took Poſſeſſion of the entire Monarchy of Spain, whereby the Ballance of Power, the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of Europe were threaten'd with immediate Danger; whereupon Leopold, then Emperor of Germany, his late Majeſty King William the Third, of ever-glorious Memory, and the States-General of the United-Provinces, finding at that moſt critical Juncture, that a ſtrict Conjunction and Alliance between themſelves was become neceſſary, for repelling the Greatneſs of the Common Danger, from ſo great an Acceſſion of Power to the then common Enemy, did, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and One, make, form, and conclude a new Treaty and Alliance, whereby it was agreed, That there ſhall be and continue between the ſaid Confederates, his ſacred Imperial Majeſty, his ſacred Royal Majeſty of Great Britain, and the Lords the States-General of the United-Provinces, a conſtant, perpetual, and inviolable Friendſhip and Correſpondence, and that each Party ſhall be obliged to promote the Advantages of the other, and prevent all Inconveniencies and Dangers that might happen to them, as far as lies in their Power: That the ſaid Allies, deſiring nothing more earneſtly than the Peace and general Quiet of all Europe, have adjudged that nothing can be more effectual for the Eſtabliſhment thereof, than the procuring an equitable and reaſonable Satisfaction to his Imperial Majeſty for his Pretenſion to the Spaniſh Succeſſion, and that the King of Great Britain and the States-General may obtain a particular and ſufficient Security for their Kingdoms, Provinces and Dominions, and for the Navigation and Commerce of their Subjects: That the ſaid Confederates therefore ſhall, in the firſt Place, endeavour, by amicable Means, to obtain the ſaid Satisfaction; but if, contrary to their Expectation and Wiſhes, the ſame is not had, the ſaid Confederates do engage and promiſe to one another, that they will aſſiſt each other with all their Forces according to a Specification to be agreed upon in a peculiar Convention for that purpoſe: That the Confederates, in order to the procuring the Satisfaction and Security aforeſaid, ſhall, amongſt other Things, uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to recover the Provinces of the Spaniſh Low-Countries, that they may be a Fence and Rampart, commonly called a Barrier, ſeparating and dividing France from the United Provinces, for the Security of the States-General, as they have ſerv'd in all Times, till of late that the moſt Chriſtian King has ſeiz'd them by his Forces; as likewiſe the Dutchy of Milan, with its Dependencies, as a Fief of the Empire, and contributing to the Security of his Imperial Majeſty's hereditary Dominions; beſides the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, and the Lands and Iſlands upon the Coaſt of Tuſcany in the Mediterranean, that belonged to the Spaniſh Dominions, and may ſerve to the ſame Purpoſe, and will be alſo of Advantage to the Navigation and Commerce of the Subjects of the King of Great Britain, and of the United-Provinces: That in caſe the Confederates ſhall be forced to enter into a War, for obtaining the Satisfaction aforeſaid for his Imperial Majeſty, and the Security of his Majeſty of Great Britain, and the States-General, they ſhall communicate their Deſigns to one another, as well in Relation to the Actions of the War, as all other Things wherein the common Cauſe is concerned: That it ſhall not be permitted to either Party, when the War is once begun, to treat of Peace with the Enemy, unleſs jointly, and by a Communication of Counſels; and no Peace ſhall be made, unleſs an equitable and reaſonable Satisfaction for his Imperial Majeſty and the particular Security of the Kingdoms, Provinces, Dominions, Navigations and Commerce for his Majeſty of Great Britain, and the States-General, be firſt obtained; and unleſs Care be taken, by fitting Security, that the Kingdoms of France and Spain ſhall never come and be united under the ſame Government, nor that one and the ſame Perſon ſhall be King of both Kingdoms; and particularly that the French ſhall never get into the Poſſeſſion of the Spaniſh Indies, neither ſhall they be permitted to ſail thither on the Account of Traffick, directly or indi-indirectly, on any Pretence whatsoever: And lastly, unless full Liberty be granted unto the Subjects of the King of Great Britain, and the States-General, to exercise and enjoy all the same Privileges, Rights, Immunities, and Franchises of Commerce by Sea and Land in Spain, the Mediterranean, and all Lands and Places which the King of Spain last deceased did possess at the Time of his Death, as well in Europe as elsewhere, which they used and enjoyed, or which the Subjects of both, or either of them, by any Right acquired by Treaties, Agreements, Customs, or any other Way whatsoever, might have used and enjoyed before the Death of the late King of Spain: That at the same Time that the said Agreement or Peace shall be made, the Confederates shall agree amongst themselves about all the Things that they shall think necessary for maintaining the Navigation and Commerce of the Subjects of his Majesty of Great Britain, and the States-General, in the Lands and Dominions they may acquire, and that were possessed by the late deceased King of Spain, and also in what manner the States-General may be secured by the aforesaid Fence or Barrier. And whereas his said late Majesty King William, and the States-General, seriously considering, that France was then become so formidable from the Accession of Spain to the Duke of Anjou, that, in the Opinion of all the World, Europe was in Danger of losing her Liberty, and undergoing the heavy Yoke of Universal Monarchy, and that the surest Means of effecting that Design, were to divide the King of Great Britain from the States-General, for which Purpose all imaginable Efforts would be made; they therefore thought it necessary to unite in the strictest Manner that was possible, and to that End a Defensive Treaty and Alliance was concluded and entered into between them, in or about the Month of November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and One, wherein it was, among other Things, agreed, That in case the said High Allies should be jointly engaged in War, by Reason of this Defensive Alliance before-mentioned in the fifth Article, or on any other Account, there shall be an Offensive, and Defensive, and Perpetual Alliance between them, against those with whom the War shall be, and all their Forces shall be employed by Sea and Land, and they shall act in conjunction or separately, as it shall be agreed between them. That since, in the Alliance with the Emperor made in September last, particular Care was taken of the Recovery of the Spanish Low-Countries, out of the Hands of the most Christian King, the said Confederates expressly engage to aid one another with all their Forces for the Recovery of the same. And in regard the principal Interest of the said Confederates consists in the Preservation of the Liberties of Europe, the beforementioned Treaty with the Emperor shall be faithfully and sincerely executed, and both Sides shall guaranty the same, and use their Endeavours to confirm and render it more strong from Time to Time: That in making Peace, particular Care shall be taken of the Commerce and Traffick of both Nations, as also for their Security, as well in regard to the Low-Countries, as the Countries adjacent: That when the War is begun, the Confederates shall act in concert, according to the seventh and eighth Articles of the Treaty of the Third of March, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Six Hundred Seventy Seven-Eight, between England and Holland, which is hereby renewed and confirmed; and no Peace, nor Truce, or Suspension of Arms, shall be negotiated or made, but according to the ninth and tenth Articles of that Treaty; by which it was agreed, that when the two Allies come once to an open War, it shall be lawful for neither of them afterwards to come to any Cessation of Arms with him who shall be declar'd and proclaim'd an Enemy, without it be done conjointly, and with common Consent: That no Negotiation of Peace shall be set on Foot by one of the Allies, without the Concurrence of the other: That each Ally shall continually, and from Time to Time, impart to the other every thing that passes in the said Negotiation, and shall stipulate with the common Enemy for the same Rights, Immunities, Exemptions and Prerogatives for his Ally, as he does for himself, if so be the said Allies do not agree to the contrary. And whereas the French King having got Possession of a great Part of the Spanish Dominions, exercised an absolute Authority over that Monarchy, having seized Milan and the Spanish Low-Countries by his Armies, and made himself Master of Cadiz, of the Entrance into the Mediterranean, and of the Ports of the Spanish West-Indies by his Fleets, every where designing to invade the Liberties of Europe, and to obstruct the Freedom of Navigation and Commerce; and instead of giving the Satisfaction that ought justly to be expected, had proceeded to further Violences, and had taken on him to declare the pretended Prince of Wales King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and had also influenced Spain to concur in the same Affront; her late Majesty Queen Anne taking notice, that she found herself obliged, for maintaining the Publick Faith, or vindicating the Honour of the Crown, and to prevent the Mischiefs which all Europe was threaten'd with, to declare War against France and Spain; did accordingly, in the Month of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Two, in the most publick and solemn Manner, declare War against France and Spain; and in the said Declaration, placing her entire Confidence in the Help of Almighty God, in so just and necessary an Undertaking, declared, That she would, in conjunction with her Allies, vigorously prosecute the same both by Sea and Land, being assured of the ready Concurrence of her Subjects, in a Cause they had so openly and heartily espoused. And his Imperial Majesty and their High Mightinesses, pursuant to the Treaties aforementioned respectively, in or about the said Month of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Two, did likewise declare War against France and Spain. And whereas the Kings of Portugal and Prussia, the Electors of Hanover, Saxony, Treves, Mentz, Palatine of the Rhine, the Duke of Savoy, the Prince of Hesse, the Dukes of Wolfembuttle, Mecklenburg, and Wirtemburg, the Circles of Suabia and Franconia, and of the Upper Rhine, the Bishops of Munster and Constance, and other Princes and Powers, being invited by the said Grand Alliance, and relying on the Faith thereof, did afterwards become Parties to the said Confederate War against France and Spain; and in the Treaty entered into in or about the Month of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Three, between his Imperial Majesty, the Queen of Great Britain, the States-General, and the King of Portugal, it is, amongst other things, expressly stipulated, that on

no Peace nor Truce shall be made, but by the mutual Consent of all the Confederates; nor shall any at any time be made, whilst the second Grandson of the most Christian King by the Dauphin, or any other Prince of the Line of France continues in Spain, nor unless the Crown of Portugal shall fully possess and enjoy all the Lands, Kingdoms, Isles, Castles, Cities, Towns, &c. with their Territories and Dependencies in Spain, or elsewhere, which it now possesses. And in the Treaty of Nordlingen, ratify'd by her late Majesty, it is, amongst other things, expresly agreed, that it shall not be allow'd to make particular Treaties, but the Peace shall be jointly treated of, and shall not be concluded without obtaining, as far as is possible, the Re-Union of the Lands belonging to the Circles, and until at least the Security of the associated Circles be absolutely provided for, in the best manner that is possible, and better than it has formerly been. And whereas to give the greatest Strength that was possible to the Union, so necessary to both Nations, her late Majesty and the States by a Treaty in the Month of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Three, renewed and confirmed all Treaties and Alliances then subsisting between them; and therein it is, amongst other things, expresly and particularly stipulated, that as the said most serene Queen, and the Lords the States-General are now in War with France and Spain, and are reciprocally bound to assist each other, and mutually to defend, maintain, and preserve their Countries and Subjects in their Possessions, Immunities, and Liberties, as well of Navigation and Commerce, as other Rights whatsoever by Sea and Land, against and in Opposition to all Kings, Princes, and States, and particularly against France and Spain, to the end a just and reasonable Peace may the better be obtained, that may establish the Repose and Tranquillity of Europe, it is agreed between the most Serene Queen of Great Britain, and the said Lords the States-General, that neither of the said Allies shall make a Suspension of Arms, or a Peace with France or Spain, or any other King, Prince, or State, who shall molest or attack either of the said Allies, but in Conjunction and by common Consent. And whereas the said War was for several Years carry'd on with Vigour and Unanimity by her Majesty and her Allies, at a vast Expence both of Blood and Treasure; for the Support of which, on the Part of England, many Millions have been granted by Parliament, who, on many Occasions since, continued not only to express their Sense of the Justice and Necessity of the War, but did frequently give their humble Advice to the Throne, that no Peace could be Safe, Honourable, or Lasting, so long as the Kingdom of Spain and the West-Indies continued in the Possession of any Branch of the House of Bourbon. And whereas it pleased Almighty God to grant to the Confederate Arms, under the Command of their Great and Victorious General the Duke of Marlborough, such unparallel'd Successes as exceeded even their own Hopes and the Fears of the Enemy; and by the many signal Victories of Schellenberg, Hochstet, Audenarde, and Ramellies, as well as by the Conquests of the Electorates of Bavaria and Cologn, and the Reduction of the Spanish Netherlands, and many other great Advantages both by Sea and Land; and by the Wisdom and Unanimity of their Counsels, the Glory of the Confederate Arms, and the Reputation of Great Britain in particular, was rais'd to an higher Pitch than in any former Age. And whereas her late Majesty, in Conjunction with her Allies, wisely foreseeing, that whenever the Enemy should be brought to make Overtures of Peace, the surest way to put an End to the War, and prevent France from putting in Practice her usual Intrigues, was, by previously insisting on such Conditions from France, that nothing might remain to be done in a General Assembly, but to give them the Form of a Treaty; and for these Reasons, a Preliminary Treaty was concluded on, and was afterwards sign'd by the Plenipotentiaries of his Imperial Majesty, of her late Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, and of the Lords the States-General of the United Provinces, and afterwards ratified by their Principals; wherein the Interests of the several Allies were adjusted, in order to a General Treaty of Peace with France: and therein the Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy to the House of Austria, being one of the chief Causes for carrying on the War, is laid down as an immutable Foundation among the Allies. And whereas in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Nine, the King of France having first signify'd his Consent to the Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy to the House of Austria, sent his Ministers to the Hague to treat with the Ministers of the Principal Allies on a General Peace; and in the Conferences held thereupon, the Interests of all the Allies, as adjusted in the said Preliminaries, were positively and expresly agreed to by the Ministers of France, and particularly that of the Restitution of the entire Spanish Monarchy to the House of Austria; and the said Negotiation was afterwards broke, on no other Dispute but on the thirty seventh Article of the Preliminary Treaty, concerning the Time and Manner of evacuating Spain. And whereas the Conferences being resumed at Gertruydenberg, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, the said thirty seventh Article became the only Subject of the Negotiation which was there set on foot, for the finding out some equivalent by which the same Security might be given to the Allies, as they had by the thirty seventh Article of the said Preliminaries; and tho' it was unquestionable, that before any Negotiation was begun, that while the Preliminaries were treating, that by those Preliminaries themselves, that before the last Negotiation was resumed, and all the while it lasted, the Restitution of Spain and the Indies was laid down as a firm and immoveable Foundation of the Negotiation, and no Question remain'd concerning it with the Ministers of the Allies or those of France, but touching the Security for its Execution: And tho' all reasonable and prudent Overtures were made by the Allies for settling an Equivalent, yet the Conferences were broke off by France without any Satisfaction therein. And whereas the sincere Intentions of all the Allies to have settled the Peace of Europe on solid and equitable Foundations were notorious and incontestable, and the Rupture of the said Negotiations could only be imputed to the Enemy; her sacred Majesty, in Conjunction with her Allies, renew'd their Resolutions to continue and push the War with Vigour, and to make all possible Efforts, as the only Means left to force a good and general Peace. And her Majesty in her Speech from the Throne on the Fifteenth of November, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Nine, taking notice of the Endeavours of the Enemy during the ſaid Negotiations, to amuſe and create Jealouſies among the Allies, declared her Reſentment thereat, and earneſtly recommended the carrying on the War, and a vigorous Proſecution of the Advantages obtained, that ſhe might put the laſt Hand to that great Work of reducing the exorbitant and oppreſſive Power which had ſo long threatned the Liberties of Europe. And it having pleaſed Almighty God, after the ſaid Preliminary Treaty, to bleſs the Confederate Army, under the Command of their conſummate General the Duke of Marlborough, with new and ſignal Conqueſts, the Reduction of Tournay, the Victory of Taſnieres, the taking of Mons and Doway, Bethune, St. Venant and Aire, and the Penetrating the Lines near the Scarpe. And whereas, from the proſperous Condition of the Affairs of the Allies, and the Wiſdom, Firmneſs, and Unanimity of their Counſels, nothing remained, in all human Appearance, but that they ſhould reap the Fruits of all their Victories in a ſpeedy, juſt, honourable and laſting Peace; and on the other hand, nothing was left to raiſe the Hopes of the Enemy, whereby to defeat that happy Proſpect, but the Succeſs of their ſecret Endeavours to diſunite the Confederacy. And whereas Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, with other evil-minded Perſons, Enemies to the true Intereſts of their own Country, as well as to the common Liberties and Welfare of Europe, having by many wicked Arts and baſe Inſinuations obtain'd Acceſs to her late Majeſty Queen Anne, and in or about the Months of July or Auguſt One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Ten, being admitted into her Councils, and into Places of the higheſt Truſt, and to make way for their wicked Enterprizes, did, by their evil Council and Advice, prevail on her Majeſty to diſſolve a Parliament which had given the moſt unqueſtionable Proofs of their great Wiſdom, and of their true Zeal for the common Cauſe; for which, as well as for the many Marks of Duty and Affection given to her, her Majeſty return'd her hearty Thanks, and expreſs'd her great Satisfaction. And whereas the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others his Accomplices, had formed a treacherous Correſpondence with the Emiſſaries of France, by means whereof certain Propoſitions were tranſmitted from France to England, ſign'd by Monſieur de Torcy, Secretary of the King of France, in the Month of April One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to be the Baſis of a Treaty of a General Peace; which Propoſitions, tho' her Majeſty was prevail'd on by the falſe Counſels of the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, to receive as a ſufficient Foundation of a Treaty of a General Peace, and as ſuch to communicate them to the Grand Penſionary and the Miniſters of Holland, her Majeſty however was graciouſly pleaſed at the ſame time to declare to them her Pleaſure by her Secretary of State, that being reſolv'd, in making Peace as in making War, to act in perfect Concert with the States, ſhe would not loſe a Moment in tranſmitting a Paper of that Importance; and that tho' the Propoſitions were general, and contain'd an Air of Complaiſance to her Majeſty, and the contrary towards the States; yet that could have no ill Conſequences, as long as her Majeſty and the States underſtood one another, and acted with as little Reſerve as became two Powers ſo nearly ally'd in Intereſt; and that the Penſionary ſhould be aſſured, that that Rule ſhould be inviolably kept on her Part. Which gracious Declaration of her Majeſty, as well as the ſaid Propoſitions, being maturely conſider'd by the Grand Penſionary and the Miniſters of Holland, an Anſwer was return'd from them to her Majeſty, full of Duty and Thankfulneſs for the obliging manner in which ſhe was pleas'd to communicate the ſaid Propoſitions, and with the utmoſt Aſſurances of mutual Confidence, ſo neceſſary to prevent the Deſigns of the Enemy; but more particularly that the States deſired, equally with Great Britain, to have a general, definitive, and laſting Peace, and declar'd that they were ready to join in all the moſt proper Meaſures to procure it; that the Propoſitions were yet too general, and that the States deſire, as Great Britain did, that France would explain herſelf more particularly upon the Points therein contain'd, and impart a Plan which ſhe thinks the moſt proper to ſecure the Intereſt of the Allies, and ſettle the Repoſe of Europe, after which a more particular Negotiation might be enter'd into. Notwithſtanding all which Premiſes,

ARTICLE I.

He the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having no Regard to the Honour or Safety of her late Majeſty or her Kingdoms, or to the many ſolemn Engagements ſhe was then under to the old and faithful Allies of this Nation, or to the common Liberties of Europe; but, being devoted to the Intereſt and Service of the French King, the common Enemy; and being then Lord High-Treaſurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, contrary to his Oath, and in Violation of his Duty and Truſt, and in Defiance of the Tenour of the ſeveral Treaties afore-mention'd, or ſome of them, as well as of the frequent Advices of Parliament, and the many Declarations of her Majeſty from the Throne; but more particularly in Defiance of the ſolemn and mutual Aſſurances which had been ſo lately renew'd between her Majeſty and the States, to act in perfect Concert with them in making Peace as in making War, did on or about the Months of July or Auguſt in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, maliciouſly and wickedly form a moſt treacherous and pernicious Contrivance and Confederacy with other evil-diſpos'd Perſons, then alſo of her Majeſty's Privy-Council, to ſet on Foot a private, ſeparate, diſhonourable, and deſtructive Negotiation of Peace between Great Britain and France, without any Communication thereof to her Majeſty's Allies, according to their ſeveral Treaties; and was not only wanting in his Duty and Truſt to her Majeſty, by not oppoſing, and, as far as was in his Power, by not adviſing her Majeſty againſt going into any private ſeparate Negotiation with France; but in Execution of his Purpoſes aforeſaid, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did adviſe her late Majeſty to ſend Matthew Prior, Eſq; directly to the Court of France, to make Propoſitions of Peace, without communicating the ſame to her Majeſty's Allies. And accordingly the ſaid Matthew Prior, by the Advice and with the Privity of him the ſaid Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and other falſe and evil Counſellors, in or about the Months of July or Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, was ſent in a clandeſtine manner from England to France, and did communicate the ſaid Propoſitions of Peace to the Miniſters of France, in which the particular Intereſts of Great Britain, as well as the common Intereſt of Europe, were ſhamefully betray'd: And in Manifeſtation of his ſaid Deſign to exclude her Majeſty's Allies from their juſt Share in the ſaid Negotiation, an expreſs Article was inſerted in the ſaid Propoſitions, by the Privity and Advice of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, that the Secret ſhould be inviolably kept till allow'd to be divulged by the mutual Conſent of both Parties; although the French King had in the Propoſitions ſigned by Monſieur de Torcy, and tranſmitted in the Month of April preceding, offer'd to treat with the Plenipotentiaries of England and Holland alone, or jointly with thoſe of the Allies, at the Choice of England. By which treacherous and dangerous Advice he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only contrive and ſet on Foot a Negotiation of Peace more advantageous to France than even France it ſelf had aſk'd; but thereby did put it into the Power of the common Enemy to create incurable Jealouſies and Diſcords between her Majeſty and her faithful Allies, and to deſtroy that Confidence which had ſo long and ſo ſucceſsfully been cultivated between them, and which was ſo neceſſary for their common Safety.

ARTICLE II.

That the French King laying hold of the ſaid treacherous Overture, ſet on foot in manner aforeſaid, did in or about the Months of Auguſt or September, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, ſend over Monſieur Meſnager into England to carry on a clandeſtine and ſeparate Negotiation of Peace; which being made known to him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, he did afterwards in the ſaid Month of September One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, ſecretly and unlawfully, without any Colour of Authority, meet, confer, and treat with the ſaid Sieur Meſnager on the Negotiations of Peace between Great Britain and France; and therein he did adviſe and promote the making a private and ſeparate Treaty or Agreement between the ſaid Crowns; which ſaid Treaty or Agreement was afterwards, with the Privity, Conſent, and Advice of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, agreed, concluded on, and ſign'd by the ſaid Sieur Meſnager on the part of France, and by the Earl of Dartmouth and Henry St. John, Eſq; two of her Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State, in Behalf of her late Majeſty, by vertue only of her Majeſty's Sign Manual under the Signet, and without the leaſt Knowledge or Participation of the Allies. In which Treaty the immediate Intereſts even of Great Britain are given up to France, and the Duke of Anjou is admitted to be King of Spain; an expreſs Stipulation being therein made with the Sieur Meſnager in the Name, and (as is therein alledged) purſuant to Powers from King Philip as King of Spain: Whereby he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only aſſume to himſelf Regal Power, in taking upon him to meet and treat with the Enemy without any Authority or Powers from her Majeſty; but did what in him lay to ſubvert the ancient and eſtabliſh'd Conſtitution of the Government of theſe Kingdoms, by introducing illegal and dangerous Methods of tranſacting the moſt important Affairs of the State; and by which private and ſeparate Treaty, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did what in him lay to diſſolve and cancel the many ſolemn Treaties her Majeſty then ſtood engaged in to her good and ancient Allies, and whereby her Majeſty, even before any thing was finally ſettled for the Safety or Advantage of her Kingdoms, was brought to this fatal Dilemma; either to ſubmit to the Dictates of France in the Progreſs of the ſaid Negotiation, or, ſo notorious a Breach of National Faith being divulged by the Enemy, from thence to loſe all future Confidence of her good Allies.

ARTICLE III.

That the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, the better to diſguiſe and carry on the aforeſaid private, ſeparate, and dangerous Negotiation, did, together with other evil-diſpos'd Perſons, then in high Truſt under her Majeſty, contrive and adviſe the preparing and forming a Set of General Preliminaries, intituled, Preliminary Articles on the Part of France, to come to a General Peace; and that the ſame ſhould be ſign'd by the Sieur Meſnager only. And the ſame being ſo prepar'd and ſign'd by the ſaid Sieur Meſnager, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did, contrary to his Duty and Truſt, impiouſly adviſe her Sacred Majeſty that the ſame ſhould be, and accordingly they were receiv'd by her Majeſty, and communicated to the Miniſters of the Allies then reſiding in England, as the Ground of a General Negotiation of Peace; and as if the ſame were the only Tranſactions that had been on this Subject between Great Britain and France. And to this end, the private Treaty, ſign'd as aforeſaid by the Earl of Dartmouth and Mr. St. John on the part of England, and by the ſaid Sieur Meſnager on the part of France, was by the evil Advice and Contrivance of him the ſad Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, wilfully and induſtriouſly conceal'd not only from all the Allies, but even from her Majeſty's Council and her Parliament. And he did further adviſe her Majeſty not only to accept the ſaid General Preliminaries, but in her Name and by her Authority to communicate the ſame to the States-General, as a ſufficient Foundation whereupon to open the Conferences of Peace with France. And the more effectually to cover from the States-General the pernicious Steps which his evil Influence had engag'd her Majeſty in with the common Enemy; certain Inſtructions were prepar'd, and, by his Counſel and Advice, were ſign'd by her Majeſty, and delivered to the Earl of Strafford, her Ambaſſador to the States-General: wherein the ſaid Earl of Strafford is directed to repreſent to the Penſionary of Holland, and to ſuch others as ſhall be appointed to confer with him, that when her Majeſty had receiv'd in May laſt, by his Excellency's Diſpatches, an Account of the Senſe which thoſe among them, who were at that time in the Secret, had of the Overtures made by France for ſetting a general Negotiation of Peace again on Foot, and of the Anſwer which it was deſir'd might be return'd to the Propoſitions ſigned by Monſieur de Torcy; her Majeſty did immediately acquaint the Enemy, that their Offers were thought by her and by the States-General neither particular nor full enough; and therefore that her Majesty did insist, that they should form a distinct Project of such a Peace as they were willing to conclude. Whereas no such Instances had been made to the Enemy on her Majesty's Behalf; but on the contrary, notwithstanding her Majesty had declar'd that the Propositions of Monsieur de Torcy were thought by her and the States-General neither particular nor full enough, yet without any further Explication from the Enemy, her Majesty was prevail'd on, in manner aforesaid, to send over Propositions to France as general and ensnaring, and in all respects as destructive to the Interests of Great Britain and her Allies, as the Propositions of Monsieur de Torcy. And the said General Preliminaries, communicated to the States in manner aforesaid, were calculated only to amuse and deceive them into a General Negotiation with France. And in the Particulars abovesaid, as well as in the several others, the said Instructions contain'd Matters either false or grosly prevaricating and evasive. By which most wicked Counsels of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, that unquestionable Truth and Sacredness which by the Laws of Nations ought to accompany and constitute the Instructions of Publick Ambassadors to Princes in Friendship and Confederacy against the common Enemy, was most vilely prostituted to the most dangerous Purposes, to deceive and mislead her Majesty's good Allies, in Matters of the greatest Importance to their own Interests and the Interests of these Kingdoms; the Honour of her Majesty's sacred Person, and of the Imperial Crown of these Realms, which had been raised to the highest Pitch of Glory abroad, and had been justly held in Veneration with her good Allies, was scandalously debased and betrayed; and the Royal Hand, by the wicked Arts of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, was made the Instrument to advance the Interest of the common Enemy.

ARTICLE IV.

That whereas the Earl of Strafford, pursuant to the said Instructions, had communicated the Preliminaries signed by Monsieur Mesnager only to the States-General, who being justly alarmed at the pressing Instances made on the part of her Majesty, that Conferences should be opened on Propositions as general and uncertain as those so lately offer'd by France, and signed by Monsieur de Torcy; and their High Mightinesses having been unsuccessful in their Remonstrances to the Earl of Strafford against opening the Conferences upon the said Propositions, did send over Monsieur Buys their Ambassador to represent to her Majesty, as well the Hazard of meeting the Ministers of France before the essential Articles were first settled by special Preliminaries, or at least explained by France, and made specifick; as likewise the Advantages to the Enemy, who being but one Body, were influenced by one Council, and directed by one Power; whereas the Confederates consisted of several Powers, whose Interests are not only distinct, but in many Cases contrary to each other, whereby the French would have a fair Opportunity to divide the Allies, when it would be impossible for them to break in upon France; and further to represent, that the Propositions themselves were in some Instances very prejudicial, particularly in the Articles of Commerce, Dunkirk, and the Union of the Crowns of France and Spain. All which Representations of the said Monsieur Buys, by the evil Influence of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, were render'd ineffectual; but in order to prevail upon the States-General to open the Conferences upon the said general Preliminaries, by the Management and Contrivance of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, an Occasion was taken to declare to Monsieur Buys, at a Committee of Council in her Majesty's Name, her constant Affection and good Disposition to their State, and to the promoting their Interest, and to treat with their High Mightinesses with a perfect Confidence and Harmony: And at the same time he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did then falsly and maliciously declare, or was privy to advising and consenting, that it should be, and so it was declared, in her Majesty's Name, that she had made no separate Treaty with France, nor would ever make any before she had fully complied with all Engagements to her Allies, and that each of them should have Opportunity to make good their Pretensions.

By which false, scandalous, and dishonourable Assurances, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only highly dishonour her Majesty, by whose Privity the said separate Treaty with France had been before that Time concluded and signed; but their High Mightinesses, the good Friends and antient Allies of her Majesty, were grosly abused, and thereby induced to enter into a Negotiation with France, so dangerous in itself, and so fatal in its Consequences.

ARTICLE V.

That her sacred Majesty Queen Anne having in due Form of Law, and under her Great Seal, constituted the Right Reverend John Lord Bishop of Bristol, and the Earl of Strafford, her Plenipotentiaries, with full Powers to meet, treat, and conclude with the Plenipotentiaries of the Confederates, and those whom the French King shall on his part depute for that purpose, the Conditions of a good and general Peace, that shall be safe, honourable, and as far as is possible, agreeable to the reasonable Demands of all Parties; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer not contenting himself to abuse the Royal Authority, to the Delusion of the States-General, the nearest Allies of the Queen, but intending the Universal Prejudice of his Imperial Majesty, and all the Allies of these Kingdoms; and thereby the more successfully to carry on the Measures of France, wherein he was then engaged, contrived and prepared Instructions, or was privy to consenting and advising the same, for her Majesty's said Plenipotentiaries, which she was prevailed upon by the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer's evil Counsel to sign, and the same were delivered to the said Plenipotentiaries; wherein among other Things they are instructed to the Effect following, viz. If it shall be thought proper to begin by the Disposition of the Spanish Monarchy, you are to insist that the Security and reasonable Satisfaction which the Allies expect, and which his most Christian Majesty has promised, cannot be obtained, if Spain and the West-Indies be allotted to any Branch of the House of Bourbon: Whereas the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer had at that Time privately and treacherouſly negotiated and agreed with the Miniſters of France, that Spain and the Weſt-Indies ſhould remain in a Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon; and had prevailed on her ſacred Majeſty to be Party to the ſaid private Treaty, wherein the ſame is neceſſarily implied. And the ſaid Plenipotentiaries are further inſtructed, in caſe the Enemy ſhould object, as the Imperial Miniſters had done, that the ſecond Article of the ſeven ſigned by the Sieur Meſnager implies, that the Duke of Anjou ſhall continue on the Throne of Spain; you are to inſiſt, that thoſe Articles, as far as they extend, are indeed binding to France, but that they lay neither us nor our Allies under any poſitive Obligation; whereby the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer baſely entered into a Confederacy and Colluſion even with the Miniſters of the Enemy, and prevailed on her Majeſty to give her Royal Conſent thereto, the more effectually to impoſe on his Imperial Majeſty and all the Allies, and to conceal the ſaid ſecret Negotiations, and the ſeparate Treaty that had then been agreed on between Great Britain and France. And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, not only in the Particulars before-mentioned, but in many others contained in the ſaid Inſtructions, has brought a laſting Reproach on the Crown of theſe Realms, and groſly violated the many Treaties wherein her ſacred Majeſty was then engaged to her Allies, to act in perfect Concert with them throughout the Negotiations of Peace.

ARTICLE VI.

That the Conferences of Peace being opened between the Plenipotentiaries of the Allies, and thoſe of the Enemy, for the negotiating a general Peace upon the mutual and moſt ſolemn Engagements amongſt the Allies, not only to act in perfect Confidence with each other, but to promote their common Intereſt, and to obtain from the Enemy all juſt and reaſonable Satisfaction; and a ſpecifick Explanation of the General Preliminaries having been given by the Enemy at Utrecht, whereon the Allies delivered their reſpective Demands; by the Artifices of France, and the ſecret Encouragement and Concurrence of the Miniſters of Great Britain, the Progreſs of the ſaid publick Negotiation was delayed and kept in ſuſpence, under Pretence of the Enemy's refuſing to give their Anſwer in Writing: During which Time, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer again aſſuming to himſelf Regal Power in Derogation of the Royal Authority, to treat of Peace with France, which was then delegated under the Great Seal of Great Britain to her Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, and for the promoting the Deſigns of the Enemy to the apparent Deſtruction of the common Cauſe of her Majeſty and her Allies, contrary to the known Laws and Conſtitution of this Kingdom, in direct Violation of the ſeveral Alliances her Majeſty then ſtood engaged in, and in Oppoſition to the many Aſſurances given by her Majeſty to act in Concert with her Allies, and in Defiance of the expreſs Inſtructions given to her ſaid Plenipotentiaries, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty, as far as in him lay to have put an end to, and prevented any further private and unlawful Negotiations with France, but did, with others his Accomplices, adviſe, concur, continue, and promote a private, ſeparate, and unjuſtifiable Negotiation of Peace with France, directly from England to France, without any Communication thereof to the Allies; and in ſuch private Negotiations did concert with the Miniſters of the Enemy Terms of Peace highly prejudicial to the Intereſt of her Majeſty and her Kingdoms, and of all her Allies, and whereby the good Effects of the ſaid General Negotiations were entirely defeated.

ARTICLE VII.

That her ſacred Majeſty Queen Anne having been prevailed on by the falſe Counſels of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to accept of a Treaty with France, on the Suppoſition that the Spaniſh Monarchy ſhould continue in the Poſſeſſion of a Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon; and it being acknowledged even by the French King in the General Preliminaries ſigned by Monſieur Meſnager, that the Exceſs of Power from the Re-union of the Crowns of France and Spain would be contrary to the good and general Repoſe of Europe: He the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having nothing ſo much in view as the aggrandizing the common Enemy, yet always intending to cover the Iniquity of his Heart under ſpecious Pretences and falſe Appearances, did wickedly and treacherouſly adviſe and carry on a private and ſeparate Negotiation with France, on the Subject of a Renunciation of his Right to the Kingdom of France by the Duke of Anjou, and that ſuch Renunciation ſhould be the Security againſt the Re-union of the two Kingdoms. And by the Influence of his evil Counſels her Majeſty was prevailed on to accept and finally to conclude and ratify a Treaty of Peace with France, wherein the ſaid Renunciation is taken as a ſufficient Expedient to prevent the Miſchiefs that threaten'd all Europe, in caſe the Crowns of France and Spain ſhould be united upon the Head of one and the ſame Perſon; although he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer well knew, that a Memorial had been, during the ſaid ſeparate Negotiation, tranſmitted by Monſieur de Torcy, Secretary of State and Miniſter to the French King, to one of her Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State; whereby it was declared, that the ſaid Renunciation would be null and invalid by the Fundamental Laws of France, which Laws were looked upon as the Work of him who had eſtabliſhed all Monarchies, and which he only could aboliſh; and that no Renunciation therefore could deſtroy it: And if the King of Spain ſhould renounce, they would deceive themſelves that ſhould receive it as a ſufficient Expedient to prevent the Miſchiefs propoſed to be avoided. By which falſe and treacherous Counſels, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only betray the Intereſts of the common Cauſe into the Hand of the moſt formidable Enemy, but wilfully and maliciouſly abuſed the Power and Influence which he had obtained with her Majeſty, ſo far as to engage her ſacred Majeſty, and the Honour of the Imperial Crown of theſe Kingdoms, to become Party with France in ſo fatal a Deceit.

ARTICLE VIII.

That her late Majeſty Queen Anne having on the Seventh Day of December, in the Year of our Lord

Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, earneſtly recommended it from the Throne, that Proviſion might be made for an early Campaign, in order to carry on the War with Vigour, and as the beſt way to render the Treaty of Peace effectual; in order to which, vaſt Supplies were granted, and Magazines provided at a great Expence for an early Campaign; and in purſuance thereof, her Majeſty having ſent her Generals, Lumley and Cadogan, to give early Aſſurances to her Allies of her ſincere Intentions, and likewiſe expreſly inſtructed her General, the Duke of Ormond, not only to renew the ſame Aſſurances and declare her Reſolutions of puſhing on the War with the utmoſt Vigour, but to concert with the Generals of the Allies the proper Meaſures for entering on Action; and the Confederate Army, which at that Time was the fineſt and ſtrongeſt that had been in the Service during the whole Courſe of the War, and provided with all Neceſſaries to act with Vigour, having march'd, according to the Reſolution taken in Concert with her Majeſty's General, almoſt up to the Enemy, with a great Superiority both as to the Number and Goodneſs of Troops, and animated with a noble Courage and Zeal to acquit themſelves bravely; ſo that in all human Appearance, and with the divine Aſſiſtance, which had appear'd ſo viſibly for them on many other Occaſions, they would have been able, either by Battle or Siege, to have gained great Advantages over the Enemy, to have better'd the Affairs of the Allies, and to have facilitated the Negotiations of Peace: And the Miniſters of France having frequently and earneſtly repreſented to the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others his Accomplices, during their ſecret Negotiations, their juſt Apprehenſions from the Bravery and good Diſpoſition of the Confederate Army; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being truly informed of the ſure Proſpect which, by the Bleſſing of God, the Army of the Confederates then had, of gaining new Conqueſts over the Army of France, and whereby they would have been enabled to have forced Terms of Peace, ſafe, honourable, and laſting: In order to diſappoint thoſe comfortable Expectations of the Allies, and to give Succeſs to his ſecret Negotiations with the Miniſters of France, was privy to, conſenting and adviſing, together with other falſe and evil Counſellors, and together with them did adviſe and conſent, that an Order ſhould be ſent in her Majeſty's Name, to the Duke of Ormond in Flanders, to avoid engaging in any Siege, or hazarding a Battle, till further Orders; although nothing had then been ſettled in the ſaid private Negotiations for the Intereſt and Security of Great Britain; and although Philip King of Spain at that Time had not conſented to the Renunciation of his Right to the Crown of France. And not contenting himſelf with having obtained that fatal Step, ſo highly advantageous to the Cauſe of France, but being wickedly determin'd to do all that in him lay to diſſolve the whole Confederacy, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, with others, was privy to, and did conſent and adviſe, that Orders ſhould be ſent to the Biſhop of Briſtol, one of her Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries then at Utrecht, to take the firſt ſolemn Opportunity to declare to the Dutch Miniſters, that her Majeſty look'd on herſelf from their Conduct to be then under no Obligation whatſoever to them: Which two Declarations giving juſt Alarms to all the Allies, they repreſented to the Biſhop of Briſtol their general Diſſatisfaction, and the inexpreſſible Conſternation they were all in; that theſe Proceedings were the unavoidable Ruin of Europe: They urged Religion, Liberty, and the Faith of Treaties, to ſhew the Enormity of this Uſage; and the States expreſſed their Uneaſineſs on no account ſo much, as that they could not come to the Knowledge of their own Lot. Which Repreſentations the Biſhop of Briſtol did, at the Inſtance of the Allies, ſignify to one of her Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State; but their High Mightineſſes finding that all Applications to the Miniſters of Great Britain, and in particular to the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, were of no avail againſt France, and for the Intereſt of the common Cauſe, thought it neceſſary, in a manner the moſt moving and reſpectful, to addreſs directly to her Majeſty by a Letter of the Fifth of June, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve; therein expreſſing their great Surprize and Affliction at the two Declarations aforementioned; and finding it difficult to conceive how ſuch Declarations, ſo prejudicial to the common Cauſe, given ſo ſuddenly without their Knowledge, and undoubtedly too without the Knowledge of the other Allies, could agree and conſiſt with the Nature of an Alliance, and with thoſe Aſſurances and Engagements her Majeſty had ſo lately made; and not knowing how to reconcile it with the great Goodneſs and Kindneſs which her Majeſty had always honoured them with, and not being able to conceive how ſuch a ſudden Change could happen with reſpect to them, having carefully examined their own Conduct, and finding nothing therein that could have given Ground to her Majeſty's Diſſatisfaction; and having repreſented the viſible and immediate fatal Conſequences of the ſaid two Orders, not only to the common Intereſt of her Majeſty and the States, but to the whole Confederacy and to the Proteſtant Religion; they beſeeched her Majeſty, with all the Reſpect, and all the Earneſtneſs they were capable of, that ſhe would not perſiſt in the Declarations made by the Biſhop of Briſtol, and would be pleaſed to revoke the Orders given to the Duke of Ormond; and would authorize him to act according to Occurrences, and as the Exigency of the War, and the Advancement of the common Cauſe ſhould require. Notwithſtanding which, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being acquainted with the ſaid Repreſentations of the States, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty, and to his Oath, and the great Truſt repoſed in him, in not adviſing, as he ought to have done, her ſacred Majeſty to have hearken'd to the ſaid ſeveral Inſtances made to her; but perſiſting in his deſperate and deſtructive Meaſures for the Advancement of the Intereſt of the common Enemy, did afterwards adviſe her Majeſty to diſregard and reject the ſame; and did countenance, encourage, adviſe, and promote the ſaid private, ſeparate, and wicked Negotiations with France, without any Participation of the Allies, contrary to all her Majeſty's Engagements, and to the apparent Ruin of the common Cauſe. By which ſeveral wicked and perfidious Counſels, the Progreſs of the victorious Arms of the Confederates was ſtopped, and an Opportunity loſt for conquering the Enemy, the moſt favourable, in the Opinion of all the General Officers and the Quarter-Maſters of the Allies, who were ſent out to view the French Camp, and whereby all Hopes of Confidence between her Majeſty and her Allies was entirely deſtroyed, and the French King made abſolute Maſter of the Negotiations of Peace, and the Affairs of Europe given into his Hands.

ARTICLE IX.

That to impoſe upon the Allies the fatal Neceſſity of ſubmitting to the Terms of France, and in order thereto to leave the whole Confederate Army at the Mercy of the common Enemy, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was privy and conſenting to a ſecret and ſeparate Concert with the Miniſters of France, without the Knowledge of the Allies, for the ſeparating the Troops in her Majeſty's Pay from the reſt of the Confederate Army: For the effecting whereof, inſtead of preventing as far as in him lay ſo fatal a Step, he was not only wanting to adviſe againſt ſo unwarrantable a Proceeding, but did conſent to and adviſe her Majeſty, that the Duke of Ormond, and all the Troops then in her Majeſty's Pay, or ſuch of them as would obey his Orders, ſhould ſeparate themſelves from the Army of the Confederates: And having notice that the Generals of the Auxiliaries, paid by her Majeſty, whoſe Honour and Conſciences would not permit them to abandon the Confederates, and leave them as a Sacrifice to France, but for the Sake of the common Intereſt of Europe, and according to the true End and Deſign of their Conventions, did refuſe to withdraw with the Duke of Ormond, without particular Orders from their reſpective Maſters; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being then Lord High-Treaſurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, in Violation of his Oath, and the Duty and Truſt repoſed in him, did take upon himſelf an arbitrary and illegal Power, to refuſe and put a Stop to the Pay and Subſidies due on account of the ſaid foreign Troops, although they were entitled thereto by the Conventions entered into with her ſacred Majeſty, and by expreſs Proviſion made by Act of Parliament for the Payment of the ſame. By which fatal Separation, which purſuant to his evil Counſels was afterwards made, great Numbers of the Confederate Troops, who had before, on many Occaſions, ſignaliz'd themſelves in the Defence of the Cauſe of Europe, ſoon afterwards, at the unfortunate Action of Denain, fell as Sacrifices to the Fury and Revenge of France; the Siege of Landrecy was raiſed, the important Towns and Fortreſſes of Queſnoy, Bouchain, and Douay were retaken by the French Army; and not only the Fortune of the War, but the Fate of Europe decided in Favour of France.

ARTICLE X.

That in further Execution of his pernicious Deſigns to compleat the Deſtruction of the common Cauſe of Europe, and to render it impracticable for her Majeſty to reſume the War againſt France, in Conjunction with her Allies, or to recover the Union with her Majeſty's old and faithful Allies, ſo neceſſary to the Preſervation of theſe Kingdoms; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High-Treaſurer of Great Britain, did carry on and concert with the Miniſters of France, a private and ſeparate Negotiation for a general Suſpenſion by Sea and Land, between Great Britain and France; and to that end among others, did adviſe her Majeſty to ſend over Henry Viſcount Bolingbroke, one of her Principal Secretaries of State, to the Court of France, with Powers to ſettle the ſaid Suſpenſion. In purſuance of which, a deſtructive Treaty of Suſpenſion was made in France, on the Nineteenth of Auguſt, N. S. One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, by the ſaid Henry Viſcount Bolingbroke, on the Part of her ſaid Majeſty, for four Months, without the Knowledge or any Participation of the Allies; and before any Terms of Peace were ſettled with the Enemy, either for Great Britain or the Allies. By which evil Counſels, the expreſs Terms of ſeveral of the aforementioned Treaties were expreſly contravened and broken, the good Friends and antient Allies of her Majeſty and theſe Kingdoms were totally deprived of the juſt Aſſiſtance to which they were thereby entitled, and were left expoſed to the Inſults of the common Enemy; and the ſacred Ties of Union and Friendſhip between her Majeſty and her Allies being cut aſunder, her Majeſty's Perſon and Government, the Safety of her Kingdoms, and of the Proteſtant Succeſſion to the Crown of theſe Realms, were left expoſed to the Enterprizes of her moſt formidable Enemy.

ARTICLE XI.

That whereas the States-General of the United Provinces were, in or about the Months of September or October, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, in Poſſeſſion of the ſtrong and important Town and Fortreſs of Tournay: And whereas the French King had, during the Courſe of the ſaid private, ſeparate, and traiterous Negotiation between him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, and the Miniſters of France, ſignified his Conſent to the Miniſters of Great Britain, that the ſaid Town and Fortreſs of Tournay ſhould remain to the ſaid States-General as Part of their Barrier: And whereas her Majeſty, in her Inſtructions of December the Twenty-third, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, had expreſly directed them to inſiſt with the Plenipotentiaries of France, in the General Congreſs, that towards forming a ſufficient Barrier for the States-General, Tournay ſhould remain to their High Mightineſſes; and did afterwards declare herſelf conformably thereunto, in her Speech to both Houſes of Parliament, on the Sixth of June, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, in which ſhe communicated to them the Terms whereon a Peace might be made. And whereas for ſeveral Years before, and till the ſaid Months of September and October, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, there was open War between her late Majeſty and the French King; and the ſaid War continuing for all the ſaid Time, and afterwards, the ſaid French King and his Subjects were Enemies to her Majeſty: He the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and a

Subject

Subject of her Majesty's, not considering the Duty of his Allegiance, but having altogether withdrawn the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which every true and faithful Subject owed to her said Majesty; and designing to give Aid and Succour, and to adhere to the said French King, did in or about the Months of September or October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, during the said War, falsly, maliciously, wickedly, and traiterously aid, help, and assist, and adhere to the French King, then an Enemy to her late Majesty: And in Execution and Performance of his aiding, assisting, and adhering, maliciously, falsly, and traiterously did counsel and advise the said Enemy, in what manner and by what Methods the said important Town and Fortress of Tournay, then in the Possession of the States-General, might be gained from them to the French King, contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

ARTICLE XII.

That whereas her late Majesty Queen Anne, not only in pursuance of the Treaties she stood engaged in to her good Allies, and in particular to his Imperial Majesty, for the Recovery of the Monarchy of Spain to the House of Austria, thereby to preserve a due Ballance of Power in Europe, but also from her just Resentment against the Duke of Anjou, who then stiled himself King of Spain, and who, in Defiance of her Majesty's Title to the Crown, acknowledged the Pretender as King of Great Britain; and on these just Foundations her Majesty had, in vindication of the Honour of the Crown, and in justice to her People, at a vast Expence of Blood and Treasure, and on the earnest and repeated Advices of her Parliament, prosecuted a vigorous War against the Duke of Anjou: And whereas, in the Years of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, and One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, the said open, bloody, and expensive War was carried on between her said late Majesty Queen Anne, and the said Duke of Anjou, and during all the time aforesaid, the said War did continue, and for all that time the said Duke of Anjou, and the Subjects of Spain adhering to him, were Enemies of her late Majesty: He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majesty's Privy-Council, and a Subject of her said Majesty, not considering the Duty of his Allegiance, but having withdrawn his true Obedience from her said late Majesty, did at several times, in the said Years of our Lord, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, and One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, falsly, maliciously, wickedly, and traiterously aid, help, assist, and adhere to the said Duke of Anjou, then an Enemy to her said late Majesty; and in the Execution and Performance of his said aiding, helping, assisting and adhering, and in Confederacy and Combination with the then Enemies of her late Majesty, and with divers other wicked and evil disposed Persons, did, at several times, in the Years aforesaid, advise and counsel the Enemies of her late Majesty; and in such counselling and advising, did concert with them, and did promote the yielding and giving up Spain and the West-Indies, or some part thereof, to the said Duke of Anjou, then in Enmity with her Majesty, against the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

ARTICLE XIII.

That whereas the Riches, Power, and Strength of these Kingdoms depend entirely on the flourishing Condition of Trade and Navigation, and her late Majesty Queen Anne having due Regard thereto, as well as to the just Expectations of her People, after the vast Expences they had so cheerfully undergone in Support of the War, did, on the first Opening the Conferences for a General Peace, declare from the Throne to both Houses of Parliament, on the Seventh of December One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, that she would endeavour, that after a War which had cost so much Blood and Treasure, the Nation might find their Interest in Trade and Commerce improved and enlarged by a Peace: And on the Sixth of June One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, when she was pleased to communicate the Terms on which a General Peace might be made, did declare, that nothing had mov'd her Majesty from steddily pursuing the true Interest of her own Kingdoms, and that the Terms of Peace obtained for her own Subjects were such, as she had Reason to expect would make her People some Amends for the great and unequal Burden which they had laid under through the whole Course of the War; and hoped that none of the Confederates would envy her Share in the Glory and Advantage of the Peace; and afterwards declared to both Houses of Parliament her Satisfaction in the near View she had of a Peace; since it would, in some measure, recompense her Subjects for the vast Expence: And after the Conclusion of the Treaty of Peace and Commerce with France, did declare from the Throne, on the Ninth of April One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, that the many Advantages she had obtained for her Subjects, had occasioned much Opposition and long Delays to the Peace; but it afforded her great Satisfaction, that her People will have it in their Power, by degrees, to repair what they had suffered during so long and burthensome a War. Whereupon both Houses of Parliament did from time to time express their grateful Acknowledgments to her Majesty for her great Care and Concern for the Welfare of her People. And whereas at the setting on Foot, and the Progress of the said private, separate, and pernicious Negotiations between the Ministers of Great Britain and France, it was laid down as a Principle, on the part of Great Britain, never to be departed from, that France should consent to adjust the Interests of Great Britain in the first place, that the Ministers of Great Britain might thereby be enabled to engage the Queen to make the Conclusion of the General Peace easy to France; and on this plausible Pretence it was insisted on by the Ministers of Great Britain, to remit the Discussion of the particular Interests of the Allies to General Conferences; and throughout the whole Course of the said separate Negotiation, all imaginable Concessions were not only made by the Ministers of Great Britain for a real Advantage of the Interests of France against the Allies, but all Measures were enter'd into and concerted between them, that even the Ministers of France could dictate, in order to strengthen their Hands, and to enable them to impoſe the Terms of a General Peace: He the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having nothing in view thro' the whole Courſe of the ſaid Negotiation, wherein he was wickedly and principally engaged in Concert with France, but the final Deſtruction of his Country; and to that end the ſacrificing the Commerce of Great Britain to the Aggrandiſement of France, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty, in not inſiſting on in all Events, and not procuring, in the firſt place, the moſt certain and ſtrict Securities imaginable for the Safety and Advantage of the Commerce of theſe Kingdoms; but did adviſe her late Majeſty, that in the Propoſition ſent by his Privity and Advice, by Mr. Prior to France, and alſo in the ſaid private and ſeparate Treaty, ſigned on the Seven and Twentieth of September, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, wherein the Preliminary Demands for Great Britain, more particularly were intended to be adjuſted with France, the Demands for Great Britain, in point of Commerce, ſhould not only be made in looſe, general, and inſufficient Terms, but that the Liberty of Fiſhing, and Drying of Fiſh on Newfoundland ſhould be expreſly given up to France, tho' the Reſtitution of that ſmall part of the Iſland, which France had taken during the War, was therein referred to be diſcuſs'd to General Conferences. And having, by his wicked Artifices, engaged her Majeſty in the ſaid private Treaty with France, without any Security for the Commerce of Great Britain, he did artfully and cunningly contrive with the Miniſters of France to keep in Suſpence all Matters that concerned the Commerce of Great Britain, until, by means of his wicked and pernicious Counſels aforemention'd, France was become Maſter of the Negotiations, and the chief Advantages for the Commerce of Great Britain by that means remaining unſettled: And the Miniſters of France afterwards diſputing the moſt eſſential Articles which had been in agitation, and in particular that fundamental Principle of treating and being treated as Gens Amiciſſima, and endeavouring to elude what had been agreed on in the ſaid private and ſeparate Negotiation, for the ſuppoſed Advantage of Great Britain; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, under pretence of removing a Difficulty then depending, by an Expedient advantageous to Great Britain, did treacherouſly adviſe the ninth Article of the Treaty of Commerce with France, a Bill for the rendering whereof effectual was afterwards rejected by the Houſe of Commons, as highly prejudicial and deſtructive to the Commerce of theſe Kingdoms: But yet for the ſake of gaining that deſtructive Article for Great Britain, as if the ſame had been advantageous, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in Defiance of the expreſs Proviſion of an Act of Parliament, as well as in Contempt of the frequent and earneſt Repreſentations of the Merchants of Great Britain, and of the Commiſſioners for Trade and Plantations, did adviſe her Majeſty finally to agree with France, that the Subjects of France ſhould have liberty of Fiſhing and drying Fiſh on Newfoundland; and did alſo adviſe her Majeſty to make a Ceſſion to France of the Iſle of Cape Breton, with liberty to fortify the ſame, altho' the Iſle of Cape Breton was part of the antient Territories of the Crown of Great Britain; and her Majeſty had declared from the Throne, that France had conſented to make an abſolute Ceſſion of Nova Scotia, or Arcadia, whereof Cape Breton is part, to her Majeſty. And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, intending in all Events to ſecure to France the Advantages relating to the Fiſhery of Newfoundland and to Cape Breton, did, in conjunction with the Miniſters of France, adviſe her Majeſty to conſent, that the ſame ſhould be made an Article in the Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and France: whereas the only Advantages in Trade, pretended to be ſtipulated for Great Britain, being inſerted in the Treaty of Commerce, were to depend on certain Conditions to be made good by Act of Parliament; and purſuant to, and by the Influence of the ſaid evil Counſel of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, her ſacred Majeſty was adviſed to ratify the ſaid Article in the ſaid Treaty of Peace and the ſaid Treaty of Commerce. By means of which pernicious Counſels, the good Intentions of her ſacred Majeſty to have obtained for her People advantageous Terms of Commerce were entirely fruſtrated, the Trade and Manufactures of Great Britain, as far as in him lay, rendered precarious, and at the Mercy of the Enemy, and that beneficial Branch of Trade, always eſteemed the great Support of the Naval Power, and the chief Nurſery of the Seamen of Great Britain, yielded up to the Subjects of France: and the only Pretence for the avowed and notorious Violation of Treaties, and the carrying on the Meaſures of France, viz. the adjuſting firſt the Intereſts of Great Britain, thro' the whole Courſe of the ſaid private and ſeparate Negotiations, terminated at laſt in the Sacrifice of the Commerce of Great Britain to France, without the leaſt Shadow of Advantage in Trade procured for theſe Kingdoms.

ARTICLE XIV.

That he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did, in concert with other evil and falſe Counſellors, even without any Application from his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Savoy, and after the French King had, in the Courſe of the ſaid private and ſeparate Negotiations, conſented that the Kingdom of Sicily ſhould remain to the Houſe of Auſtria, form a Project and Deſign to diſpoſe of the Kingdom of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy from the Houſe of Auſtria: And to effect that his unjuſt, diſhonourable, and pernicious Project, he did adviſe her Majeſty to give Inſtructions, among other things, to Henry Viſcount Bolingbroke, then appointed her Ambaſſador to France, to demand in her Majeſty's Name, of the French King, the Kingdom of Sicily for his ſaid Royal Highneſs. And a Treaty of Peace being afterwards made between the French King, his Royal Highneſs, and the Duke of Anjou, wherein a Ceſſion is made to his Royal Highneſs of the Kingdom of Sicily, without any Concurrence or Participation of his Imperial Majeſty; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did baſely and ſcandalouſly adviſe her Sacred Majeſty to conſent to the ſame, by an Article inſerted in the Treaty of Peace between her Majeſty and the French King. And afterwards, by his Privity and Advice, her Majeſty was prevailed on to aſſiſt his Royal Highneſs againſt the Emperor then in Alliance with her Majeſty, with a part of her Royal Fleet at her own Expence, in order to put him in Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Kingdom of Sicily. Whereby the greateſt Injuſtice was done to his Imperial Majeſty, in direct Violation of the Grand Alliance, and contrary to her Majeſty's frequent Declarations from the Throne, and her plain and full Inſtructions to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, for obtaining his juſt and reaſonable Satisfaction; and whereby National Faith, and the Honour of the Crown, was vilely betray'd, and the Naval Power of theſe Kingdoms, and the Supplies granted by Parliament for reducing the common Enemy, were perfidiouſly employ'd againſt the great and faithful Allies of this Kingdom.

ARTICLE XV.

That whereas the Dignity and Support of the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms has in all Ages greatly depended on the Wiſdom and Truth of the Communications made from the Throne, eſpecially in Parliament, as the ſure and only means whereby the Kings and Queens of this Realm can receive the ſincere and faithful Advice of their People in Matters of the higheſt Importance, and which by the Fundamental Laws and Conſtitution of this Government ought to be inviolably obſerv'd as the Sacred Band of the Duty and Affection of Subjects to their Sovereign. And whereas by the moſt ancient and known Laws of this Kingdom it is indiſpenſably incumbent on the great Officers of State that ſurround the Throne, to maintain as far as in them lies the Sacredneſs of the Royal Word on all Occaſions; it being moſt apparent that the greateſt Diſhonour to the Throne, and the greateſt Danger to theſe Kingdoms muſt inevitably enſue, whenever that Fountain of Truth by wicked Counſels ſhall be in any degree corrupted, and thereby loſe its juſt Influence and neceſſary Authority. And whereas the Power of making Peace and War, one of the ancient, undoubted, and moſt important Prerogatives of the Crown, has been always exercis'd by the Sovereigns of theſe Realms, with the ſtricteſt Regard to the Honour of the Crown and the Welfare of the People; and for that end they have in great Wiſdom in all Ages taken the Advice of Parliament on ſuch weighty Occaſions. And whereas her late Majeſty Queen Anne declar'd from the Throne her gracious Intentions to communicate the Terms of Peace to her Parliament, for their deliberate and ſerious Advice therein, wiſely foreſeeing that the Safety of her Perſon and Government, of the Proteſtant Succeſſion to the Crown, which ſhe had neareſt her Heart, and of the Proteſtant Religion, and of the Liberties of Europe, did inevitably depend on the happy Concluſion of the ſaid Negotiations: He the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High-Treaſurer of Great Britain, having taken on himſelf throughout the ſaid Negotiations a moſt arbitrary and unwarrantable Authority, and the chief Direction and Influence in her Majeſty's Councils; and moſt wickedly deſigning to proſtitute the Honour of the Crown, and the Dignity of Parliaments, and not only totally to deprive her Majeſty of the wholeſome and neceſſary Advice of her Parliament in ſo great a Conjuncture, but by miſrepreſenting the moſt eſſential Parts of the Negotiations of Peace, to obtain the Sanction of Parliament to his traiterous Proceedings, and thereby fatally to deceive her Majeſty, her Allies, her Parliament, and her People; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was not only wanting in the Diſcharge of that Duty to his Sovereign which became his high Station, by not adviſing againſt, and as far as in him lay in all Events by not preventing even any Intimation from the Throne to the Parliament, which was not conformable to the exacteſt Truth and Impartiality; but taking Advantage of his ready Acceſs to her her Majeſty, and his exorbitant Influence in her Councils, did prepare, form, and concert, together with other falſe and evil Counſellors, ſeveral Speeches and Declarations to be made by her Majeſty from the Throne to her Parliament, on the Subject of the ſaid Negotiations of Peace, and did adviſe her Majeſty to make the ſame to her Parliament: And particularly, by means of his falſe and evil Counſels, her Majeſty did, amongſt other things, on the ſeventh of December, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, declare from the Throne in the words, or to the effect following: That notwithſtanding the Arts of thoſe who delight in War, both Place and Time are appointed for opening the Treaty of a General Peace. Our Allies, eſpecially the States-General, whoſe Intereſt I look upon as inſeparable from my own, have by their ready Concurrence expreſs'd their Confidence in me. Whereas it was then notorious to all Europe, and the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others his Accomplices, well knew, that the principal Allies of her Majeſty, and particularly the States-General, then had in the ſtrongeſt and moſt preſſing manner repreſented not only to her Majeſty's Miniſters in Holland, but afterwards by a Miniſter of their own directly to her Majeſty, the Inſecurity and Danger to the Common Cauſe, by entring into general Negotiations with France on the Propoſitions ſign'd by Monſieur Meſnager; and alſo their firm Opinion of the fatal Conſequences that might enſue thereon: And altho' they had ſtill great Apprehenſions concerning the Method of opening the Conferences, and the Conſequences that might happen thereupon; yet being wrought on by the Menaces and other extraordinary Methods uſed with them by her Majeſty's Miniſters, and relying on the ſolemn Aſſurances and Declarations of her Majeſty to ſupport the Intereſt and Concern of their State, and to act in perfect Confidence and Harmony with them; they did at laſt, with the greateſt Reluctance, conſent to enter upon a General Negotiation of Peace with France. And in the ſame Speech her Majeſty was prevail'd on by the evil Counſels of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, to declare in the words, or to the effect following: That the Princes and States which have been engag'd with us in this War, being by Treaties entitled to have their ſeveral Intereſts ſecur'd at a Peace; I will not only do my utmoſt to procure every one of them all reaſonable Satisfaction, but I ſhall alſo unite with them in the ſtricteſt Engagements for continuing the Alliance, in order to render the General Peace ſecure and laſting. And in her Meſſage of the ſeventeenth of January following, her Majeſty again expreſſes the Care ſhe intended to take of all her Allies, and of the ſtrict Union in which ſhe propos'd to join with them. Whereas by the evil Influence of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, her Majeſty was not only induced to enter into a private Negotiation with France, excluſive of her Allies; but the ſame was in like manner carry'd on by him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others. And the ſeveral Intereſts which the Allies were intitled to by their Treaties, were not only not ſecured to them them by the Peace, nor any reaſonable Satisfaction given to them, but the main Intereſts of her principal Allies, eſpecially of his Imperial Majeſty, were by the wicked Practices of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, given up to France; and no Engagements were obtained for continuing the Alliance, in order to render the general Peace ſecure and laſting. And her Majeſty having on many former Occaſions expreſs'd her Reſolutions never to make Peace with France and Spain, ſo long as Spain and the Weſt-Indies remain'd in the Houſe of Bourbon; ſhe was prevail'd upon by the Advice of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, to declare herſelf, in Anſwer to an Addreſs of the Houſe of Peers, the Eleventh of December, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to the Effect following, viz. I ſhould be ſorry any one could think I would not do my utmoſt to recover Spain and the Indies from the Houſe of Bourbon. Whereas it is moſt manifeſt, that the leaving the Kingdom of Spain and the Indies in the Houſe of Bourbon was the Foundation of the private and ſeparate Treaty between Great Britain and France, which had been before that Time ſigned even with her Majeſty's Conſent; and the ſame fundamental Reſolution was immutably obſerved between them to the Concluſion of the Peace. And her Majeſty having frequently declared from the Throne, that her Reſolutions in entering into the ſaid Negotiations were to obtain a general, good, and laſting Peace, and the Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht being inſtructed to treat with France conformably to that End, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in order to remove the juſt Suſpicions which had been conceived of his private and ſeparate Negotiations with France, did adviſe her Majeſty to make this further Declaration in her ſaid Meſſage of the Seventeenth Day of January, That the World will now ſee how groundleſs thoſe Reports are which have been ſpread Abroad by Men of evil Intentions to ſerve the worſt Deſigns; as if a ſeparate Peace had been treated, for which there has not been the leaſt Colour given: Whereas a private and ſeparate Negotiation had been carried on for five Months together between Great Britain and France; and during that Time private Propoſitions had been ſent from England, and a private Treaty with a Miniſter of France ſigned, even by her Majeſty's Privity, excluſive of all the Allies, before the ſaid Declaration made by her Majeſty: And private and ſeparate Meaſures were thenceforth carried on by the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and his Accomplices, on Behalf of her Majeſty, with the Miniſters of France, even to the Concluſion of the Peace with France. Her Majeſty was further prevailed on by the wicked Advice of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in her Speech of June the Sixth, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, to declare, that to prevent the Union of the two Crowns, ſhe would not be content with what was Speculative, but inſiſted upon ſomething Solid: And in the ſame Speech to the Effect following, videlicet, The Nature of the Propoſal for a Renunciation is ſuch, that it executes itſelf, and France and Spain are thereby more effectually divided than ever: Whereas the Miniſters of France had before that Time aſſured the Miniſters of her Majeſty, that to accept of the Expedient propoſed on her Majeſty's Behalf, would be to build on a ſandy Foundation; and that the Renunciation would be null and void by the fundamental Laws of France; and that they would deceive themſelves, who accepted it as an Expedient to prevent the Union of the two Crowns. And not only in the Particulars before-mentioned, but in many others contained in the ſaid ſeveral Speeches and Meſſages made and ſent to her Parliament, even while the ſaid Negotiations of Peace with France were depending, the moſt eſſential Points relating to Peace and Commerce, and which concerned the Intereſt, as well of the Allies as of Great Britain, were groſly miſrepreſented. By all which wicked, treacherous, and unexampled evil Counſels he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did moſt baſely, ungratefully, and ſcandalouſly abuſe the Favour of his Royal Miſtreſs, and by means of her Authority did miſlead her Parliament into groundleſs and fatal Reſolutions; and thereby not only prevented the juſt Advice of the Parliament to her Majeſty in that critical Juncture, but obtained the Approbation of Parliament to his myſterious and dangerous Practices; and did not only deprive her Majeſty of the Confidence and Affection of her Allies, but expoſed her Majeſty and her People to the Contempt of the common Enemy.

ARTICLE XVI.

That whereas the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having on all Occaſions uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to ſubvert the antient eſtabliſhed Conſtitution of Parliaments, the great and only Security of the Prerogative of the Crown, and of the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the People, and being moſt wickedly determined at one fatal Blow as far as in him lay to deſtroy the Freedom and Independency of the Houſe of Lords, the great Ornament and neareſt Support of the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, and falſly intending to diſguiſe his miſchievous Purpoſes under a pretended Zeal for the Prerogative of the Crown; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, on or about the Months of December or January, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, whilſt the Houſe of Lords were under an Adjournment, and had Reaſon to expect that on their next Meeting Matters of the higheſt Importance would be communicated to them from the Throne, they having ſome few Days before given their humble Opinion and Advice to her Majeſty, that no Peace could be ſafe or honourable to Great Britain or Europe, if Spain and the Weſt-Indies were to be allotted to any Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon; being then Lord High-Treaſurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majeſty's Privy Council, and aſſuming to himſelf an arbitrary Direction and Controul in her Majeſty's Councils, contrary to his Duty and his Oath, and in Violation of the great Truſt repoſed in him, and with an immediate Purpoſe to render ineffectual the many earneſt Repreſentations of her Majeſty's Allies againſt the ſaid Negotiations of Peace, as well as to prevent the good Effects of the ſaid Advice of the Houſe of Lords; and in order to obtain ſuch further Reſolutions of that Houſe of Parliament on the important Subject of the Negotiations of Peace, as might ſhelter and promote his ſecret and unwarrantable Proceedings, together with other falſe and evil Counſellors, did adviſe her Majeſty to make and create twelve Peers of this Realm, and Lords of Parliament; and purſuant to his deſtructive Counſels Letters Patents did forthwith paſs, and Writs iſſued, whereby twelve Peers were made and created; and did likewiſe adviſe her Majeſty immediately to call and ſummon them to Parliament; which being done accordingly, they took their Seats in the Houſe of Lords on or about the Second of January, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to which Day the Houſe then ſtood adjourned. Whereby the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did moſt highly abuſe the Influence he then had with her Majeſty, and prevailed on her to exerciſe in the moſt unprecedented and dangerous Manner that valuable and undoubted Prerogative, which the Wiſdom of the Laws and Conſtitution of this Kingdom hath entruſted with the Crown for the rewarding ſignal Virtue and diſtinguiſh'd Merit. By which deſperate Advice he did not only, as far as in him lay, deprive her Majeſty of the Continuance of thoſe ſeaſonable and wholſome Counſels in that critical Juncture, but wickedly perverted the true and only End of that great and uſeful Prerogative to the Diſhonour of the Crown, and the irreparable Miſchief to the Conſtitution of Parliaments. All which Crimes and Miſdemeanours were committed and done by him the ſaid Earl againſt our late Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, the Peace and Intereſt of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the ſeveral Truſts repoſed in him the ſaid Earl, and he the ſaid Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majeſty's Privy Council during the Time that all and every the Crimes before ſet forth were done and committed. For which Matters and Things, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons in Parliament aſſembled, do, in the Name of themſelves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer of High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours in the ſaid Articles contained. And the ſaid Commons by Proteſtation ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any Time hereafter, any other Accuſations or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Earl, and alſo of replying to the Anſwers which the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer ſhall make to the Premiſes, or any of them, or any Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be by them exhibited, according to the Courſe and Proceedings of Parliament, do pray that the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be put to anſwer all and every the Premiſes; and that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments may be upon them, and every of them had and uſed, as ſhall be agreeable to Law and Juſtice. And they do further pray and demand, that the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer may be ſequeſtred from Parliament, and forthwith committed to ſafe Cuſtody.

Further Articles of Impeachment of High Crimes and Miſdemeanours, againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer.

ARTICLE I.

THAT whereas in or about the Month of January, in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred Ten-Eleven, a dangerous and deſtructive Expedition had been projected and ſet on foot, under Pretence of making a Conqueſt on the Poſſeſſions of the French King in North America, but with a real Deſign to promote his Intereſts, by weakening the Confederate Army in Flanders, and diſſipating the Naval Force of this Kingdom, as well as for the Sake of the private Intereſts and corrupt Gain of the Promoters of the ſaid Expedition, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being then one of her late Majeſty's Privy Council, and one of the Commiſſioners of her Majeſty's Treaſury, was not only wanting in his Duty to her late Majeſty, by wilfully and induſtriouſly abſenting from the Meetings of other Perſons, then in high Truſt under her Majeſty, wherein the ſaid Expedition was concerted, and by not adviſing her Majeſty againſt, and doing what in him lay to have prevented the putting the ſame in Execution, but did, contrary to his Oath, and the high Truſt then repoſed in him, adviſe her Majeſty to conſent to the making an Expedition for the conquering Canada and the City of Quebeck on the River of St. Laurence in North America; and in Execution of his ſaid evil Counſels, he did further adviſe her Majeſty to give Orders for detaching ſeveral Battalions of the Forces then in the Service of her Majeſty, in Conjunction with her Allies in Flanders, and to ſend the ſame with a large Squadron of Men of War on the ſaid Enterprize; although the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer well knew, that the ſaid Project or Expedition having been frequently deliberated on and maturely conſidered, a ſhort Time before, in a Committee of Council, was then laid aſide as dangerous and impracticable. And a Demand being made at the Treaſury on or about the Months of May or June, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, for the Sum of Twenty-eight Thouſand Pounds or thereabouts, on Pretence of Arms and Merchandize ſaid to be ſent on the ſaid Expedition to Canada, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majeſty's Privy Council, tho' he well knew, or had Reaſon to ſuſpect, that the ſame was an unjuſt and exorbitant Demand, and a great Abuſe on her Majeſty and the Publick, and ſuch as ought not to have been complied with, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty, in not giving his humble Advice againſt the ſaid Demand, or at leaſt in not repreſenting to her Majeſty the Grounds of ſuch his Suſpicion, but did, contrary to his Oath and his Duty, adviſe her Majeſty, that the ſaid Sums ſhould be iſſued and paid; and did accordingly counterſign a Warrant to the Paymaſter of her Majeſty's Forces for the Payment of the ſame, purſuant to which the ſame was iſſued and received. And in further Violation of his Oath, his Duty, and Truſt, and with the moſt corrupt Deſign to prevent the Juſtice due to her Majeſty and the Nation, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and exerciſing a moſt unexampled arbitrary Power, not only in her Majeſty's private Councils, but extending his evil Influences to the great Council of the Nation; after the ſaid Expedition had proved unſucceſsful, and it had been diſcover'd to him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, that the Nation had been cheated of above Twenty Thouſand Pounds

Pounds on that Account, did moſt ungratefully and corruptly employ his wicked Arts, and the Credit which he had gained by his many falſe and crafty Inſinuations and Practices, to keep the Houſe of Commons from examining that Affair. And in or about the Month of Auguſt, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, in a Letter or Memorial under his Hand to her late Majeſty, he did preſume, not only to inſinuate the ill Opinion he therein pretended always to have had of the ſaid Expedition, but did declare the Suſpicions he had of the great Injury and Abuſe done to her Majeſty and the Publick, in the Demand of the ſaid Twenty eight Thouſand Pounds, even at the Time when the ſame was made, and that the Publick had been cheated of above Twenty Thouſand Pounds on that Account; and in the ſaid Memorial did preſume further to declare to her Majeſty, that he was forced to uſe all his Skill and Credit to keep the Houſe of Commons from examining that Affair in the laſt Parliament; thereby vainly, but moſt wickedly, recommending himſelf to the Continuance of her Majeſty's Favour, by the Succeſs of his moſt profligate Meaſures. By all which unparallel'd Corruptions and moſt dangerous Councils and Practices of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, the good and faithful Allies of her Majeſty were deprived of the Aid of her Majeſty's Troops to which they were entitled by their Conventions, and the Confederate Army in Flanders was greatly diminiſhed, to the apparent Advantage of the common Enemy: The Publick Money, granted by Parliament for reducing the Power of France, and which was expreſly appropriated for other ſpecial Services, was arbitrarily and illegally miſapplied and embezzled, and an heavy Debt incurr'd on the Nation, not only ſitting the Parliament, but even in Contempt and Defiance of a Repreſentation made by the Houſe of Commons to the Throne, even whilſt the ſaid Expedition was concerting; and whereby the higheſt Injuſtice was done, in ſuppreſſing an Enquiry ſo juſt to her Majeſty and her People, and a laſting Reproach and Scandal brought on that Houſe of Commons, of which he boaſts, as having been wrought on by his corrupt Influence not to examine into ſo high and ſo ſcandalous an Abuſe.

ARTICLE II.

That the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, not contented with the high Employments and Places of Honour and Profit beſtowed on him by her late Majeſty, nor with the large and exceſſive Gains by him made by the Incomes and Profits of the ſaid Employments, on or about the Month of October, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, whilſt the Nation was engaged in a moſt expenſive War againſt France and Spain, for preſerving the Liberties of Europe, and greatly exhauſted with the Supplies and Taxes for carrying on the ſame, and was under ſuch heavy Debts as were impoſſible to be ſatisfied, without the utmoſt Frugality or laying grievous Taxes upon the Commons of Great Britain: Contrary to his Oath and his high Truſt, and making a moſt diſhonourable and ungrateful Uſe of the ready Acceſs he had to her late Majeſty, did prevail on and adviſe her Majeſty to ſign a Warrant to himſelf, being then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, for the iſſuing and Payment of the Sum of Thirteen Thouſand Pounds to John Drummond, Eſq; or his Aſſigns, for ſuch ſpecial Services relating to the War, as her Majeſty had directed: And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, on or about the Twenty-fourth Day of November following, in purſuance of the ſaid Warrant under her Majeſty's Sign Manual, did ſign a Warrant for the Payment of the ſaid Thirteen Thouſand Pounds for ſuch ſpecial Services of the War, as her Majeſty had directed; although no ſpecial Services had been, or were at any Time afterwards directed by her Majeſty, to which the ſaid Monies were to be applied. And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having privately deſired leave of the ſaid Drummond to ſtrike ſome Tin-Tallies in his the ſaid Drummond's Name, he did, purſuant thereto, direct that Orders amounting to the Sum of Thirteen Thouſand Pounds ſhould be charged in the Regiſter of the Exchequer on the Monies ariſing by Sale of Tin, in the Name of the ſaid John Drummond; and though the ſame were accordingly ſtruck in the Name of the ſaid Drummond, in or about the Month of November, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, they were not deliver'd out to the ſaid Drummond, but were kept in the Treaſury Chamber, or elſe were in the Power or Cuſtody of the Earl, till about the End of January following, when the ſaid Drummond having occaſion, as the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer well knew, to go into Holland, at the Deſire and Requeſt of the ſaid Earl, he indorſed his Name on the ſaid Orders, and the ſame were left, by his Privity, Direction, or Conſent, in the Hands of Mr. John Taylor, a Clerk of the Treaſury; and the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having afterwards got Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Orders, did in or about the Month of June, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, ſend an Order in Writing to the ſaid Mr. Taylor to deliver the ſaid Tallies to a Servant of the ſaid Earl, which was done accordingly, the ſaid Indorſements not being at that Time fill'd up: And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having by theſe corrupt and ſcandalous Methods got the ſaid Tallies and Orders into his own Hands, did afterwards fill up Aſſignments of the ſaid Orders for Twelve Thouſand Pounds, Part of the ſaid Thirteen Thouſand Pounds, to himſelf, and the remaining Part to ſuch other Perſons as he thought fit; and did afterwards in or about the Months of Auguſt, October, and November, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, at ſeveral Times, diſpoſe of the ſaid Orders and Tallies to his own private Uſe and Advantage. And to cover the ſaid ſcandalous Embezzlements, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did afterwards, as he pretends, adviſe and prevail on her Majeſty, on or about the Fourteenth of December, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, to ſign a Warrant prepared by himſelf, wherein after the Recitals of his own good, faithful, and acceptable Services, which had tended to the Quiet, Safety and Proſperity of her Majeſty and her Realms, though accompanied with great Difficulties on himſelf, and Hazards to him and his Family; and that her Majeſty was reſolved to beſtow upon him a Sum of ready Money: But the ſaid Earl repreſenting to her Majeſty, that the Arrears then due to her Servants and Tradeſ-men were very great and preſſing, her Majeſty did therefore agree and determine that he ſhould have, to his own Uſe, the ſaid ſeveral Sums, amounting to Thirteen Thouſand Pounds comprized in the Orders aforeſaid: It was directed that the ſaid John Drummond ſhould aſſign the ſaid Orders, and the whole Right and Benefit thereof to the ſaid Earl and his Aſſigns; although the ſaid Earl had privately and clandeſtinely procured from the ſaid Drummond an Aſſignment of the ſaid Orders near two Years before the ſaid Warrant, and had fraudulently and corruptly diſpoſed and converted them to his own Uſe, without her Majeſty's Privity or Conſent, ſome time before her Majeſty was prevailed on to ſign the ſaid Warrant. And though the laſt mentioned Warrant, if any ſuch there be, was not communicated to the ſaid Drummond by the ſaid Earl during her Majeſty's Life, nor was the ſame counterſigned nor entered in the Treaſury, yet he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, even after his ſaid Corruption had been diſcovered in Parliament, did preſume, without the Privity of the ſaid Drummond, to ſend the ſaid Warrant to the Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Treaſury, deſiring that the ſame might then have been entered in the Treaſury; but the ſame was with great Honour and Juſtice refuſed to be ſo entered. By which moſt vile and ſcandalous Corruption, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was guilty of the moſt notorious Breach of his Oath and Truſt, as Lord High-Treaſurer of Great Britain, of the higheſt Abuſe of her Majeſty's Goodneſs, and Embezzlement of her Treaſure, and of the greateſt Injuſtice and Oppreſſion of other of her Majeſty's Subjects.

ARTICLE III.

That whereas by the eſtabliſhed and known Laws of this Kingdom, the Allowances or Appointments for the Maintenance and Support of Ambaſſadors, Envoys, Plenipotentiaries, and other Publick Miniſters of the Crown in foreign Courts, ought to be aſcertained in due Form of Law, as well in Honour as in Juſtice to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms: And whereas the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in or about the Month of July or Auguſt, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, ſent Matthew Prior, Eſq; an Inſtrument and Creature of his own, into France, for the carrying on his ſeparate and dangerous Negotiations; and did afterwards in the Month of November, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, by his evil Counſels prevail on her late Majeſty, without the Privity of, or any Communication with her Allies, to ſend the ſaid Matthew Prior as her Majeſty's Plenipotentiary to the French King, with Inſtructions to treat and conclude Matters of the higheſt Importance, relating to the general Negotiations of Peace: But the ſame was a treacherous and wicked Contrivance of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, for the more effectually carrying on and promoting his private, ſeparate, and dangerous Practices with the Miniſters of France, and the Enemies of her Majeſty and her Kingdoms; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer not regarding his Oath, or his high Truſt, or the Laws of the Kingdom, did moſt corruptly and ſcandalouſly combine with the ſaid Matthew Prior for the defrauding her Majeſty of very great Sums, under the Colour of his ſaid Employments in France; and to that End the ſaid Earl did contrive that the ſaid Matthew Prior ſhould be ſent into France, with the Character aforeſaid, but without any ſettled Appointments or Allowances: But in the Stead and Lieu thereof, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did give the ſaid Matthew Prior an unlimited Credit, and did promiſe to anſwer and pay ſuch Bills as the ſaid Prior ſhould draw on him during his Reſidence in France; purſuant to which Contrivance and corrupt Agreement he the ſaid Matthew Prior did, between the Twenty-ſeventh of Auguſt, in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, New Stile, and the Tenth of July, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, or thereabouts, at ſeveral times draw Bills of Exchange, to the Amount of Twelve Thouſand Three Hundred and Sixty Pounds, or thereabouts, on him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, which he being then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, did adviſe and prevail upon her Majeſty to ſign Warrants for the Payment of, and did counterſign the ſame, although the ſaid Prior was no way intitled to any ſuch Allowances by Reaſon of his ſaid Employment, and the ſame greatly exceeded the Allowance even of an Ambaſſador of the Crown of Great Britain. And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did, in the Years One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, and One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, without any Colour or Authority, but for the further promoting his corrupt and wicked Purpoſes, prevail on and adviſe her Majeſty to ſign Warrants, which were counterſigned by himſelf, for the Payment of the Sum of Five Thouſand Five Hundred and Sixty Pounds, or thereabouts, to the Uſe of Thomas Harley, Eſq; a near Relation and Emiſſary of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, out of the Monies appropriated to the Uſe of her Majeſty's Civil Liſt: And did in like manner, at ſeveral Times in the Years aforeſaid, moſt illegally, fraudulently, and corruptly iſſue, or direct, or adviſe the Direction and Payment of other large Sums of Money, to other Perſons out of her Majeſty's Treaſury: By which moſt illegal and ſcandalous Management, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer has introduced a Practice highly prejudicial to, and utterly inconſiſtent with the Conſtitution of this Kingdom, and of the moſt pernicious Conſequence, by opening a Way for the moſt dangerous Corruptions; and was not only guilty of a notorious Breach of his Oath, but entered into the moſt baſe and ſcandalous Combination with the Perſons above-mentioned, and others, under the Pretence and Colour of promoting her Majeſty's Service, to defraud her Majeſty of the Publick Money, which he was entruſted with the Management of for the Support of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown.

ARTICLE IV.

That whereas the Revenues ariſing to the Crown from the hereditary Exciſe and Poſt-Office, or ſome Parts thereof, were, by vertue of Letters Patents of the late King James the Second, charged with and made liable to certain Annuities or yearly Sums, in Truſt for, or to the Uſe of Mary, the Conſort of the ſaid King James the Second, but the ſaid Revenues were afterwards, by ſeveral Acts of Parliaments, granted and ſettled for the Support of the Royal Houſhold, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown; or for other publick Uſes, without any ſaving or exception of the ſaid Letters Patents. And whereas by an Act made in the Twelfth Year of her late Majeſty's Reign, the Sum of Five hundred thouſand Pounds was granted to her late Majeſty for the Diſcharge of divers Arrears of Salaries, Diet-Monies, and other Allowances, and ſundry Debts for Preemptions, Proviſions and other Cauſes, which had been then incurred and grown due to her late Majeſty's Servants, Tradeſmen and others, and were occaſioned by ſeveral extraordinary Expences ſince the Act for the better Support of her Majeſty's Houſhold, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown. And the ſaid Sum of Five hundred thouſand Pounds was expreſly appropriated to the Uſes aforementioned, in Aid of the ſaid Revenues or Branches which were appointed for the Support of her Majeſty's Houſhold, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown. And whereas by an Act made in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Years of his late Majeſty King William the Third, it was Enacted, that for preventing traiterous Correſpondence between his Majeſty's Subjects and the pretended Prince of Wales, or his Adherents, that if any of the Subjects of the Crown of England, from and after the firſt Day of March, One Thouſand Seven hundred and One, ſhould within this Realm, or without, hold, entertain, or keep any Intelligence or Correſpondence in Perſon, or by Letters, Meſſages, or otherwiſe, with the ſaid pretended Prince of Wales, or with any Perſon or Perſons employed by him, knowing ſuch Perſons to be ſo employed, or ſhould by Bill of Exchange, or otherwiſe, remit or pay any Sum or Sums of Money for the Uſe or Service of the ſaid pretended Prince of Wales, knowing ſuch Money to be for ſuch Uſe or Service, ſuch Perſon ſo offending being lawfully convicted, ſhould be taken, deemed, and adjudged to be guilty of High-Treaſon, and ſhall ſuffer and forfeit as in Caſes of High-Treaſon. He the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having, by the means of the ſaid Matthew Prior, held a private and unlawful Correſpondence with the ſaid Conſort of the late King James the Second, then reſiding in France, and being determined ſecretly to promote, as far as in him lay, the Intereſt of the Pretender, but yet contriving to avoid the ſaid Penalty of High-Treaſon: And the ſaid Conſort of his late Majeſty King James the Second having empowered Abbot Gaultier (a Popiſh Prieſt, and buſy Emiſſary between Great Britain and France, during the ſaid private and ſeperate Negotiations of Peace, and who was particularly entruſted as the common Agent between the Miniſters of Great Britain and France, in tranſacting the moſt ſecret Affairs relating to the Pretender) to concert with the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer the ſettling the Payment and Remittance of a very great yearly Sum out of her Majeſty's Treaſure into France, under colour and pretence of the ſaid Letters Patents; and the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having held frequent clandeſtine Conferences with the ſaid Abbot Gaultier, on the Subject aforeſaid, and having, by his evil Counſels, ſacrificed to France the common Intereſts of Europe; and being reſolved that the firſt Fruits of the Peace with France ſhould be an Offering made, by his immediate Procurement, to the neareſt and moſt avowed Adherent to the Pretender, tho' at the great Expence of the Honour and Safety of her Majeſty and her People, did, ſoon after the Concluſion of the Peace with France, agree and undertake to procure the Payment of the yearly Sum of Forty ſeven thouſand Pounds and upwards, to or to the Uſe of the ſaid Conſort, during her Life; and in execution of his ſaid Purpoſe did afterwards, on or about the 23d of December, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, being then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and of her Majeſty's Privy Council, adviſe her late Majeſty to ſign a Warrant to himſelf, in the Words or to the Effect following, viz. Anne R. Whereas our late Royal Father King James the Second, by Letters Patents under his Great Seal, bearing date on or about the 28th Day of Auguſt, One Thouſand Six Hundred and Eighty Five, did Grant unto Lawrence Earl of Rocheſter, Henry Earl of Peterborough, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Robert Worden, Eſq; and Sir Edward Herbert, Kt. (who are all ſince deceas'd) divers Annuities, or yearly Sums, amounting to Thirty ſeven thouſand three hundred and twenty eight Pounds, Thirteen Shillings and Seven Pence to hold to them and their Heirs, during the Life of his then Royal Conſort Mary, now Queen Dowager, in Truſt for her; and by other Letters Patents, bearing date on or about the 3d of December, One Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty Six, did alſo grant unto the ſaid Queen a farther Penſion or yearly Sum of Ten Thouſand Pounds to hold during her natural Life, all which were made payable in ſuch manner as in the ſaid ſeveral Letters Patents is more fully expreſt. Our Will and Pleaſure now is, and we do hereby Direct, Authorize and Command, that you cauſe Payment to be made to the Heirs of ſuch of the ſaid Truſtees as was the longeſt Liver of ſo much as ſince the 25th Day of March laſt, 1713, is incurred or grown due on the ſaid Annuities or yearly Sums, amounting to Thirty ſeven thouſand three hundred twenty eight Pounds, thirteen Shillings and ſeven Pence, and to the ſaid Queen Dowager or her Aſſigns, of ſo much as ſince the ſaid 25th Day of March laſt, is incurred or grown due on the ſaid Annuity of ten thouſand Pounds, according to the purport of the ſeveral Grants, or Letters Patents above recited, as alſo of what ſhall hereafter become due and payable upon the ſaid ſeveral Annuities Quarterly, during the Life of the ſaid Queen Dowager; and for ſo doing, this ſhall be your Warrant. Given at our Court at Windſor-Caſtle, the twenty third Day of December, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, in the Twelfth Year of our Reign. And did afterwards, on or about the twenty fourth of December following, ſign a Warrant to the Auditor of the Receipt of her Majeſty's Exchequer, requiring him to make and paſs Debentures for paying to ſuch Perſon or Perſons as is, are, or ſhall be authorized to receive the ſame, the Sum of nine thouſand three hundred thirty two Pounds, three Shillings and four Pence three Farthings, for one Quarter, incurred upon the ſaid ſeveral yearly Sums therein mentioned, from Lady-day One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, to Midſummer following, and appointed the ſame to be ſatisfied out of the Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds, appropriated by an Act paſſed the then laſt Seſſion of Parliament, for or towards Payment of ſuch Debts and Arrears as were therein mentioned. And another ther Warrant to the ſaid Auditor to make and paſs Debentures for paying to the ſaid Queen, or to her Treaſurer or Receiver, the Sum of two thouſand five hundred Pounds for one Quarter, incurr'd on the ſaid Penſion of ten thouſand Pounds per Ann. from Lady-day, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, to Midſummer then laſt paſt, and appointed the ſame to be ſatisfied out of the Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds, appropriated by an Act paſſed the then laſt Seſſion of Parliament, for or towards Payment of ſuch Debts and Arrears as were therein mentioned. And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, on or about the twentieth of July, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, being then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and of her Majeſty's Privy Council, having corruptly and deceitfully, in further Violation of his Oath, and his high Truſt, adviſed her late Majeſty to ſign a Warrant, directing the Payment of one thouſand Pound Sterling to Daniel Arthur, Eſq; for Monies expended by him for her Majeſty's ſpecial Service, and the ſame being accordingly iſſued and received by him the ſaid Arthur out of her Majeſty's Treaſure, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, did give private Direction to the ſaid Arthur to pay the ſaid Sum of one thouſand Pounds to the ſaid Abbot Gualtier, or to his Uſe, purſuant to which Direction the ſaid Arthur did pay or cauſe to be paid the ſaid Sum of one thouſand Pounds to the ſaid Abbot Gualtier, or to his Uſe; whereby the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did moſt wickedly betray the Honour of her late Majeſty, and the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, in adviſing her, under Colour of the ſaid Letters Patents, and without the Advice of her Council or her Parliament, to direct the iſſuing of the Revenue, provided by Parliament for the Support of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown, to the Uſe and Benefit of the open and avowed Adherent of the Pretender; and did not only defraud her Majeſty of the ſaid Sum of one thouſand Pounds, but did moſt arbitrarily, illegally, and corruptly adviſe the Embezzlement and Miſapplication of ſo much of the ſaid Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds, in Contempt and Defiance of the expreſs Appropriation of an Act of Parliament.

ARTICLE V.

That whereas by the ancient and undoubted Laws of this Kingdom, no Perſon, being a natural born Subject of this Realm, or within any of the Dominions thereunto belonging, and having committed and being under the Guilt of High Treaſon, ought to be received within this Kingdom, as a publick Miniſter, or with any Character from any Foreign Prince, State, or Potentate. And whereas ſome time in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, one Patrick Lileſh, ſtiling himſelf, and commonly known by the Name of Sir Patrick Lawleſs, an Iriſh Papiſt (who had ſerved with the late King James the Second in the War in Ireland, againſt his late Majeſty King William the Third of ever glorious Memory, had follow'd the ſaid King James into France, and continued in the moſt open and avowed manner in his Intereſts and Service, and in Rebellion againſt his ſaid Majeſty King William, and had bore high Commiſſion againſt, and had been in open Arms againſt her late Majeſty Queen Anne in the late War in Spain) did come into this Kingdom, and pretended to have and did take on himſelf the Character of a Miniſter ſent from King Philip of Spain, to her late Majeſty, to treat of Matters of the greateſt Importance to the Honour and Safety of her Majeſty and her Kingdoms; and having given notice of the ſame to Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and of her Majeſty's Privy Council, and who then aſſumed to himſelf the Supreme Direction in her Majeſty's Councils; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty, in not adviſing her Majeſty againſt receiving and admitting the ſaid Lileſh alias Lawleſs in the Quality aforeſaid, but did, together with other falſe and evil Counſellors, adviſe her Majeſty to receive and admit him as a Miniſter from his ſaid Catholick Majeſty; and the ſaid Earl did preſume frequently to meet, conſer and negotiate the moſt important Affairs of the Nation with the ſaid Lileſh alias Lawleſs in the Quality aforeſaid. And the better to conceal his ſaid illegal and dangerous Meaſures from her ſaid Majeſty, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was privy to, conſenting, and adviſing that the ſaid Lileſh alias Lawleſs ſhould be introduced to her ſaid Majeſty, and ſhould be received and treated by her Miniſter, under the falſe and diſguiſed Name of Don Carlo Moro. And the Houſe of Lords, ſome time in the Month of April, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, having notice of the ſaid dangerous Attempt of the ſaid Lileſh alias Lawleſs, on or about the Ninth of the ſaid Month, made an humble Addreſs to her Majeſty, that ſhe would be graciouſly pleaſed to iſſue her Royal Proclamation, commanding all proper Officers and Magiſtrates to make diligent Search for, and to apprehend all Popiſh Prieſts, and to put the Laws in Execution againſt them; and likewiſe to enquire after, and apprehend all ſuch Perſons as have ſerved in Arms againſt her Majeſty, or their late Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, and who were then within the Kingdom, contrary to Law, to the End that they might be brought to Juſtice. To which her Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to return an Anſwer to the Effect following, viz. That ſhe would give Orders purſuant thereto, and a Proclamation did accordingly iſſue. And on the ſaid ninth Day of April, the Houſe of Lords (having under their Conſideration what further Security could be provided for ſtrengthening the Proteſtant Succeſſion in the Houſe of Hanover) came to the following Reſolution, viz. That no Perſon, being a Natural born Subject of Great Britain, or within any of the Dominions thereunto belonging, and who having traiterouſly ſerved againſt her Majeſty, ought to be received as a Publick Miniſter, or with any Character within this Kingdom: Notwithſtanding which, he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having no regard to the Safety of her Majeſty's Perſon, or to the Security of the Proteſtant Succeſſion; and ſetting himſelf in utter Defiance not only of the ſaid Advice and Reſolution of the Houſe of Lords, but of her Majeſty's Aſſurances to that Houſe of Parliament, and of her Royal Authority and Command, by her Proclamation under the Great Seal: Inſtead of doing what in him lay to have apprehended and brought, or cauſing the ſaid Lileſh alias Lawleſs to be brought to Juſtice, did afterwards, wards, on or about the Fifteenth Day of March, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, moſt wickedly and traiterouſly adviſe her Majeſty to ſign a Warrant, directing the Payment of one thouſand Pounds Sterling to Daniel Arthur, Eſq; for ſpecial Services, which being accordingly iſſued and received by the ſaid Arthur, he the ſaid Earl did privately and corruptly direct the ſaid Arthur to pay the ſame, and accordingly the ſaid one thouſand Pounds was paid to the Uſe of the ſaid Lileſh aliàs Lawleſs: And the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did at other Times, in a fictitious and ſcandalous manner, direct the Payment of other conſiderable Sums of Money out of her Majeſty's Treaſure, to the ſaid Lileſh aliàs Lawleſs, which were accordingly paid to him; altho' it was notorious, that the ſaid Lileſh aliàs Lawleſs had not only traiterouſly ſerv'd in Arms againſt her Majeſty, but had been the Miniſter or Agent of the Pretender at the Court of Madrid; and was under ſtrong Suſpicions of being ſent into England, tho' under the Pretences aforeſaid, ſecretly to promote the Intereſt of the Pretender in theſe Kingdoms. By all which corrupt and evil Counſels he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did moſt baſely and ungratefully expoſe the Perſon of her Sacred Majeſty, did what in him lay to enervate and render ineffectual the Advice of Parliament, and her Majeſty's moſt ſolemn Declarations, in a matter of the neareſt Concern to her Majeſty and Kingdoms, and by countenancing, in the moſt corrupt and ſcandalous manner, the ſecret Emiſſaries of the Pretender, did greatly encourage his open Adherents, to the apparent Danger of the Proteſtant Succeſſion to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms.

ARTICLE VI.

That whereas her late Majeſty Queen Anne, after ſeveral unſucceſsful Attempts, in Conjunction with her Allies, to eſtabliſh his preſent Imperial Majeſty on the Throne of Spain, being inform'd, that the People of Catalonia were inclined to caſt off the Yoke impos'd upon them by the French, and to return to the Obedience of the Houſe of Auſtria; and her Majeſty being deſirous to maintain and improve that good Diſpoſition in them, and to induce them to put the ſame ſpeedily in Execution, did ſend Milford Crow, Eſq; to them, with neceſſary Powers and Inſtructions to carry on ſo great a Work, for the Advantage of her Service, and the Good of the Common Cauſe; and to that End to treat with the Catalans, or any other People of Spain,, about their coming into the Intereſt of King Charles the Third, his preſent Imperial Majeſty, and joining with her Majeſty and her Allies againſt the Common Enemy; and her Majeſty, after her gracious Aſſurances to aſſiſt them with Men and Money, was pleaſed to authorize her ſaid Miniſter to give them her utmoſt Aſſurances, to procure the Eſtabliſhment of all ſuch Rights and Immunities as they had formerly enjoy'd under the Houſe of Auſtria; and that for their further Satisfaction, ſhe had ſent for Powers from King Charles the Third, for confirming the ſame, and was willing to become Guarantee that it ſhould be done: Nevertheleſs on this expreſs Condition, that they ſhould receive the ſaid King Charles as lawful King of Spain, and utterly renounce the Houſe of Bourbon. And, together with the ſaid Inſtructions, her Majeſty was pleaſed to ſign and cauſe to be deliver'd to her ſaid Miniſter, Credential Letters to the Nobility, Magiſtrates, and all other Officers Civil and Military of Catalonia, deſiring them to depend on the Promiſes he ſhould make them in her Name. And in her Majeſty's Inſtructions to the Earl of Peterborow and Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, in or about the Month of May, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Five, they are order'd to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to induce the Catalans to join with them in their Undertaking, and to aſſure them of her Majeſty's Support, and to promiſe them, in the Queen's Name, that ſhe would ſecure them a Confirmation of their Rights and Privileges from the King of Spain, that they might be ſettled on a laſting Foundation to them and their Poſterity. And in caſe Perſuaſions ſhould not prevail, and the Catalans ſhould not make a ſuitable Return to thoſe kind Offers, they were order'd to annoy their Towns on the Coaſts of Spain, and to reduce them by Force. And, in Conformity to theſe Inſtructions, a Manifeſto, or Declaration was prepared, by the Privity and Advice of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then one of her Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State, and deliver'd to the ſaid Earl of Peterborow, full, on the one Hand, of the Aſſurances aforementioned, and on the other hand, of Menaces to them, in caſe they declin'd her Majeſty's Overtures, which Manifeſto was afterwards publiſh'd by him the ſaid Earl of Peterborow in Catalonia: And whereas the Nobility, Clergy, and the whole Principality of Catalonia, and the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Majorca, relying on the Faith of thoſe Royal Aſſurances, did utterly abandon the Houſe of Bourbon, and acknowledged King Charles the Third, his preſent Imperial Majeſty, for their lawful Sovereign, and did join their Arms with thoſe of her Majeſty and her Allies, againſt the Duke of Anjou; and it having pleaſed Almighty God ſo far to bleſs her Majeſty's pious and generous Undertaking, as by moſt ſignal Succeſſes, in a ſhort time, to deliver the Principality of Catalonia from the heavy Yoke of French Bondage; and great Supplies having been granted by Parliament, for the reducing the whole Kingdom of Spain to the Obedience of the Houſe of Auſtria; the Arms of her Majeſty and her Allies were attended with vaſt Succeſſes, having twice enter'd the Capital City of that Kingdom, and obtain'd many other ſignal Conqueſts, to the great Advantage of the Common Cauſe: And thro' the whole Progreſs thereof, the Bravery and Firmneſs of the Catalans being always remarkable, thereby, as well as from the repeated Aſſurances given to them from time to time, in her Majeſty's Name, by every General and Miniſter ſent from Great Britain to Spain, the Hearts of that brave People were united under the ſtrongeſt Tyes of Affection and Gratitude to her Majeſty; and they were juſtly held in the ſtricteſt Dependance on the continuance of her Royal Protection; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being an Enemy to the Common Liberty of Europe, and having traiterouſly enter'd into Conſpiracies for ſubjecting the whole Spaniſh Monarchy to the Houſe of Bourbon, and deſigning moſt maliciouſly the utter Ruin and Deſtruction of the ancient Rights, Liberties and Privileges of the Catalans, who had made ſo glorious a Stand for the Preſervation of them, did, together with other falſe and evil Counſellors, form a moſt diſhonourable, wicked, and cruel Contrivance, not only for abandoning the Catalans to the Fury and Revenge of the Duke of Anjou and his Adherents, but for the final Extirpation of all their Rights, Liberties, and Privileges. And in Execution of that his Intention, during the private, ſeparate, and pernicious Negotiation of Peace, which was carry'd on between him and the Miniſters of France, and before any Negotiation of Peace was ſet on Foot, in due Form of Law, between the Crowns of Great Britain and Spain, did adviſe her Majeſty to give Directions to the Lord Lexington, her Ambaſſador to the Court of Spain, to acknowledge the Duke of Anjou King of Spain, but was greatly wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty, in not adviſing her to give Inſtructions to her ſaid Miniſter, at the ſame time peremptorily and abſolutely to inſiſt on the ſecuring the Catalans Liberties at the Concluſion of the Peace. And altho' the private, ſeparate and treacherous Practices of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, in Combination with the Miniſters of France, did afterwards, on or about the Fourteenth of March One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, neceſſitate his preſent Imperial Majeſty to conclude a Treaty for the evacuating Catalonia, (whereof her Majeſty was Guarantee,) without any expreſs and poſitive Stipulation for the Catalans Liberties, (his Imperial Majeſty relying, in that reſpect, on her Majeſty's Declaration, to interpoſe for them in the moſt effectual manner, and on the Promiſes of the French King to join his Endeavours for the ſame Purpoſe.) And altho' her ſacred Majeſty did, both before and after, frequently declare by her Miniſters in Spain, that ſhe thought herſelf under the ſtrongeſt Tyes of Honour and Conſcience, not to abandon a People whom the Neceſſities of the War had obliged her to draw into her Intereſt. And tho' the French King did not join his Endeavours for the Purpoſes aforeſaid; he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, together with other falſe and wicked Counſellors, having from time to time amuſed and deceived the diſtreſs'd Catalans, with groundleſs Hopes of her Majeſty's effectual Interpoſitions in their Favour, thereby engaging them in a more obſtinate Defence of their Territories againſt the Duke of Anjou, was not only highly wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty, by not doing what in him lay, as a faithful Miniſter, to have prevented the Concluſion of the Treaty of Peace with Spain, till juſt and honourable Conditions were ſecured for the Catalans, but did falſly, maliciouſly, and treacherouſly adviſe her Majeſty to conclude a Peace with the King of Spain, without any Security for the ancient and juſt Rights, Liberties and Privileges of that brave, but unhappy Nation. And did further adviſe her Majeſty to ſend Sir James Wiſhart, her Admiral, with a large Squadron of Men of War, at a great Expence, to favour the ſaid King of Spain in the Siege of Barcelona, the Capital City of Catalonia, and with expreſs Inſtructions, that in caſe the Inhabitants of Majorca ſhould refuſe the Terms that ſhould be offered them by the Duke of Anjou, to employ his Squadron, in countenancing and aſſiſting all Attempts that ſhould be made, for reducing them to a due Obedience. By which moſt vile and deteſtable Counſels, her ſacred Majeſty, contrary to her moſt pious Intentions, the Faith of Nations, and the Duties of Religion, and Humanity it ſelf, and contrary to her ſolemn and repeated Aſſurances, was prevailed on to abandon a diſtreſſed People, drawn in, and engaged by her own Invitation, into an open War with the Duke of Anjou, for the Preſervation of the Liberties of Europe, and the Commerce of Great Britain. And the Perſons, Eſtates, Dignities, Rights, Liberties and Privileges of the Catalans were given up as a Sacrifice to the implacable Reſentment of their enraged and powerful Enemy; and the Honour of the Britiſh Nation, always renown'd for the Love of Liberty, and for giving Protection to the Aſſerters of it, was moſt baſely proſtituted; and a free and generous People, the faithful and uſeful Allies of this Kingdom, were betray'd, in the moſt unparallel'd manner, into irrevocable Slavery: And, in Conſequence of which moſt diſhonourable and perfidious Councils, the moſt execrable Hoſtilities, Burnings and Plunderings were committed upon them, throughout their whole Province, without ſparing the Effuſion of innocent Blood, and without the Diſtinction of Age or Sex; and that unfortunate People were afterwards forc'd to undergo the utmoſt Miſeries of a Siege in their Capital City of Barcelona; during which great Multitudes of them periſhed by Famine and the Sword, many of them have ſince been executed: And great Numbers of the Nobility of Catalonia, who were for their Conſtancy and Bravery, in Defence of their Liberties, and for their Services in Conjunction with her Majeſty and her Allies, had, in all Honour, Juſtice and Conſcience, the higheſt Claim to her Majeſty's Protection, are now diſperſed in Dungeons, throughout the Spaniſh Dominions; and not only the Catalan Liberties extirpated, but by thoſe wicked Counſels of him the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, Catalonia it ſelf is almoſt become deſolate.

All which Crimes and Miſdemeanors were committed and done by him the ſaid Earl, againſt our late Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, the Peace and Intereſt of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the ſeveral Truſts repoſed in him the ſaid Earl.

And he the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was either Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, or Lord High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majeſty's Privy Council, during the time that all and every the Crimes before ſet forth were done and committed.

For which Matters and Things, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons in Parliament aſſembled, do, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, further impeach the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer of other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors in the ſaid Articles contained. And the ſaid Commons by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Accuſations or Impeachments againſt the ſaid Earl, and alſo of replying to the Anſwers which the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer ſhall make to the Premiſes, or any of them, or to any Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be by them exhibited, according to the Courſe and Proceedings of Parliament, do pray, that the ſaid Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be put to anſwer all and every the Premiſes; and that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments may be upon them, and every of them had and uſed, as ſhall be agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

L. H. Steward. Read the Anſwer to the Impeachment.

The Clerk reads the Anſwer.

The Answer of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, to the Articles exhibited by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, in the Name of Themſelves, and of all the Commons of Great-Britain, in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt him for High-Treaſon, and other High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, ſuppoſed to have been by him committed.

THE ſaid Earl, ſaving to himſelf all Advantages of Exception to the ſaid Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words, or want of Form in this his Anſwer; and alſo ſaving to himſelf all Rights and Privileges belonging to him as one of the Peers of this Realm, for Anſwer to the ſaid Articles ſaith: He admits many ſolemn Treaties and Alliances have been formerly entered into, between the Crown of England, and other Princes and Potentates of Europe, for their mutual Security, and to prevent the immoderate Growth of the Power of France, which might prove dangerous to the neighbouring Princes and States; and that therefore it was laid down as a fundamental Principle and Maxim of Union amongſt the Allies, That France and Spain ſhould never come and be united under the ſame Government, and that one and the ſame Perſon ſhould not be King of both thoſe Kingdoms; and he apprehends, that the principal View and Aim of the Allies was to ſettle and maintain an equal Ballance of Power in Europe; and, ſince the Conjunction of Spain to the Dominions of France might poſſibly enſue from the Duke of Anjou's being poſſeſſed of that Crown, the diſpoſſeſſing him was deſir'd, as the moſt likely Means to prevent that Conjunction; and for the ſame Reaſon the Union of Spain with the Empire muſt have been equally fatal, and the Prevention of it equally the Deſign of the Alliance; nor could the Continuance of Spain in the Houſe of Bourbon be in any Reſpect prejudicial to the Allies, if the Union of that Crown with France could be prevented. As new Dangers of ſuch Union have been apprehended, new Treaties and Stipulations have been entered into among the Allies, to obviate ſuch Dangers, and particularly the Treaty for an intended Partition ſeems to have been concluded upon that View; and though he acknowledges the Wiſdom of Parliament in condemning that Treaty, as prejudicial and fatal in its Conſequences to England, and the Peace of Europe, yet, he preſumes, it was not condemn'd, becauſe Part of the Dominions of the Crown of Spain were thereby allotted to the Houſe of Bourbon; but becauſe ſuch conſiderable Parts of thoſe Dominions, as the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, the Province of Guipuſcoa and other Territories were allotted to that Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon, to whom the Crown of France was to deſcend, which might have been a great and dangerous Addition to the then formidable Strength of that Crown; and becauſe it was made againſt the repeated Remonſtrances of Charles the Second, then King of Spain, who declared by his Ambaſſador, That ſuch Partition-Treaty could have no other Effect, than to force Spain to throw itſelf into the Arms of France, to prevent the diſmembring of the Spaniſh Monarchy. And, that it had this Conſequence, appear'd upon the Death of that Prince, who ſeems to have been induced by that Conſideration to bequeath the entire Monarchy of Spain to the Duke of Anjou, a younger Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon; who accordingly, upon the Demiſe of the ſaid King Charles the Second, took Poſſeſſion of the Monarchy of Spain. But this Acceſſion of the Duke of Anjou to the Crown of Spain did not produce the Alliance, in the Article mentioned, between Leopold, then Emperor of Germany, his late Majeſty, King William the Third of ever-glorious Memory, and the States-General, as immediately neceſſary at that Juncture: For King William, as well as the States-General, acknowledged the Duke of Anjou as King of Spain; thereby allowing, that the Duke of Anjou's Enjoyment of the Monarchy of Spain, while he was but a younger Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon, was not deſtructive of the Liberties of Europe, or the Preſervation of a due Ballance of Power. And afterwards, when the French King had ſeiz'd the Spaniſh Netherlands, King William, by Advice of Parliament, came into the Aſſiſtance of the States, as an Auxiliary only, by ſending, upon their Requeſt, Ten Thouſand Men, which England was obliged by Treaties to furniſh, in Caſe the States were attacked; after which, many Conferences paſſed at the Hague betwixt the Miniſters of England and the States, and thoſe of France, in order to find out ſome Expedient, by which, upon a reaſonable Diviſion of the Dominions of Spain, a new War might be prevented; and the States, in the Courſe of thoſe Conferences, often aſſerted, That, though they had acknowledged Philip King of Spain, yet ſuch an Acknowledgment was not contrary to the Demand of a reaſonable Satisfaction to be given to the Emperor for his Pretenſions to the Spaniſh Succeſſion; which was, in Effect, to declare, that the Satisfaction demanded for the Emperor was ſuch, as would leave King Philip in Poſſeſſion of Spain. But thoſe Conferences broke off, about Auguſt, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and One, without Effect; and in September following, King William entered into the Grand Alliance with the Emperor, and the States-General; whereby it was agreed, That, in the firſt Place, Endeavours ſhould be uſed by amicable Means to obtain the Satisfaction deſired for the Emperor, who probably, at that Time, would have accepted a very eaſy Compoſition for his Pretenſions: But when the French King acknowledged the Pretender as King of England (which not long after happened) his Majeſty King William, and the Parliament of England, juſtly provoked by this Affront, reſolv'd to enter into the War which had been begun by the Emperor alone, in Italy, the Year before; and the late Queen mentions this Indignity, as the chief Motive of her engaging in it, as appears by her Declaration of War againſt France and Spain in May, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Two. The ſaid Earl admits the ſeveral Treaties ſet forth in the Preamble to the ſaid Articles, and that ſuch Advice was given by Parliament, and ſuch Speeches were made from the Throne, as in the ſaid Preamble are mentioned; but, for more Certainty, begs leave to refer himſelf to the very Treaties, Addreſſes of Parliament, and Speeches, when they ſhall be produced: And he humbly hopes, your Lordſhips will allow him to obſerve, that thoſe Treaties manifeſtly ſhew, that the Deſign of the Allies, in endeavouring the Recovery of Spain from the Houſe of Bourbon, was to prevent the Union of thoſe two Potent Kingdoms in one and the ſame Perſon. In the Grand Alliance in One Thouſand Seven Hundred and One, the avow'd Ends are, the procuring an equitable and reaſonable Satisfaction to his Imperial Majeſty for his Pretenſions to the Spaniſh Succeſſion, the Security of the Dominions of the King of Great Britain, and States-General, with the Navigation and Commerce of their Subjects, and the preventing the Union of France and Spain under the ſame Government. And the Territories and Provinces, pointed out in the Fifth Article, were the fartheſt Views of that Alliance; whereby it was thought, his Imperial Majeſty would receive the utmoſt Satisfaction, which he could reaſonably demand, for his Pretenſion to the Spaniſh Succeſſion. No mention is made of the Recovery of the whole Monarchy of Spain to the Houſe of Auſtria, either in the Grand Alliance, or in the Defenſive one made the ſame Year between his Majeſty King William and the States-General: And when, in the Treaty between the Emperor, the Queen of Great Britain, and the States-General, on the one Part, and the King of Portugal on the other, about May, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Three, it was concerted to place Arch-duke Charles, the preſent Emperor, upon the Throne of Spain, he was then but a younger Branch of the Houſe of Auſtria; and there is great Reaſon to believe that the Queen, as well as other Princes of Europe, and, in particular, the King of Portugal, did not think a Treaty to procure the Crown of Spain for the Arch-duke, when a younger Branch of the Houſe of Auſtria, did lay an Obligation of procuring that Monarchy for him, when he became firſt of that Houſe, and was elected Emperor; ſince the Imperial and Hereditary Dominions, join'd to the whole Spaniſh Monarchy, would have given ſuch an Exceſs of Power to one Prince, as would have been formidable to Europe, and a Means to deſtroy that Ballance of Power which her Majeſty, in all her Treaties, had conſtantly labour'd to preſerve: And it is a known and an allow'd Rule by the Law of Nations, in Reference to Leagues between Princes, that if there happens a material Change in what was the principal Ground and Cauſe of the Treaty, the Obligation thereof ceaſes. If therefore, in the Preliminary Articles in One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Nine, and afterwards in the Conferences at Gertruydenberg, a Ceſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy to King Charles the Third, who was then younger Brother to the Emperor, was thought reaſonable to be inſiſted on; yet the ſaid Earl humbly ſubmits to your Lordſhips great Judgment, whether there was equal Reaſon for inſiſting on ſuch Ceſſion, when King Charles the Third was become Head of that Houſe, and had Poſſeſſion of the Empire and all the hereditary Countries of Auſtria, as a Condition, without which no Peace ſhould be made. The States-General were ſo far from admitting, or yielding that the Monarchy of Spain ſhould in all Events be given to the Houſe of Auſtria, that he, the ſaid Earl, hath heard, they refus'd to admit it to be inſerted as a Condition of their Barrier-Treaty, when propoſed by her Majeſty's Ambaſſador at the Hague, and choſe rather to put a Stop to the Proceedings of that Treaty, and hazard the Advantages they thereby expected, than comply with that Propoſal. The Advice of Parliament is of great Weight, to which her late Majeſty always gave, and he the ſaid Earl always paid, a juſt Regard; and he doubts not but the Houſe of Peers had proper Inducements when they gave their Advice to the Throne, That no Peace could be ſafe, honourable, or laſting, ſo long as the Kingdom of Spain and the Weſt-Indies continued in the Poſſeſſion of any Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon. But, if he may be permitted to offer his humble Conjecture concerning the Motives of that Advice, he conceiveth it might proceed from an Apprehenſion of a future Union of thoſe two Crowns as likely to enſue, in Caſe Spain ſhould continue in the Poſſeſſion of any who might become Heir to the Crown of France, and that even the Conjunction of the Empire and Spain would be leſs dangerous than ſuch a Union. But when her Majeſty communicated to her Parliament, the Sixth of June One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, the Terms upon which a Peace might be made, and thereby inform'd them, That France had been brought to offer, that the Duke of Anjou ſhould, for himſelf and his Deſcendants, renounce for ever all Claim to the Crown of France; and at the ſame time the Succeſſion of the Crown of France was to be declared, after the Death of the then Dauphin and his Sons, to be in the Duke of Berry and his Sons, in the Duke of Orleans and his Sons, and ſo on to the reſt of the Houſe of Bourbon; and that the Succeſſion to Spain and the Weſt-Indies, after the Duke of Anjou and his Children, was to deſcend to ſuch a Prince as ſhould be agreed upon at a Treaty of Peace, for ever excluding the reſt of the Houſe of Bourbon; both Houſes of Parliament, by their reſpective Addreſſes to her Majeſty, in the ſame Month, expreſſed their entire Satisfaction: And as the Houſe of Commons deſired her Majeſty to proceed in the Negotiations then depending for obtaining a ſpeedy Peace; ſo that the Houſe of Lords aſſured her Majeſty, That they entirely relied on her Majeſty's Wiſdom to finiſh that great and good Work. And after her Majeſty had concluded a Peace on thoſe Terms, both Houſes of Parliament ſeverally congratulated her Majeſty on the Concluſion of the Peace; and alſo join'd in an Addreſs of the Twenty-ſecond of April, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, expreſſing their juſt Senſe of her Majeſty's Goodneſs to her People in delivering them by a ſafe, honourable, and advantageous Peace with France and Spain, from the heavy Burthen of a conſuming Land-War, unequally carried on, and become at laſt impracticable. He the ſaid Earl acknowledges, that her Majeſty was pleaſed about Auguſt, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Ten, to re-admit him, among others, to a Place in her Council, and to require his Service in Offices of Truſt; to which he ſubmitted purely in Obedience to her Majeſty's Commands, with great Reluctance from the Proſpect of the Difficulties with which he was likely to ſtruggle. But as he never ask'd any Employment, nor us'd any wicked Arts, or baſe Inſinuations, to obtain the ſame from her Majeſty; ſo in all Employments, with which her Majeſty was pleaſed to honour him, he ſincerely endeavour'd to diſcharge his Duty with the utmoſt Integrity, having always, with the trueſt Zeal, deſired and endeavour'd, as far as he could, to promote the Honour and Service of her Majeſty, whoſe Aim he knew to be the Welfare of her Kingdoms, in the firſt Place, and as far as ſhe judged it conſiſtent with that, the common Good of her Allies. In or about the Month of September, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Ten, her Majeſty (whoſe undoubted Prerogative it was) thought fit to diſſolve the Parliament then in being, and to call a new One. In the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, Propoſitions were made by France to her Majeſty for a Peace, without the Contrivance or previous Knowledge of the ſaid Earl: Her Majeſty, out of her Affection for her People, having it much at her Heart to eſtabliſh Peace in her own Days, expreſſed her Concern for the Diſappointment of former Negotiations, and her earneſt Deſire to put a ſpeedy End to the War, and to the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, and to eaſe her Subjects from the heavy Burthen of their Taxes. The ſaid Earl doth acknowledge, that he thought a Peace was very much for the Intereſt and Advantage of Great Britain: And, in his humble Opinion, the moſt favourable Juncture for obtaining advantageous Terms of Peace, was immediately after the ſignal Victories gained by her Majeſty's Arms, in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Six. For, after the Reduction of the Dominions of the Electors of Bavaria and Cologne, with other important Conqueſts in Germany; after the entire Deſtruction of Three great Armies of France, in Flanders, Spain, and Piedmont; after the Allies had recover'd the Spaniſh Netherlands, Milan, and other Territories in Italy; it might have been hoped, from the great Diſtreſs in which the Enemy then was, a juſt and reaſonable Peace would have been obtained; ſince ſo much was at that Time gained from the Enemy, and ſo much more in all Probability would have been yielded by them, as would have fully anſwered the Ends of the Grand Alliance. Peace was at that Time ſought by the Enemy; and the ſaid Earl, who had the Honour to be one of the Principal Secretaries of State, owns he then adviſed the accepting of it. And he humbly begs leave to obſerve, that the War had been continued upon ſo unequal a Foot, that the Burthen of it annually encreaſed, and, at the Time when theſe Propoſals were made by France, was become almoſt inſupportable. It had indeed been ſtipulated by the Grand Alliance, that the Allies ſhould aſſiſt one another with all their Forces, according to a Specification to be agreed on in a particular Convention for that Purpoſe: But it doth not appear any ſuch Convention was made, otherwiſe than as the Houſe of Commons were inform'd by one of the Principal Secretaries of State to his late Majeſty King William, that by the Proportions adjuſted with the States, England was to furniſh two Parts of five by Land, and the States the other three; and England was to furniſh five Parts of eight by Sea, and the States the other three: But the States not always allowing themſelves to be under an Obligation to furniſh ſuch Proportions, gave occaſion to England's bearing an unequal Part in the War, with reſpect to the Allies. The States had that prudent Regard to the frugal ordering of their Affairs, that they frequently inſiſted, they ought not to be preſſed beyond their Ability, and made themſelves the ſole Judges of what came within the Compaſs of it, and by that means avoided the ſupplying any Quota, or Proportion, which they thought improper for them to furniſh. In the mean time the Charge of the War was greatly increaſed upon the Subjects of Great Britain: In the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Two, it was under Four Millions; from thence it gradually increaſed till the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Six, the Charge of which Year amounted to above Five Millions and an Half; and ſtill advancing, till the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, it was then grown to near Seven Millions; and, at the ſame time, there was a Debt contracted, not provided for by Parliament, amounting to Seven or Eight Millions; the very Intereſt of which, and other Debts, wherein the Nation was involved, amounted to Three Millions per Annum; and the Revenues of Great Britain were under ſuch Anticipations, that it was found difficult to raiſe above Two Millions and an Half for the growing Service, to be paid within the Compaſs of the Year. So that, when the Duties and Difficulties upon Trade, and the Continuance of the Taxes upon Land, which had lain ſo heavy above Twenty Years, are conſidered, the ſaid Earl believes it could not be thought for the publick Intereſt to prolong the War, without an abſolute Neceſſity. During this Time the States had managed with ſo good Oeconomy, that the ſaid Earl hath not heard of any additional Duty laid by them upon Trade, from the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Two, to the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven. And what Acquiſitions were made upon the Continent, during the Continuance of the War; though at the Expence of Britiſh Blood and Treaſure, accrued to the Share of the Allies; and the Dutch, being under no Prohibition of Commerce with France, had a further Advantage of the Britiſh Merchants, in reſpect to a free Trade. Although the Princes of the Empire were engaged by previous Treaties to furniſh their Quota's to the common Cauſe, yet when they were often preſſed to do it, they alledged in Excuſe, That thoſe Troops which they were obliged to furniſh at their own Expence, were in the Pay of the Crown of Great Britain. The Emperor left it to her Majeſty to provide for thoſe Troops, which by the Portugal Treaty, in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Three, he was to furniſh. The King of Portugal not only neglected the Proportion of Twelve Thouſand Foot and Three Thouſand Horſe, which by the ſaid Treaty he was to provide at his own Expence, but even refuſed to permit the Eleven Thouſand Foot and Two Thouſand Horſe, for which he had a Subſidy from her Majeſty, to be paid by Muſters, according to an Article of that Treaty; and, when preſſed to furniſh his full Number of Troops, alledged his Inability, for want of that Part of the Subſidies which the States ought to have paid him: So that almoſt the whole Charge of the War in Spain was left upon her Majeſty; the States having ſent few or no Troops thither, after the Battle of Almanza; and all the other Allies being likewiſe defective in their Proportions. This was the Condition of Affairs, with reſpect to the Charge of the War; nor did there appear, from the then Situation of Affairs, any more promiſing Proſpect, with regard to the Event: For, although it had pleaſed God to bleſs her Majeſty's Arms with wonderful Succeſs, at which the ſaid Earl moſt ſincerely rejoiced, yet it did not appear, that after the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Six, our Succeſſes in other Parts had countervailed our Losses in Spain; for after two great Battles, wherein we had been there defeated, after our Forces had been twice obliged to retire from Madrid, and after the taking the British Troops at Bribuega, the Recovery of Spain, (which was the main Article that retarded the Conclusion of the Peace at Gertruydenberg) seemed almost desperate, especially since the French in the Year 1711, by their plentiful Vintages and Harvests, had well nigh recovered the Effects of the Famine; and since some of the Allies at the same time made pressing Instances for recalling part of their Troops, as they had done frequently during the course of the War; from whence it appears how just the Grounds were, upon which both Houses of Parliament represented to her Majesty, That the War had been unequally carried on, and was at last become impracticable. And the said Earl humbly hopes, he shall not be thought to have designed any Disservice to his Country, if, in such a Condition of Affairs, he did not dissuade her Majesty from hearkening to the Overtures of Peace made to her from France; or if, during the Negotiations, he endeavoured, by Corresponding, with her Majesty's Knowledge and Approbation, in any Courts concern'd therein, to rectify any Mistakes, or contribute in any Measure towards the Conclusion of a general Peace. But the said Earl believes, that, in all the Negotiations towards such Peace, the Allies had such Knowledge and Communication of all Measures therein taken by her Majesty, as the Treaties her Majesty was engaged in required: That the Propositions transmitted from France about April 1711, were immediately communicated to the Pensionary and Ministers of Holland: That her Majesty did at the same time, assure them of her Resolution to act in Concert with them, in making Peace as in making War. That when the States had expressed their Desires to be equal with those of Great Britain for a general and lasting Peace, and had declared, that they were ready to join in proper Measures to procure it, and desired France might explain itself more particularly upon the Points contain'd in those Propositions; her Majesty endeavour'd to obtain such Explanations, and afterwards communicated them to the States: And if her Majesty thought it not expedient to proceed in the Method of a Preliminary Treaty, which had proved so ineffectual in the Year 1709 and 1710, but thought it might be sufficient, upon Articles signed by a Minister of France, by his Sovereign's Command, to open Conferences for a Peace; the said Earl humbly hopes, that this Proceeding will appear to be so far from being an unreasonable Deviation from the Methods of former Transactions in that kind, that it will be justified by many Precedents of such Treaties. The said Earl can affirm, that, during the whole Negotiation, so far as he was concerned, he acted with a sincere Intention to obtain a general Peace for the Welfare and Honour of her Majesty and her Kingdoms, and such as might give reasonable Satisfaction to her Allies, and answer all the Obligations her Majesty was under, by any Treaties with any of the Confederates; and is not conscious to himself that he hath, in any respect, transgressed that Duty, which, as a Privy Counsellor, or Officer of State, he did owe to her Majesty, or to the Publick. He is not insensible that many of the Articles, wherewith he stands charged, are complicated with such Circumstances, Aggravations and Inferences, as may render it difficult for him to acknowledge some Facts alledged, without acknowledging, or seeming at least to acknowledge those Circumstances or Inferences. And, as he is not conscious to himself of being guilty of any Crime he stands charged with, so he takes it to be agreeable to the common Course of Proceedings of this Nature, and to your Lordships Justice, that he should not admit any Circumstances which may tend to the Accusation of himself. He therefore begs leave that he may be allowed to distinguish between the Acts themselves, and the Inferences drawn from them; and that wherever he acknowledges any Fact, he may not be understood to acknowledge those Consequences which are in the Articles deduced from it, unless it shall appear that that Consequence was the Aim and Design of the said Earl, or is the necessary Result of any Act he hath done.

In answer to the First Article, the said Earl saith, that he always had the greatest Regard to the Honour and Safety of her late Majesty and her Kingdoms, to all the Engagements she was under to the Allies of this Nation, and to the common Liberties of Europe, that he never was devoted to the Interest or Service of the French King; that he is not conscious to himself of having acted, whilst he had the Honour to be her late Majesty's High Treasurer, or one of her most Honourable Privy Council, contrary to his Oath, or in Violation of his Duty, and Trust, or with Disregard to, much less Defiance of any Treaties in the said Article mentioned, the Advices of Parliament, her Majesty's Declarations from the Throne, or any mutual Assurances which had been made or renewed between her Majesty and the States, to act in perfect Concert with each other in making Peace as in making War: And he utterly denies, that in or about the Months of July or August One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, or at any other Time, he did form any Contrivance or Confederacy to set on Foot a private, separate, dishonourable or destructive Negotiation of Peace between Great Britain and France; nor doth he know of any such Contrivance or Confederacy formed by any of her Majesty's Privy Council, or that such Negotiation was at any time set on Foot. But the said Earl saith, he doth believe, that about the Month of April One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, her late Majesty did receive from France some Proposals, in order to set on Foot a Treaty for a general Peace, signed by Monsieur de Torcy, Secretary of State to the most Christian King, which, as he believes, were immediately communicated by her Ambassador in Holland to the States-General: Whereupon, as he has been informed, they thanked her Majesty for her Confidence in them, declared themselves to be weary of the War, and ready to join in any Measures her Majesty should think proper for obtaining a good Peace, and that they hoped her Majesty would bring the French to explain more particularly the several Points contained in the above-mentioned Proposals, or to that Effect; and that after such Request her Majesty sent Matthew Prior, Esq; to the Court of France, in order to obtain as full and ample an Explanation as he could of the first general Offers: But the said Earl denies that he did advise her Majesty to send the said Mr. Prior to the Court of France, to make Propositions of Peace, without communicating the same to her Allies; or that the said Mr. Prior did, by his Advice or Privity, communicate any Propoſitions to the Miniſters of France, wherein the Intereſts of Great Britain, or the common Intereſt of Europe were betray'd; nor doth the ſaid Earl know, that the ſaid Mr. Prior had any Power to communicate Propoſitions to the Miniſters of France, which betrayed either the Intereſts of Great Britain, or the common Intereſt of Europe. Therefore the ſaid Earl inſiſts, that there is no Ground to charge him with the treacherous or pernicious Contrivances in this Article mentioned. And if any Article was inſerted in any Propoſitions to be communicated by the ſaid Mr. Prior, that the Secret ſhould be inviolably kept till allowed to be divulged by the mutual Conſent of both Parties; yet the ſaid Earl denies that ſuch Article was inſerted by his Advice; and if any ſuch there was, he cannot however believe it was deſigned to exclude her Majeſty's Allies from their juſt Share in the ſaid Negotiations, and hopes he may be allowed to obſerve, that in caſe any Inſtructions were given for not divulging Propoſitions which concerned Great Britain in particular, the ſame were far from manifeſting ſuch Deſign as is beforementioned, ſince it is well known to be the undoubted Right of every Member of a Confederacy to demand particular Advantages for themſelves, not inconſiſtent with their Alliances, and which are not to take place but on the Concluſion of a General Peace: And it has been uſual for thoſe to whom the firſt Overtures of Peace are made, to make Demands for themſelves in the firſt place, as the States particularly did in the Negotiations at the Hague in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Nine, and at Gertruydenberg in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Ten. And tho' he apprehends that an Agreement not to divulge the Propoſitions without the mutual Conſent of both Parties, could not be to the Prejudice of the Allies; yet he believes, that in order to prevent any unreaſonable Jealouſies among them, even thoſe Propoſitions which related to Great Britain in particular, were communicated to them; and that it will likewiſe appear, that the Propoſitions ſigned by Monſieur de Torcy, and tranſmitted in the Month of April One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, in the ſaid Articles mentioned, whereby it is ſaid, the French King offered to treat with the Plenipotentiaries of England or Holland alone, or jointly with thoſe of the Allies, at the Choice of England, were Propoſals relating only to the manner of Treating, when the Conferences ſhould be opened; and that her Majeſty was ſo far from taking upon her to treat ſingly for the Allies, that ſhe choſe to have all the Parties admitted to the Congreſs, where they might have an Opportunity of treating and adjuſting their reſpective Intereſts; that being, in her Opinion, the faireſt Method of proceeding, moſt advantageous to the Confederates, and moſt likely to prevent Jealouſies and Diſcords among them. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, that he doth not know that any Negotiation of Peace was contriv'd or ſet on Foot by any Perſons employ'd in her Majeſty's Service, which was in any reſpect more advantageous to France than France had aſked, or which had a Tendency to give the Enemy a Power to create Miſunderſtandings between her Majeſty and her Allies, or to deſtroy the Confidence between them.

In anſwer to the Second Article, the ſaid Earl ſaith, that he believes Monſieur Meſnager, a Subject of the French King, did ſome time in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, with her Majeſty's leave, come into the Kingdom of Great Britain, and bring with him a Letter from the ſaid French King to her late Majeſty, acknowledging her Majeſty Queen of Great Britain, and likewiſe expreſſing a Deſire to re-eſtabliſh Peace with her, and that he was furniſhed with full Powers from the ſaid French King for that Purpoſe. The ſaid Earl further ſaith, that it hath been the uſual and allowed Practice in moſt Nations, eſpecially in England, for Privy Counſellors by verbal Orders from the Sovereign to confer within the Realm with Miniſters of foreign Princes, and he conceives ſuch Practice to be agreeable to the Laws of this Realm: And that full Powers are uſually granted to Miniſters who are ſent abroad for the Juſtification of Perſons with whom they ſhall treat, rather than to juſtify ſuch Miniſters themſelves. And the ſaid Earl denies, that he did in the Month of September One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, or at any other time, ſecretly and unlawfully, or without Authority, confer or treat with the ſaid Sieur Meſnager on the Negotiations of Peace between Great Britain and France, or that he did adviſe or promote the making a private and ſeparate Treaty or Agreement between the ſaid Crowns: But he hath been informed, and doth believe, that there was a Paper ſtiled, The Anſwer of France to the Preliminary Demands of Great Britain more particularly, ſigned by Monſieur Meſnager only, to which was ſubjoined a Declaration of the Queen's Acceptance of thoſe Preliminary Articles, as Conditions his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty conſented to grant, which were to be reduced into the uſual Form of Treaties, and explained after the moſt clear and moſt intelligible manner, to the common Satisfaction of Great Britain and France, and this only in caſe of a general Peace: And this Declaration, or ſome other Declaration to the like effect, he believes might be ſigned by the Lord Dartmouth and Mr. Secretary St. John, as in the ſaid Article is ſet forth. But the ſaid Earl muſt crave leave to ſubmit it to the Judgment of your Lordſhips, whether a Paper of that ſort (if any ſuch there was) containing Offers from France, which were not to take effect but in caſe of a general Peace, can be called a ſeparate Treaty. He believes the Allies had early Knowledge and Participation of the ſaid Propoſals from the Miniſters of Great Britain; but denies that the Intereſts of Great Britain were thereby given up to France, or the Duke of Anjou admitted to be King of Spain; ſince in the Declaration annexed to the ſaid Propoſals he believes it is expreſſed, that her Majeſty might in Juſtice expect the Securities and Advantages mentioned in thoſe Propoſals, what Prince ſoever he ſhould be to whom the Monarchy of Spain ſhould be allotted; and the ſaid Earl, recollecting as well as he can what were her Majeſty's Views at that time, is perſuaded that her Majeſty had then a Proſpect, that the Monarchy of Spain would fall to the Share of another Prince. The ſaid Earl denies, that by his Privity, Conſent, or Advice, any private or ſeparate Treaty or Agreement, whereby the Intereſts of Great Britain were given up to France, or the Duke of Anjou was admitted to be King of Spain, was agreed, concluded, and ſigned by the Sieur Meſnager on the part of France, and by the Lord Dartmouth and Henry St. John, or either either of them, in Behalf of her late Majeſty; much leſs did the ſaid Earl, at any Time, aſſume to himſelf Regal Power, or take upon him to meet and treat with the Enemy without Authority from her Majeſty, or do any thing to ſubvert the ancient and eſtabliſhed Conſtitution of the Government of theſe Kingdoms, or introduce any illegal or dangerous Methods of tranſacting the Affairs of State. And the ſaid Earl further ſaith, that he did never aim at, or endeavour by any ſeparate Treaty to diſſolve or cancel any of thoſe ſolemn Treaties, in which her Majeſty ſtood engaged to her Allies, nor was he privy to any Treaty, whereby the Queen was brought under a Dilemma, either to ſubmit to the Dictates of France in the Progreſs of this Negotiation, or to loſe the Confidence of her Allies.

In anſwer to the Third Article, the ſaid Earl denies, that to diſguiſe, or carry on any private, ſeparate, or dangerous Negotiations, he did contrive or adviſe the preparing and forming the Set of General Preliminaries in the Article mention'd, intitled, Preliminary Articles on the Part of France, to come to a general Peace; or any other Set of general Preliminaries of like Nature; or that the ſame ſhould be ſigned by the Sieur Meſnager; or that he did adviſe her ſacred Majeſty, that the ſame ſhould be received by her Majeſty: But the ſaid Earl hath been informed, that certain Articles, called Preliminary Articles on the Part of France, to come to a general Peace, ſigned by the Sieur Meſnager only, were receiv'd by her Majeſty, and believes the ſame might be communicated to the Miniſters of the Allies then reſiding in England, as a Ground whereon the Confederates might treat or negotiate concerning a general Peace; but whether the ſame were communicated as the only Tranſactions that had been on that Subject, between Great Britain and France, the ſaid Earl knows not: But ſince it is termed impious Advice, and contrary to the Duty and Truſt of a Miniſter of State of Great Britain, to adviſe the receiving ſuch Articles; the ſaid Earl, from his Concern for the Honour of her late Majeſty's Adminiſtration, and the future Welfare of theſe Kingdoms, doth ſubmit, Whether it is criminal for ſuch Miniſter to adviſe the receiving Articles from a Miniſter of a Prince in War, containing Propoſals for giving reaſonable Satisfaction to Great Britain and all her Allies, and which being ſigned by the Miniſter of that Prince only, were not intended to bind any other. And ſince Preliminary Articles are no eſſential Step towards a general Negotiation, (there being, as he believes, but few Inſtances where any Matters of Importance have been ſettled before the opening of general Conferences) the ſaid Earl doth not conceive, That if any Miniſter of State had adviſed her Majeſty to accept the Preliminaries or Offers from France, ſaid to be ſigned by Monſieur Meſnager the Twenty Seventh Day of September, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, as the Foundation of a Treaty, he had thereby offended againſt any known Law, ſince the Proceedings upon ſuch Preliminaries could not be more unſafe than proceeding without any at all. The ſaid Earl denies, that any Treaty, ſigned by the Earl of Dartmouth or Mr. St. John, or either of them, on the Part of England, and the Sieur Meſnager on the Part of France (if any ſuch there be) was induſtriouſly concealed from the Allies, her Majeſty's Council, or Parliament, by his Advice or Contrivance; or that he diſſuaded her Majeſty from laying any ſuch Treaty before her Allies, her Council or Parliament; or that he adviſed her Majeſty to receive the ſaid general Preliminaries, or to communicate the ſame in her Name, or by her Authority, to the States-General, as a ſufficient Foundation whereon to open the Conferences of Peace with France. The ſaid Earl hath been informed, and doth believe, that there were certain Inſtructions prepared and ſigned by her Majeſty, and delivered to the Earl of Strafford, her Majeſty's Ambaſſador to the States-General, wherein the ſaid Ambaſſador might be directed to repreſent to the Penſionary of Holland, and ſuch others as ſhould be appointed to confer with him, in ſuch manner as is ſet forth in this Article, or to the like Effect; but he denies, that the ſaid Inſtructions were prepared, ſigned, or deliver'd by his Advice: Nevertheleſs the ſaid Earl believes, the ſaid Inſtructions were well warranted by the Truths of ſuch Facts, as in the ſaid Article are ſet forth to be contained in thoſe Inſtructions, ſince the ſaid Earl hath had credible Information, that after her Majeſty had received an Account of the Senſe of ſome Perſons in Holland, concerning the Overtures made by France, for the ſetting a general Negotiation of Peace on foot, very preſſing Inſtances were made on her Majeſty's Behalf, with the Enemy, to explain the firſt Offers made by Monſieur de Torcy more particularly, and to form a diſtinct Project of ſuch a Peace as they were willing to conclude; and that ſuch Inſtances had Effect, will appear from the Preliminaries ſaid to be ſigned by Monſieur Meſnager, September the Twenty-ſeventh One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, wherein ſeveral Explications are made, and many Particulars of Moment are contained, which were not in the Propoſitions of Monſieur de Torcy: Wherefore the ſaid Earl apprehends, that the Propoſitions ſaid in this Article to be ſent over to France, (if any ſuch were ſent) were not ſo general as the Propoſitions of Monſieur de Torcy, nor in any reſpect enſnaring, or deſtructive to the Intereſts of Great Britain or the Allies: But yet the ſaid Earl believes that her Majeſty, at the ſame Time ſhe did communicate the ſaid Preliminaries to the States-General, did likewiſe order her Ambaſſador to acquaint them, that ſhe judged thoſe Articles did not contain ſuch particular Conceſſions as France would probably be obliged to make in the Courſe of the Negotiations, or to that Effect. If therefore her Majeſty did, for the Good and Eaſe of her People, endeavour to prevail with her Allies to enter into a Negotiation of Peace, and did communicate the ſaid Preliminaries to them, with that View, the ſaid Earl cannot be induced to believe, that the ſaid general Preliminaries, communicated to the States by her Majeſty in manner aforeſaid, were calculated to amuſe and deceive them; nor doth the ſaid Earl know or believe, that her Majeſty's Inſtructions to her ſaid Ambaſſador, either in the Particulars aboveſaid, or in any other, contained Matters falſe, prevaricating, or evaſive.

And the ſaid Earl muſt take the Liberty to affirm, that in the late Negotiations of Peace, as well as in all other publick Tranſactions of State, as far as he was concerned, he acted with the higheſt Regard to the Honour of her Majeſty, and with the utmoſt Zeal for the Welfare both of her and her People, and is not conſcious to himſelf that he ever gave any Counſels, whereby the Truth and Sacredneſs which ought to conſtitute and accompany the Inſtructions of publick Ambaſſadors to Princes in Friendſhip and Confederacy, againſt the common Enemy, were in any wiſe proſtituted, or the Honour of her Majeſty and of the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms in any ſort debaſed or betrayed: And he humbly hopes no Inſtance can be given, wherein the Royal Hand of her late Majeſty was made the Inſtrument to advance the Intereſt of the common Enemy.

In anſwer to the Fourth Article, the ſaid Earl doth not remember what Repreſentations were made by Monſieur Buys to her Majeſty in relation to the Propoſitions in the ſaid Article mentioned, but ſaith, that if any Repreſentations were made, the ſame were not rendered ineffectual by any Influence of the ſaid Earl; And the ſaid Earl doth admit, that at a Committee of Council there might be made ſome Declaration in her Majeſty's Name to Monſieur Buys to the Effect in the ſaid Article mentioned; but doth not admit that any ſuch Declaration was made by him the ſaid Earl, or by his Management or Contrivance. And the ſaid Earl believes, that what was ſo declared to the ſaid Monſieur Buys, was agreeable to Truth, and to the real Sentiments and Intentions of her Majeſty; nor doth he know wherein the ſaid Articles, ſigned by Monſieur Meſnager, and accepted by the Lord Dartmouth and Mr. St. John, if any ſuch were then ſigned, were inconſiſtent with ſuch Declaration, or how her Majeſty was thereby diſhonoured, or her Allies abuſed, or that any Negotiation entered into with France was either dangerous in itſelf, or fatal in its Conſequences.

In anſwer to the Fifth Article, the ſaid Earl admits, that her ſacred Majeſty Queen Anne did in due Form of Law, and under her Great Seal, conſtitute the Right Reverend John Lord Biſhop of Briſtol, and the Earl of Strafford her Plenipotentiaries, with full Powers to meet, treat and conclude with the Plenipotentiaries of the Confederates, and thoſe whom the French King ſhould on his part depute for that Purpoſe, the Conditions of a good and general Peace, that ſhould be ſafe, honourable, and as far as was poſſible, agreeable to the reaſonable Demands of all Parties, and believes Inſtructions were prepared and delivered to them, wherein they were inſtructed, among other Things, to the Effect in the ſaid Article ſet forth; and is firmly perſuaded, that when the ſaid Plenipotentiaries were ſo inſtructed to inſiſt, that Spain and the Weſt-Indies ſhould not be allotted to the Houſe of Bourbon, no Treaty had been negotiated and agreed, that Spain and the Weſt-Indies ſhould remain in a Branch of that Houſe: And he has Reaſon to believe, that at the Time when the ſaid Inſtructions were given to her Majeſty's ſaid Plenipotentiaries, there was juſt Ground to believe, that King Philip would be induced to abandon Spain and the Weſt-Indies, and content himſelf with the Dominions of Savoy and the Kingdom of Sicily: And he believes he may ſo far depend on his Memory, as to ſay, that he heard the late Queen declare, ſhe believ'd the Proſpect King Philip had of ſucceeding to the Crown of France, would be an Inducement to him to be eaſy with that Allotment. And it ſeemed probable, that the Addition of the Dominions of Savoy to the Crown of France, in Caſe King Philip ſhould ſucceed to it, would be eſteemed by the French Court as a Thing more to be deſired by them, than that Spain and the Indies ſhould remain in the Poſſeſſion of a younger Prince of the Houſe of Bourbon, under the Condition of his renouncing the Right he would have to the Crown of France, if the eldeſt Branch ſhould fail. Theſe ſeem to him to have been her Majeſty's Views at the Time when the ſaid Inſtructions were given to the Biſhop of Briſtol and the Earl of Strafford; and he therefore believes, that whoever contrived or prepared the ſame, did prepare them conformable to her Majeſty's real Sentiments, and was far from any Thought or Deſign to abuſe the Royal Authority, delude the States-General, prejudice his Imperial Majeſty, or any of the Allies, or to carry on the Meaſures of France: And if King Philip afterwards upon Information, that the then Dauphin was likely to live, or at the preſſing Inſtances of the Spaniards, and Influence of Spaniſh Counſels, or upon any other Motives, refuſed to accept of Savoy and Sicily, and choſe rather to renounce the French Monarchy; he thinks no Perſon who acts in the Service of the Crown can be ſafe, if it may be charged on him as a Crime, that he adviſed Inſtructions, which by intervening Circumſtances afterwards became improper. But he the ſaid Earl doth not admit, that he contrived or prepared the ſaid Inſtructions, or was conſenting or adviſing to the contriving or preparing of them, or prevailed on her Majeſty to ſign them; much leſs that he abuſed the Royal Authority, to the Deluſion of the States-General, or intended the Prejudice of his Imperial Majeſty or any of the Allies, or was engaged to carry on the Meaſures of France, or had, when the ſaid Inſtructions were prepared, negotiated or agreed with the Miniſters of France, that Spain and the Weſt-Indies ſhould remain in a Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon, or had prevailed on her Majeſty to be Party to any private Treaty, wherein the ſame is neceſſarily implied. If the Plenipotentiaries were inſtructed, in Caſe the Enemy ſhould object, that the Second Article of the Seven, ſigned by Monſieur Meſnager, implied the Duke of Anjou ſhould continue on the Throne of Spain, to inſiſt that thoſe Articles were binding to France, but laid neither the Queen nor her Allies under any Obligation, the ſaid Earl doth not apprehend how an Inſtruction to her Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries, to make a juſt Anſwer to a falſe Inference, that might happen to be drawn by the Enemy from the Words of ſuch an Article, can be interpreted an entering into a Confederacy or Colluſion with the Miniſters of the Enemy; or that her Majeſty's Conſent to ſuch Inſtructions could imply any Deſign to impoſe on his Imperial Majeſty or the Allies, or to conceal any Negotiations between Great Britain and France. But the ſaid Earl is confident it will not appear by any of his Actions on the ſtricteſt Scrutiny, that he ever entered into any Confederacy or Colluſion with the Miniſters of the Enemy, or prevailed on the Queen to give her Conſent thereto, or had any Deſigns to impoſe upon his Imperial Majeſty, or any of the Allies, or ever was privy to any ſecret Negotiations or ſeparate Treaty between Great Britain and France, whereby either in the before-mentioned tioned, or in any other Particulars, any Reproach could be brought on the Crown of theſe Realms, or any Treaties wherein her Majeſty was engaged to her Allies were violated.

In anſwer to the Sixth Article, the ſaid Earl doth admit, that after the Conferences of Peace between the Plenipotentiaries of the Allies, and thoſe of the Enemy, for negotiating a general Peace were opened, wherein he is perſuaded her Majeſty and her Miniſters did act in perfect Confidence with the Allies, in order to promote their common Intereſt, and to obtain from the Enemy all juſt and reaſonable Satisfaction; the Progreſs of the ſaid Negotiation was delayed by Debates, concerning the Enemy's Refuſal to give their Anſwer in Writing to the Demands of the Allies; but he doth not know that any of the Miniſters of Great Britain did, by any Encouragement or Concurrence, contribute thereunto: And if, during that time, her Majeſty thought fit to authorize any of her Miniſters to write or negotiate upon any particular Points relating to the Peace, directly from England to France, in order to facilitate the general Negotiations of Peace, which he the ſaid Earl doth not admit to have been done by his Privity; yet he the ſaid Earl doth not apprehend, that by the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, or any Law in being, the Queen was debarr'd from doing ſo; or that by conſtituting the ſaid Plenipotentiaries, ſhe had ſo far delegated to them her Royal Authority, as to be diſabled, without revoking their Commiſſion, to treat or negotiate any Matters conducing to that End, in ſuch other manner as ſhe ſhould think fit. The ſaid Earl ſaith, that he did not adviſe, contrive, or promote any private, ſeparate, or unjuſtifiable Negotiation with France, nor doth he know any Negotiation relating to the Peace was carried on without Communication thereof to the Allies. And the ſaid Earl denies that he ever aſſumed Regal Authority, or that he treated of Peace with France in any manner that could be liable to ſuch Imputation, or did promote the Deſign of the Enemy to the Deſtruction of the Common Cauſe of her Majeſty, or of her Allies, contrary to the Laws or Conſtitution of this Kingdom, or in Violation of any of the Alliances her Majeſty ſtood engaged in, or of the Aſſurances given by her Majeſty, or of her Inſtructions to her Plenipotentiaries; or that any Terms of Peace were by him at any time concerted, prejudicial to the Intereſt of her Majeſty, or her Kingdoms, or Allies, or whereby the good Effects of the general Negotiation were defeated.

In anſwer to the Seventh Article, the ſaid Earl ſaith, that he never adviſed her late Majeſty to accept of a Treaty with France, on a Suppoſition that the Spaniſh Monarchy ſhould continue in the Poſſeſſion of a Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon; nor did he adviſe, or carry on any private or ſeparate Negotiation with France, on the Subject of a Renunciation to be made by the Duke of Anjou, of the Right he might have to the Kingdom of France, and that ſuch Renunciation ſhould be the Security againſt the Re-union of the two Kingdoms: Or that by his Counſels her Majeſty was prevailed on to accept, and finally to conclude and ratify a Treaty of Peace with France, wherein the ſaid Renunciation is taken as a ſufficient Expedient to prevent the Miſchiefs that threatned all Europe, in caſe the Crowns of France and Spain ſhould be United upon the Head of one and the ſame Perſon: Nor doth he know, that during the ſaid Negotiation, any ſuch Memorial, as in the ſaid Article is ſet forth, was tranſmitted by the ſaid Monſieur de Torcy to any of her Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State: But he the ſaid Earl doth freely acknowledge, that if he had been called upon to give his Opinion concerning the leaving of Spain and the Weſt Indies in the Poſſeſſion of a Branch of the Houſe of Bourbon, and accepting the Renunciation of his Right to the Kingdom of France by the Duke of Anjou, he doth not at preſent ſee any Reaſon why he might not have been of Opinion for leaving Spain and the Weſt-Indies to the preſent Poſſeſſor, and accepting the Renunciation, rather than have continued the War ſo burthenſome to the People, and ſo impracticable upon the Foot on which it then ſtood, eſpecially ſince all Endeavours to remove him by Treaties or Force had ſo long proved ineffectual. And in caſe any ſuch Memorial as is ſet forth in the ſaid Article, was ſent by any Miniſter of France to the Secretary of the late Queen, he ſhould look upon the ſame as a Proof of the Earneſtneſs of the Court of France to avoid ſuch Renunciation, which might more effectually prevent all poſſibility of annexing the Crown of Spain to that of France. But whatever Inducements might be for ſuch a Memorial (if any ſuch was tranſmitted) the ſaid Earl doth affirm, that he never gave any Counſels by which the Intereſt of the Common Cauſe could be betray'd into the Hands of the Enemy; nor doth he think it was poſſible by any Power and Influence, to engage her Majeſty to become Party with France in any Deceit; but whatever Credit he at any time had by her Favour, he always uſed it with the utmoſt Sincerity for her Service, and the Good of her People.

In anſwer to the Eighth Article, the ſaid Earl believes, that her late Majeſty Queen Anne did, on the Seventh Day of December, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, recommend it from the Throne, that Proviſion might be made for an early Campaign, in order to carry on the War with Vigour, and as the beſt way to render the Treaty of Peace effectual; and he doth believe, that in order thereto Supplies were granted, and Magazines provided at a great Expence for an early Campaign, and that in purſuance thereof her Majeſty might ſend ſome General Officers to explain her Intentions to her Allies; and likewiſe inſtructed her General the Duke of Ormond to declare her Reſolutions of carrying on the War, and to concert with the Generals of the Allies the proper Meaſures for entering upon Action: And he doth believe, that the Confederate Army was provided with all Neceſſaries: But whether the ſaid Army had approached, or how near they had approached to the Enemy; whether they had any, or what Superiority, as to the number of Troops; or what likelihood there was, that they would have been able, either by Battle or Siege, to have better'd the Affairs of the Allies, or to have facilitated the Negotiations of Peace, the ſaid Earl is not able to ſay: But it muſt be obvious to every one, that any Miſcarriage or Diſaſter on the part of the Allies, at ſuch a Juncture, muſt have been fatal to them: And though the Divine Aſſiſtance had been very remarkable in the many Victories her Majeſty's Forces had obtained, yet her Majeſty's Piety was ſo great, that it is not likely ſhe ſhould, without the greateſt Neceſſity, have been willing to have tempted that Providence which had been ſo ſignal in her Favour, by hazarding the Blood of her Subjects at a time when ſhe had ſo near a Proſpect of the Concluſion of a Peace: And the ſaid Earl believes it might be owing to this Piety of the Queen, and her Knowledge of ſome important Matters then depending, that Directions were ſent to the Duke of Ormond (if any ſuch were ſent) to avoid engaging in any Siege, or hazarding any Battle till further Orders; which he ſuppoſeth her Majeſty might do upon any Cauſes ſhe thought proper, as well as the Deputies of the States, who, as the ſaid Earl hath been informed, have often refuſed to engage in Siege or Battle, upon ſuch Ground as they alone thought fit, when their own Generals, and the Generals of the other Allies, were of Opinion they had a viſible Advantage of the Enemy, and might engage in ſuch Siege or Battle with great Probability of Succeſs. But he doth affirm that the Miniſters of France never repreſented to him or to any others, as far as he knows, during any Negotiation, any Apprehenſions they had from the Bravery and good Diſpoſition of the Confederate Army; nor was he ever informed of any ſure Proſpect which it is alledged the Army of the Confederates then had of gaining new Conqueſts over the Army of France, or whereby they would have been enabled to have forced any better Terms of Peace than there was at that time likelihood of: But on the contrary he has been informed, that the Forces of France were ſuperior in Number to thoſe of the Confederates, eſpecially in Horſe. However the ſaid Earl doth not admit, that he did adviſe or conſent that any Order ſhould be diſpatched in her Majeſty's Name to the Duke of Ormond to the aforementioned Effect; nor had he any View or Deſign to diſappoint the Expectations of the Allies, or to give Succeſs to any ſecret Negotiations with the Miniſters of France. The ſaid Earl likewiſe denies, that he did conſent or adviſe that Orders ſhould be ſent to the Biſhop of Briſtol, one of her Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries then at Utrecht, to declare to the Dutch Miniſters, that her Majeſty looked on her ſelf, from their Conduct, to be then under no Obligation whatſoever to them. He doth not know what Alarm the Allies might take, or what Repreſentations they made to the Biſhop of Briſtol of their Diſſatisfaction or Conſternation, but doubts not the ſaid Biſhop would readily repreſent what they deſired, tho' ſuch Repreſentation made by his Lordſhip, if any ſuch there was, fell not under the Knowledge of the ſaid Earl, nor doth he admit that any Application of that kind was made to him. And in caſe the States-General made ſuch Addreſs directly to her Majeſty, by a Letter of the Fifth Day of June, as in the ſaid Article is ſet forth, he the ſaid Earl not being acquainted therewith, could neither adviſe her Majeſty to hearken to the Inſtances therein made, nor to diſregard or reject the ſame. He ſaith, he never entered into Meaſures for the Advancement of the Intereſt of the common Enemy, or countenanced, encouraged, adviſed, or promoted any Negotiations with France without Participation of the Allies, or contrary to her Majeſty's Engagement, or to the Ruin of the Common Cauſe; nor is he conſcious to himſelf, that he ever gave any Counſels, by which the Progreſs of the victorious Arms of the Confederates was ſtopped, or any Opportunity loſt for conquering the Enemy, or which had any Tendency to deſtroy the Confidence between her Majeſty and her Allies, or make the French King Maſter of the Negotiations of Peace, or which could put the Affairs of Europe into his Hands.

In anſwer to the ninth Article, the ſaid Earl denies he was privy or conſenting to any Concert with the Miniſters of France for the ſeparating the Troops in her Majeſty's Pay from the reſt of the Confederate Army; and not being privy to any ſuch Concert, he hopes it will not be imputed to him as any want of Duty, that he did not adviſe againſt ſuch a Proceeding. He denies alſo, that he ever entertained the leaſt Deſign of impoſing upon the Allies any Neceſſity of ſubmitting to the Terms of France, or of leaving the Confederate Army to the Mercy of the Enemy, or that he did conſent or adviſe her Majeſty that the Duke of Ormond and the Troops in her Majeſty's Pay, or ſuch of them as would obey his Orders, ſhould ſeparate themſelves from the Army of the Confederates. The ſaid Earl hath been informed, and believes it to be true, that the Imperial General, and ſome other Generals, did propoſe to the Duke of Ormond in June or July, in the Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, to decamp from the Ground where they lay, and to proceed towards Landrecy, in order to form the Siege of that Place, and that the Duke of Ormond thought it not proper to conſent thereto, and gave notice to the ſaid Generals, that if they decamped they muſt not expect him to follow them. And the ſaid Earl believes, Inſtances may be given where Generals of other Potentates in the Alliance have refuſed to comply with what has been propoſed to them by her late Majeſty's General. The ſaid Earl hath likewiſe heard, that, notwithſtanding ſuch Notice from the Duke of Ormond, the ſaid Generals ſeparated themſelves and their Forces from the ſaid Duke, and marched towards Landrecy without him, and that the ſaid Duke continued for ſome time in his former Camp after ſuch Separation: And that the Generals of the Auxiliary Troops paid by her Majeſty, although required by the ſaid Duke of Ormond, under whoſe Command they then were, to continue with him, and to obey his Orders, refuſed ſo to do. He the ſaid Earl ſuppoſes it might proceed from her Majeſty's Reſentment of that Inſtance of Diſobedience in the Auxiliary Troops to the Commands of her General, that ſhe did not think fit immediately to pay the Arrears of thoſe Forces which had ſo obſtinately withdrawn themſelves from her General, and marched without him towards Landrecy, as not apprehending herſelf obliged by any Conventions, or the Proviſion of any Act of Parliament, ſo to do. But whatever might be the Cauſes or Occaſions of her Majeſty's Reſentment, the ſaid Earl ſaith, that he being in the Office of High Treaſurer under her Majeſty, could not, by the Duty of his Place, iſſue out any Monies without a proper Warrant or Authority from her Majeſty; and denies that he ever received any Warrant or Authority from her Majeſty for iſſuing any Sum or Sums of Money for or towards the Pay or Subſidies on account of the ſaid Foreign Troops who had ſo ſeparated, without which the iſſuing or directing any Monies for the Payment of them had been a Violation of his Duty. And the ſaid Earl denies, that he did at any time refuſe or put a ſtop to any ſuch Pay or Subſidies; but on the contrary, when the Miniſters of the Princes to whom thoſe Forces belonged did apply for the Payment of the ſaid Troops, the ſaid Earl deſired them to make Application to her Majeſty for the neceſſary Warrants in order thereunto. And as the ſaid Earl had no Notice of any Separation intended between her Majeſty's Forces and thoſe of the Allies before the ſame was made; ſo he abſolutely denies, that by his Advice or Counſel, or with his Privacy, any ſuch Separation was made: And humbly apprehends that he ought not in Juſtice to be charged with any Conſequences of it. He believes, that the Forces of ſome of the Allies were engaged in the unfortunate Action of Denain, and that the Siege of Landrecy was raiſed, and the Towns of Queſnoy, Bouchain, and Douay were ſome time after re-taken by the French Army: But whether thoſe Diſaſters might not have been prevented by a Compliance with the Meaſures her Majeſty had taken for the common Good, the ſaid Earl ſubmits to your Lordſhips.

In anſwer to the Tenth Article, the ſaid Earl denies that he did carry on, or concert with the Miniſters of France, a private or ſeparate Negotiation for a general Suſpenſion by Sea and Land between Great Britain and France; or that he did adviſe her Majeſty to ſend over Henry Viſcount Bolingbroke to the Court of France, with Powers to ſettle ſuch Suſpenſion; but hath been informed, and believes it may be true, that about the Nineteenth of Auguſt One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, N. S. a Suſpenſion of Arms was agreed on in France by the ſaid Viſcount Bolingbroke on her Majeſty's part for four Months; but whether ſuch Agreement was made without the Knowledge or Participation of her Majeſty's Allies, or how far the Terms of Peace were then ſettled with France, either for Great Britain, or the Allies, the ſaid Earl is not able to ſet forth: But from the Information he hath received of that Affair, believes it will appear, that the ſaid Suſpenſion was a Continuation only of a former Agreement for a Ceſſation of Arms, which had been not only communicated to the Allies, but into which they had been invited; and believes her Majeſty might be induced to deſire ſuch Ceſſation, as was uſual amongſt Princes and States in War during Negotiations of Peace, by which means the Britiſh Merchants enjoy'd a free Trade, and had an Opportunity of carrying the Merchandizes of other Countries to ſeveral Parts of Europe, as the Dutch had done during the War; and therefore the ſaid Earl doth not conceive that her Majeſty, by the ſaid Suſpenſion, did in the leaſt intend the Violation of any Treaties between her and her Allies, or to deprive them of any Aſſiſtance to which they were entitled, or expoſe them to the Inſults of the common Enemy: Nor doth he diſcern how theſe Conſequences could enſue, without the Default of the Allies themſelves; much leſs how the Ties of Union and Friendſhip between her Majeſty and them were cut aſunder, or her Majeſty's Perſon or Government, or the Safety of her Kingdoms, or the Proteſtant Succeſſion, were expoſed thereby. But the ſaid Earl aſſures himſelf, that he ſhall never ſtand chargeable with any Conſequences of ſuch Suſpenſion which he never adviſed; nor did he the ſaid Earl ever entertain the leaſt Thought or Deſign of occaſioning the Deſtruction of the Common Cauſe of Europe, or hindering her Majeſty from reſuming the War againſt France, in Conjunction with her Allies, if it had been ſo thought fit, or of weakening the Union between her Majeſty and them.

In anſwer to the Eleventh Article, the ſaid Earl ſaith, he believes it to be true, that in or about the Months of September or October One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, the States-General were in Poſſeſſion of the Town and Fortreſs of Tournay; and that her Majeſty, in her Inſtructions of December the Twenty Third, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, did direct 'em to inſiſt with the Plenipotentiaries of France, in the general Congreſs, that towards forming a Barrier for the States-General, Tournay ſhould remain to the States; and doth believe the French King did at one time incline thereto: But doth not know that her Majeſty in her Speech in the ſaid Article mentioned, did declare herſelf as in the ſaid Article is ſet forth. The ſaid Earl admits, that until and after the Months of September and October One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, there was open War between her late Majeſty and the French King; and that during ſuch War, the French King and his Subjects were Enemies to the late Queen: But the ſaid Earl hath been informed, and believes, that full Powers were given by her Majeſty, and the States-General of the United Provinces, to their reſpective Miniſters, and by the French King to his Miniſters, to negotiate and treat of Peace between her Majeſty and the States-General, and ſaid French King; upon which Negotiations a Peace was afterwards concluded between them; during which Negotiations he hath heard, that the French King did inſiſt upon the yielding up the Town and Fort of Tournay by the States to him; and the ſaid States-General deſired her Majeſty's Interpoſition with the French King on their behalf; and that at ſuch Requeſt her Majeſty interpoſed her beſt Offices on behalf of the States-General, and did at laſt prevail, that the ſaid Town and Fortreſs of Tournay ſhould be, and he believes the ſame is continued to the States-General as part of their Barrier. But the ſaid Earl abſolutely denies that he did deſign to give Aid, or Succour, or to adhere to the French King; or that he did in or about the Month of October One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, or at any other time, during the ſaid War, aid, help or aſſiſt, or adhere to the ſaid French King; or, that he did ever counſel or adviſe the ſaid Enemy in what Manner, or by what Methods the ſaid Town and Fortreſs of Tournay, or either of them, might be gained from the States-General to the French King, in Manner and Form as in the ſaid Article is charged. On the contrary, he the ſaid Earl did uſe his beſt Offices to preſerve the ſaid Town and Fortreſs of Tournay to the States-General. But the ſaid Earl ſaith, that during the Negotiations of the late Peace, he had the Honour to be one of her Majeſty's Privy-Council; and whatſoever Counſel or Advice he gave, relating to any Terms of the ſaid Peace, he acted therein as a Privy-Counſellor and Miniſter of State, and no otherwiſe: And doth inſiſt, that for any Privy-Counſellor, or Miniſter of State, during the Negotiations of Peace, to adviſe or negotiate, concerning the yielding or giving up any Town, Province or Dominion, upon the Concluſion of the Peace, as part of the Terms and Conditions of ſuch Peace, is not High Treaſon by any Law of this Realm; and that ſuch Conſtruction might hereafter deprive the Crown of the Advice and Aſſiſtance of ſeveral Members of the Privy-Council, in Matters of the greateſt Importance, by deterring them from giving ſuch Advice as, by their Oaths, and the Duty of their Place, they are obliged to do; would overthrow all means of reſtoring Amity between Princes, and render the Law, in caſe of High Treaſon, uncertain, which by reaſon of its being the moſt penal, ought to be moſt plain; and would be highly dangerous and deſtructive to the Lives and Liberties of the Subject.

In anſwer to the Twelfth Article, the ſaid Earl (not admitting that her late Majeſty Queen Anne ſtood engaged by Treaties in manner as in the ſaid Article is alledged, but referring himſelf to the Treaties, when they ſhall be produced) for anſwer, denies, that he did in any of the Years One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Ten, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, or at any other time, aid, help, aſſiſt, or adhere to the Duke of Anjou, in the ſaid Article named, or adviſe or counſel any of the Enemies of her ſaid late Majeſty, or concert with any of them, or promote the yielding or giving up of Spain and the Weſt-Indies, or any Part thereof to the ſaid Duke of Anjou, in Manner and Form as in the ſaid Article is alledged. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, as in his Anſwer to the Eleventh Article he hath already ſaid, that during the Negotiations of the late Peace, he had the Honour to be one of her ſaid late Majeſty's Privy-Council, and whatever Counſel or Advice he gave, relating to any Terms of the ſaid Peace, he acted therein as a Privy-Counſellor and Miniſter of State, and no otherwiſe; and inſiſts as in his Anſwer to the Eleventh Article he has inſiſted.

In anſwer to the Thirteenth Article the ſaid Earl admits, that the flouriſhing Condition of Trade and Navigation contributes much to the Riches, Power and Strength of theſe Kingdoms; and believes, that her late Majeſty had a juſt Regard thereto, and a ſincere Deſire to obtain ſome Advantages therein for her People; and did make the ſeveral Declarations from the Throne ſet forth in this Article: And that both Houſes of Parliament did, from time to time, expreſs their grateful Acknowledgments to her Majeſty, for her great Care and Concern for the Welfare of her People; and believes her Majeſty might think it reaſonable, conſidering the Share and Burthen ſhe and her People had ſuſtained in the War, that France ſhould, in the firſt Place, adjuſt the Intereſts of Great Britain, which were to be ſecured on the Concluſion of a general Peace: But the ſaid Earl doth not know or believe that at the ſetting on foot, or in the Progreſs of any Negotiation between the Miniſters of Great Britain and France, it was laid down as a Principle that France ſhould, in the firſt place, conſent to adjuſt the Intereſts of Great Britain, to the Intent that the Miniſters of Great Britain might thereby be enabled to engage the Queen to make the Concluſion of the Peace eaſy to France; nor doth he know that any Conceſſions were made by the Miniſters of Great Britain, with intent to promote the Intereſts of France againſt the Allies; or that any Meaſures were entered into or concerted between them, in order to ſtrengthen the Hands of the French, or to enable them to impoſe the Terms of a general Peace. And the ſaid Earl doth abſolutely deny that he was engaged, in Concert with France, in any Negotiation deſtructive to his Country, or that he ever had the leaſt Imagination or Thought tending that way, or to the ſacrificing the Commerce of Great Britain to the Aggrandiſement of France: But on the contrary, he hath always had the moſt real and ſincere Deſires to ſecure and advance the Commerce of Great Britain, and to preſerve his Country, in whoſe Service he hath been always ready to ſacrifice himſelf, and every private Intereſt whatſoever. And the ſaid Earl is not conſcious to himſelf of any want of Duty, either in not inſiſting upon, or not procuring the moſt certain Securities that could be obtained for the Safety and Advantage of the Commerce of theſe Kingdoms. And the ſaid Earl doth not admit, that he did adviſe her late Majeſty, that any Propoſition ſhould be ſent by Mr. Prior to France; or that any private or ſeparate Treaty, or the Preliminary Articles, which are ſaid to be ſigned the Twenty Seventh Day of September One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, ſhould be ſigned. But the ſaid Earl hath been informed, and believes, that in a Paper intitled, The Anſwer of France to the Demands of Great Britain more particularly, it is ſaid, that the entire Reſtitution of Newfoundland, and of the Bay and Streights of Hudſon, was demanded for the Engliſh: And that the French King's Anſwer was, That the Diſcuſſion of that Article ſhould be referred to the general Conferences of the Peace, provided the Liberty of fiſhing and drying of Codfiſh upon the Iſle of Newfoundland ſhould be reſerved to the French. And the ſaid Earl conceives that Paper was not concluſive, but was to be the Subject of future Conferences, wherein the whole Matter might be entirely conſidered; and conſequently that the entring into Conferences on that Paper, was not the yielding to the French the Liberty of fiſhing and drying Fiſh on Newfoundland, which they inſiſted on. And the ſaid Earl denies, that he adviſed the Demands for Great Britain, in Point of Commerce, ſhould be made in looſe, general, or inſufficient Terms; or that he adviſed the Liberties inſiſted on by the French ſhould be given up to France, as in the ſaid Article is alledged: And he believes that when it is conſidered what Advantages were likely to enſue to the Commerce of Great Britain by the Aſſiento Contract, and the Liberty of Trading to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies by the Ceſſion of Arcadia, the Bay and Streights of Hudſon, the Iſland of St. Chriſtopher, Newfoundland, the Iſland of St. Peter, with other adjacent Iſlands; by the Demolition of Dunkirk, and the Ceſſion of Port-Mahon and Gibraltar, it will not be thought the Commerce of Great Britain was neglected by her Majeſty, in the late Treaties of Peace. And as the ſaid Earl doth not know that France was at any time Maſter of the Negotiations, ſo he denies that he did engage her Majeſty in any private Treaties with France, without Security for the Commerce of Great Britain; or that he did contrive, with any of the Miniſters of France, to keep in Suſpence any Matter that concerned the ſaid Commerce, or that he was any ways inſtrumental to the preventing any Advantages of the ſaid Commerce from being ſettled, or that he endeavoured to elude any thing that had been agreed on in any Negotiations for the Benefit of Great Britain. And although the ſaid Earl doth not admit, that he adviſed the Ninth Article of the Treaty of Commerce with France, yet he begs leave to obſerve, that nothing is poſitively ſtipulated in that Article, but the whole is conditional, and left to be determined by the Wiſdom of Parliament; and hopes it will never be thought an Act of Treachery, to refer any Article of any Treaty to the Judgment and Conſideration of Parliament; whatever Judgment the Parliament ſhall think fit to make thereon. And the ſaid Earl denies, that he adviſed her Majeſty to agree with France, that the Subjects of France ſhould have Liberty of Fiſhing, and Drying Fiſh on Newfoundland: But the ſaid Earl believes, that what her late Majeſty agreed with France, relating thereto, will not ſeem unreaſonable, if it be conſidered, that the French long ago claim'd a Right to, and were in Poſſeſſion of great Part of Newfoundland; and that they were allowed to continue in Poſſeſſion thereof by the Crown of England, in a Treaty made at Whitehall in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred and Eighty-Six; and in another Treaty made at Ryſwick, in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Seven. And the ſaid Earl doth not know that ſuch Agreement of her Majeſty is contrary to the expreſs Proviſion of any Act of Parliament, ſince he preſumes the Act made in the Tenth and Eleventh Years of the Reign of King William the Third, intitled, An Act to encourage the Trade to Newfoundland, cannot reaſonably be intended, or conſtrued to extend to any Part of the Iſland, other than what was at the Time of making that Act in the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh. And the ſaid Earl is informed, that at that Time the Part of Newfoundland, where the Subjects of France are, by the Treaty of Utrecht, allowed the Liberty of Fiſhing, and drying Fiſh, was not in the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh. The ſaid Earl denies, that he adviſed her Majeſty to make a Ceſſion to France of the Iſle of Cape Breton; or that he adviſed her Majeſty to conſent, that what is agreed in the Treaty of Utrecht, concerning the Fiſhery of Newfoundland, or Cape Breton, ſhould be made an Article of that Treaty: However, the ſaid Earl doth not know that Cape Breton was Part of the Territories of the Crown of Great Britain; nor doth he apprehend, that her Majeſty, who in her Speech from the Throne declared, that France had conſented to make an abſolute Ceſſion of Annapolis, with the reſt of Nova Scotia, or Arcadia, ſhould be underſtood to ſpeak of Cape Breton, which is no Part of that Continent, but an Iſland diſtinct from it. The ſaid Earl further ſaith, he conceives, that the only Advantages in Trade, ſtipulated for Great Britain, did not depend on Conditions to be made good by Act of Parliament: On the contrary, he doubts not to make it appear, that many Advantages in Trade were ſtipulated for Great Britain, in the late Treaties of Peace and Commerce, which have been enjoyed by the Subjects of Great Britain, ſince the Concluſion of the ſaid Treaties, notwithſtanding the Parliament hath not thought fit to make any Act to enforce the Ninth Article of the Treaty of Commerce with France. And the ſaid Earl denies, that by his Counſels, the good Intentions of her ſacred Majeſty to have obtained for her People advantageous Terms of Commerce were fruſtrated, or the Trade or Manufactures of Great Britain render'd precarious, or at the Mercy of the Enemy; or any beneficial Branch of Trade yielded up to the Subjects of France. And as the ſaid Earl diſowns the being concerned in any Violation of Treaties, or in carrying on the Meaſures of France, or in any Negotiation which could terminate in the Sacrifice of the Commerce of Great Britain to France; ſo he obſerves, with great Satisfaction, the flouriſhing Condition of the Trade and Navigation of theſe Kingdoms, ſince the Concluſion, and by Means of the late Peace; in the great Encreaſe of the Number and Tonnage of Shipping, of the Exportation of the Woollen Manufactures, the Fiſh, and other Produce of this Kingdom; in Conſequence whereof, the Cuſtoms have been greatly advanced, near three Millions of Gold and Silver hath been coined, and the Exchange has been all along in the Favour of England, to and from all Parts of Europe.

In anſwer to the Fourteenth Article, the ſaid Earl doth not admit that he formed any Project, or Deſign, for diſpoſing the Kingdom of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy, from the Houſe of Auſtria; or that he did adviſe her Majeſty to give any ſuch Inſtructions to Henry Viſcount Bolingbroke, as in the ſaid Article mentioned, or to conſent to any Treaty wherein a Ceſſion is made of the ſaid Kingdom to his Royal Highneſs without any Concurrence or Participation of his Imperial Majeſty; nor doth he admit that her Majeſty was prevailed on, by his Advice, to aſſiſt his ſaid Royal Highneſs with her Fleet, againſt the Emperor, in order to obtain the Poſſeſſion of that Kingdom. But in Juſtification of her Majeſty's Proceedings, in relation to the ſaid Kingdom, the ſaid Earl doth beg leave to obſerve, that by the Grand Alliance, it was agreed, among other Things, that the Confederates ſhould uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to recover the Kingdom of Sicily out of the Hands of the Enemy; and that the principal Ends for endeavouring the Recovery of Sicily were, that his Imperial Majeſty might have a reaſonable Satisfaction for his Pretenſion to the Spaniſh Monarchy; and that the Trade and Navigation of the Subjects of Great Britain and Holland might thereby be better ſecured. Since therefore the Empire, and Hereditary Countries of Auſtria, were now fallen to Charles the Third, who at the Time of that Treaty was a younger Branch of that Houſe: Since ſeveral Towns in the French Flanders, which were not in the Poſſeſſion of King Charles the Second, at the Time of his Death, together with Spaniſh Flanders, Milan and Naples, might ſeem a reaſonable Satisfaction for his Imperial Majeſty's Pretenſions to the Spaniſh Succeſſion: And ſince the Trade and Navigation of the Subjects of Great Britain and Holland would be as effectually ſecured, by the Diſpoſition of the Kingdom of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy, as if the ſaid Kingdom had fallen to the Share of the Emperor: And greater Difficulties would be likely to ariſe, in obtaining the Diſpoſition thereof to the Houſe of Auſtria, than to that Duke, in as much as King Philip might be more eaſily induced to yield it to the Duke of Savoy, than to ſo potent a Prince as the Emperor; and there were Grounds to believe that all, or moſt of the Princes and States of Italy, were ſo apprehenſive of the growing Power of the Houſe of Auſtria in Italy, that they would ſuffer any Extremities, rather than ſubmit that Sicily, together with Milan and Naples, ſhould be in the Hands of the Emperor, the ſaid Earl doth not diſcern how any Project to diſpoſe the ſaid Kingdom to that Duke could be thought unjuſt, diſhonourable, or pernicious, or an Act of Injuſtice to his Imperial Majeſty, or Violation of the Grand Alliance: Nor doth the ſaid Earl remember, in what reſpect it was contradictory to any Declaration of her Majeſty, or the Inſtructions ſhe had given her Plenipotentiaries: And in Caſe her Majeſty thought fit, afterwards, to employ any Part of her Fleet to aſſiſt that Duke, her good and faithful Ally, to take Poſſeſſion of that Kingdom from the Enemy, in Conſideration of the ſaid Duke's ſteady Adherence to the Confederacy, and great Sufferings by ſuch Adherence; he the ſaid Earl is not able to diſcover why ſuch Aſſiſtance might not be given to the ſaid Duke, as well as to any other of her Allies whatſoever. And ſince it is allowed by this Article, that the then Duke of Savoy never made any Application, in order to obtain the ſaid Kingdom for himſelf, it ſeems an Evidence at leaſt, that the Perſon or Perſons who adviſed the late Queen to agree to ſuch Allotment, did not act upon any private Intereſt, or had any other View than the Preſervation of a Ballance of Power in Europe, and the Security of the Trade and Navigation of the Subjects of Great Britain and Holland; and cannot reaſonably be thought, upon a fair and candid Interpretation, to have been guilty of betraying the National Faith, or Honour of the Crown, or employing the Naval Power of theſe Kingdoms, or the Supplies granted by Parliament, againſt an Ally of this Kingdom.

In anſwer to the Fifteenth Article, the ſaid Earl ſaith, he is and always was of Opinion, that the Word of the Sovereign is ſacred, and that all Communications from the Throne to Parliament ought to be true, and that it becomes all Miniſters of State, as far as in them lies, to maintain the Honour of the Crown, in ſuch Caſes, with the utmoſt Exactneſs; nor doth the ſaid Earl know that he hath, at any Time, been defective in his Duty, in this Particular, or ever took upon himſelf any arbitrary or unwarrantable Authority, much leſs the chief Direction and Influence in her Majeſty's Counſels: Nor did he ever proſtitute the Honour of the Crown or Dignity of Parliament, by miſrepreſenting any Part of the late Negotiations of Peace, to deceive either her Majeſty, her Allies, her Parliament, or her People; nor did ever prepare, form, or concert, or adviſe her Majeſty to make any Speech or Declaration from the Throne, to her Parliament, that was not conformable to Truth. He believes her Majeſty might make ſeveral Speeches from the Throne to her Parliament, at the ſeveral Times in the ſaid Article mentioned, to which the ſaid Earl refers; and particularly, that her Majeſty did, on the Seventh of December, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, declare, that her Allies, eſpecially the States-General had, by their ready Compliance for opening a Treaty of a general Peace, expreſſed their Confidence in her; but the ſaid Earl not admitting there were ſuch Repreſentations as ſuggeſted in this Article, begs leave, in Vindication of the Honour of his Royal Miſtreſs, who was a Princeſs of ſtrict Piety and Truth, to obſerve, that the States-General ſent over Monſieur Buys to her Majeſty, with Letters full of Aſſurances of their Reſpect for her Perſon, and their Reſolutions not to ſeparate themſelves from her; and likewiſe ſignified by him, to her Miniſters, their Readineſs to concur with her Majeſty. And the ſaid Monſieur Buys, immediately upon his Arrival at London, delivered Paſſports for the French Miniſters to come to Utrecht; and at a Meeting of ſeveral Lords of the Council, ſhewed his Approbation of ſending circular Letters to invite the reſt of the Allies to the general Congreſs: And the ſaid Monſieur Buys exhibited full Powers for preparing and ſigning a new Treaty, whereby her Majeſty and the States ſhould be mutually engaged to each other in making War and Peace, to guarantee the Peace when made, and to invite the reſt of the Allies into ſuch Guarantee; all which Matters and Tranſactions being previous to the Seventh of December, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, her Majeſty might juſtly regard the aforeſaid authentick Acts and Aſſurances, as greater Proofs of the Confidence the States had in her, and of their Readineſs to concur with her, than any Repreſentations or Reports before that Time; and that the ſaid Declaration of her Majeſty from the Throne was founded upon the ſtricteſt Truth. And the ſaid Earl believes, that every one who impartially conſiders the Steps taken in the late Negotiations of Peace, the Length of the Treaty, the ſeveral Letters from one of her Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State to her Plenipotentiary at Utrecht, the Ratification of the Engagement ſigned by her Miniſters and Monſieur Buys, the Eighteenth of December One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, and her exhorting the States to ratify the ſame; her preſſing Inſtances to the Princes and States of the Empire, and the many other Acts which were done by her Majeſty's Orders during that Tranſaction for the Service and Satisfaction of her Allies, will readily acknowledge, that her Majeſty did her utmoſt to procure for her Allies, and in particular for his Imperial Majeſty, all reaſonable Satisfaction; and to unite with them in the ſtricteſt Engagements, to render the Peace ſecure and laſting, agreeable to her Speech of the ſaid Seventh Day of December, and her Meſſage of the Seventeenth of January following, in this Article mention'd: And if by any extraordinary Demands or groundleſs Jealouſies of any of the Allies, or other Accidents, her Majeſty was not able to obtain for them all the Advantages ſhe deſired, this will not derogate from the Truth and Sincerity of her Majeſty's Expreſſions. And it is evident her Majeſty did procure them ſo great Satisfaction, that the Allies did all ſign the Peace at the ſame Time with her Majeſty, excepting only the Emperor; and even his Intereſts were ſo far adjuſted, that what remained in diſpute was not thought ſufficient to delay ſo great and good a Work: And it is well known the Emperors of Germany have frequently declined ſigning their Treaties of Peace at the ſame Time with their Allies. But that her Majeſty was induced by any Influence of the ſaid Earl to enter into any Negotiation with France, excluſive of her Allies; or that the ſaid Earl carried on any ſuch Negotiation; or that the Intereſt of the ſaid Allies, or in particular of the Emperor, were, by any Practices of his, given up to France, he utterly denies. And when it is conſidered, that much Britiſh Blood and Treaſure had been ſpent to recover Spain and the Weſt-Indies from the Houſe of Bourbon, that an expenſive penſive War had for many Years continued, which her Majeſty ſtill ſupplied with new Recruits and redoubled Expence; that her Armies, and thoſe of the Allies, had been beaten in Spain; that Prince Eugene had declared, that Forty Thouſand Men, and Four Millions of Crowns per Annum would be neceſſary for carrying on that War, and that his Maſter could ſupply no more than a Fourth Part of that Charge; that it was found by long Experience, how averſe the People of Spain in general were to ſubmit themſelves to the Houſe of Auſtria; that her Majeſty diſcerned the Charge of renewing the War in Spain would be a Burthen too great for her Subjects, and that there was little Probability of its being ſucceſsful; that the hereditary Countries were then, by the Death of the Emperor Joſeph, fallen to King Charles, who was ſoon after choſen Emperor (by which Event the Intereſt of the Princes and States of Europe were changed;) it cannot be doubted but that her late Majeſty had, at the Time when ſhe made the aforeſaid Declaration, done her utmoſt to recover Spain and the Weſt-Indies by Force of Arms: And the moſt ſhe could do afterwards, was by way of Negotiation, wherein ſhe inſiſted with that Earneſtneſs on King Philip's quitting Spain, that France complied with her Majeſty's Propoſals: But when King Philip could not be prevailed on to give up Spain, her Majeſty thought his Renunciation of the Crown of France, as Circumſtances then ſtood, the moſt practicable, if not the only Method left to prevent the Union of thoſe two Monarchies. But the ſaid Earl doth not think it probable, that the leaving Spain and the Weſt-Indies to the Houſe of Bourbon, was the Foundation of the Preliminary Articles ſigned by Monſieur Meſnager, and of the Declaration annexed, which had been ſigned by the Lord Dartmouth and Mr. St. John, with her Majeſty's Conſent (and which the ſaid Earl ſuppoſes is what is called the private Treaty in this Article) ſince he believes it was then thought more likely that the Crown of Spain might fall to ſome other Prince. And the ſaid Earl doth not obſerve, how her Majeſty can be charged with uttering any Falſity in her Meſſage of the Seventeenth Day of January, wherein ſhe takes notice, how groundleſs the Reports were that had been ſpread of a ſeparate Peace being treated, for which Report there was not then, nor at any other Time, the leaſt Foundation; ſince only ſome few Points were adjuſted, relating to the particular Intereſts of her own Kingdoms, and even thoſe were to have no Effect but upon the Concluſion of a general Peace, and were likewiſe, before ſuch Concluſion, communicated to the Allies. And the ſaid Earl denies, that thenceforth, or at any Time, there were carried on, by him, any ſeparate Meaſures with the Miniſters of France; nor doth he conceive, that the Propoſal about the Renunciation was merely ſpeculative, but that it was of ſuch a Nature as would execute itſelf, and keep the Crowns of France and Spain more effectually divided than ever; if it be conſidered, that it did not conſiſt only in a Renunciation to be made by Philip, then in Poſſeſſion of the Crown of Spain, of his contingent Right to that of France; but that there was a Title to the Crown of France thereby given to the Duke of Orleans, and after him to the reſt of the Princes of the Houſe of Bourbon, who could not be preſumed to want the Will, nor would be likely to want the Power, to take Poſſeſſion of the Crown of France, by Vertue of ſuch Title, in Oppoſition to a Prince at ſuch a Diſtance, and who had ſolemnly renounced all his Pretenſions to it. Nor can the ſaid Earl think, the Declaration of any Miniſter of France, againſt ſuch Expedient (if any ſuch were made) a ſufficient Ground for her Majeſty to decline it. The ſaid Earl therefore muſt beg leave to repeat, that he is not able to diſcover, from any Thing that appears in thoſe Speeches, that in the Particulars aforementioned, or any other, the eſſential Points relating to Peace and Commerce, or which concerned the Intereſts, as well of the Allies as of Great Britain, were miſrepreſented by her Majeſty; nor doth he know or believe, that any Inſtance can be given wherein he abuſed the Favour of his Royal Miſtreſs, to whom he did always bear and pay the moſt ſincere Veneration and Duty; or wherein he did miſlead her Parliament into any groundleſs or fatal Reſolution, or prevented their Advice to her Majeſty, or obtained their Approbation to any dangerous Practices, or whereby her Majeſty could be ever deprived of the Confidence of her Allies, or expoſed to Contempt.

In anſwer to the Sixteenth Article the ſaid Earl doth inſiſt, that by the Laws and Conſtitution of this Realm, it is the undoubted Right and Prerogative of the Sovereign, who is the Fountain of Honour, to create Peers of this Realm, as well in time of Parliament, as when there is no Parliament ſitting or in being; and that the Exerciſe of this Branch of the Prerogative is declared in the Form or Preamble of all Patents of Honour, to proceed ex mero motu, as an Act of mere Grace and Favour; and that ſuch Acts are not done, as many other Acts of a publick Nature are, by and with the Advice of the Privy-Council; or as Acts of Pardon uſually run, upon a favourable Repreſentation of ſeveral Circumſtances, or upon Reports from the Attorney-General, or other Officers, that ſuch Acts are lawful or expedient, or for the Safety or Advantage of the Crown; but flows entirely from the beneficent and gracious Diſpoſition of the Sovereign. He farther ſays, that neither the Warrants for Patents of Honour, the Bills or other Ingroſſments of ſuch Patents are at any time communicated to the Council, or the Treaſury, as ſeveral other Patents are; and therefore the ſaid Earl, either as High Treaſurer or Privy-Counſellor, could not have any Knowledge of the ſame: Nevertheleſs, if her late Sacred Majeſty had thought fit to acquaint him with her moſt gracious Intentions of creating any Number of Peers of this Realm, and had aſked his Opinion whether the Perſons whom ſhe then intended to create, were Perſons proper to have been promoted to that Dignity? he does believe he ſhould have highly approved her Majeſty's Choice; and doth not apprehend that in ſo doing he had been guilty of any Breach of his Duty, or Violation of the Truſt in him repoſed; ſince they were all Perſons of Honour and diſtinguiſhed Merit, and the Peerage thereby was not greatly encreaſed, conſidering ſome of thoſe created would have been Peers by Deſcent, and that many Titles of Honour were then lately extinct. And the ſaid Earl believes many Inſtances may be given, where this Prerogative hath been exerciſed by former Princes of this Realm in as extenſive a manner; and particularly in the Reigns of King Henry the Eighth, King James the Firſt, and his late Majeſty King William. The ſaid Earl begs leave to add, that in the whole Courſe of his Life he hath always loved the eſtabliſhed Conſtitution, and in his private Capacity, as well as in all publick Stations, when he had the Honour to be employed, hath done his utmoſt to preſerve it, and ſhall always continue ſo to do.

In anſwer to the further Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt the ſaid Earl: As to the Firſt of theſe Articles he ſaith, that he believes, in or about the Month of January, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Ten, an Expedition was projected, for making a Conqueſt of the City Quebeck, on the River of St. Laurence, Canada, or other Poſſeſſions of the French King in North America; but denies he adviſed her Majeſty either to conſent to the making ſuch Expedition, or to give Orders for detaching any Battalions of the Forces in her Majeſty's Service in Flanders, or to ſend any ſuch Battalions, or any Squadron of Men of War on the ſaid Enterprize: But having heard that the ſaid Project, or ſome Expedition of the like Nature, had been ſome time before conſidered in a Committee of Council, and afterwards laid aſide for that Time, and not being fully apprized of the whole Project, nor ſo well verſed in the Affairs of that Part of the World as others, who had more Opportunity of knowing them; and leaſt the Expedition might not at that Time prove ſo feaſible or advantageous as others of better Knowledge in thoſe Matters than himſelf did expect, he did all that he apprehends his Duty required to prevent the putting the ſame in Execution, and expreſſed his Concern at it to ſome Perſons about the Queen. And having ſo far ſhewn his Opinion of the ſaid Deſign at that Time, believes it would not have been thought proper for him to have appeared at the Meetings, where the Methods only of carrying on the Expedition were to be adjuſted; of which Meetings there had been but few, before a Misfortune befel him, which confined him to his Bed. But the ſaid Earl denies, that he knew the ſaid Expedition was dangerous or deſtructive, nor did he hear that it was laid aſide formerly by a Committee of Council, as dangerous or impracticable, but only as improper in the Circumſtances of Affairs at that Time: Nor doth the ſaid Earl know or believe the ſaid Expedition was ſet on foot with any deſign to promote the Intereſt of the French King, or to weaken the Confederate Army in Flanders, or to diſſipate the Naval Forces of this Kingdom. And when others of her Majeſty's Council, better acquainted with that Affair, did judge it to be proper and practicable, he did not think it became him, upon the Strength of his own ſingle Judgment, further to oppoſe an Expedition, which if it had ſucceeded, moſt certainly would have given a great and ſenſible Blow to the Settlements and Trade of France in that part of the World. And the ſaid Earl, with good Reaſon, is perſuaded your Lordſhips will not think it unfit that her Majeſty ſhould take the Opinion of thoſe who better underſtood Affairs of that Nature; or, that your Lordſhips can judge the ſaid Earl in that Reſpect to have been wanting in his Duty to her Majeſty; but hopes it will be rather an Evidence of his Fidelity to the Queen and his Country, that he ſo far diſcouraged what in his own Judgment he was diffident of. However he is ſatisfied, that thoſe of her Majeſty's Council who did approve the Expedition, acted therein with a ſincere Deſire for the publick Good, notwithſtanding the ill Succeſs it was attended with; which might chiefly be owing to Delays by contrary Winds, and other unforeſeen Accidents. And he doth not believe, that her Majeſty's Allies did ſuffer any Prejudice, or the common Enemy receive any Advantage by the detaching of Forces from Flanders to ſerve on this Enterprize; and is informed, that to prevent any ſuch Danger, her Majeſty's General who commanded at that time in Flanders, had Orders for providing other Forces in their Place, if he judged it neceſſary. And the ſaid Earl doth acknowledge, that the Sum of twenty eight thouſand Pounds, or thereabouts, was demanded at the Treaſury about June One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, on account of Arms, Accoutrements, Goods, and Merchandize, ſaid to be ſent on the ſaid Expedition to Canada; but he ſaith, that he was ſo far from adviſing her late Majeſty that the ſaid Sum ſhould be iſſued and paid, that on the contrary, he put a ſtop to the Payment of the ſame, until he had done all he could at that time to examine into the Expenditure of the ſaid Money: But being then High Treaſurer of Great Britain, and having received her Majeſty's Orders to pay the ſaid Sum, and not being able, with his utmoſt Precaution then, to diſcover any juſt Cauſe why it ſhould not be paid; he did afterwards, in Obedience to thoſe Orders, and according to the Duty of his Place, counterſign a Warrant to the Paymaſter of her Majeſty's Forces for the Payment of the ſame, purſuant to which, he believes the ſame was iſſued and received. And as to that Part of the ſaid Article, which charges the ſaid Earl with employing his Arts or Credit to keep the Houſe of Commons from examining that Affair; he begs leave to ſay, that whatever Suſpicions he might entertain in his own Mind, he did not upon Examination find, that there was ſufficient Proof to juſtify the laying them before either Houſe of Parliament. And although he had been informed, that the Papers relating to that Expedition were laid before the laſt, and have been all along in the Power of the preſent Houſe of Commons, yet he hath not heard that any Fraud hath been made out in that Affair, notwithſtanding the Gentlemen who had them under their Inſpection neither wanted Abilities to make the utmoſt Diſcoveries, nor could be ſuppoſed to be prevented therein by any Influence of the ſaid Earl: And he hopes it will not be imputed to him as a Fault, if he had uſed any Skill or Credit to keep the Houſe of Commons from examining this Affair at that Juncture, when by an unſeaſonable Enquiry, before a proper Proof could be had, the Fraud, if any ſuch there were, would be likely for ever to eſcape unpuniſhed. But the ſaid Earl denies that he ever exerciſed or or had any arbitrary Power or Influence, either in her Majeſty's private Council, or the great Council of the Nation, or entertained any Deſign to prevent the Juſtice due to the Queen or the Nation, or that any Diſcovery had been made to him, further than what might give Suſpicion to one who was always jealous (as became him) of any Miſapplication of the publick Treaſure. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, that he is not conſcious, that by any Letter or Memorial to her Majeſty, he hath acted contrary to his Duty; but humbly hopes he may be allowed to obſerve, that it would be a Matter of particular Hardſhip, and what ſeems to him inconſiſtent with the Rules of Government, and without Precedent, if the moſt ſecret and intimate Papers and Letters, wrote to that moſt renowned and pious Princeſs, her late Majeſty, by her own ſpecial Command, and for her own private Peruſal, ſhould be imputed to any as a Crime; and if any Quotation from any ſuch Letter or Paper could be alledged againſt the ſaid Earl, he doubts not but there might appear from other of her Majeſty's private Papers what would juſtify him in many Particulars wherewith he is charged, and would give further Proof (if it were needful) how tender and affectionate her Majeſty was to all her Subjects.

In anſwer to the ſecond additional Article the ſaid Earl doth admit, that about October One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, her late Majeſty did ſign a Warrant directed to him, then her Treaſurer of Great Britain, for the iſſuing and Payment of the Sum of Thirteen Thouſand Pounds to John Drummond, Eſq; in the Article named; and that on or about the Twenty Fourth of November following, in purſuance of the ſaid Warrant, under her Majeſty's Sign Manual, he the ſaid Earl did ſign a Warrant for the Payment of the ſaid Thirteen Thouſand Pounds, but for more certainty, begs leave to refer to the ſaid ſeveral Warrants when the ſame ſhall be produced: And the ſaid Earl takes the Words [for ſpecial Services of the War] to have been inſerted by Miſtake of the Clerks; for he abſolutely denies that he gave any Direction for thoſe Words, or any other of like Import, to be inſerted: And he believes all the Clerks of the Treaſury know, that the Monies which aroſe from the Sale of Tin were the Queen's proper Money for the Support of her Houſhold, and ſuch Occaſions as ſhe ſhould pleaſe to direct, and not appropriated to the Services of the War; altho' ſometimes it hath been practiſed that Loans have been taken upon Tin Tallies for the Services of the War, and other publick Services, and afterwards repaid to the Civil Liſt, which might poſſibly give occaſion for ſuch Miſtake. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, that having been acquainted with the Services the ſaid Mr. Drummond had performed, by Order of the late Earl of Godolphin, in borrowing Money upon Tin at a low Intereſt, the ſaid Earl aſked Mr. Drummond's Conſent that a Sum in Tin-Tallies might be ſtruck in his Name, and with ſuch Conſent did direct, that Orders amounting to the Sum of Thirteen Thouſand Pounds ſhould be charged in the Regiſter of the Exchequer, on the Monies ariſing by the Sale of Tin, in the Name of the ſaid Mr. Drummond, who afterwards, before his going to Holland, endorſed the ſaid Orders at the ſaid Earl's Requeſt, and left them in the Treaſury; but how long it was before the ſaid Orders were endorſed, or how long they remained afterwards in the Treaſury, the ſaid Earl doth not particularly remember; but doth not acknowledge that the ſaid Orders and Tallies came afterwards to his own Hands, and were diſpoſed for his own Uſe. But in order to lay the true State of this Affair before your Lordſhips, the ſaid Earl humbly repreſents, that upon his firſt attending the late Queen, after his being wounded, her Majeſty had the Goodneſs to tell him, that ſhe deſigned him a Sum of Money: Upon which he repreſented to her Majeſty the bad Condition of her Civil Liſt: But ſeveral times after her Majeſty aſked him, why he did not find a way for receiving the Money ſhe intended him, and bring the neceſſary Warrant for that Purpoſe? He ſtill urged the ſame Reaſon againſt it, and for near Six Months made no Step in it, till at laſt her Majeſty was pleaſed to ſay, ſhe was reſolved to have it done. And as her Majeſty had, in Matters of her Bounty, made uſe of Tin-Tallies for other Perſons, ſhe was pleaſed to mention the ſame herſelf, and ordered proper Warrants to be prepared for the Sum which her Majeſty of her Royal Bounty intended him: That after her Majeſty had ſo poſitively ſignified her Royal Pleaſure, to beſtow ſuch Mark of her Favour upon the ſaid Earl, the ſaid Tallies and Orders were ſtruck in Mr. Drummond's Name, with her Majeſty's Knowledge, and at the ſaid Earl's Nomination; and from that time the ſame were kept under the ſaid Earl's Direction for his Uſe. And the ſaid Earl was adviſed, that nothing further was requiſite to be done, after the Aſſignment of the ſaid Mr. Drummond, for ſecuring the ſaid Earl's Intereſt in the ſaid Tallies, till an Accident happened which made it neceſſary for further Security, to have the ſaid Warrant as a Declaration of Truſt, which was accordingly ſigned by her Majeſty, and is to the Effect following.

ANNE R.

WHereas in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, in Conſideration of the many good, faithful, and acceptable Services which before that time had been performed unto us, by our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Couſin and Counſellor Robert Earl of Oxford (then and now our High Treaſurer of Great Britain; which Services have tended to the Quiet, Safety, and Proſperity of us and our Realms, tho' the ſame were accompanied with great Difficulties upon himſelf, and Hazards to him and his Family. And particularly reflecting upon the impious Attempt made upon his Life: We did then fully reſolve, as a particular Mark of our Favour, and of our Gracious Acceptance of the ſaid Earl's Services, to beſtow upon him a Sum in ready Money. But the ſaid Earl repreſenting to us, that the Arrears then due to our Servants and Tradeſmen, chargeable upon our Civil Liſt, were very great and preſſing, we did therefore agree and determine, that the ſaid Earl ſhould have to his own Uſe the ſeveral Sums amounting to Thirteen Thouſand Pounds, compris'd in certain Orders of Loan bearing date in or about the Eleventh Day of December One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eleven, in your Name, and charged upon the Regiſter in our Exchequer on the Monies ariſing by Sale of our Tin, which Orders are not yet in Courſe of Payment. Now we do hereby declare and make known, that the ſaid ſeveral Sums amounting to Thirteen Thouſand Pounds, contained in the ſaid Orders, and the Intereſt thereof due and to be due, are, and ſhall be the proper Monies of the ſaid Earl of Oxford. And we do hereby direct and authoriſe you to Tranſfer and Aſſign the ſaid Orders, and the whole Right and Benefit thereof, to the ſaid Earl and his Aſſigns, or to ſuch Perſon or Perſons as he ſhall appoint in that behalf. And in caſe any the Monies due, or to be due, or payable upon the ſaid Orders ſhall come to your Hands; in ſuch Caſe our Pleaſure is, that you forthwith pay over the ſame to the ſaid Earl, his Executors, Adminiſtrators, or Aſſigns, to his and their own Uſe and Behoof, without any Account to be therefore rendered to us, our Heirs, Heirs, or Succeſſors. And this our Warrant, or an atteſted Copy thereof, ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant and Diſcharge for ſo doing.

Given at our Court at Windſor-Caſtle the Fourteenth Day of December, in the Twelfth Year of our Reign, Anno Dom. 1713.

To our Truſty and Well-beloved
John Drummond, Eſq;

And the ſaid Earl believes the ſaid Warrant was drawn by Mr. Lowndes Secretary to the Treaſury, and by what means the ſame was omitted to be entered in the Treaſury he knows not: But upon hearing there was a Diſcourſe about the ſaid Thirteen Thouſand Pounds in Tin-Tallies, he ſent a Copy of the ſaid Warrant to the Officers of the Treaſury, without ſignifying any Deſire to have the ſame entered, well knowing it received its Authority from the Sign Manual, which wanted no additional Force from any Entry thereof in the Treaſury-Books. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, that her Majeſty was pleaſed, of her mere Goodneſs and Bounty, and of her own free Will to give him the ſaid Sum of Money in Reward of his faithful Services, and for his Sufferings in her Service. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, that the ſaid Grant, according to the Diſcount upon thoſe Tallies at that time, amounted to the Sum of ten thouſand Pounds, or thereabouts; wherein he acknowledgeth the great Bounty of her Majeſty, and takes notice, that Grants much larger have been made from the Crown to other Miniſters of State, while the Neceſſities of the Crown have been equally preſſing. And the ſaid Earl doth not know that in this or any other part of his Adminiſtration, he ever was guilty of any Corruption, or any Breach of his Oath or Truſt as High Treaſurer of Great Britain; or that he did in any Manner abuſe her Majeſty's Goodneſs, or make an ill Uſe of his Acceſs to her Majeſty, or embezzle the publick Treaſure; or did at any time knowingly injure or oppreſs her Majeſty's Subjects; but on the contrary, the ſaid Earl ſaith, that he managed the publick Money in the moſt frugal Manner, in order to leſſen, as much as might be, the Charge of the War; and to eaſe, if he could, the Commons of Great Britain from all grievous Taxes. And in further Vindication of himſelf againſt all the Imputations of Avarice or Corruption inſinuated in this Article, the ſaid Earl ſaith, that in every Employment to which he was called by her Majeſty's Favour, he was always contented with the accuſtomed Incomes and Profits of the ſaid Employments, without endeavouring to encreaſe his Gain by unwarrantable or extraordinary Perquiſites; that whilſt he was in any Office of Truſt about her Majeſty, he never abuſed that Truſt in making any manner of Profit or Advantage to himſelf, either by the Diſpoſal of Places in his own Gift, or by the Recommendation of Perſons to her Majeſty for ſuch as were granted immediately by herſelf; that neither in nor out of Place did he ever receive any Penſion from the Crown; that as he came with clean Hands into her Majeſty's Service, ſo went not only with clean but almoſt with empty Hands out of it, having ſpent therein moſt part of the Profits which accrued to him from the Places he enjoyed; ſo that at this time, notwithſtanding all the Advantages he received from them, and the extraordinary Bounty of the Queen to him, in this Article mentioned, he can with great Truth affirm, that his private Fortune hath received very inconſiderable Addition thereby.

In anſwer to the Third Additional Article the ſaid Earl ſaith, that Matthew Prior, Eſq; being employed by her Majeſty at the Court of France, Warrants were ſigned in the uſual Form for Payment of ſeveral Sums of Money to the ſaid Mr. Prior, which he believes from the Twenty Seventh of Auguſt One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Twelve, to the Tenth of July One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, might amount to the Sum of Twelve Thouſand Three Hundred and Sixty Pounds, as in the ſaid Article is ſet forth; and he believes he did pay, or cauſe to be paid at ſeveral times the ſaid Sums, purſuant to the Authority he had from her late Majeſty for that purpoſe, which he conceives was not only lawful, but a Duty incumbent on him. He further ſaith, that he doth not know that by any Law there ought to be certain Appointments or Allowances for the Maintenance and Support of Ambaſſadors, Envoys, Plenipotentiaries, and other publick Miniſters of the Crown in foreign Courts; but that her Majeſty was at Liberty to vary ſuch Appointments, and the manner of paying them, as ſhe in her Wiſdom ſhould think fit, out of any Funds appropriated to the Civil Liſt. He doth believe, that there are ſeveral Inſtances where Perſons employed to negotiate Matters of Importance, as Ambaſſadors or Plenipotentiaries, have been allowed one thouſand five hundred Pounds for their Equipage; one hundred Pounds a Week for their ordinary Entertainment, and one thouſand ſix hundred Pounds for Extraordinaries, and likewiſe further Sums for Services performed by ſpecial Order: And if the ſaid Mr. Prior had been paid upon that Foot, he would have been entitled to a greater Sum from the Crown, for the time wherein he was employed by her Majeſty as aforeſaid, over and above all diſburſements for ſpecial Services. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, that he takes the ſaid Matthew Prior to have been ſent by her Majeſty into France for her Majeſty's Service, and in order to carry on the Negotiations of a general Peace; but denies that he was any Creature of the ſaid Earl, or ſent by the ſaid Earl into France, or that he carried on any Negotiations of the ſaid Earl, or that her Majeſty was prevailed on by his Counſels to ſend the ſaid Matthew Prior as her Plenipotentiary to the French King, without the Privity of or any Communication with the Allies, or that the ſaid Earl uſed the leaſt Contrivance for carrying on or did carry on or promote any dangerous Practices with the Miniſters of France, or the Enemies of her Majeſty or her Kingdoms, or that he did at any time combine with the ſaid Matthew Prior to defraud her Majeſty of any Sum of Money whatſoever, under Colour of his Employment; or that the ſaid Matthew Prior was ſent into France with the Character aforeſaid; without any ſettled Appointment or Allowance for any ſuch End; or that he the ſaid Earl did give the ſaid Matthew Prior an unlimited Credit, or promiſed to pay him any Bills whatſoever, other than what he ſhould be duly authoriſed to pay; or that any Bills of Exchange, in the ſaid Article mentioned, were drawn in purſuance of any ſuch Contrivance. The ſaid Earl ſaith, that Thomas Harley, Eſq; having been twice ſent by her late Majeſty to the Court of Hanover, he the ſaid Earl being then High Treaſurer of Great Britain, paid or cauſed to be paid to the ſaid Mr. Harley the Sum of five thouſand five hundred and ſixty Pounds, or thereabouts, by Authority from her Majeſty, and according to the Duty of his Office, out of Monies appropriated to the Uſe of the Civil Liſt. And he believes, that if Mr. Harley had received an Allowance in Proportion to what hath been paid to Ambaſſadors, it would have amounted to a greater Sum. But denies, that the ſaid Sum of five thouſand five hundred and ſixty Pounds, or any Part of it, was paid without Authority, or for promoting any wicked Purpoſes of the ſaid Earl, or that he did either illegally or fraudulently iſſue, or direct, or adviſe the Direction or Payment of any Sum or Sums of Money out of her Majeſty's Treaſury, to any Perſon whatſoever, or that he ever entred into any Combination with the Perſons abovementioned, or any other Perſon whatſoever, to defraud her Majeſty of any of the publick Money which he was entruſted with the Management of.

In anſwer to the fourth additional Article, the ſaid Earl denies, that he ever held any Correſpondence with Mary the late Conſort of the late King James the Second, either by the Means of Mr. Prior, or by any other Means whatſoever, or that he ever intended, or had the leaſt Deſign any way to promote the Intereſt of the Pretender; nor doth the ſaid Earl know or believe that Monſieur Gaultier, in the ſaid Article named, was entruſted or employed as an Agent between any of the Miniſters of Great Britain and France, in tranſacting any Affairs relating to the Pretender; and denies that he the ſaid Earl had any Conferences with him the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier on that Subject: Nor doth the ſaid Earl know or believe that he the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier was empowered to concert with him the ſaid Earl, particularly the ſetling any Payment or Remittance of the Annuities hereafter mentioned, or any other yearly Sum to be paid or remitted out of her Majeſty's Treaſury into France: Neither had the ſaid Earl the leaſt Deſign, that any of the Fruits or Advantages of the Peace ſhould be made an Offering to any Adherent of the Pretender; nor did he agree or undertake to procure the Payment of the yearly Sum of forty ſeven thouſand Pounds, or any other yearly Sum, to the Uſe of the ſaid late Conſort, during her Life. But the ſaid Earl doth admit, that the late King James the Second by Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, bearing Date on or about the Twenty Eighth Day of Auguſt, in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred and Eighty Five, granted unto Lawrence Earl of Rocheſter, Henry Earl of Peterborough, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Robert Worden, Eſq; and Sir Edward Herbert, Kt. (who are all ſince deceaſed) divers Annuities or yearly Sums of Money, amounting to thirty ſeven thouſand three hundred twenty eight Pounds thirteen Shillings and ſeven Pence, payable out of the Hereditary Duty of Exciſe, and the Poſt-Office, and other Revenues in the ſaid Letters Patents mentioned, to hold to them and their Heirs, during the Life of the ſaid Conſort, in truſt for her: And by other Letters Patents, bearing date on or about the Third Day of December, in the Year One Thouſand Six hundred and Eighty Six, alſo granted unto the ſaid Conſort a further Penſion, or yearly Sum of ten thouſand Pounds, to hold during her natural Life; whereby the ſaid Revenues ariſing from the Hereditary Exciſe and Poſt Office, and other the Revenues in the ſaid Letters Patents mentioned, became charged with, and were liable to the ſaid Annuities or yearly Sums, as in this Article is mentioned. And the ſaid Earl doth admit, that the ſaid Revenues were by ſeveral Acts of Parliament granted and ſettled during the Life of his late Majeſty King William the Third, for the Uſe and Service of his Houſhold and Family, and for other his neceſſary Expences and Occaſions; and after his Demiſe, during the life of her late Majeſty Queen Anne, were appointed to be for the Support of her Houſhold, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown; but ſaith, that in the ſame Act of Parliament whereby the ſaid Revenues are ſo appointed, there is a general Saving to all and every Perſon or Perſons of all ſuch Rights, Titles, Eſtates, Intereſts, Claims, and Demands whatſoever, of, in, or to, or out of the ſaid Revenues and Hereditaments, or any of them, as they, or any of them had, or ought to have had before the making the ſaid Act, as fully, to all Intents and Purpoſes, as if the ſaid Act had never been made. And the ſaid Earl doth admit, that an Act of Parliament was made in the Twelfth Year of her late Majeſty's Reign, whereby the Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds, for the Cauſes therein mentioned, was to be applied in Aid of the Revenues or Branches which were appointed for the Support of her Majeſty's Houſhold, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown, for or towards the paying and diſcharging ſuch Arrears of Salaries, Wages, Diet-money, and other Allowances, and ſuch Debts for Emptions, Proviſions, and other Cauſes, as ſhould appear to be due and owing to her Majeſty's Servants, Tradeſmen, and others. But the ſaid Earl ſaith, he hath heard that the ſaid late Conſort of the late King James the Second, eſteeming herſelf to be entitled by the Laws of England, by vertue of the ſaid Letters Patents, to the ſeveral Sums of Money therein mentioned, did, by Letter of Attorney, impower and authoriſe the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier to demand and receive for her only Uſe, Benefit, and Behoof, all Sums of Money which from and after the Feaſt of the Annunciation of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, were become due and payable upon the ſeveral Annuities, amounting to thirty ſeven thouſand three hundred and twenty eight Pounds thirteen Shillings and ſeven Pence, and the other Annuity or yearly Sum of ten thouſand Pounds, and to give Acquittances and Diſcharges for the Monies he ſhould ſo receive to her only Uſe and Behoof as aforeſaid; and that thereupon he the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier applied himſelf to her Majeſty for the Payment of the Monies which were incurred or grown due on the ſaid ſeveral Annuities, from the ſaid Twenty Fifth Day of March One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, and that her Majeſty was pleaſed to ſign a Warrant, directed to him the ſaid Earl, being then her Majeſty's High Treaſurer, or the High Treaſurer or Commiſſioners of the Treaſury for the time being, in the Words or to the Effect in the ſaid Article ſet forth; but for more Certainty refers himſelf to the ſaid Warrant, when the ſame ſhall be produced. And that in Obedience to her Majeſty's Commands ſignified by the ſaid Warrant, he the ſaid Earl did direct two ſeveral Warrants to the Auditor of the Receipt of the Exchequer, to the Effect in the ſaid Article ſet forth; but for more Certainty refers to the ſaid ſeveral Warrants when the ſame ſhall be produced. But he denies he adviſed her Majeſty to ſign the ſaid Warrant of the twenty third of December one thouſand ſeven hundred and thirteen; but when ſuch Warrant was brought to him, and he knew that the Jointure of the ſaid Conſort had been confirmed by Act of Parliament; and had heard that by ſome private Article of Agreement at the Treaty of Ryſwick, Proviſion had been made in relation to it; and the Legality of the Demand not being doubted by her Majeſty's Council learned in the Law, the ſaid Earl thought it his Duty to pay Obedience to it. And the Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds intended to be raiſed by the ſaid Act of the Twelfth Year of her Majeſty's Reign, together with a great additional Sum in Tallies, being deſign'd for diſcharge of her Majeſty's Debts, the ſaid Earl thought himſelf ſufficiently authoriſed to direct that the ſaid Sum of Money mentioned in the ſaid Warrants, which he was adviſed was a Debt from her Majeſty, ſhould be paid out of the ſaid five hundred thouſand Pounds: Yet the Sum in the ſaid Warrants mentioned, or any part thereof, was not paid out of the ſaid appropriated Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds, or otherwiſe; but the whole Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds was applied to other Uſes for which it was appropriated. And the ſaid Earl humbly hopes, that he hath not hereby betrayed the Honour of her late Majeſty, or the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, or acted contrary to his Duty. And the ſaid Earl doth acknowledge, that the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier coming into England with Letters of Credence from the French King to her late Majeſty, after having reſided ſome time in England, her Majeſty was pleaſed, before his Departure hence, to direct a Preſent ſhould be made to the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier, as hath been uſual in like Caſes to publick Miniſters: And he believes her ſaid Majeſty was the rather inclined to make ſuch Preſent to the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier, becauſe the ſaid Earl hath heard, and takes it to be true, that the ſaid Gaultier had been inſtrumental with the French King to obtain the Delivery and Releaſe of thoſe poor Proteſtants who had ſuffered aboard the Gallies on account of their Religion, whoſe Reſcue from Slavery her Majeſty, out of her known Zeal to the Proteſtant Religion, and out of her wonted Piety and Compaſſion to the Confeſſors in ſo good a Cauſe, had much at Heart, and had prevailed therein beyond Expectation; it being what by his Majeſty King William had been attempted in vain, and was thought by many impoſſible ever to be obtained: And the good Offices of the ſaid Gaultier in that Affair having been very acceptable to her Majeſty, ſhe was pleaſed to encreaſe his Preſent in reſpect thereof, and therefore ordered it to be paid in the ſame manner as had been done to others, whoſe Preſent her Majeſty thought fit to augment. And for this end her Majeſty, about the time in this Article mentioned, did ſign a Warrant directing the Payment of one thouſand Pounds Sterling to Daniel Arthur, Eſq; in the ſame Article mentioned, to the Intent it might be paid to the ſaid Monſieur Gaultier on the account aforeſaid. And the ſaid Earl believes the ſaid Monies were iſſued and paid accordingly, and doth not apprehend he hath therein acted contrary to his Duty.

In anſwer to the Fifth additional Article, the ſaid Earl doth admit the Sovereign of this Realm may refuſe to receive any natural born Subject who hath committed, and is under the Guilt of High Treaſon, as a publick Miniſter, or with any Character from any Foreign Prince, State, or Potentate: And that where ſuch Perſon is known to be guilty of ſuch Crime, it may in moſt Caſes be fit ſo to do: But the ſaid Earl apprehends that the Sovereign is the proper Judge whom to refuſe or receive with ſuch Character. The ſaid Earl believes that a Perſon ſtiling himſelf, or commonly known by the Name of Lileſh or Lawleſs, did about the Year one thouſand ſeven hundred and twelve, or one thouſand ſeven hundred and thirteen, come into England with Letters of Credence to her Majeſty from the King and late Queen of Spain, and Authority to treat about carrying Britiſh Merchandizes to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies; and that her Majeſty was pleaſed to admit ſuch Perſon with ſuch Letters of Credence; and before his return to Spain was pleaſed to order, for the Uſe of ſuch Perſon, the Sum of one thouſand Pounds, to be paid out of the Monies appropriated to the Civil Liſt, which the ſaid Earl, in Obedience to ſuch Orders, cauſed to be paid, and humbly apprehends it was his Duty ſo to do. But the ſaid Earl believes, that when the ſaid Lileſh or Lawleſs was ſo admitted, he was generally thought to be a natural Spaniard, and that from the Advantages of thoſe Licences which he brought for carrying the Britiſh Merchandizes to the Weſt-Indies, he expected a much larger Preſent: However, the ſaid Earl denies that he knew, or was informed, before the Arrival of the ſaid Lawleſs in England, any thing of his coming hither, nor after his Arrival did he ſee him, or know of his being here before he had been introduced to her Majeſty, it being uſual for publick Miniſters to be introduced by thoſe Servants of her Majeſty to whoſe Office it belongs, as matter of Duty and common Diſpatch, without conſulting therein other Miniſters of State. And upon the Notice taken of this Affair formerly in the Houſe of Peers, it appeared that the noble Lord who introduced the ſaid Lawleſs to the Queen, by vertue of his Office, did it as of Courſe, and did not then know he was other than a Native of Spain. And the ſaid Earl ſaith, that of a long time after he had been ſo introduced, the ſaid Earl neither knew nor heard that he was other than a natural Spaniard: But when the ſaid Perſon had continued in England a conſiderable time, there was a Rumour, and the ſaid Earl was afterwards informed that he was a Native of Ireland, and departed out of that Kingdom in his Youth, and had ſince been in the Spaniſh Service; but doth not know, nor was informed, that he had committed or been guilty of High Treaſon, or that he had ſerved the late King James the Second in the War in Ireland againſt King William the Third, or had followed the ſaid King James the Second into France, or been in his Intereſt or Service, or had been in Rebellion againſt King William, or in Arms againſt the late Queen. And the ſaid Earl having no notice of the ſaid Perſon's Arrival before his being admitted to her Majeſty, nor any Knowledge of any Crime he was guilty of, ſubmits whether it ſhall be imputed to him as any want of Duty, that he did not adviſe her Majeſty againſt admitting or receiving him in the Character aforeſaid, or that he did, by her Majeſty's Authority, meet, confer, or negotiate with him concerning any Affairs about which he was authoriſed to treat (in caſe he had had ſo done, which however the ſaid Earl doth not admit) or that by Authority from her Majeſty he paid the ſaid Sum of One Thouſand Pounds to the ſaid Daniel Arthur, which after came to his Uſe. But the ſaid Earl doth deny, that he adviſed her Majeſty to ſign the Warrant for Payment of the ſaid One Thouſand Pounds, or gave any Directions for Payment thereof contrary to what was intended by her Majeſty. And the ſaid Earl admits, that ſome other Sums of Money (which might amount in the whole to Nine Hundred and Fifteen Pounds, or thereabouts) were paid in Satisfaction of Monies advanced to the ſaid Lawleſs, as Part of the Monies agreed to be advanced to his Catholick Majeſty by the Aſſiento-Contract: But denies that he directed the Payment of any other Monies whatſoever out of her Majeſty's Treaſury to the ſaid Lileſh aliàs Lawleſs, or knows that any other Monies were paid to him, beſide the aforementioned Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, and the Monies paid in Satisfaction of what was advanced to him towards the Part due to his Catholick Majeſty by the ſaid Aſſiento Contract. And the ſaid Earl never aſſumed the ſupreme Direction in her Majeſty's Councils, neither was he adviſing that the ſaid Perſon ſhould be introduced to her Majeſty, or ſhould be received or treated by her Miniſters under the diſguiſed Name of Don Carlo Moro, or ſhould at all be received as a publick Miniſter here. And the ſaid Earl doth acknowledge, that the Houſe of Lords with commendable Zeal made ſuch Addreſs, and came to ſuch Reſolution, and that her Majeſty made ſuch Anſwer, and iſſued ſuch Proclamation, as in the ſaid Article is mentioned. And as the ſaid Earl had always the higheſt Regard to the Safety of her Majeſty's Perſon, the Security of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, and Advice and Reſolutions of the Houſe of Peers; ſo he denieth, that he had the leaſt Knowledge, that the ſaid Lileſh aliàs Lawleſs, had ever been Miniſter or Agent of the Pretender at the Court of Madrid, or the leaſt Suſpicion that he was ſent into England to promote the Intereſt of the Pretender in theſe Kingdoms, nor is he conſcious to himſelf, that he hath done any Thing to expoſe the Perſon of her moſt ſacred Majeſty; to enervate or render ineffectual the Advice of Parliament, or her Majeſty's Declaration; to countenance any Emiſſary of the Pretender, or encourage his Adherents, to the Danger of the Proteſtant Succeſſion as by Law eſtabliſh'd in the ſerene Houſe of Hanover: But on the contrary is perſuaded his Conduct in that Affair is ſo well known, as not to need any further Juſtification; but if it ſhould at any Time be thought neceſſary, he is able to produce thoſe Proofs of it, which are the beſt Authority in the World for his Vindication.

In anſwer to the Sixth additional Article, the ſaid Earl hath been informed, and doth believe it may be true, that after ſeveral unſucceſsful Attempts by her late Majeſty, in Conjunction with her Allies, to eſtabliſh his preſent Imperial Majeſty upon the Throne of Spain, Inſtructions in Writing were given to Mitford Crow, Eſq; about the Seventh Day of March, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Five, taking notice her Majeſty had been informed, that the People of Catalonia were inclined to caſt off the Yoke impoſed on them by the French, and to return to the Obedience of the Houſe of Auſtria; and that her Majeſty, deſiring to maintain and improve that good Diſpoſition in them, and to induce them to put the ſame ſpeedily in Execution, had made choice of him to carry on ſo great a Work, for the Advantage of her Service, and the Good of the common Cauſe, as was the making a Treaty with the Catalans or any other People of Spain, for the Purpoſe aforeſaid; and that the ſaid Mitford Crow was thereby empower'd to give the Catalans, or other Spaniards, Aſſurances of her Majeſty's utmoſt Endeavours to procure the Eſtabliſhment of all ſuch Rights and Immunities, as they had formerly enjoyed under the Houſe of Auſtria, and the Confirmation of ſuch Titles as had been conferr'd on any of them by the Duke of Anjou: And that for their further Satisfaction, her Majeſty had ſent to King Charles the Third for Powers for confirming the ſame to them, and was willing, if they inſiſted on it, to become Guarantee that it ſhould be done. And the ſaid Earl hath been likewiſe informed that her Majeſty, in a Commiſſion granted to the ſaid Mitford Crow, expreſſed, that ſhe thought fit to enter into a Treaty with the Principality of Catalonia, or any other Province of Spain, on Condition they would acknowledge and receive Charles the Third as lawful King of Spain, and utterly abdicate the Houſe of Bourbon, and join their Forces with her Majeſty's; and that her Majeſty was pleaſed alſo to ſign and deliver to the ſaid Mitford Crow Credential Letters, directed to the Nobility, Magiſtracy, and other Officers of Catalonia, or any other Province of Spain, deſiring them to give Faith to every thing the ſaid Mitford Crow ſhould tell them in her Majeſty's Name: And that Inſtructions were likewiſe given to the Earl of Peterborow and Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, about the Time and to the Effect in the ſaid Article mentioned; and that a Manifeſto or Declaration was afterwards publiſh'd by the ſaid Earl of Peterborow, to the Effect in the ſaid Article ſet forth: But the ſaid Earl denies, that ſuch Manifeſto or Declaration was prepared by his Advice or Privity. And the ſaid Earl believes it may be true, that ſome Part of the Nobility, Clergy, and Inhabitants of the Principality of Catalonia, and alſo of the Inhabitants of the Iſland of Majorca, did afterwards acknowledge King Charles the Third (now Emperor) for their lawful Sovereign, and did join their Arms with thoſe of her Majeſty and her Allies againſt the preſent King of Spain; but by what Motives they were induced thereunto, the ſaid Earl doth not know. And the ſaid Earl doth acknowledge, that for ſome Time the Arms of her Majeſty and her Allies in Spain were attended with conſiderable Succeſſes, in which the Bravery of the Catalans appear'd, and the Forces of the Confederates twice entered the capital City of that Kingdom; by which ſignal Conqueſts, and the great Supplies that have been granted by Parliament for their Aſſiſtance, the ſaid People were under the higheſt Obligations of Gratitude to her Majeſty: But the Advantages thoſe Succeſſes had given King Charles the Third being loſt, her Majeſty found the Burthen of that War very heavy to her Subjects, the Conqueſt of Spain for the preſent Emperor impracticable, and after the Acceſſion of the Empire and Deſcent of the Hereditary Countries to him, eſteemed inconſiſtent with the Intereſt of many of her Allies, and therefore thought it neceſſary for the Good of her

People, and the Tranquillity of Europe, to enter into Negotiations for a general Peace. But the ſaid Earl denies that he entered into any Conſpiracy for ſubjecting the Spaniſh Monarchy to the Houſe of Bourbon, or ever had the leaſt Deſign of the Ruin or Deſtruction of any of the Rights, Liberties, or Privileges of the Catalans, or that he ever formed any Contrivance for abandoning them to the Fury or Revenge of the Duke of Anjou, or his Adherents; or for the Extirpation of any of their Rights, Liberties, or Privileges; or that he adviſed her Majeſty to give Directions to the Lord Lexington to acknowledge the Duke of Anjou King of Spain, before any Negotiation of Peace was ſet on foot in Form of Law, between the Crowns of Great Britain and Spain. On the contrary the ſaid Earl ſaith, that by Letters and Papers ſent by one of her Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State to the Lord Lexington, it will appear, that after her Majeſty had hearkened to the Propoſals for a general Peace, for the Good of her own People, and her Allies, ſhe uſed her beſt Endeavours for obtaining the Liberties of the Catalans, at the Concluſion of the Peace, and that his Lordſhip was directed peremptorily and abſolutely to inſiſt thereon: Nor doth the ſaid Earl know or believe, that any Orders were ever ſent from or given by her Majeſty, to any of her Miniſters, to recede from that Demand; or that the ſaid Lord Lexington ever deſiſted from making the utmoſt Efforts he could for obtaining it. And if from any Meaſures of the Catalans, or of his Imperial Majeſty, or from any other Cauſe, her Majeſty's Endeavours had not their full Effect; the ſaid Earl conceives it cannot be imputed to any Neglect of her Majeſty, or any Want of Duty in him the ſaid Earl. He believes, that about the Time in the ſaid Article mentioned, his Imperial Majeſty did enter into a Convention or Agreement for evacuating Catalonia; and that her Majeſty, out of Inclination to perform her beſt Offices to the Emperor, was prevail'd on to become one of the Guarantees thereof; but denies, that his Imperial Majeſty was neceſſitated by any Practices of the ſaid Earl to make any ſuch Convention, and is ignorant for what Cauſes his Imperial Majeſty, whom it moſt concerned, omitted, in ſuch Convention, to make expreſs and poſitive Stipulations for the Liberties of the Catalans. If it proceeded from any Dependence upon the Declaration of her Majeſty, to interpoſe her beſt Offices on their Behalf, and the Promiſes of the French King to join his Endeavour therein; he is confident it will appear, her Majeſty's beſt Offices were employed in that Affair, when it is conſider'd what repeated Inſtances ſhe made by her Miniſters, and in the moſt pathetick Manner to obtain for them the Privileges they deſir'd. And that her Majeſty, by her earneſt Interpoſition, did obtain a Grant and Confirmation to all the Inhabitants of Catalonia, of a perpetual Amneſty and Oblivion of all that was done in the late War, the full Poſſeſſion of all their Eſtates and Honours, and a further Grant of all their Privileges which the Inhabitants of both Caſtiles (who of all the Spaniards were moſt dear to the King of Spain) enjoy'd, or might at any Time after have or enjoy; whereby the Catalans, if they obtained not all the antient Privileges they pretended to, received however in Compenſation thereof, the Advantage of trading directly to the Weſt-Indies, and other Privileges, to which they were never before intitled. And the Houſe of Peers, upon Conſideration of ſeveral Papers laid before them, relating to this Affair, in Purſuance of their Addreſs to her Majeſty in that Behalf, expreſſed their utmoſt Thankfulneſs and Satisfaction for her Majeſty's repeated and earneſt Endeavours for preſerving to the Catalans the full Enjoyment of all their juſt and antient Liberties. And it is probable her Majeſty had prevailed to obtain for them the antient Privileges and Liberties, in the largeſt Extent, if they had waited the Event of her gracious Interpoſitions in their Favour, and not determined to carry on the War by themſelves againſt King Philip, after the Emperor had ſigned the Convention for evacuating their Country, which incenſed the King of Spain in the higheſt Degree, and was look'd upon by him as the moſt obſtinate Rebellion. However, the ſaid Earl ſaith, he never amuſed the Catalans with any Expectations whatſoever, nor in any degree contributed to engage them in any obſtinate Defence againſt the Duke of Anjou; nor adviſed her Majeſty to conclude a Peace with Spain without Security for the antient Rights, Liberties and Privileges of that People; or to ſend Sir James Wiſhart with a Squadron of Men of War, for the Purpoſes in the ſaid Article mentioned: But believes her Majeſty might think herſelf obliged, by being Guarantee to the ſaid Convention, for the evacuating of Catalonia, to ſend the ſaid Sir James Wiſhart into the Mediterranean with a Squadron of Men of War, although he knows not the Orders or Inſtructions given on that Occaſion; and humbly apprehends, that he cannot, in Juſtice, be charged with any Conſequences from that unhappy People's Refuſal to comply in their Submiſſion to the King of Spain, upon the Terms her Majeſty had ſtipulated for them.

Thus the ſaid Earl has laid his Caſe before your Lordſhips, wherein he hopes he hath fully anſwered the ſeveral Articles exhibited againſt him: Yet, leſt there ſhould be any Omiſſion in his Anſwer, which may be made uſe of to his Prejudice, he ſays, he is not guilty of all, or any of the Matters contained in the ſaid Articles, or any of them, in Manner and Form as they are therein charged againſt him; and humbly hopes that your Lordſhips will excuſe any Imperfections, or Defects in the ſaid Anſwer, with regard to Expreſſion or Form; and impute whatever of that Kind may appear, to the great Weakneſs of Body, and ill State of Health which the ſaid Earl now labours, and hath for ſome Months paſt labour'd under; and that your Lordſhips will be induced to make all farther due Allowances in his Favour, from the following Conſiderations, which relate to the Nature of the Charge in general, and the Difficulties with which his Defence of himſelf, againſt the Particulars contained in that Charge, is, and muſt be attended.

Moſt of the Articles, with which he ſtands charged, relate entirely to the Negotiations of Peace lately concluded at Utrecht; he doubts not but your Lordſhips will conſider, that he muſt of neceſſity be under great Difficulties, in giving a full and particular Account of ſuch a great Variety of Facts as are contained in theſe Articles; that ſeveral of theſe Facts concern Tranſactions with the Miniſters of Foreign States, who cannot be produced as Witneſſes in his Defence, be their Teſtimony never ſo material; that many Steps and Proceedings in an Affair of this Nature, where the Intereſts of ſeveral Parties, not only ſeparate from, but ſome of them alſo contrary to each other, are to be adjuſted, do require great Secrecy and Addreſs in the Management; and that in Treaties between Enemies, ſuch Terms are often propoſed, and ſuch Arguments uſed, as carry a different Appearance from the real Intentions of thoſe that treat: Upon which Accounts, it muſt be very difficult to ſet every thing that paſt in the late Negotiations, with regard to the Enemy, and to the Allies, in a clear Light, and to juſtify every Step that was taken towards conducting them to the End propoſed; eſpecially ſince the Account of thoſe Tranſactions, and of the Reaſons on which they were founded, cannot, as he conceives, be duly cleared, but by inſpecting the entire Series of Letters and Papers, which paſſed, during the Continuance of theſe Tranſactions, and by comparing together ſuch Paſſages in them, as might give Light to each other, and to the Whole: All which Letters and Papers are (as he is inform'd) now in the Poſſeſſion of the Honourable Houſe of Commons; nor was it thought fit, upon his humble Application to your Lordſhips, that he ſhould be indulged with a Copy of them.

He hopes it may not misbecome him, on this Occaſion, to obſerve to your Lordſhips, that the Houſe of Commons, by being poſſeſſed of thoſe Papers, have a fuller View of the whole Progreſs, and of all the ſecret Steps of that Negotiation, than perhaps was even in the like Caſe imparted to any Houſe of Parliament; and they have therefore all the Advantage poſſible towards forming the Charge againſt him upon the Articles of his Impeachment; whereas he (the ſaid Earl) being deſtitute of all Aſſiſtance from thoſe Papers, is under great and particular Diſadvantages towards making his Defence, in the Points whereof he there ſtands accuſed; and he is therefore humbly aſſured, that, as your Lordſhips, on the one Side, will not expect from him any ſuch Proofs of his Innocence, as can only be drawn from a Peruſal of thoſe Papers; ſo, on the other, you will not admit of all, or any of thoſe Articles, as made good againſt him, unleſs the Accuſations therein contained, be ſupported by the cleareſt and moſt unqueſtionable Evidence, of which the Nature of the Facts is capable.

He ſubmits it likewiſe to your Lordſhips Conſideration, whether in a Negotiation, drawn out into a great Length, where the Advice of all thoſe in high Truſt about her Majeſty was to be taken, and where ſeveral Perſons were to be entruſted with the Management of what was agreed upon, he can, with any Colour of Equity, be made anſwerable for adviſing and conducting the Whole?

He deſires alſo farther to obſerve, that every Thing, with which he is charged, was done in the Reign of a gracious Princeſs, now deceaſed, who, by Reaſon of the perfect Knowledge ſhe had of the ill State of Affairs at Home, of the Advances made towards Peace from Abroad, and of the Commands, which ſhe at ſeveral Times laid on her Servants, had been the beſt, and indeed could be the only competent Judge, whether ſhe was fraudulently dealt with, led by ill Advice into Meaſures which ſhe did not direct, and approve, or made an Inſtrument of ſacrificing the Intereſts of her Kingdoms to the Enemy. It is with great Grief that he finds ſuch Things ſuggeſted, as ſeem to lay a Stain upon the Character of ſo excellent a Queen, whoſe Memory he is confident will be for ever dear to this Country: And therefore he takes leave, in the moſt ſolemn Manner, to aſſure your Lordſhips, that as far as he knows, or can remember, every thing relating to the Tranſactions of Peace was communicated to her late Majeſty, and maturely conſidered by her, before any Thing was determined thereupon; nor was any Step taken, but in Purſuance of ſuch Determination.

As to the Peace in general, he the ſaid Earl thinks he has very good Reaſon to ſay, that the Queen had nothing more at Heart, than to procure ſo great a Bleſſing for her People; and that, when it was obtained, ſhe had this Satisfaction in herſelf, that ſhe had taken the moſt proper Meaſures to juſtify her Conduct, both toward her Allies and toward her own Subjects: For, upon a Review of her Majeſty's whole Proceeding, in relation to War and Peace, he believes it will appear, and hath in Part appeared by the Anſwer of the ſaid Earl, to the ſaid Articles, that, as her Majeſty entered further into the War than ſhe was obliged by any Treaties ſubſiſting at the Time of her Acceſſion to the Throne, ſo ſhe contributed more Men and Money towards the carrying it on afterwards, than ſhe was engaged to provide by any ſubſequent Treaties: That her earneſt Deſires of Peace being twice fruſtrated, when ſuch Conditions might have been obtained, as would have fully anſwered all the Ends for which War was at firſt declared; that, all our Succeſſes and Victories ending in the annual Increaſe of the Charge of England, without any further Aſſiſtance from our Allies, and her Kingdoms being exhauſted to ſuch a Degree (notwithſtanding the great Advantages obtained by her Arms) that ſhe was not able to continue the War, upon the Foot it then ſtood, one Year longer; whilſt her Allies refuſed to continue it, upon thoſe equal Conditions, to which they were by Treaties obliged: She was at laſt conſtrained, in Compaſſion to her People, to hearken to the Overtures of Peace then made her from France, without relying further on the vain Hopes of gaining more advantageous Terms, by protracting the War a Year longer. She had carried it on, for ſome Time, under that Proſpect, without reaping the Benefits propoſed, even at Junctures that ſeemed moſt favourable to her Demands, and to the Pretenſions of her Allies: She had indeed, by that means, raiſed the Glory of her Arms; but ſhe could not think this a ſufficient Recompence for the encreaſing Miſeries of her People; and therefore reſolved to lay hold of the Opportunity, then offered to her, of ending the War by a Peace, if it might be obtained upon Terms every way juſt, ſafe and honourable: And thoſe who were then employed in her Majeſty's Councils, thought themſelves obliged to ſecond her good Intentions in this Caſe, and to obey her Commands with all readineſs.

The ſaid Earl preſumes, on this Occaſion, to mention to your Lordſhips the Saying of as wiſe a Man, and as great a General as the laſt Age produced, the Duke of Parma; when France was in a far lower Condition than now, being almoſt equally divided between two contending Parties, and Spain was at the Height of its Glory, and he himſelf at the Head of a Spaniſh Army,

Army, ſupporting one of thoſe Parties, after Paris itſelf had been beſieged by the other; it was his Opinion (and the Advice he gave to his Maſter the King of Spain, was grounded upon it) That, if France were to be got only by reducing its Towns, the World would be ſooner at an End than ſuch a War. The Queen ſeemed at this Time, with better Reaſon, to frame the like Judgment; and it was therefore her Pleaſure, and a great Inſtance (as the ſaid Earl conceives) of her Wiſdom and Goodneſs, to think of ſecuring a Peace while ſhe appeared able to carry on the War (her Armies being full and numerous) and before the exhauſted Condition of her Kingdoms, and the Impoſſibility, on her Side, of maintaining ſo diſproportioned an Expence, was diſcovered by her Enemies. At this Juncture the Queen entered upon a Negotiation of Peace, with Circumſtances of great Honour to herſelf; France applying to her firſt, on this Account, previouſly owning her Title, and acknowledging the Right of the Proteſtant Succeſſion; two chief Grounds, upon which the Declaration of the laſt War was built. And to the Allies, it was conducted in the ſame manner as all Treaties of Peace in Confederacies have ever been, and according to the known Laws of Nations in ſuch Caſes; the firſt Motion, and the ſeveral Steps of it, as faſt as they ripened into Propoſals fit for Conſideration, being without delay communicated to the States-General.

By the Terms of this Peace, as all reaſonable Satisfaction and Security due to any of the Allies, by Treaty, were obtained for them by the Queen, and their juſt Pretenſions effectually ſupported; ſo larger Advantages were actually procured for Great Britain in particular, than ever had been demanded before, in any Treaty, or Negotiation between this and any other foreign State. The ſaid Earl craves leave, on this Occaſion, to appeal to your Lordſhips, whether all the Ends for which the War was entered into have not, by this Treaty, been fully attained? Whether it does not appear, by the beſt of Proofs, Experience, that the Kingdoms of France and Spain are by the Conventions of this Treaty moſt effectually ſeparated? And whether any other Expedient could have been ſo ſucceſsful to this Purpoſe, as that whereby it is now happily brought about? Whether the Ballance of Power in Europe be not now upon a better Foot than it has been for an Hundred Years paſt? Whether the Advantages that have accrued to Great Britain, by this Treaty, do not appear, and have not appeared in the Security of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, and in his Majeſty's peaceable Acceſſion to the Throne, with the univerſal Applauſe of his Subjects, in the Additions made to our Wealth by the great Quantities of Bullion lately coined at the Mint, by the vaſt Increaſe of Shipping, employed ſince the Peace, in the Fiſhery, and in Merchandize, and by the remarkable Riſe of the Cuſtoms upon Import, and of our Manufacture, and the Growth of our Country, upon Export? For the Proof of which Particulars he refers himſelf to thoſe Offices and Books, wherein an Authentick Account of them is contained.

And as the Terms of the Peace were in theſe and other Reſpects manifeſtly profitable to Great Britain; ſo the ſaid Earl begs leave humbly to remind your Lordſhips, that they were communicated to the Parliament, and with their Concurrence, agreed on; that the Peace, thus concluded, was afterwards highly approved by both Houſes; that ſolemn Thanks were rendered to God for it, in all our Churches, as well as in the Churches of the United Provinces; and that her Majeſty received, on this Subject, the hearty and unfeigned Congratulations of her People, from all Parts of her Dominions.

Theſe being the real Effects, and this a true Repreſentation of her Majeſty's Conduct in the Affairs both of War and Peace; the ſaid Earl ſees not how he, or any others then in her Majeſty's Service, can be juſtly charged with betraying the Intereſts of their own Country, and of the Allies, by negotiating and promoting that Peace, which then was, and (as he hath good Grounds to believe) ſtill continues to be very acceptable and advantageous to theſe Kingdoms. And, if the Peace itſelf be not condemned, and it be not even charged upon the ſaid Earl as a Crime, that he adviſed her Majeſty to conclude that Peace, (neither of which appear to him from the Articles) he humbly conceives, it is a particular and extraordinary Hardſhip upon him, that rough Draughts and Eſſays towards a Peace, with other Preliminary Steps in a Negotiation, all leading to an End, which he looks upon to be juſt and profitable, and which is not in any of the Articles alledged to be otherwiſe, ſhould be brought into ſo many diſtinct Heads of Accuſation againſt him. For ſuppoſing that, in the Proceſs of ſo nice and difficult an Affair, ſubject to divers unforeſeen Obſtructions and Events, any improper Steps had been taken, which the ſaid Earl doth not admit, but altogether, on his Part, denies; yet, if Things were at laſt conducted to a right Iſſue, and ended in an honourable and advantageous Peace, there can be (as he conceives) no juſt Ground to find fault with the Meaſures made uſe of to compaſs it, becauſe they ſeemed, before the Accompliſhment, to have a different Tendency; eſpecially if it be conſidered, that ſcarce any Peace hath been made by a Confederacy, where leſs Occaſion was adminiſter'd for Jealouſy among the ſeveral Parties, and leſs Reaſon given to complain, that every Nicety, required by the Letter of ſuch an Alliance, was not ſtrictly obſerved. And therefore he humbly hopes, that no Steps taken for obtaining a Peace, approved by the Wiſdom of former Parliaments, ſhall by any ſucceeding Parliament be accounted criminal, unleſs it can be made appear, that thoſe Steps were taken contrary to the Queen's Orders, or upon corrupt Views of private Advantage: But that no Charge of this Nature can be made good againſt him, he preſumes to affirm, with great Aſſurance; nor does he know of any other Perſons, juſtly chargeable upon either of theſe Accounts.

And as a further Proof, that thoſe who had the Honour to ſerve her Majeſty in the Negotiations of Peace, acted with upright Views and Intentions, and without being conſcious to themſelves of any Failure in their Duty, either to their Queen, or their Country; the ſaid Earl craves leave to obſerve to your Lordſhips, that they never attempted to cover their Actions from publick Cenſure by any Pardon, or Indemnity, though they had very good Reaſon to believe, that, had they judged or imagined themſelves to have wanted ſuch Security, it might (through the Goodneſs of the Queen) have eaſily been obtained.

Nor can he think it an Obſervation unfit to be made, that, in few of the Articles which concern the Negotiations of Peace, the Charge is founded on any Breach of the Laws of Great Britain; but it is in moſt of them chiefly on the ſuppoſed Infraction of certain Treaties and Alliances with foreign Princes, or States; and he conceives that ſuch Infractions of Publick Treaties, where they do not particularly affect the Intereſts of Great Britain; being cognizable by the Laws of Nations only, and not by thoſe of the Realm, are not wont to be examined into here at home, and proſecuted as Criminal, but upon the Complaint of ſome Prince or State, pretending by that means to be injured, and lodging ſuch Complaint in ſome reaſonable Time with the Prince, by the Advice of whoſe Miniſters and Servants ſuch Injury is ſuppoſed to have been done. But he knows not, that any ſuch Steps have been taken, ſince the Peace, by any of the Powers concerned: On the contrary, he believes, that all the Allies, except the Emperor and Empire, made their Peace with the Enemy at the ſame Time the Queen did; and that none of them did afterwards complain to her Majeſty (who ſurvived the ſaid Peace a Year and almoſt four Months) of any Hardſhips impoſed upon them in it; that the Princes of the Empire, who contributed very little to the War, might have concluded their Peace upon reaſonable Terms, at the ſame Time the other Allies did; and would probably have done it, if the Emperor, on his Part, had been willing to ſign together with them, which, he is informed, at the Concluſion of any general Peace, has been ſeldom done; and particularly at the ſeveral Concluſions of the Peace of Munſter, that of Nimeguen, and that of Ryſwick was not practiſed. And he ſubmits it to your Lordſhips Conſideration, whether the Emperor, having had all reaſonable and equitable Satisfaction made him for his Pretenſions to the Succeſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy, according to the Terms of the Grand Alliance, could have any juſt Reaſon to complain of the Queen's Miniſters, or thoſe of her Allies, for concluding a Peace, without inſiſting (on his Account) upon impoſſible Conditions; eſpecially, when no Proviſion was made, or offered to be made, to reimburſe her Majeſty any Part of thoſe vaſt Sums ſhe had already expended, in Support of his Pretenſions: whilſt he failed of ſupplying his Quota, almoſt in every Part of the War, notwithſtanding his new and great Acquiſitions. But whether the Emperor, or any other of the Allies, had any juſt Ground of Complaint, or not, ſtill the ſaid Earl preſumes to inſiſt, that it ought to have been ſignified to the Queen; who, upon ſuch Complaint, had ſhe found any of her Servants juſtly blameable, as diſobeying her Orders, or miſleading her by their Advice, into unjuſtifiable and diſhonourable Meaſures, might have puniſhed them forthwith as their Offences deſerved: But nothing of this kind having been done, he humbly leaves it to be conſidered by your Lordſhips, Whether the Silence of the Powers concerned doth not carry in it a ſtrong Preſumption, either that they had no real and juſt Ground of Complaint, in relation to the Terms of the Peace itſelf, or at leaſt did not look upon the Miniſters of the Queen as any ways liable to Blame on that Account; and therefore he muſt again beg leave to expreſs to your Lordſhips his Concern, that he ſhould be charged as a Criminal by the Laws of this Land, for ſuppoſed Breaches of Treaties with foreign States, which never were complained of, as ſuch, by thoſe States themſelves, during the Life of her Majeſty.

He deſires farther to obſerve to your Lordſhips, that where-ever he is charged with carrying on a private and ſeparate Negotiation, 'tis all along underſtood, with regard only to the States of the United Provinces; no Step, that was communicated to them, being cenſured, upon this Account: Whereas all the other Allies had, by Vertue of their Treaties with the Queen, a like Right to a Communication of Councils; and her Majeſty was under no Stipulations to act more in Concert with any one, than with all of them.

He does indeed allow it to have been moſt agreeable to Reaſon, and to the Intereſts of State, that the Queen ſhould act in a cloſer Conjunction with Holland, than with any other of her Allies, becauſe that, next to Great Britain, Holland bore the greateſt Share in the Charge of the War: But then, he hopes it will be allowed alſo, that the States being more intereſted in the Succeſs of the War than England, and that England having ſubmitted to a greater Share of the Burthen, in order to procure, not only a fitting Security for the States, but ſuch as brought great Advantages to them, though no Benefit to England; it was very reaſonable for the Queen to take care of the Intereſt of her own Kingdoms ſome other Way: And, ſince the Advantages ſhe demanded from the Enemy, were ſuch as ſhe might obtain without any Prejudice to the States, it was as lawful for her to negotiate this Matter without communicating it originally, and in the firſt Riſe of it, to them, as it was for her, and the States, to concert their mutual Intereſts together, without the immediate and expreſs Participation of the other Allies; which, being known to be done, without a Deſign to defeat any of the main Ends of the Alliance, was never complained of by any of the Confederates.

And as for the Matters concerted previouſly with France, for the particular Intereſt of England, without the original Intervention of Holland, the States were ſo far from proteſting againſt her Majeſty's Meaſures, and condemning her Conduct in this Reſpect, that their Miniſter proffer'd ſeveral Times, in their Name, to have led the Way, in the moſt difficult Part of the whole Negotiation, and to have done his utmoſt to facilitate the Concluſion of it, provided his Maſters might have a Share in the Aſſiento Contract, and Trade to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies; one of thoſe Advantages, which France had diſcovered its Willingneſs ſhould be allowed previouſly and entirely to England.

Theſe few general Obſervations the ſaid Earl has thought fit to add in the Cloſe of his Anſwer to the ſeveral Articles of his Impeachment; not only in his own neceſſary Vindication, but alſo in Defence of her late Majeſty's Conduct in the negotiating and concluding a Peace, the perfecting of which ſhe eſteemed the greateſt Happineſs of her Reign. Upon Review of the Two and Twenty Articles with which he is charged, as he is not conſcious of any Offence committed by him, with reſpect to any one of them, ſo it is with a particular Concern and Surprize that he reflects on theſe two, wherein he is accuſed of High

Treaſon,

Treaſon, for endeavouring to procure Tournay to France, and ſo deprive the States of that intended part of their Barrier; and for procuring Spain and the Weſt Indies to the Duke of Anjou, upon his Renunciation of the Crown of France, referring himſelf to what he has ſaid in his Anſwer to both theſe Articles, he here further aſſures your Lordſhips (and thinks it is ſufficiently known both at home and abroad) that his Opinion and Endeavour, as Occaſion offer'd, always were for Tournay's remaining, as it now does, to the States-General. And as to the latter, he doubts not but that what has lately happen'd in France, is a convincing Proof to your Lordſhips, and to all the World, that the Renunciation was the beſt Expedient that could have been propoſed towards hindering the two Kingdoms from being united under one and the ſame Monarch; that that Branch of the Treaty which relates to this Expedient, has fully anſwered its End, and made good the Character given of it by the Queen, That it would execute it ſelf; and therefore, that whoever adviſed this Method of ſeparating the two Crowns, was ſo far from being guilty of any traiterous Deſign, that he eminently promoted the Welfare of Great Britain and the Good of Chriſtendom.

The ſaid Earl, with all the Aſſurances of an innocent Man, begs leave to repeat, that as well in this, as in all other Affairs of State, in which he had the Honour to be employed by her late Majeſty, he ever acted according to the beſt of his Skill and Judgment, with ſincere Deſires and Intentions to ſerve the Publick, and without any View to his own private Advantage. As he was in ſeveral great Stations under her Majeſty, he came into all of them by her own ſpecial Command, without his ſeeking or deſiring them, and he ſerv'd her in all with the utmoſt Reſpect, Zeal, and Faithfulneſs. And while he continued in thoſe Stations for many Years, it was with great Wonder and Pleaſure that he obſerved, how her Majeſty's whole Thoughts, Endeavours, and Time were divided between her Duty to God, and her Love to her People; whoſe Good and Security ſhe preferred always to her own Eaſe, and often hazarded her Health, and Life itſelf to procure it. He knew that the moſt effectual way for one to recommend himſelf to her good Opinion, was to act upon the ſame Principles of Juſtice, and Love to his Country that ſhe did: And as ſhe abhor'd the Thoughts of any thing Burthenſome or Injurious to her People; ſo ſhe often expreſſed herſelf with the greateſt Satisfaction and Delight, when ſhe reflected on the Advantages obtained by her for her own Subjects, and the Quiet and Repoſe ſhe had gained for Europe, by that juſt and honourable Peace, for which, as the preſent Age doth, ſo Generations to come will, bleſs the Memory of that Excellent and Renowned Queen.

OXFORD.

L. H. Steward. Read the Replication of the Houſe of Commons.

The Clerk read the Replication as followeth.

The Commons REPLICATION to the Anſwer of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer.

THE Commons have conſider'd the Anſwer of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him, by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled; and do with Aſtoniſhment obſerve, that the ſaid Earl, inſtead of giving a reaſonable and pertinent Anſwer to the juſt and heavy Charge brought againſt him by the Commons of Great Britain, has preſum'd not only to deny his adviſing and being concern'd in any Matters of State, in the Articles charged againſt him; tho' confeſſed to be done under an Adminiſtration, wherein he was notoriouſly the firſt Miniſter and chief Director: But has alſo joined therewith a falſe and malicious Libel; laying upon his Royal Miſtreſs the Blame of every thing, which, by impoſing upon her, he had effected againſt her Honour, and the Good of his Country; thereby attempting to reflect upon the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, and to caſt an Odium upon their Proceedings againſt him, as tending to aſperſe the Memory of the late Queen.

But the Commons are of Opinion, that if it were poſſible to add to the heavy Load of Guilt, in which the Treaſons and other moſt flagitious Crimes, committed by the ſaid Earl, have already involv'd him; this baſe and ungrateful Attempt, to impute them to his Royal Miſtreſs, muſt bring ſuch a new Weight of Infamy upon him, and ſo juſtly provoke the Indignation of the Commons, that they might think themſelves oblig'd to demand your Lordſhips immediate Juſtice, for this unwarrantable Attempt upon the Honour of the late Queen, and the Proceedings of Parliament.

But the Commons being ſenſible that the Treaſons and other Crimes whereof the ſaid Earl ſtands impeached, and the Neceſſity of bringing him to ſpeedy and exemplary Juſtice, require that all Occaſions of Delay ſhould be avoided; and not doubting that your Lordſhips will in due time vindicate the Honour of the late Queen, and of the Commons of Great Britain, and the Juſtice of their Proceedings: The Commons do aver their Charge againſt the ſaid Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, to be true; and that the ſaid Earl is guilty of all and ſingular the Articles and Charges therein reſpectively contained, in ſuch manner as he ſtands impeached; and that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge againſt him, at ſuch convenient Time as ſhall be appointed for that Purpoſe.

L. H. Steward. Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, it has been uſual before the Commons proceed, to ſay ſomething from this Place to Perſons in your Lordſhip's preſent Condition; partly by way of Exhortation to a reaſonable Confidence in the great Honour, Juſtice, Wiſdom, Integrity and Candour of their Judges, their Peers, the Houſe of Lords in Parliament aſſembled; and partly by way of Direction, to aſſiſt them in their Behaviour and Conduct during the Courſe of their Trial.

But conſidering the many great Offices your Lordſhip has borne in the State, your long Experience and known Learning in all Parliamentary Proceedings, I cannot but think it would ſeem improper for me to be ſpeaking to your Lordſhip in that manner.

Wherefore I proceed barely to acquaint your Lordſhip and others whom it may concern, with ſuch Orders as the Lords have made, which 'tis fit ſhould be taken Notice of thus early in this Trial.

1. Your Lordſhip, and all other Perſons who have Occaſion to ſpeak to this Court, muſt addreſs your Speech to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular.

2. Your Lordſhip's Council may be preſent at the Bar, in order to be heard to any Point or Matter of Law, if ſuch ſhall ariſe on either of the Articles for High Treaſon, and that you may make your full Defence by Council, if you think fit, on the Articles for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, as well on Matters of Fact as of Law.

3. That your Witneſſes are to be examin'd on Oath as well to the Articles for High Treaſon, as thoſe for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the Diſtance between this Place and the Bar is ſo great, that I hope your Lordſhips will excuſe me, if I go to the Table for the better hearing what ſhall be ſaid during this Trial.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Lord High Steward went down, and ſeated himſelf by the Table.

Serj. at Arms. O yes, &c. (as before.)

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, you will be pleas'd now to proceed.

Mr. Stanhope. My Lords, the Diſtance of the Lord High Steward from this Place, may have been the Occaſion, that we have miſtaken ſomething that fell from thence; we do therefore deſire to avoid all Miſtakes (and I believe we might be miſtaken) for we underſtood my Lord High Steward, that Council ſhould be allowed the Priſoner at the Bar, as well to the Defence of the High Treaſon, as to the High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; it is poſſible we miſapprehended his Lordſhip, but we hope his Lordſhip will be pleaſed to explain it to us.

L. H. Steward. To prevent Miſtakes, I repeat what I ſaid, and it is this, That Council for the Lord (the Priſoner at the Bar) may be preſent at the Bar, in order to be heard to any Matter or Point of Law (if any ſuch ſhall ariſe) relating to the High Treaſon, and likewiſe to make that Lord's full Defence on the Articles of Impeachment of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, as well in Matters of Fact, as Matters of Law.

Mr. Hampden. MY Lords, the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament aſſembled, out of indiſpenſable Duty to their Country, and Zeal for the Preſervation of the common Liberties of Europe, have brought to your Lordſhips Bar Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, late High Treaſurer and a Privy Counſellor of this Kingdom, charged with the higheſt Crimes and Miſdemeanors, by him committed and done againſt the Perſon, Crown and Dignity of his Sovereign, the Peace and Intereſt of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the ſeveral Truſts repoſed in him.

The Commons in their Charge ſet forth, the many ſolemn Treaties and Alliances which had been entered into between the Crown of England, and other Princes and Potentates of Europe, for their mutual Safety, from the Conſiderations of the common Danger which then threaten'd all Chriſtendom from the immoderate Growth of the Power of France.

They likewiſe take Notice to your Lordſhips of the proſperous and flouriſhing Condition which the Liberties of Europe were in when, under theſe Treaties and Alliances, it pleaſed Almighty God to bleſs the Confederate Arms under the Command of their Great and Victorious General the Duke of Marlborough, with ſuch a Series of Succeſſes, as far exceeded their own Expectations, and by the Wiſdom and Unanimity of their Counſels, the Glory of the Confederate Arms, and the Reputation of Great Britain in particular, was rais'd to a higher Pitch than in any former Age.

That in this proſperous Condition of Affairs, the Priſoner at the Bar, with other evil-minded Perſons, Enemies to the true Intereſt of their Country, as well as to the common Liberties and Welfare of Europe, did by many wicked Arts and Inſinuations obtain Acceſs to her late Majeſty Queen Anne, got into her Councils and into Places of the higheſt Truſt, to make way for his and their pernicious Enterprizes, form'd a treacherous Correſpondence with the Emiſſaries of France, and gave falſe and deſtructive Councils to her Majeſty.

The particular Articles exhibited by the Commons, to which proper Evidence will be apply'd, contain a Charge,

That this Great Perſon at the Bar, having no Regard to the Honour or Safety of his Sovereign or theſe Kingdoms, wherewith he was entruſted, or to the many ſolemn Engagements with the old and faithful Allies of this Nation, but being devoted to the Intereſt and Service of the common Enemy, did, by private and ſecret Negotiations in Breach of all publick Faith, maliciouſly and wickedly cultivate and improve the Demands of the Enemies of his Country, more to their Advantage than they themſelves could have ever hoped for.

That by clandeſtine and ſecret Negotiations with the Enemies of England, he gave up the particular Intereſt of his own Country: That he aſſum'd to himſelf Regal Power, and in a time of open War took upon himſelf to meet and treat with the Enemy, without any Authority or Power from his Sovereign, and did what in him lay to ſubvert the ancient and eſtabliſhed Conſtitution of this Kingdom.

That he conceal'd the Advice and pernicious Influence whereby he had engaged his Sovereign and proſtituted her Honour, which had been rais'd to the higheſt Pitch of Glory abroad, and been juſtly held in Veneration with her Allies; and the Royal Hand was by the wicked Arts of the Priſoner at the Bar, made the Inſtrument to advance the Intereſt of the common Enemy.

That by deceitfully amuſing the Allies of the Crown of Great Britain, and by private, ſeparate and unjuſtifiable Negotiations, enter'd into, and carry'd on by the Priſoner at the Bar, a laſting Reproach was brought upon this Nation, and the publick Faith of many Treaties, wherein England was engaged in the moſt ſacred and ſolemn Manner, was notoriouſly Violated, and the faithful Allies of the Crown Amus'd and Deceiv'd.

That the Priſoner at the Bar did in the moſt fatal Manner Impoſe upon and Delude his Sovereign in accepting a pretended Expedient from the Enemy, which the Enemy at the ſame time declar'd to be Null and Void. That the moſt unjuſtifiable and deſtructive Meaſures were taken by him to diſſolve the whole Confederacy, without any Regard to Religion, Liberty, or the Faith of Treaties; and in Conſideration of his wicked Advice, great Numbers of the Confederate Troops, who had on many Occaſions ſignaliz'd themſelves in the Defence of the Cauſe of Europe, were given up as a Sacrifice

Sacrifice to the Fury and Revenge of the Enemy.

My Lords, The Commons in their Charge set forth the particular Measures concerted and taken by the Prisoner at the Bar, to complete the Destruction of the Common Cause of Europe, and the Protestant Succession to the Crown of these Realms. And they Charge

That the Prisoner now before your Lordships did traiterously Aid, Assist, and Adhere to the Enemies of his Queen and Country, and advis'd and promoted the giving up to those Enemies the important Town and Fortress of Tournay, together with Spain and the West-Indies.

That he Sacrificed the Trade and Commerce of Great Britain to its common Enemy without the least Shadow of Advantage procur'd to these Kingdoms, and Betray'd the National Faith and Honour of the Crown, employing against his Imperial Majesty (the Great and Faithful Ally of this Kingdom) the Naval Power of the Crown, and the Supplies granted by Parliament, in direct Violation of the Grand Alliance, and contrary to her Majesty's repeated Declarations from the Throne, and her plain and full Instructions to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht.

That he took upon himself to Exercise the most arbitrary and unwarrantable Authority; assuming to himself the chief Direction and Influence in her late Majesty's Councils, and most wickedly prostituted the Honour of the Crown, and the Dignity of Parliaments, totally depriving her Majesty of the wholsome and necessary Advice of her Parliament, and Misrepresenting the most Essential Parts of the Negotiations of Peace, to obtain the Sanction of Parliament to his wicked and pernicious Proceedings, thereby fatally Deceiving her Majesty, her Allies, her Parliament, and her People, by several false Speeches and Declarations, concerted and advis'd by him, to be made by her Majesty from the Throne to her Parliament on the Subject of the said Negotiations of Peace; and by such wicked and unexampled evil Council, he did most ungratefully abuse the Favour of his Royal Mistress, and by means of her Authority misled her Parliament into Groundless and Prejudicial Resolutions; and thereby not only prevented the just Advice of the Parliament to her Majesty in that CRITICAL JUNCTURE, but obtained the Approbation of Parliament to his MYSTERIOUS and DANGEROUS PRACTICES; and did not only Deprive her Majesty of the Confidence and Affection of her Allies, but Expose her Majesty and her People to the Contempt of the Enemy.

That he has us'd his utmost Endeavours to Subvert the Ancient Constitution of Parliaments, the Great and only Security of the Prerogative of the Crown, and of the Rights, Liberties, and Properties of the People, and most wickedly attempted to destroy the Freedom and Independency of this Noble House, the great Ornament and neareſt Support of the Crown; disguising his mischievous Intentions, under pretence of Superior Zeal for the Prerogative of the Crown, but by his false Advice her Majesty was depriv'd of the seasonable and wholsome Councils of her Parliament, and the Prerogative perverted to the Dishonour of the Crown, and the irreparable Mischief to the Constitution of Parliaments.

My Lords, The Commons have further charg'd the Noble Lord with Corruptions, in illegally misapplying Monies appropriated by Parliament, and with preventing any Parliamentary Enquiry into the same, to the Reproach and Scandal of Parliaments, in Breach of his Trust, the highest Abuse of the Goodness of his Sovereign, and the greatest Injustice and Oppression of her Subjects, and that he defrauded her late Majesty of the Publick Money with which he was entrusted for the Support of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown.

That this Great Person did assume to himself the Supreme Direction in her late Majesty's Councils, and did introduce to her Majesty for a pretended publick Minister, a TRAYTOR in Disguise named in the Articles; and gave such Traytor several considerable Sums out of her Majesty's Treasure, in a Fictitious and Scandalous manner; such Person being sent into this Kingdom under false Pretences, secretly to promote the Interest of the PRETENDER, whereby the Prisoner at the Bar did ungratefully expose the Person of her Majesty, and notoriously encourage the Adherents of the Pretender, to the apparent Danger of the Protestant Succession to the Imperial Crown of these Realms. And,

Lastly, That this Great Person at the Bar did, by the most false and wicked Councils and Practices, Betray and give up as a Sacrifice to the implacable Resentments of their enrag'd and powerful Enemy, a Free and Generous People, the faithful and useful Allies of this Kingdom, the brave CATALANS: who by the Evil Measures concerted and taken by the Prisoner at the Bar, were Betray'd into irrecoverable Slavery, and the Honour of the British Nation, always Renown'd for the Love of Liberty, and for giving Protection to the Distress'd Asserters of it, therein most basely prostituted by the pernicious and detestable Council of the Prisoner at the Bar.

Thus your Lordships have a View of the Guilt in which the Treasons and other Crimes committed by the Prisoner at the Bar have involv'd him: And it is with Astonishment the Commons observe, that his Defence is an Attempt to asperse the Memory of his Royal Mistress with the Blame of what was transacted during his Administration, which by imposing upon her he had effected against her Honour, and the Good of his Country; thereby attempting to reflect upon the Justice of the House of Commons, and to cast an Odium upon their Proceedings against him. But we doubt not your Lordships Vindication of the Honour of her late Majesty, and the Proceedings of the Commons in this Prosecution.

The Commons think it their Duty to express their utmost Abhorrence of the traiterous and wicked Proceedings of the Prisoner at the Bar, and to shew their Resentment against him, as the Author and Promoter of them.

They have found him Abusing and Betraying the Honour of his Royal Mistress, into whose Favour he had insinuated himself for the most destructive and wicked Purposes. They have found him insidiously dividing and weakening Us and our Allies: Betraying our Councils; traiterously giving up our strong Holds, Fortresses and Defences of Europe, and her most Wealthy and Flourishing Countries to the Common Enemy in time of OPEN WAR: And contriving and effecting the Dissolution of the greatest and most noble Confederacy that ever formed and united in Defence of the Protestant Interest, and the glorious Liberties of Europe.

They have found him attempting to deprive these Kingdoms of the only Blessing left to their Hopes, and which, by the Providence of God only, they now enjoy the moſt auſpicious Government of his preſent Majeſty, the Greateſt and Beſt of Princes, whoſe Magnanimity, Wiſdom, Piety, and other princely Virtues have fill'd the Imperial Throne of Great Britain with a Luſtre unknown in any former Age. In this Attempt the Noble Lord at the Bar wickedly endeavour'd to Defeat us of our happy Proſpect of laſting Felicities, in a long Succeſſion of Proteſtant Princes in the Royal Line of his moſt Excellent Majeſty, the moſt Illuſtrious Prince and Princeſs of Wales, and their Iſſue, eminently endow'd with all Graces and Accompliſhments for making a generous and free People happy: On the Continuance of which Succeſſion, next under God, all that is Dear and Valuable to us entirely depends.

My Lords, The Commons juſtly Reſent and Deteſt the Reproach brought upon the Faith and Honour of their Country, by the great Evil Miniſter at the Bar: But they promiſe themſelves your Lordſhips will ever be a Terror to all Evil Miniſters, how Great ſoever; and that your Lordſhips can never fail to do Juſtice to your injur'd Country, upon all Perfidious Counſellors, who lie in wait to deſtroy our Religion, Laws and Liberties.

Sir Joſeph Jekyll. My Lords, by the Commands of the Houſe of Commons, I appear to make good that Part of the Charge againſt the Noble Lord at the Bar, which is contain'd in the firſt Article.

Here the Lord Harcourt moved to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords.

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This Houſe is adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament.

And being adjourned accordingly, the Lords and others return'd in the ſame Order they went down.

And the Houſe being Reſum'd, this Queſtion was moved and ſtated,

That the Commons be not admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, till Judgment be firſt given on the Articles for High-Treaſon:

And a Debate enſuing thereupon,

The previous Queſtion was put, whether that Queſtion ſhall be now put?

It was Reſolved in the Affirmative.

And the main Queſtion being accordingly put, viz.

That the Commons be not admitted to proceed, in order to make good the Articles againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, till Judgment be firſt given on the Articles for High-Treaſon?

It was Reſolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That the ſaid Reſolution be communicated to the Commons by the Lord High Steward.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Browning and Mr. Orlebar, two Maſters of the Court of Chancery, to acquaint them, that the Lords are now about going down into Weſtminſter-Hall.

The Meſſengers return'd, and acquainted the Houſe, that they had delivered their Meſſage, and that the Commons were preparing to go immediately into Weſtminſter-Hall.

Then the Houſe was again adjourn'd into Weſtminſter-Hall; and the Lords being there ſeated, and the Houſe reſumed, the Lord High Steward acquainted the Managers for the Commons, that their Lordſhips had come to a Reſolution, that the Commons be not admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, 'till Judgment be firſt given on the Articles for High-Treaſon.

Sir William Thomſon. My Lords, the Managers for the Commons conceive it to be the undoubted Right of the Commons to proceed in their own Method in Maintenance of the Articles exhibited by them; and do apprehend that this Reſolution of your Lordſhips may be of ſuch fatal Conſequence to the Rights and Privileges of all the Commons of Great Britain, that they cannot take upon them to proceed any further, without reſorting to the Houſe of Commons for their Direction herein.

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure to Adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Houſe adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament. And being Reſumed,

The Earl of Oxford was Order'd to be Remanded to the Tower, and to be brought again to the Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall to Morrow at Eleven o' Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the ſaid Earl.

Die Martis 25 Junii, 1717.

THE Houſe of Lords being met as uſual in the Chamber of Parliament, it was there Ordered, that a Meſſage be ſent to the Houſe of Commons to acquaint them that the Lords have Ordered Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to be brought to the Bar of their Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall this Day at Eleven o' Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the ſaid Earl.

And a Meſſage was ſent accordingly by Mr. Holford and Mr. Lovibond, two of the Maſters of the Court of Chancery.

A Meſſage was ſent from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Carter and others, that the Commons having taken into their Conſideration their Lordſhips Reſolution communicated to their Managers relating to the Proceedings on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and being deſirous to preſerve a good Correſpondence between the two Houſes, have appointed a Committee to ſearch Precedents upon a matter of this great Importance, and deſire that their Lordſhips will not proceed at the time appointed.

Ordered, That the Meſſengers of the Houſe of Commons be called in and acquainted, that the Lords having taken the Meſſage of the Commons into their Conſideration, their Lordſhips will not proceed on the Trial of the Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer at the time appointed, but will proceed further on the ſaid Trial on Thurſday next at Eleven o' Clock in the Forenoon.

Accordingly the Meſſengers were called in and acquainted therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower do take back the Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to the Tower, and do bring the ſaid Earl to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall on Thurſday next at Eleven o' Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the ſaid Earl.

Die Jovis 27 Junii, 1717.

THE Houſe of Lords being met as uſual, a Meſſage was ſent from the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Morpeth and others, to deſire a Conference with the Houſe of Lords, in relation to Proceedings in the Proſecutions of Impeachments. To which the Houſe agreed.

And the Commons were called in and told, that the Lords do agree to a Conference as is deſired, and appoint it preſently in the Painted Chamber.

Then ſeveral Lords were named Managers of the Conference.

The Houſe being informed, that the Commons were ready for the Conference, in the Painted Chamber.

The Houſe was adjourned during Pleaſure, and the Lords named as Managers went to the Conference: Which being ended,

The Houſe was reſumed.

And the Lord Privy Seal reported, that they had been at the Conference, and met Mr. Carter and other Managers, for the Commons, who delivered to their Lordſhips a Paper as follows.

The Commons having taken into their Conſideration your Lordſhips Reſolution, communicated to their Managers, relating to the Proceedings on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and being deſirous as far as in them lies to maintain a good Correſpondence with your Lordſhips; have deſired this Conference, and have commanded us to acquaint your Lordſhips, that they conceive it to be the undoubted Right of the Commons, to impeach a Peer, either for High-Treaſon, or for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, or, if they ſee Occaſion, to mix both the one and the other in the ſame Accuſation.

The Impeachment preferred againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer is one continued Accuſation, conſiſting of High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours and alſo of Charges of High-Treaſon. The Facts on which the Articles preceding thoſe of High-Treaſon are grounded are laid together in Order of Time, and follow one another ſucceſſively, in the manner they were committed.

As the Commons thought this the moſt natural Method for exhibiting the ſeveral Articles againſt the ſaid Earl, they were all of Opinion that they ſhould proceed in the Proof of theſe ſeveral Facts after the ſame Method, ſince it is manifeſt, that in laying open the Courſe of ſuch a wicked Adminiſtration, the preceding Parts of it give light to thoſe which follow; and that the Proof of ſeveral Articles of the High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours would naturally lead to the Proof of thoſe of High-Treaſon.

Your Lordſhips received theſe ſeveral Articles of Impeachment without making any Exception againſt the Form in which they were exhibited. The ſaid Earl made his Anſwer to them in the ſame Order, and has no where inſiſted to be tried in any other Method; ſo that the Commons are ſurprized to find a Stop put to their Proſecution, by an Objection which has never been ſtarted by the ſaid Earl, and which your Lordſhips had given them ſo little Reaſon to expect.

To this muſt be added, that as the Commons only are Maſters of the Evidence, and as upon that Account they are beſt able to determine, in what Method to proceed for the Advantage of the Proſecution, in the Event of which all the Commons of Great Britain are ſo highly concerned.

To which they further add, that they ſee no Reaſon, but that your Lordſhips may as well invert the whole Order of the Articles, as preſcribe to the Commons thoſe particular Articles on which they are firſt to proceed; which will neceſſarily produce ſuch a Confuſion, both in the Facts, and Evidence, as is by no means conſiſtent with that Clearneſs and Perſpicuity in which the Commons think this Affair ought to appear.

The Commons upon examining Precedents, do find divers Precedents of Impeachments for High-Treaſon and other High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, in the ſame Accuſation; and do not find that the Lords ever objected to ſuch Proceeding, or ever gave Judgment upon any particular Article of an Impeachment before the Commons had gone through, and concluded their Evidence upon all the Articles, or ſo many of them as they thought fit; and the Commons are at a Loſs to conceive what Arguments or Precedents can be brought to ſupport the Reſolution of your Lordſhips, to give Judgment upon one Part of the ſame Accuſation, reſerving the other Part for a ſubſequent Trial, as they are to know what your Lordſhips mean by admitting the Commons to proceed upon the Articles for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, after the Judgment is given upon the Articles for High-Treaſon, ſuppoſing the Judgment proper for High-Treaſon ſhould be given againſt the ſaid Earl.

For theſe Reaſons the Commons aſſert it as their undoubted Right to proceed on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, after the Method in which their Managers were proceeding, when interrupted by your Lordſhips Reſolution.

The Reaſons deliver'd by the Commons at the Conference were read by the Clerk.

And after Debate, and Reading the Reſolution of this Houſe communicated to the Commons on Monday laſt, viz.

That the Commons be not admitted to proceed in Order to make good the Articles againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, 'till Judgment be firſt given on the Articles for High-Treaſon:

The Queſtion was put, Whether to inſiſt on the ſaid Reſolution?

It was reſolv'd in the Affirmative.

Then it being propoſed that a Committee be appointed to prepare what is to be offered to the Commons at a Conference in communicating to them the Reſolution for inſiſting:

And a Queſtion being ſtated thereupon,

It was moved to add theſe Words to the ſaid Queſtion, viz. [And alſo to prepare ſuch Reaſons as ſhall be thought proper to be then uſed in Maintenance thereof.]

And after Debate, the Queſtion was put, Whether thoſe Words ſhall be added to the ſaid Queſtion?

It was reſolv'd in the Affirmative.

Reſolv'd upon the Queſtion, and ordered, that a Committee be appointed to prepare what is to be offered to the Commons at a Conference in communicating municating to them the Reſolution of this Houſe for inſiſting on their Lordſhips Reſolution abovementioned, and alſo to prepare ſuch Reaſons as ſhall be thought proper to be then uſed in Maintenance thereof.

Ordered, That all the Lords preſent be the ſaid Committee.

Then it being propoſed, that the Committee meet immediately. And the ſame being objected to;

The Queſtion was put, Whether the Committee ſhall withdraw and ſit immediately?

It was reſolv'd in the Negative.

Ordered, That the ſaid Committee, or any Seven of them, meet to-morrow at Ten o' the Clock in the Forenoon in the Prince's Lodgings near the Houſe of Peers, and to adjourn as they pleaſe.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower do take back the Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and bring the ſaid Earl to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Saturday next at Eleven o' the Clock, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the ſaid Earl.

Die Veneris 28 Junii, 1717.

THE Lords being aſſembled in their Houſe as uſual, a Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Fellows and Mr. Meller, two of the Maſters of the Court of Chancery, to acquaint them that the Lords do deſire they will continue ſitting for ſome Time.

The Lord Trevor reported from the Committee appointed to prepare what is to be offered to the Commons at a Conference in communicating to them the Reſolution of this Houſe, for inſiſting on their Lordſhips Reſolution communicated to the Commons on Monday laſt, and alſo to prepare ſuch Reaſons as ſhall be thought proper to be then uſed in Maintenance thereof, that the Committee have prepared Reaſons accordingly, as follow, viz.

Their Lordſhips, in order to preſerve a good Correſpondence with the Houſe of Commons (which they ſhall always endeavour to do as far as lies in their Power) have deſired this Conference upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference, and have directed us to acquaint you, that their Lordſhips judge it a Right inherent in every Court of Juſtice, to order and direct ſuch Methods of Proceedings as ſuch Court ſhall think fit to be obſerved in all Cauſes depending before them, which can have no Influence to the Prejudice of Juſtice; and where ſuch Methods of Proceedings are not otherwiſe ſettled by any poſitive Rule. The Power of Judicature on all Impeachments being a Right unqueſtionably inherent in their Lordſhips, and it not being determined by any poſitive Rule, whether the Houſe of Commons may proceed to make good the ſeveral Articles exhibited for Miſdemeanours, in ſuch Order as they ſhall think fit, before they proceed to make good the Articles exhibited for High-Treaſon; and there being no Precedent where the Commons upon Trial of any ſuch Impeachment attempted to proceed in the firſt Place to make good any of the Articles contained in ſuch Impeachment for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours; their Lordſhips conſidering the Nature of the Impeachment now depending before them, and the Method wherein the Managers for the Houſe of Commons were beginning to proceed upon the Trial to make good the firſt Article thereof, which is a Charge for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours only; and alſo conſidering the very different Methods of Proceedings on an Impeachment of a Peer for High-Treaſon, as well before, as upon the Trial thereof, and the Circumſtances attending ſuch a Trial, from the Proceedings on an Impeachment of a Peer for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, and the known Circumſtances attending ſuch a Trial, thought themſelves obliged to come to the Reſolution communicated to the Commons on the Twenty-fourth Inſtant, as well for the doing Juſtice in the Caſe depending before them, as for the preventing a new Precedent to be made on this Trial, in Conſequence whereof a new and unjuſtifiable Form of Proceeding againſt a Peer upon an Impeachment for High-Treaſon and High-Crimes, might be introduced at his Trial upon thoſe Articles in which he is charged for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours only, to the Prejudice of the Peerage of Great Britain in all Time to come, viz. the Trying a Peer on Articles for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours without the Bar, the detaining in Cuſtody a Peer ſo accuſed, and repeated Commitments of him to the Tower, during the Time of ſuch Trial, and ſubjecting a Peer to as ignominious Circumſtances on his Trial, on Articles for Miſdemeanours, as if he were then on his Trial on Articles for High-Treaſon: Whereas a Peer on his Trial on Articles for Miſdemeanours only, ought not to be deprived of his Liberty, nor ſequeſter'd from Parliament, and is entitled to the Privilege of ſitting within the Bar during the whole Time of his Trial: In all which Particulars the known Rule of Proceedings in ſuch Caſes may be evaded, ſhould a Peer be brought to his Trial on ſeveral Articles exhibited againſt him on High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours and for High-Treaſon mixed together, and the Commons be admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours before Judgment be given upon the Articles for High-Treaſon. Their Lordſhips have fully conſidered the Matters offered to them by the Houſe of Commons at the laſt Conference relating to the Proceedings againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer; and their Lordſhips are fully ſatisfied, that the Reſolution they have taken and communicated to the Commons on the Twenty-fourth Inſtant is juſt and reaſonable; and that the Houſe of Commons are not put under any real Inconvenience thereby in carrying on their preſent Proſecution. Their Lordſhips have commanded us to let you know that they do inſiſt on their ſaid Reſolution, viz. That the Commons be not admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours 'till Judgment be firſt given upon the Articles for High-Treaſon.

Which Report being read by the Clerk was agreed to by the Houſe.

Then a Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Fellows and Mr. Meller, to acquaint them, that the Lords do deſire a preſent Conference in the Painted Chamber, upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference.

Ordered, That the Managers of the laſt Conference be the Managers of this Conference.

The Meſſengers ſent to the Houſe of Commons return Anſwer, That the Commons will give a preſent Conference as deſired.

The Houſe being informed, that the Commons were ready in the Painted Chamber for the Conference the Names of the Managers were read: And,

The Houſe was adjourned during Pleaſure, and the Lords named as Managers went to the Conference; which being ended, the Houſe was reſumed: And

The Lord Chamberlain reported, that the Managers had been at the Conference, and deliver'd to the Commons what they were directed.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Fellows and Mr. Meller, to acquaint them, That the Lords have ordered the Earl of Oxford to be brought to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall to-morrow at Eleven o' Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the ſaid Earl.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Yonge and others, to deſire that this Houſe will continue ſitting for ſome Time; to which the Houſe agreed.

And the Commons were called in and told, That the Lords will continue ſitting for ſome Time, as is deſired.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower do bring the Earl of Oxford to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Monday next at Eleven o' Clock, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the ſaid Earl.

Die Sabbati 29 Junii, 1717.

THE Houſe of Lords being aſſembled as uſual in the Chamber of Parliament, a Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Pelham and others, to deſire a free Conference with this Houſe upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference.

Ordered, That this Houſe will ſend an Anſwer by Meſſengers of their own. And

The Meſſengers were called in, and acquainted therewith.

The Houſe proceeded to take the ſaid Meſſage into Conſideration. And after Debate, and reading out of the Journal the Proceedings at the ſeveral Conferences in the Caſe of the Lord Viſcount Mordaunt upon his Impeachment in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred and Sixty-ſix,

The Queſtion was put, Whether to give a free Conference with the Houſe of Commons, as is deſired, upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference?

It was reſolv'd in the Negative.

Ordered, That a Meſſage be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, to acquaint them, that the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference concerning a Point of Judicature determined by this Houſe after the Trial began, their Lordſhips do not think fit to give a free Conference on the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference, as is deſired by the Houſe of Commons.

And alſo, that another Meſſage be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, to acquaint them, That their Lordſhips have ordered Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to be brought to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall on Monday next at Eleven o' Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the ſaid Earl; and Mr. Holford and Mr. Dormer, two of the Maſters of the Court of Chancery, were ſent accordingly with the ſaid Meſſages.

Die Lunæ 1 Julii, 1717.

THE Lords being aſſembled in their Houſe as uſual, and this Day being appointed to proceed further on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer in Weſtminſter-Hall, the Houſe (according to Order) was called over by the Clerk; and the Names of the abſent Lords being ſet down, (purſuant to the ſame Order) they were again called over, and excuſed.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Gibbon and others, to deſire their Lordſhips to defer going down into Weſtminſter-Hall for ſome Time.

Ordered, That the Meſſengers of the Houſe of Commons be called in and told, That the Lords have conſider'd their Meſſage, and that their Lordſhips will defer going down into Weſtminſter-Hall for ſome Time, as is deſir'd.

And the Meſſengers were called, and acquainted accordingly.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Craggs and others, to deſire a Conference with this Houſe upon the Subject-Matter of their Lordſhip's Meſſage relating to the free Conference deſired by the Commons:

To which the Houſe agreed.

And the Meſſengers of the Houſe of Commons were called in and told, That the Lords do agree to a Conference as deſired, and appoint it preſently in the Painted Chamber.

Ordered, That the Managers of the laſt Conference be the Managers of this Conference.

The Houſe being informed, That the Commons were ready in the Painted Chamber.

The Managers Names were read, and the Houſe was adjourn'd during Pleaſure, and the Lords named as Managers went to the Conference; which being ended, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Lord Privy-Seal reported the Effect of the Conference, which was, that the Managers for the Commons had delivered to their Lordſhips a Paper, containing as follows, viz.

That your Lordſhips did not think fit to give a free Conference on the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference, as was deſired by the Commons, and they being ſtill deſirous, to the utmoſt of their Power, to preſerve a good Correſpondence with your Lordſhips, have aſk'd this Conference; and have commanded us to acquaint your Lordſhips, that they are very much ſurprized to find your Lordſhips deny a free Conference, after your Lordſhips had already agreed to a Conference deſired by the Commons on the ſaid Subject-Matter, and after your Lordſhips have on your Parts alſo deſired a Conference upon the ſame Subject.

That free Conferences are the moſt antient and eſtabliſhed Methods for adjuſting the Differences that have at any Time ariſen between the Two Houſes, and, as the Commons conceive, is the only Method to preſerve a good Correſpondence between them on ſuch Occaſions, which at this Time is of the higheſt Importance, becauſe a Miſunderſtanding on this Account would tend to defeat the Trial of the Impeachment of the Commons. That

That the Commons conceive clearly, that the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference is not a Point of Judicature, but a Point relating only to the Proſecution of the Commons, it having ariſen before any Matter of Judgment had come before your Lordſhips upon the Trial.

For which Reaſons the Commons conceive, that your Lordſhips ought not to have denied them a free Conference upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference.

Which being read by the Clerk;

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Orlebar and Mr. Browning, two of the Maſters of Chancery, to deſire they would continue ſitting for ſome Time.

Then the Houſe proceeded to take into Conſideration the Matter delivered by the Commons at the laſt Conference.

And it being propoſed to inſiſt on denying a free Conference with the Commons;

And Debate thereupon;

The Queſtion was put, Whether to inſiſt on denying a free Conference upon the Subject-Matter concerning which a free Conference was deſired by the Commons?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That a preſent Conference be deſired with the Commons in the Painted Chamber on the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference, and that the Commons be there acquainted, that the Lords having taken into Conſideration the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference, their Lordſhips do inſiſt on denying a free Conference upon the Subject-Matter concerning which a free Conference was deſired by the Houſe of Commons.

Accordingly a Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Orlebar and Mr. Browning, to deſire a preſent Conference in the Painted Chamber on the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference.

The Meſſengers returned, and acquainted the Houſe, that the Commons do agree to a Conference, as deſired.

Ordered, That the Managers of the laſt Conference be the Managers of this Conference.

Then the Houſe being informed, that the Commons were ready in the Painted Chamber, the Managers Names were read. And

The Houſe was adjourn'd during Pleaſure, and the Lords appointed Managers went to the Conference; which being ended, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Lord Privy-Seal reported, that they had been at the Conference, and acquainted the Commons as above directed.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by the former Meſſengers, to deſire they will continue ſitting for ſome Time.

The Meſſengers being returned, acquainted the Houſe, that the Commons will continue ſitting for ſome Time, as deſired.

Then it being moved, that a Meſſage be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, that this Houſe intends preſently to proceed further on the Trial of the Earl of Oxford in Weſtminſter-Hall.

And it being alſo moved, that the Houſe do now adjourn during Pleaſure;

The Queſtion was put, Whether now to adjourn during Pleaſure?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

The Houſe was accordingly adjourned during Pleaſure.

The Houſe was reſumed.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Orlebar and Mr. Browning, to acquaint them, that this Houſe intends preſently to proceed further on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer in Weſtminſter-Hall.

Then it being propoſed proviſionally to conſider the Form of a Proclamation proper to be made in Weſtminſter-Hall for the Appearance of the Proſecutors, if they ſhould not be there preſent to proceed, in order to make good their Impeachment againſt the ſaid Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer;

And thereupon the Proclamation made the Seventeenth of June, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and One, at the Trial of the Lord Somers being read;

It was agreed by the Houſe, that when the Lords are gone down into Weſtminſter-Hall, immediately after the Lords Houſe ſhall be reſumed in Weſtminſter-Hall, and Proclamation for Silence made, and Proclamation for bringing the Priſoner to the Bar, if the Managers of the Houſe of Commons ſhall not be there, Proclamation be likewiſe made in theſe Words, viz.

Whereas Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer ſtands impeached of High-Treaſon, and other High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, by the Houſe of Commons, in the Name of Themſelves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, all Perſons concerned are to take notice, that he now ſtands on his Trial, and they may now come forth in order to make good their ſaid Charge.

Then the Houſe was adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Lords being come down into Weſtminſter-Hall, and ſeated in the uſual manner about Five in the Evening;

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the Houſe is reſumed——Make Proclamation for Silence.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. (as before.)

L. H. Steward. Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower of London to bring the Priſoner to the Bar.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. Lieutenant of the Tower of London bring forth your Priſoner to the Bar, according to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

The Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being brought to the Bar accordingly, and the Commons not being preſent, L. H. Steward. Make Proclamation according to the Order of the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made the following Proclamation according to the ſaid Order of the Houſe of Lords, the Clerk of the Houſe of Lords reading it to him as followeth:

Serj. at Arms. Whereas Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer ſtands impeached of High-Treaſon, and other High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, by the Houſe of Commons, in the Name of Themſelves and all the Commons of Great Britain, all Perſons concerned are to take notice, that he now ſtands upon his Trial, and they may now come forth in order to make good their ſaid Charge.

After about twenty Minutes Silence, the Lord Guilford moved for an Adjournment to the Houſe above.

L. H. Steward. Do your Lordſhips hear what is moved, is that your Lordſhips Pleaſure?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This Houſe is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

And being returned in the ſame order they went down,

The Houſe was reſumed.

Then it was propoſed, that Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Houſe of Commons for High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and of all things therein contained, and that the ſaid Impeachment be diſmiſſed.

And a Queſtion being ſtated thereupon, it was moved to leave out theſe Words (viz. and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors;) and thereupon the Queſtion being put,

Whether thoſe Words ſhall ſtand part of the Queſtion;

It was Reſolved in the Affirmative.

Then the laſt Queſtion being again ſtated,

Ordered, That the Queſtion now ſtated, be the Queſtion to be put in Weſtminſter-Hall.

Then the Lord High Steward deſiring that further Directions might be given concerning the further Proceedings in the Trial of the ſaid Earl in Weſtminſter-Hall, it was agreed by the Houſe and Ordered, that in Weſtminſter-Hall the Lord High Steward ſhall read the Queſtion as already ſtated; and then call to the loweſt Baron firſt, and to every other Lord then preſent, and aſk him his Opinion whether Content or not Content; and that every Lord ſhall ſtand up when called to, and give his Vote Content or not Content; and that the Lord High Steward having taken the Votes, ſhall declare the Majority; and if the Majority anſwer in the Affirmative, the Lord High Steward is to declare the ſame, and particularly to the Earl of Oxford as ſoon as he ſhall be brought to the Bar, and ſhall immediately pronounce the Judgment of this Houſe in the Form following, (viz.) It is conſidered, ordered and adjudged by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, that Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer ſhall be, and is hereby acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Houſe of Commons for High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and of all things therein contained; and that the ſaid Impeachment ſhall be, and is hereby diſmiſſed. And ſhall immediately direct the Lieutenant of the Tower then to Diſcharge his Priſoner.

And after that to Diſſolve the Commiſſion.

The Houſe was then again adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall, and being there reſumed,

L. H. Steward. Make Proclamation for Silence.

Serj. at Arms. O yes, &c. (as before.)

O yes, &c. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Priſoner to the Bar.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the Clerk acquaints me, that for want of Light in the Paſſage he could not take an exact Liſt of your Lordſhips, I therefore deſire that he may now take a Liſt of the Lords preſent.

Then the Clerk took a Liſt of the Lords preſent.

L. H. Steward. If your Lordſhips think fit, your Lordſhips Names ſhall now be called over.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then their Names were called over.

Lords. The Earl of Oxford is not yet gone from the Bar.

Then the Earl was ordered to withdraw from the Bar. And being withdrawn,

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I ſhall now ſtate the Queſtion, upon which your Lordſhips are to give your Votes; it is this, That Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Houſe of Commons for High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and of all things therein contained, and that the ſaid Impeachment be diſmiſſed.

L. H. Steward. The Clerk ſhould attend near the Lords with Candles, as they give their Votes.

Then the Lord High Steward put the Queſtion to their Lordſhips, beginning at the youngeſt Baron, in manner following.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, your Lordſhip has heard the Queſtion ſtated, what ſays your Lordſhip, is your Lordſhip Content, or not Content?

The Names of the Lords preſent, who were all Content, are as follows.

It is conſidered, ordered and adjudged by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, that Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer ſhall be, and is hereby acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Houſe of Commons for High-Treaſon and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and of all things therein contain'd, and that the ſaid Impeachment ſhall be and is hereby diſmiſſed.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, you are now to diſcharge your Priſoner.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, this is all that remains to be done by Vertue of his Majeſty's Commiſſion, I do therefore declare the ſame to be diſſolved.

Then the Lord High Steward broke his Staff.

L. Chancellor. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. Chancellor. This Houſe is adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Earl was immediately diſcharg'd at the Bar, and paying his Reſpects to the Lords, and having receiv'd the Compliments of his Friends, went away directly to his own Houſe.

But the Houſe of Commons reſented this Proceeding ſo far as to Addreſs the King, that the Earl of Oxford might be excepted out of the then intended Act of Grace, which was done accordingly.

Then

Then the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty proceeded to give his Charge to the Grand Jury, as followeth.

GENTLEMEN,

WE are here assembled to hold this Court of Admiralty-Sessions; and the Duty of my Office requires me to give in Charge to you the things that you are to Enquire of and to Present.

In a former Admiralty-Charge, by way of Preface or Introduction to the particular Crime of Piracy, which will again now be brought before you;

I then shewed you, First, That the Sea was given by God for the use of Men, and is subject to Dominion and Property, as well as the Land.

And then I particularly remarked to you, the Sovereignty of the Kings of England over the British Seas.

I then proceeded, Secondly, to shew you, That as Commerce and Navigation could not be managed without Laws; so there have been always particular Laws for the better ordering and regulating Marine Affairs; with an Historical Account of those Laws, and their Origin.

Of all those Matters I then spake largely and fully; and shall not now trouble you with any farther Repetition of them.

But I shall now proceed, in the Third place, to shew you, That there have been particular Courts and Judges appointed, to whose Jurisdiction Maritime Causes do belong: and that in Matters both Civil and Criminal.

And then I shall in particular shew you the Constitution and Jurisdiction of this Court of Admiralty Sessions.

And shall mention the Crimes cognizable therein: and shall particularly inlarge upon the Crime of Piracy, that will now be brought before you.

Time will not permit me to speak of the several sorts of Magistrates, to whose Jurisdiction Maritime Affairs do belong, in the Transmarine or Foreign Parts of the World: Therefore I shall confine my self, under this Head, only to speak of the Laws of England; by which the general Jurisdiction in Marine Affairs, is by the King as Supreme, as well by Sea as Land, committed to the Lord High Admiral; who, besides his Power over the Navy, and the Government over the Seamen, hath a Jurisdiction [a] Civil and Criminal in Marine Affairs, which are decided by his Maritime Judges in the Court of Admiralty, the chief of which is known by the Stile of Suprema Curiæ Admiralitatis Angliæ Judex: within whose Cognizance, in Right of the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty by the Sea Laws, and the Laws and Customs of the Admiralty of England, are comprized all Matters properly Maritime, and pertaining to Navigation.

As to the Antiquity of the Office of Lord Admiral, and the Court of the [b] Admiralty, it is sufficient to remark, that the thing itself that signified that Office, now known to us by the Stile of Lord High Admiral, and the Jurisdiction thereof, hath been in the Kingdom of England time out of mind.

The learned Antiquary Sir Henry Spelman, in his [c] Glossarium, and out of him [d] Dr. Godolphin gives us the Catalogues of the Admirals from the Reign of King Henry III. Not but that the Office of Admiral is far more ancient: For the same learned Antiquary saith, that he hath not in that Catalogue inserted Marthæus, that Princeps Nautarum, in King Edgar's Time; nor those Tetrarchs of his Navy; nor of those other Commanders in Chief in Sea Affairs, constituted by his Successors Kings of England; but of such only as in the ordinary way have been dignified with the said Office.

The Lord Coke in the first part of his Institutes, in honour of the Admiralty of England, saith, "That the Jurisdiction of the Lord Admiral is "very ancient, and long before the Reign of Edward III. as some have supposed, as may appear by the Laws of Oleron, (so called, for that "they were made by King Richard I. when he "was there) that there had been then an Admiral "time out of mind, and by many other ancient "Records in the Reigns of Henry III. Edward I. "and Edward II. is most manifest."

But the learned Selden [f] in his Notes upon Fortescue, tells us, That in an ancient Manuscript De l'Office de l'Admiralty, translated into Latin by one Tho. Rowghton, calling it De Officio Admiralitatis, there are Constitutions often mentioned touching the Admiralty of Henry I. Richard I. King John, and Edward I. which shews the great Antiquity of that Court.

And as to the Jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty, not to enter upon the Disputes between the Civilians and the common Lawyers concerning the same; I shall now only observe to you, that it is allowed even by those Statutes that were made purposely to restrain the Jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty, that that Court ought to have Cognizance of all things done upon the main Sea [g], or Coasts of the Sea. And of the Death [h] of a Man, and of Maihem done in great Ships, being and hovering in the main Stream of great Rivers, only beneath the Bridge of the same Rivers nigh the Sea.

And by the Preamble to the Statute of the 28 H. VIII. it is declared, [i] that Traitors, Pirates, Thieves, Robbers, Murderers, and Confederates upon the Sea, were tried before the Admiral, or his Lieutenant or Commissary, after the Course of the Civil Law.

But as appears further by the said Preamble, that it was found inconvenient to try those Offenders before the Admiral;

Therefore by the said Statute this Court of Admiralty Sessions was appointed, whereby such Offenders were to be tried according to the Course of the Common Law, as if their Offences were committed on Land.

And now I shall proceed to speak of the Crimes cognizable in this Court. And particularly I shall enlarge upon the Crime of Piracy that will come before you.

The Crimes cognizable in this Court, and within the Jurisdiction of the same, by the express Words of the Statute [k], are all Treasons, Felonies, Robberies, Murders, and Confederacies, committed in or upon the Sea, or in any other Haven, River, Creek, or Place where the Admiral or Admirals have or pretend to have Power, Authority, or Juriſdiction.

There being only one of thoſe Crimes, viz. Robbery or Piracy, that will come before you, I ſhall omit the reſt, and only ſpeak to that: wherein I ſhall ſhew you the Nature of the Offence, and the Heinouſneſs thereof.

Now, as this is an Offence that is deſtructive of all Trade and Commerce between Nation and Nation; ſo it is the Intereſt of all Sovereign Princes to puniſh and ſuppreſs the ſame.

And the King of England [l] hath not only an Empire and Sovereignty over the Britiſh Sea, but alſo an undoubted Juriſdiction and Power, in concurrency with other Princes and States, for the Puniſhment of all Piracies and Robberies at Sea, in the moſt remote Parts of the World.

Now as to the Nature of the Offence: Piracy is a Robbery committed upon the Sea, and a Pirate is a Sea Thief.

Indeed, the Word Pirata, as it is derived from πειρᾶν, tranſire, à tranſeundo mare, was anciently taken in a good and honourable [m] Senſe, and ſignified a Maritime Knight, and an Admiral or Commander at Sea; as appears by the ſeveral Teſtimonies and Records cited to that purpoſe, by that learned Antiquary Sir Henry Spelman in his Gloſſarium. And out of him the ſame Senſe of the Word is remarked by Dr. Cowel, in his [n] Interpreter; and by Blount in his [o] Law Dictionary. But afterwards the Word was taken in an ill Senſe, and ſignified a Sea-Rover or Robber; either from the [p] Greek Word πεῖρα, Deceptio, Dolus, Deceipt; or from the Word πειρᾶν, tranſire, of their wandering up and down, and reſting in no place, but coaſting hither and thither to do Miſchief: And from this Senſe, οἱ κατὰ θάλασσαν κακοῦργοι, Sea-Malefactors were called πειρᾶται, Pirates.

Therefore a Pirate is thus defined by my Lord Coke [q]; This Word Pirate, ſaith he, in Latin Pirata, is derived from the Greek Word πειρατὴς, which again is fetched from πειρᾶν, à tranſeundo Mare, of Roving upon the Sea: and therefore in Engliſh a Pirate is called, a Rover and Robber upon the Sea.

Thus the Nature of the Offence is ſufficiently ſet forth in the Definition of it.

As to the Heinouſneſs or Wickedneſs of the Offence, it needs no Aggravation, it being evident to the Reaſon of all Men. Therefore a Pirate is called [r] Hoſtis Humani Generis, with whom neither Faith nor Oath is to be kept. And in our Law they are termed [s] Brutes, and [t] Beaſts of Prey: and that it is lawful for any one that takes them, if they cannot with Safety to themſelves bring them under ſome Government to be tried, to put them to Death.

And by the Civil Law any one may take from them their Ships or Veſſels: ſo that excellent Civilian [u] Dr. Zouch, in his Book De Jure Nautico, ſaith, In Deteſtation of Piracy, beſides other Puniſhments, it is enacted, that it may be lawful for any one to take their Ships.

And yet by the ſame Civil Laws, Goods taken by Piracy gain not any Property againſt the Owners. Thus in the Roman Digeſts or Pandects of Juſtinian [w], it is ſaid, Perſons taken by Pirates or Thieves, are nevertheleſs to be eſteemed as free.

And then it follows, [x] He that is taken by Thieves, is not therefore a Servant of the Thieves, neither is Poſtliminy neceſſary for him.

And the learned Grotius, in his Book De Jure Belli ac Pacis, [y] ſaith, Thoſe things which Pirates and Thieves have taken from us, have no need of Poſtliminy, becauſe the Law of Nations never granted to them a Power to change the Right of Property: therefore things taken by them, whereſoever they are found, may be claimed.

And agreeable to the Civil Law are the Laws of [z] England, which will not allow that a taking Goods by Piracy doth diveſt the Owners of their Property, tho' ſold at Land, unleſs ſold in Market overt.

Before the Statute of the [a] 25 E. III. Piracy was holden to be Petit Treaſon, and the Offence ſaid to be done contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ debitum, for which the Offenders were to be drawn and hanged: but ſince that Statute the Offenders received Judgment as Felons.

And by the ſaid Statute of 28 H. VIII. [b] the Offenders are ouſted of the Clergy.

But ſtill it remains a Felony by the [c] Civil Law; and therefore tho' the aforeſaid Statute of 28 H. VIII. gives a Trial by the Courſe of the Common Law, yet it alters not the Nature of the Offence; and the Indictment muſt mention the ſame to be done ſuper altum mare, upon the High Sea [d], and muſt have both the Words Felonicè and Piraticè; and therefore a Pardon of all Felonies doth not extend to this Offence, but the ſame ought to be ſpecially named.

Thus having explain'd to you the Nature of the Offence, and the Wickedneſs thereof, as being deſtructive of Trade and Commerce; I ſuppoſe I need not uſe any Arguments to you, to perſuade you to a faithful Diſcharge of your Duty, in the bringing ſuch Offenders to Puniſhment.

And indeed, the Inhabitants of this Province have of late, to their great Coſt and Damages, felt the Evil of Piracy, and the Miſchiefs and Inſults done by Pirates; when lately an infamous Pirate had ſo much Aſſurance as to lie at our Bar, in ſight of our Town, and to ſeize and rifle ſeveral of our Ships bound inward and outward.

And then had the Confidence to ſend in his inſolent Demands for what he wanted, with Threats of murdering our People he had on board him, if they were not complied with. Which was putting the Province under Contribution.

And the Succeſs he had in going off from our Coaſt with Impunity, encouraged [e] another of thoſe Beaſts of Prey to come upon our Coaſt, and take our Veſſels.

And this very Company, which will now be charged before you with the Crime of Piracy, their Ringleader, with many, if not all of the Company, were belonging to that Crew, which firſt inſulted us. And preſuming upon their former Succeſs and Impunity, had the Confidence to lie upon our Coaſt to fit their Veſſel, and to go on Shore at their Will and Pleaſure; deſigning, as we had juſt Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that when all Things were fitted for their miſchievous Deſigns, to come again to cruize before our Bar, and take our Veſſels.

And therefore upon the receiving theſe Accounts, it was high Time for the Government to fit out a Force againſt the Pirates; and to endeavour to ſuppreſs them, in order to ſupport our Trade and Commerce, which otherwiſe muſt have been inevitably ruin'd.

And being under ſuch a Neceſſity of having Forces raiſed for that purpoſe, we cannot ſufficiently commend and honour the Zeal and Bravery of thoſe Perſons, who ſo willingly and readily undertook that Expedition againſt the Pirates; and ſo gallantly acted their Parts when they engaged them.

But it will not be fit for me to ſay any more upon that Subject, by reaſon of the near Relation I ſtand in to the Commander in Chief in that Expedition; and who is known to you all to have ſo well acted his Part therein, that as it is not proper, ſo he needs not my Commendations.

But then I muſt not omit mentioning to you, that in this Attack made upon thoſe Enemies of Mankind, many of our People loſt their Lives in the Diſcharge of their Duty to their King and Country, and who fell by the Hands of thoſe inhuman and murdering Criminals which will now be brought before you. And the Blood of thoſe murdered Perſons will cry for Vengeance and Juſtice againſt theſe Offenders.

And therefore I hope the Conſideration of doing Juſtice to thoſe Perſons who were kill'd in the Service of their Country, will make you to uſe your Diligence in bringing the Criminals to Puniſhment, without which the Blood of thoſe Perſons will in a great meaſure be required at our Hands.

I need not expatiate to you upon the Heinouſneſs of the Sin of Murder; a Crime which carries its own natural Horror and Guilt along with it; ſo that it is altogether needleſs for me to aggravate it; and the manifeſt Injuſtice and Evil of which is evident to all Perſons, even by the Light of Nature: So that there is no Nation ſo barbarous, but by their univerſal Practice do conſent to the Equity and Juſtice of that antient Law of God, that, Whoſo ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed, Gen. ix. 6.

Indeed, I freely grant, that the Greatneſs of the Crimes the Perſons are charged with, ſhould make you the more careful in your Enquiry, and to avoid any Error or Miſtake on both Extremes; that as you would not condemn the Innocent, ſo likewiſe that you do not acquit the Guilty, always remembring what the Wiſe Man ſaith, that He that juſtifieth the Wicked, as well as he that condemneth the Juſt, even both are an Abomination to the Lord, Prov. xvii. 15. See Ch. xxiv. v. 24.

I have only this to add, that you being a Grand Jury, your Buſineſs is not to try the Priſoners, but to conſider whether or no by the Evidence, there is that probable Proof of the Perſons being guilty of the Fact charged upon them, as that they ought to be put upon their Trial for the ſame.

An Indictment found by you being vertually but a legal Accuſation, there being another Jury to paſs upon them.

But on the other Side, tho' your finding the Bill of Indictment is not concluſive to the Priſoners, but that they will have a Trial, and be heard in their own Defence before another Jury, which properly are ſaid to try the Priſoners, and paſs between the King and them upon their Lives or Deaths; nevertheleſs, you ought to be cautious and diligent in your Enquiry, and not raſhly and careleſly find a Bill of Indictment againſt Perſons, and put them upon the Hazard of a Trial for a capital Crime.

But as to thoſe Indictments that will now be brought before you, I am very well aſſur'd the Proofs will be ſo clear and full, that you'll have no Reaſon to doubt the Truth of the Facts charged therein; and then I ſhall not queſtion your faithful Diſcharge of that great Duty and Truſt the Law hath repoſed in you, in bringing ſuch Criminals to Juſtice.

Thus having ſufficiently explained to you what is likely to come before you, I ſhall now diſmiſs you to your Buſineſs.

Then the Court adjourned till the Afternoon.

The Court met according to Adjourment.

And the Grand Jury being called over, a Bill of Indictment was given to them againſt Stede Bonnet, Robert Tucker, Edward Robinſon, Neal Paterſon, William Scot, and Job Bayley, for felonioufly and piratically taking the Sloop Francis with her Goods, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander.

Clerk. Upon this Indictment they have been arraign'd: Upon their Arraigment they have pleaded Not Guilty; and for their Trial have put themſelves upon God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether they, or any of them, are guilty of the Felony and Piracy of which they ſtand indicted, in Manner and Form as they ſtand indicted, or not guilty. If you find them, or any of them, guilty, you ſhall then enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, they, or any of them, had at the Time of the Felony and Piracy committed, or at any Time ſince. But if you find them not guilty, &c. And hear your Evidence.

Then Richard Allen, Eſq; Attorney-General, ſpake as followeth:

May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

THE Nature of the Crime, Piracy, for which the Priſoners at the Bar are now to be tried, and the Statute of the Twenty-eighth of Henry the Eighth, intitled, For Pirates, has been fully and learnedly laid open and explain'd by the Judge in his Charge to the Grand Jury, (at which I am ſenſible moſt, if not all of you, were preſent.) Therefore I ſhall ſay but little more on that Head, and only remark, that it is a Crime ſo odious and horrid in all its Circumſtances, that thoſe who have treated on that Subject have been at a loſs for Words and Terms to ſtamp a ſufficient Ignominy upon it: Some calling them Sea-Wolves; others Beaſts of Prey, and Enemies of Mankind, with whom neither Faith nor Treaty is to be kept. And all this is but a faint Deſcription of theſe Miſcreants: For Beaſts of Prey, tho' fierce and cruel in their Natures, yet, as has been obſerv'd of them, they only do it to ſatisfy their Hunger, and are never found to prey upon Creatures of the ſame Species with themſelves. Add hereto, that thoſe wild Beaſts have neither rational Souls, Underſtanding, nor Reaſon to guide their Actions, or to diſtinguiſh between Good or Evil. But Pirates prey upon all Mankind, their own Species and Fellow-Creatures, without Diſtinction of Nations or Religions; Engliſh, French, Spaniards, and Portugueſe, and Moors and Turks, are all alike to them: For Pirates are not content with taking from the Merchants what Things they ſtand in need of, but throw their Goods over-board, burn their Ships, and ſometimes bereave them of their Lives for Paſtime and Diverſion, as we have had frequent Inſtances of late, and prove deſtructive to all

Trade and Commerce in general. And if a Stop be not put to thoſe Depredations, and our Trade no better protected, not only Carolina, but all the Engliſh Plantations in America will be totally ruin'd in a very ſhort Time.

The Pirates are become very numerous and formidable in theſe Parts: The Trade of America is no ſmall Advantage to the Crown of Great Britain. Jamaica, by relation, is ruin'd by thoſe Pirates already; and other Parts of America have ſuffered moſt grievouſly, and are like to ſhare in the ſame Fate. I know not what is done at home, therefore I can't ſay no Care at all has been taken of us: But this I do ſay, no effectual Care has been taken to ſuppreſs thoſe Pirates. And if a true Repreſentation of theſe Matters were laid before his Majeſty, we could not but hope for ſome Redreſs.

'Tis not my Buſineſs to call in queſtion the Conduct of the Spaniards, in breaking up the Bay of Campeachy. They could not but think the turning away ſuch a Number of profligate Wretches, as were got together, muſt put them on a worſe Courſe of Life: They have done them more Harm ſince than cutting their Log-Wood; for nine Parts in ten of them turned Pirates, and have lived upon robbing and plundering them and us ever ſince that Time. That and the great Expectations which ſo many had from the Bahama Wrecks, where not one in ten proved ſucceſsful, gave Birth and Increaſe to all the Pirates in thoſe Parts, Engliſh, French, and Spaniards.

I juſt now inſtanced Jamaica as a Place that is almoſt ruin'd by the Pirates: But what Occaſion have we to look abroad? What a grievous Dilemma were we ourſelves reduced to in the Month of May laſt? When Thatch the Pirate came and lay off this Harbour with a Ship of forty Guns mounted, and one hundred and forty Men, and as well fitted with warlike Stores of all Sorts, as any Fifth-Rate Ship in the Navy, with three or four Pirate-Sloops under his Command. And after having taken Mr. Samuel Wragg, one of the Council of this Province, bound out from this Place to London, as alſo one Mr. Marks, and ſeveral other Veſſels going out and coming into this Harbour, they plundered thoſe Veſſels going home to England from hence of about fifteen hundred Pounds Sterling, in Gold and Pieces of Eight. And after that, they had the moſt unheard of Impudence to ſend up one Richards, and two or three more of the Pirates with the ſaid Mr. Marks, with a Meſſage to the Government, to demand a Cheſt of Medicines of the Value of three or four hundred Pounds, and to ſend them back with the Medicines, without offering any Violence to them, or otherwiſe they would ſend in the Heads of Mr. Wragg and all thoſe Priſoners they had on board; and Richards, and two or three more of the Pirates, walked upon the Bay, and in our publick Streets, to and fro in the Face of all the People, waiting for the Governor's Anſwer. And the Government, for the Preſervation of the Lives of the Gentlemen they had taken, were forced to yield to their Demands. And ſome of thoſe very Priſoners now at the Bar were Part of that Thatch's and Bonnet's Crew. Afterwards one Vaughan, another noted Pirate, came and lay off our Bar, and ſent in another inſolent Meſſage. This rouſed our Spirits; and tho' reduced to a very low Ebb by Reaſon of the Calamities of the Indian War, and long and heavy Taxes, we could not bear thoſe Inſults, but ſent out a Force to ſuppreſs them. However, we muſt own, that that Honourable Gentleman, Colonel William Rhett, was the chief, if not the firſt Promoter of fitting out two Sloops to take ſome of thoſe Pirates. The Government readily fell in with the Meaſures propoſed: Colonel Rhett went in Perſon, accompanied by many Gentlemen of the Town, animated with the ſame Principle of Zeal and Honour for our publick Safety, and the Preſervation of our Trade.

'Tis probable Vaughan the Pirate, before Things could be got in readineſs, might have ſome Intimation of our Deſign, and made his way off the Coaſts, though all poſſible Care was taken to prevent it. However, Col. William Rhett and the reſt of the Gentlemen were reſolv'd not to return without doing ſome Service to their Country, and therefore went in queſt of a Pirate they had heard lay at Cape Fear. About the latter End of September they came up with, and engaged them: The Fight laſted above ſix Hours, and the Pirates were forced to ſurrender, tho' the Colonel's Veſſel running a-ground, lay under all the Diſadvantages in the World, as you are all ſenſible.

The Piratical Crew at the Bar, and now to be tried, in the Engagement, killed ten or eleven of our Men on the Spot, and wounded about eighteen, ſeveral of which died ſince they came aſhore here.

This Pirate-Sloop was commanded by that noted Pirate Major Stede Bonnet, and formerly called the Revenge, now the Royal James, and was one of thoſe very Sloops that lay off the Harbour of Charles-Town about May laſt, when they took Mr. Wragg Priſoner, and ſent up their inſolent Demands to the Governour, as I have mentioned before.

We muſt all own, that the Undertaking and Deſign of fitting out thoſe Sloops after theſe Pirates, was bold and noble, and carried on with Prudence and Courage, and crown'd with Victory and Succeſs; and I hope Col. Rhett, and the reſt of the Gentlemen that were with him, will meet with both Thanks and Rewards ſuitable to their great Merit, and the Credit and Reputation they have brought to this Province by this gallant Action.

But ſee how Juſtice follows thoſe wicked Offenders! They are now brought to ſuffer in that Country which they ſo lately inſulted. 'Tis true, Bonnet had not the ſole Command of his Sloop when he lay off the Bar, but was turned out ſome time before by Thatch, but that was not Bonnet's Fault.

Bonnet's Eſcape out of Priſon is no ſmall Misfortune to us: Firſt, becauſe ſome will be reproached with conniving at his Eſcape that had no hand in it, and though they be never ſo innocent: Secondly, by reaſon of the ill Conſequence that may happen to many Merchants in Caſe Bonnet makes a Head again, and particularly to the Merchants of this Province.

I hope the great Reward of ſeven hundred Pounds offer'd by the Government for taking Bonnet and his Maſter, will make the People vigilant in apprehending them. I'm ſure the Government gave frequent and ſtrict Charges to the Marſhal for ſecuring him, and ordering Centinels to be placed early in the Evening; and immediately on his Eſcape, ſet up all Night ſending Hue and Cries and Expreſſes by Land and by Water throughout the whole Province: ſo that 'tis to be hoped he will be retaken before this Service be over. I am ſenſible Bonnet has had ſome Aſſiſtance in making his Eſcape; and if we can diſcover the Offenders, we ſhall not fail to bring them to exemplary Puniſhment.

And now, Gentlemen of the Jury, I muſt remind you of your Duty on this occaſion. You are bound by your Oaths, and are obliged to act according to the Dictates of your Conſciences, to go according to the Evidence that ſhall be produced againſt the Priſoners, without Favour or Affection, Pity or Partiality to any one of them, if they appear to be guilty of thoſe Crimes they are charged with. And you are not allowed a latitude of giving in your Verdict according to Will and Humour.

I am ſorry to hear ſome Expreſſions drop from private Perſons, (I hope there is none of them upon the Jury) in favour of the Pirates, and particularly of Bonnet; that he is a Gentleman, a Man of Honour, a Man of Fortune, and one that has had a liberal Education. Alas, Gentlemen, all theſe Qualifications are but ſeveral Aggravations of his Crimes. How can a Man be ſaid to be a Man of Honour, that has loſt all Senſe of Honour and Humanity, that is become an Enemy of Mankind, and given himſelf up to plunder and deſtroy his Fellow-Creatures, a common Robber, and a Pirate?

Nay, he was the Archipirata, as it is now taken in the worſt Senſe, or the chief Pirate, and one of the firſt of thoſe that began to commit thoſe Depredations upon the Seas ſince the laſt Peace.

I have an Account in my Hand of above twenty eight Veſſels taken by him, in company with Thatch, in the Weſt-Indies, ſince the fifth Day of April laſt; and how many before, no Body can tell.

His Eſtate is ſtill a greater Aggravation of his Offence, becauſe he was under no Temptation of taking up that wicked Courſe of Life.

His Learning and Education is ſtill a far greater; becauſe that generally ſoftens Mens Manners, and keeps them from becoming ſavage and brutiſh: but when theſe Qualifications are perverted to wicked Purpoſes, and contrary to thoſe Ends for which God beſtows them upon Mankind, they become the worſt of Men, as we ſee the preſent Inſtance, and more dangerous to the Commonwealth.

Gentlemen, moſt of the ſaid Bonnet's Crew, and particularly the Priſoners at the Bar, to wit, Edward Robinſon, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayly, and Neal Paterſon, are old Offenders, and were with Thatch and Bonnet at the taking of all, or moſt of theſe Veſſels I have mentioned, and were either with Bonnet or Thatch when they lay off our Bar in May laſt, and ſent up that inſulting Meſſage, and were in the Engagement againſt Col. Rhett, ſo that there is hardly any room left for the leaſt Pity or Compaſſion: Who can think of it, when you ſee your Fellow-Townſmen, ſome dead, and others daily bleeding and dying before your Eyes?

But the particular Fact or Act of Piracy for which the Priſoners at the Bar are now to be tried, is ſet forth in the Indictment, for that they the ſaid Edward Robinſon, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayly, and Neal Paterſon, the ſecond Day of Auguſt, in the fifth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, by Force and Arms, upon the high Sea, in a certain Place called Cape James alias Cape Inlopen, in the Latitude of thirty nine, did piratically and feloniouſly ſet upon, board, break and enter a certain Merchant Sloop call'd the Francis, Peter Manwareing Commander, putting the ſaid Manwareing and others in corporal fear of their Lives; and then and there piratically and feloniouſly did take and carry from the ſaid Manwareing out of the ſaid Sloop, twenty ſix Hogſheads and three Tierces, and three Barrels of Rum of the Value of two hundred ſixty three Pounds ſix Shillings and eight Pence, and other the Goods mentioned in the Indictment, of the Value of Five hundred Pounds.

We ſhall call the Evidence, and prove the Fact fully and clearly upon them.

Take notice, Gentlemen, that the boarding, breaking, and entry of one, if the reſt were preſent and conſenting, is the boarding, breaking, and entry of all the reſt.

We ſhall prove, that all the Priſoners at the Bar were at the taking of Manwareing's Sloop, that they all bore Arms, and that they all ſhared a few Days before they came to Cape Fear: and if ſo, we doubt not but you'll find them Guilty, and diſcharge that Duty the Country expects from you.

Mr. Thomas Hepworth. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Crime the Priſoners now ſtand charged with, is Piracy, which is the worſt ſort of Robbery, both in its Nature and its Effects, ſince it diſturbs the Commerce and Friendſhip betwixt different Nations, and if left unpuniſhed, involves them in War and Blood. What Calamities and Ruin they carry along with them, no Perſon can be a Stranger to; ſo that thoſe that bring not ſuch Criminals to Judgment, when it lies in their Power, and is their Duty to do ſo, are anſwerable in a great meaſure, before God and Man, for all the fatal Conſequences of ſuch Acquittals, which bring a Scandal on the publick Juſtice, and are often attended with publick Calamities.

It is not therefore, Gentlemen, to be ſuppoſed that wiſe or honeſt Men, (and there is none who could willingly be thought otherwiſe) who love their Country, and wiſh its Peace and Proſperity, would be guilty in that kind.

What has been ſaid by the King's Attorney, or my ſelf upon this unexpected Occaſion, I hope will not be looked upon as intended to influence any of the Jury. I am ſure it is far from being ſo deſigned; Religion, Conſcience, Honour, common Honeſty, Humanity, and all Laws forbid ſuch Methods. There is no doubt but the Judges as well as the Jurymen beſt diſcharge their Duty when they proceed without Favour or Affection, Hatred or Ill-will, or any partial Reſpect whatſoever: Malice and Favour (too great Enemies to Juſtice) are to be excluded all Courts of Judicature, as too partial.

Every Man ought to be extremely tender of ſuch a Perſon as he has reaſon to believe is innocent; but it ſhould be conſider'd likewiſe, on the other ſide, that he who brings a notorious Pirate or common Malefactor to Juſtice, contributes to the Safety and Preſervation of the Lives of many, both bad and good; of the good, by means of the Aſſurance of Protection; and of the bad too, by the Terror of Juſtice. It was upon this Conſideration that the Roman Emperors, in their Edicts, made this piece of Service for the publick Good as meritorious as any Act of Piety or religious Worſhip.

Our own Laws demonſtrate how much our Legiſlators, and particularly how highly that great Prince King Henry V. and his Parliament, thought England concerned in providing for the Security of Traders, and ſcouring the Seas of Rovers and Free-booters. Certainly, there never was any Age wherein our Anceſtors were not extraordinary zealous in that Affair; looking upon it, as it is and ever will be, the chief Support of Navigation, Trade, Wealth, Strength, Reputation and Glory of the Engliſh Nation.

Gentlemen, our Concern, as our Trade is, ought in reaſon to be rather greater than that of our Forefathers: we want no manner of Inducements, no Motives to ſtir us up, whether we conſider our Intereſt or Honour. We have not only the ſacred Word, but alſo the glorious Acts of the beſt of Kings, which ſufficiently manifeſt to us, that the Good and Safety of the Engliſh Nation is the greateſt Care of his Life. Let every Man therefore who pretends to any thing of a true Engliſh Spirit, readily and chearfully follow ſo good, ſo great, ſo excellent an Example, by aſſiſting and contributing to the utmoſt of his Power and Capacity at all times toward the carrying on his noble and generous Deſigns for the common Good; and particularly at this time, by doing all he can, to the end that by the Adminiſtration of equal Juſtice, the Diſcipline of the Seas, on which the Good and Safety of the Engliſh Nation, and theſe Parts of America more eſpecially, entirely depends, may be ſupported and maintained.

The Civil Law terms the Pirates Beaſts of Prey, with whom no Communication ought to be kept; neither are Oaths or Promiſes made to them binding. And by the Law-Marine the Captors may execute ſuch Beaſts of Prey immediately, without any Solemnity of Condemnation, they not deſerving any Benefit of the Law.

I believe, Gentlemen, that no greater Motives can be urged to ſpur you on in your Duty, than to deſire you to reflect and conſider how long our Coaſts have been infeſted with Pirates (for the name of Men they do not deſerve) and how many Veſſels they have taken and pillag'd belonging to this Place, as well as multitudes of others belonging to divers parts of his Majeſty's Dominions; and how many poor Men in whoſe Blood they have imbru'd their Hands with the greateſt Inhumanity imaginable, and how many poor Widows and Orphans they have made, and how many Families they have ruin'd, and how long they have gone on in their abominable Wickedneſs: Nay, do but conſider how thoſe very Pirates lately inſulted this Government, when they ſent for Medicines, threatning to deſtroy our Veſſels and Men in caſe of refuſal; nay, ſince theſe have accepted of Certificates from the Government of North Carolina, like Dogs to their Vomits they have returned to their old deteſtable way of living, and ſince taken off theſe Coaſts thirteen Veſſels belonging to Britiſh Subjects.

I believe you can't forget how long this Town has laboured under the Fatigue of watching them, and what Diſturbances were lately made with a deſign to releaſe them, and what Arts and Practices have been lately made uſe of and effected for the Eſcape of Bonnet their Ringleader; the Conſideration of which ſhews how neceſſary it is that the Law be ſpeedily executed on them to the terror of others, and for the Security of our own Lives, which we were apparently in danger of loſing in the late Diſturbance, when under a Notion of the Honour of Carolina, they threaten'd to ſet the Town on fire about our Ears.

We ſhall now call our Witneſſes, who will relate to you what enormous and horrid Crimes the Priſoners at the Bar have committed in the Proſecution of the Fact laid in the Indictment.

Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell the Boatſwain, who appear'd and was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Ig. Pell. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account what Veſſels were taken after you came from North Carolina.

Ig. Pell. I ſhall begin before that time. We came from the Bay of Honduras, and from thence to Providence, after which we took ſeveral Veſſels, and then we came and lay off this Bar, where we took five Veſſels.

Judge Trott. Did all the Priſoners come from the Bay of Honduras?

Ig. Pell. All except Robert Tucker, he came out of a Sloop belonging to Bermuda; after that we took a Brigantine, out of which we took fourteen Negroes. After we had diſcharged the Brigantine, we ſet ſail and went to Topſail-Inlet at North Carolina, where the Ship was run aſhore and loſt, which Thatch cauſed to be done. After we had been there ſome time, Capt. Thatch came aboard, and demanded all our Arms, and took our beſt Hands, and all our Proviſion, and all that we had, and left us.

Attor. Gen. Were all theſe Men ſent aboard of Major Bonnet immediately, or no?

Ig. Pell. No, Sir, they were put aſhore upon an Iſland.

J. Trott. How came they on board the Revenge?

Ig. Pell. The Boat was ſent off to fetch them aboard.

Priſ. Major Bonnet came with the Boat, and told us, as we were on a Marroon Iſland, that he was going to St. Thomas's to get a Commiſſion from the Emperor to go againſt the Spaniards a Privateering, and we might go with him or continue there: ſo we having nothing left, was willing to go with him.

Attor. Gen. You ſay all were on ſhore, and all might have gone up into the Country; pray what Conſtraints were any of you under?

Ig. Pell. Sir, none; when we left Topſail-Inlet, it was with a Deſign to go to St. Thomas's for the Emperor's Commiſſion to go againſt the Spaniards; but the firſt Veſſel we ſaw we gave Chace to, and came up with her.

Mr. Hepworth. What did you take out of that Veſſel?

Ig. Pell. We took ſome Proviſions out of her. After we had diſcharged her, we ſaw another, which we chaced and took.

Attor. Gen. Were all theſe Men aboard and in Arms at the ſame time?

Ig. Pell. Yes, Sir, all were in Arms: So after we had taken ſome Proviſions out of her, then we diſcharged her. Next Day we ſaw two Sloops bound to Bermuda which we took. The next Day we gave Chace to another, and about Seven or Eight of the Clock we came up with them.

J. Trott. I ſuppoſe you were always ready for an Engagement; ſo that they had their Arms always in Order.

Ig. Pell. I know nothing to the contrary.

J. Trott. Was Tucker there in particular.

Ig. Pell. He was, to be ſure.

J. Trott. Go on.

Ig. Pell. Then we gave Chace to a Ship bound and we came up with her, in which were ſome Negroes. We left three Negroes on board, and two White Men, and ſent three Hands from the Revenge: But we ſeeing two Sloops more we ſtood after them, and the other turn'd Tail and we never ſaw them more: So we came up with the Sloop, out of which we took thirty Barrels of Beef, and ſome Butter, and other Proviſion.

Mr. Hepworth. What did you return in the room of theſe Goods?

Ig. Pell. Some Moloſſes that we had on board Major Bonnet's Sloop, after we had diſcharged theſe Sloops. Next Day we took a Ship and a Scooner, which Major Bonnet took with him.

Mr. Hepworth. Did you take no Plunder out of thoſe?

Ig. Pell. The chief was Proviſions. Then we ſailed in company; and the next Day we came to the Capes of Virginia, where we met with two Veſſels bound for Glaſcow in Scotland, out of which we took Proviſions and ſome Tobacco. And after we had diſcharged them we ſailed for Cape James; and after we had been at Anchor ſome time, we ſaw a Sloop which was Captain Manwareing: We let down our Dory and ſent ſome Hands on board; and in a little time after they came on board the Revenge with Captain Manwareing.

Attorn. Gen. Were all the Priſoners on board Manwareing's Sloop; or had they all their Arms ready when Manwareing was taken?

Ig. Pell. I cannot ſay that they were all on board; but they had all their Arms ready.

J. Trott. Did they all appear forward and active? Did none of them ſhow themſelves diſſatisfied or unwilling to act at that time?

Ig. Pell. No, I don't know but one was as forward and as willing to act as the other; all of them had their Arms ready.

J. Trott. Well, how did you proceed after Captain Manwareing was taken?

Ig. Pell. Next Day we haled the Scooner a long-ſide of Captain Manwareing's Sloop, and hoiſted out ſeveral Hogſheads of Moloſſes, and put on board the Scooner.

Mr. Hepworth. What became of the Scooner afterwards?

Ig. Pell. After we put Reeves's Wife on board, and Captain Reed's Son, we ſent them on ſhore.

Attorn. Gen. How long was Captain Manwareing a Priſoner?

Ig. Pell. About ten Weeks.

Attorn. Gen. Was not there more Goods taken out of Manwareing's Sloop? What became of them? Did you not ſhare them?

Ig. Pell. Yes, we ſhared a little before we came to Cape Fear.

Attorn. Gen. Did all the Priſoners at the Bar receive their Shares?

Ig. Pell. Yes, Sir; I know nothing to the contrary.

J. Trott. They did not refuſe their Shares none of them, did they?

Ig. Pell. No.

Clerk. Have any of you any Queſtions to aſk the King's Evidence? Robert Tucker have you any?

Priſoner. No, Sir.

Clerk. Edward Robinſon, have you?

Priſoner. No, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. May it pleaſe your Honours, we will proceed to call another Evidence.

Clerk. Call Captain Thomas Read; who appeared and was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Captain Read, pleaſe to look upon the Priſoners at the Bar, if you know them.

Capt. Read. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give an Account to the Court how you was taken, and alſo of the taking of Capt. Manwareing.

Capt. Read. The Sloop Revenge was at an Anchor, and the Scooner lay a long-ſide of her. I was then a Priſoner on board of the Sloop Revenge. In the Evening we ſaw a Sloop coming into the Bay, and Major Bonnet ſent off five Hands with the Dory; and about an Hour after they came on board the Revenge and brought Capt. Manwareing. After they brought him on board, Major Bonnet demanded his Papers, and he gave them to him. He aſked him from whence he came? He anſwered from Antegoa, and bound for Boſton. He aſked him what he had on board? He told him: But it being Night, he ſaid but little more to him. Next Morning they brought the Sloop and haled along-ſide the Scooner; and I ſaw them hoiſt out ſeveral Hogſheads out of the Sloop and put on board the Scooner. And I heard Major Bonnet ſay the next Day, that there were twenty one Hoſheads; and that he had ordered Pitch and Tar to be put on board the Sloop, and in the Evening they took the Foreſail and Mainſail of the Scooner, and ſailed for Cape Fear.

J. Trott. You look upon all thoſe Men as belonging to Major Bonnet, and they were all active in the taking of Manwareing?

Capt. Read. I did not ſee but one acted as the other did.

J. Trott. You did not look upon them to be Priſoners, like you and your Men?

Capt. Read. No, Sir.

J. Trott. Do you know any thing of their ſharing? Did they all take their Shares?

Capt. Read. I know nothing of that; for we were all in the Round-Houſe, and were not admitted among them at that time.

Mr. Dean. Did you ſee them have their Shares each of them?

Capt. Read. I will not ſay I ſaw them have every Man his particular Share; but they were all together when they did ſhare.

Clerk. Would any of you aſk the King's Evidence any Queſtion?

Priſoners. We deſire nothing but that he would ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. Hepworth. May it pleaſe your Honours, we ſhall proceed to call another Evidence, which is Capt. Peter Manwareing.

Clerk. Call Capt. Peter Manwareing. Who appeared and was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Captain Manwareing, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of your being taken by them.

Capt. Manwareing. When they came on board us we were at an Anchor. About Eight or Nine of the Clock in the Evening we ſaw the Canoo coming: I ordered my Man to hale them. He aſked from whence they came, and what Sloops they were? They anſwered, Capt. Thomas Richards from St. Thomas's, and Capt. Read from Philadelphia. So we were glad to hear it; ſo hoped all was well. But as ſoon as they came up the Shrowds they clapp'd their Hands to their Cutlaſhes. Then I ſaw we were taken: And I ſaid, Gentlemen, I hope as you are Engliſhmen you'll be merciful, for you ſee we have nothing to defend our ſelves. They told us they would if we were Civil. So I was ordered on board the Revenge with two of their Men. So when I came on board, Major Bonnet deſired me to come under the Auning. He demanded my Papers. I gave them to him. So he told me I muſt lie as well as I could. Next Day Morning Robert Tucker came to me, and aſked me what I had on board? and told me if I did not tell the Truth, it ſhould be the worſe for me. I told him I had ſome Moloſſes, Sugar, and Rum. Then he aſked me concerning my Paſſengers, what Money they had. I told him I never examined Paſſengers what Money they had. So then Major Bonnet ordered them to come and lie alongſide the Scooner; but what was done till then on board my Sloop I cannot tell. But then they took out the Moloſſes and the Rum and put on board the Scooner.

of

Attorn. Gen. How did they behave themſelves with reſpect to yourſelf afterwards?

Capt. Manwareing. They were civil to me, very civil: But they were all very briſk and merry, and had all Things plentiful, and were a making Punch and drinking.

Clerk. Would any of you the Priſoners aſk the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

They aſk no Queſtions.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe your Honours, we will proceed to call another Evidence.

Clerk. Call James Killing, Capt. Manwareing's Mate. Who appeared, and was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

James Killing. Yes, Sir, I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of the taking Captain Manwareing's Sloop.

James Killing. The thirty firſt of July between Nine and Ten of the Clock, there running a ſtrong Tide of Ebb, we came to an Anchor about fourteen fathom of Water near Cape James. In about half an Hour's time I perceived ſomething like a Canoo: So they came nearer. I ſaid here's a Canoo a coming; I wiſh they be Friends. I haled them; and aſked from whence they came? They ſaid Capt. Thomas Richards from St. Thomas's, and Capt. Thomas Read from Penſylvania. They aſked me from whence we came? I told them from Antegoa. They ſaid we were welcome. I ſaid they were welcome, as far as I knew. So I ordered the Men to hand down a Rope to them. So ſoon as they came on board they clapp'd their Hands to their Cutlaſhes; and I ſaid we are taken. So they curs'd and ſwore for a Light. I ordered our People to get a Light as ſoon as poſſible. So they ordered our Captain immediately to go on board the Revenge; and accordingly was ſent with two of their own Hands; and I ſaw him no more that Night. So when they came into the Cabin, the firſt thing they begun with was the Pine-Apples, which they cut down with their Cutlaſhes. They aſked me if I would not come and eat along with them? I told them I had but little Stomach to eat. They aſked me why I looked ſo melancholy? I told them I looked as well as I could. They aſked me what Liquor I had on board? I told them ſome Rum and Sugar. So they made Bowls of Bunch, and went to drinking of the Pretender's Health, and hoped to ſee him King of the Engliſh Nation: Then ſung a Song or two. Next Morning they ordered more Hands on board the Sloop, and ſo came and lay long-ſide the Scooner; after that they hoiſted out ſeveral Hogſheads of Moloſſes, and ſeveral Hogſheads of Rum, and put on board the Scooner, and took ſeveral Barrels of Pitch and Tar and put on board the Sloop; and I happened to go down into the Cabin, and Robert Tucker came to me, and told me I had no buſineſs there, but was better go forward and work among the reſt of the Men. So I went forward, and aſked who that was? They told me that was their Father. In the after-part of the Day two of Bonnet's Men were ordered to the Maſt to be whipt, and I was threaten'd if I did not confeſs all I knew. Then Robert Tucker came to me and told me I muſt go along with them. I told him I was not fit for their Turn, neither were my Inclinations that way. After that Major Bonnet himſelf came to me, and told me I muſt either go on a Marroon Shore, or go along with them, for he deſign'd to take the Sloop along with him. That Evening between Eight and Nine we were ordered to ſet ſail, but whither I knew not. So we ſailed out that Night, and I being weary with the Fatigue, went to ſleep; and whether it was with a Deſign or not I cannot tell, but we fell to Leeward of the Revenge; and in the Morning Major Bonnet took the Speaking Trumpet and told us, if we did not keep cloſer he would fire in upon us and ſink us. So then we proceeded on our Voyage till we came to Cape Fear.

J. Trott. Have you done with your Evidence?

J. Killing. Yes.

Clerk. Would any of you Priſoners aſk the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions aſked by the Priſoners.

J. Trott. You the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand charged with Felony and Piracy committed on a certain Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing. The Evidences have proved it home upon you; the Boatſwain tells what old Offenders you were, and that you were with Thatch off this Bar, and that you were at the taking ſeveral Veſſels after you left Topſail-Inlet; and all the Evidences prove the ſame; ſo that it appears all of you took up with this wicked Courſe of Life out of Choice: Now what Evidences have you to come in on your behalf? or what have you to ſay in your Defence? Now is your time to ſpeak what you have to ſay.

Clerk. Robert Tucker, what have you to ſay?

Robert Tucker. After Capt. Thatch had taken what we had and left us, Major Bonnet came and told us that he was going to St. Thomas's for the Emperor's Commiſſion, if there was any to be had.

J. Trott. Pray, if you were bound to St. Thomas's, what did you do at the Cape of Virginia? What buſineſs had you there?

Robert Tucker. We had but little Proviſion on board.

J. Trott. So you went and met with ſome by the way.

Clerk.

Clerk. Edward Robinſon, what have you to ſay?

Edward Robinſon. When Capt. Thatch left us it was on a Marroon Iſland, and Major Bonnet came and told me he was going to St. Thomas's, and we might go with him.

J. Trott. Was not you one of them that was off this Bar with Thatch?

Edw. Robinſon. Yes.

J. Trott. Why had you not come on ſhore then?

Edw. Robinſon. I would have come on ſhore but Capt. Thatch would not give me leave. I was with Mr. Wragg, and told him I would go on ſhore if I had liberty.

J. Trott. Was you one of the five that came up to Town?

Edw. Robinſon. No.

Clerk. Neal Paterſon, what have you to ſay in Defence of your ſelf?

N. Paterſon. Thatch came on board and carried away fourteen of our beſt Hands, and marrooned twenty five of us on an Iſland; and Major Bonnet came and told us he was minded to go to St. Thomas's, and if there were any Commiſſions from the Emperor, to get one, and go a privateering againſt the Spaniards; ſo I was willing to go with him, and when I was on board, he forced me to do what he pleaſed, for it was againſt my Will.

J. Trott. Did not Thatch carry away your Money and what you had beſides of Goods?

N. Paterſon. Yes.

Attorn. Gen. Was you not all aſhore when you received the Act of Grace?

N. Patterſon. Yes, Sir.

Attorn. Gen. Why had you not continued aſhore? Why did you join with Bonnet? Or who forc'd you to it?

N. Paterſon. But, Sir, it was in a ſtrange Land, and I had no Money, nor nothing left, and I was willing to do ſomething to live; but it was againſt my Will to go a pirating.

Judge Trott. If you were forced and took only Proviſions, pray how did you come to ſhare ſo much Money and Goods afterwards? You ſay Thatch carried away what you had before.

N. Paterſon. I could not hinder the reſt from doing what they pleaſed; but it was contrary to my Inclination.

Cl. William Scot, what have you to ſay?

W. Scot. When we left Topſail-Inlet, it was to go to St. Thomas's; and I asked whether there was Proviſions on board? They told me there was enough, which was not above ten or eleven Barrels.

Judge Trott. So you took it where you could find it, becauſe you had it not of your own: But pray what did you with ſo much Moloſſes, which was neither fit to eat or drink?

W. Scot. What I did, was to keep me from periſhing; but it was not in my Power to hinder the reſt.

Cl. Job Bayley, what have you to ſay?

Job Bayley. When Capt. Thomas or Major Bonnet was ready to ſail, I went aboard, and I asked whether they had Proviſions on board? They told me they had: But in a few Days it was all ſpent, and then I was forced to do as the reſt did.

Judge Trott. But why did you not do as Capt. Manwareing and his Men did? You ſee they did not act as you did.

Job Bayley. Capt. Manwareing was not taken then.

Judge Trott. But how came you to join with them afterwards? And pray what made you fight againſt Col. Rhett, when he came out with lawful Authority to you?

Job Bayley. We thought it had been a Pirate.

Judge Trott. And ſo one Pirate might fight with another. But how could you think it was a Pirate, when he had King George's Colours?

Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidences have plainly prov'd, that all the Priſoners at the Bar were at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, that they all conſented to, and all were active in it, and all received their Shares; ſo that I think it hath been plainly prov'd home upon them.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar all ſtand indicted for Felony and Piracy committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing, as it is expreſſed in the Indictment. The Boatſwain tells us what old Offenders they were before they went to Topſail-Inlet; that they were at the taking of no leſs than thirteen Veſſels; and that in particular they were at the taking of Capt. Manwareing. Then comes Capt. Read, and he was taken before Capt. Manwareing, and was then a Priſoner on board the Pirate Sloop, and he tells you, they all appeared in Arms, and that he did not look upon them as Priſoners, or under Conſtraint, but of the ſame Company; and he tells you he ſaw them take Capt. Manwareing, and that he ſaw them take out the Goods, as is mentioned in the Indictment, out of Manwareing's Sloop. Then comes Capt. Manwareing himſelf, and he ſays all the Goods mentioned in the Indictment were taken out, and that they ſhared theſe Goods amongſt themſelves. Then comes Killing the Mate, and he proves the ſame, and particularly Tucker, he was ſo forward, that he told them, if they did not tell the Truth, it ſhould be the worſe for them: And Paterſon was ſo active, that he was for having them brought to the Gun to make them confeſs; and that all the reſt had their Arms ready, and all had their Shares: So that I think the Evidences have fully proved the Indictment upon them, and that it is very plain and home againſt them. They plead indeed, that they were forced and conſtrained to go, but give no Proof of it; and therefore what Conſtraint any of them appears to be under, I ſhall leave to your Conſiderations: Tho' I think the Evidence is very plain and clear, yet I ſhall not pretend to direct your Judgments. I ſhall only remark to you what the Wiſe Man ſaith, that he that juſtifieth the Wicked, as well as he that condemneth the Juſt, even both are an Abomination to the Lord.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

And about two Hours after the Jury returned, and gave in their Verdict.

Cl. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names Timothy Bellamy.

Timothy Bellamy. Here, &c.

Cl. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. Who ſhall ſay for you.

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. Robert Tucker, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Piracy whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Cl

Cl. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that Robert Tucker is guilty of the Piracy whereof he ſtands indicted, and that he had no Goods or Chattels, &c.

Jury. Yes.

And the Jury alſo found Edward Robinſon, Neal Paterſon, William Scot, and Job Bayley, guilty.

Cl. Marſhal, look to your Priſoners.

THEN the Court proceeded to the Trial of John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morriſon, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, and John Levit, for the aforeſaid Fact, in piratically taking the ſaid Sloop Francis, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander.

Cl. Set John William Smith, Thomas Carman, &c. to the Bar.

Then the Petit Jury were called over.

Clerk. You the Priſoners at the Bar: Theſe good Men that were called laſt, and have here appeared, are thoſe that ſhall paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your Lives and your Deaths; therefore if you or any of you will challenge them or any of them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn, you may, and you ſhall be heard.

Then the Jury were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth.

Samuel Prioleau, Foreman.	Henry Gennelack.
John Hodgson.	John Jeffers.
Garrard Vanvilſen.	Charles Marche.
Robert Harvey.	John Grimbal.
Joſhua Marriner.	Benjamin Griffin.
Thomas Fairchild.	Joſeph Maſſey.

Then the uſual Proclamation for Information was made. And the Priſoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Clerk charged the Jury with them thus.

Cl. You Gentlemen of the Jury that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Charge.

Then the Indictment was read as followeth.

THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do upon their Oaths preſent, That Daniel Harriot, late of Jamaica, Mariner; John William Smith, late of Charles-Town, Mariner; Thomas Carman, late of Maidſtone in Kent, Mariner; John Thomas, late of Jamaica, Mariner; William Morriſon, late of Jamaica, Mariner; William Livers aliàs Evis, late of Dublin, Mariner; Samuel Booth, late of Charles-Town, Mariner; John Levit, late of North Carolina, Mariner; and William Hewet, late of Jamaica, Mariner; the Second Day of Auguſt, &c. as before.

Cl. Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, &c. as before.

The Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners were Ignatius Pell, the Boatſwain, Capt. Thomas Read, Capt. Peter Manwareing, and Mr. James Killing his Mate, who all gave the ſame Evidence againſt theſe as againſt the others that were tried before.

Cl. Will any of you Priſoners ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions asked by the Priſoners.

Judge Trott. You the Priſoners at the Bar, you have heard how fully the Witneſſes have charged the Facts upon you: Now what you have to ſay in your Defence, I ſhall be ready to hear you.

Cl. John William Smith, if you have any thing to ſay, you have liberty to ſpeak.

John William Smith. When we left Topſail-Inlet, I knew nothing but that we were going to St. Thomas's; but after we were out, they hoiſted the bloody Flag: But I did before believe we were going to St. Thomas's.

Att. Gen. Did you bear Arms on board of Major Bonnet?

Smith. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Was you at the taking all thoſe Veſſels.

Smith. Yes, Sir; but it was againſt my Will.

Cl. John Carman, what have you to ſay?

Carman. As for what I did on board Captain Thatch, I was forced; but when I came to North Carolina, I would not have went on board, but Major Bonnet ſhewed me the Act of Grace; and when I enter'd myſelf on board, it was to get my Bread, in hopes to have went where I might have had Buſineſs; for when we left Topſail-Inlet, I had not ſigned the Articles.

Ign. Pell. But you gave the Captain your Word that you would.

Carman. When I was left in the Sloop, I endeavour'd to make my Eſcape with the Sloop.

Judge Trott. So, I find you wanted a Veſſel of your own.

Carman. No, but to have got one from them: But I could not.

Att. Gen. This confirms what the King's Evidence proves againſt them.

Cl. John Thomas, what have you to ſay?

Thomas. We had nothing left us, and we were on a Marroon Iſland, and Major Bonnet he came and told me I might go with him; but it was againſt my will to bear Arms.

J. Trott. Was not you off this Bar?

Thomas. Yes, but I was forced to it.

Mr. Hepworth. And was you not at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop?

Thomas. Yes.

Mr. Hepworth. And had you not your Share?

Thomas. Yes, Sir.

J. Trott. And yet you ſay you was not willing to go a pirating.

Clerk. William Morriſon, what have you to ſay?

Morriſon. Capt. Thatch had run the Sloop aſhore, and Major Bonnet went up to the Governor for the Act of Grace; and when he return'd he told me I might go to St. Thomas's; and after that he ſaid Proviſions would fall ſhort, and he ſhould go on the Coaſt of Virginia to ſee for ſome.

J. Trott. But was that your manner of going for a Commiſſion, to take thirteen Veſſels by the way? But was you not at the taking Manwareing's Sloop? And had you not your Share?

Cl. William Livers aliàs Evis, what have you to ſay?

Evis. After we came to North Carolina, and Capt. Thatch had loſt the Ship, Major Bonnet told me he would give me my Paſſage to St. Thomas's, and he would endeavour to get a Ship there, and I might go with him a privateering: but when we came to Sea, I found how it was, and I would not conſent for a long time; but at laſt they forced me to it.

J. Trott. But you had your Share as well as the reſt.

Evis. They forced me to do what I did.

Clerk. Samuel Booth, what have you to ſay?

Booth. As we came from Topſail-Inlet we met with the Sloop Revenge; they boarded us and took us, and I was a Priſoner three Weeks before I conſented; and then they order'd me to the Gun before I would conſent.

J. Trott. But you had your Share of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop.

Booth. But my Inclinations was not that way.

Clerk. William Hewet, what have you to ſay?

Hewet. I deſign'd to go to St. Thomas's with Major Bonnet, for he told me he was bound thither; ſo I was willing to go with him.

Clerk. John Levit, what have you to ſay?

He makes no Defence.

Attorn. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, the Boatſwain and all the Evidences prove the Indictment upon each of the Priſoners, that they were all at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, and all had their Shares.

J. Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, I think I need ſay but little on this matter: they all confeſs the Fact of which they ſtand indicted. Some of them were old Offenders, and all of them were proved to be at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, and all took their Shares: ſo that I think the Fact is very fully and clearly proved upon them. But I ſhall leave that to your Conſiderations, and I pray God direct you to give a true Verdict.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had conſider'd of their Verdict, return'd and found John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morriſon, William Livers alias Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, and John Levit, guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd to Friday Morning.

Friday, October the 31ſt, 1718.

THE Court proceeded to arraign William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, George Dunkin, Thomas Nichols, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, and Henry Virgin, upon the following Indictment, for piratically taking Capt. Manwareing.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do upon their Oaths preſent that William Eddy alias Nedy, late of Aberdeen, Mariner; Alexander Annand, late of Jamaica, Mariner; George Roſs, late of Glaſcow, Mariner; George Dunkin, late of Glaſcow, Mariner; Thomas Nichols, late of London, Mariner; John Ridge, late of London, Mariner; Matthew King, late of Jamaica, Mariner; Daniel Perry, late of Guernſey, Mariner; and Henry Virgin, Mariner, late of Briſtol; the ſecond Day of Auguſt, in the fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King George, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith, &c. as before.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded on their Trial.

And the Jury were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman, &c. as before.

The ſame Witneſſes againſt theſe, viz.

Ignatius Pell, the Boatſwain.

Capt. Thomas Read.

Capt. Peter Manwareing.

And Mr. James Killing, his Mate.

Who all gave the ſame Evidence againſt theſe Priſoners as againſt the others, excepting Thomas Nichols.

Capt. John Stevenſon, one of the Captors, being ſworn, declared, that George Roſs, the Gunner of the Pirate's Sloop, was for blowing up the ſaid Sloop, and that he acknowledg'd he was to have ſet fire to the Train, and that he would have done it.

As to Thomas Nichols:

Ignatius Pell declared, that Nichols, after he came to Sea, was very much diſcontented; but Major Bonnet ſaid he would force him to go. However, he would not join with the reſt of the Men, but always ſeparated himſelf from the Company.

Capt. Read ſaid, that Nichols behaved himſelf different from the reſt, and did not join with them.

Capt. Manwareing ſaid, that Nichols when he was aboard his Sloop ſaid, he did hope it would be over with him in a little time, for he hoped to get clear of them; and looked very melancholy, and never joined with the reſt in their Cabals when they were drinking: and when Major Bonnet ſent for him he refuſed to go, and ſaid, he would die before he would fight.

Clerk. Will any of you aſk the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

Nichols. Mr. Killing, did you never hear me ſay I would leave that Courſe of Life?

J. Trott. Did you hear him ſay ſo?

Killing. When he came on board he told me, he would give the whole World, if he had it, to be free from them; and when he was on board and Major Bonnet ſent for him, he refuſed to go on board the Revenge, till he ſent to fetch him by force, and then he told me he would not fight if he did loſe his Life for it: and he was not with them when they ſhared; and he told them he hoped he ſhould not be long with them; and he never was at their Cabals as the reſt were.

J. Trott. He ſeems to be under a Conſtraint indeed, and therefore muſt be taken into Conſideration.

Clerk. Will any of you Priſoners aſk any more Queſtions?

None aſked.

J. Trott. If any of them have any thing to ſay, they now have their liberty to ſpeak.

Clerk. William Eddy alias Nedy, what have you to ſay?

Nedy. I never was on board Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, nor had no hand in it.

J. Trott. You was one of Bonnet's Crew.

Nedy. I never acted in it.

J. Trott. That is no Excuſe: it is not ſuch or ſuch a one that goes on board only, but thoſe that ſtand ready to aſſiſt them, have as great a hand in the Fact as the other; for Men would not be taken by two or three, if they had no more help: ſo that the whole Crew are equally concern'd at ſuch a time.

Clerk. Alexander Annand, what have you to ſay?

Annand. When we were at Topſail-Inlet, Major Bonnet told me he would go and get a Clearance for the Sloop, for he deſign'd to go to St. Thomas's for a Commiſſion, and I might go with him: ſo I ſuſpected nothing till we were out at Sea, and then I could not help it.

J. Trott. But why did you not declare againſt it then, and ſo not join with them?

Annand. I was but one Man, and a Stranger, and I was afraid I ſhould have loſt my Life.

Clerk. George Roſs, what have you to ſay?

Roſs. I belonged to [illegible] Sloop, and we met with Major Bonnet and was taken by him: next Day two of the Men told me I muſt go with them. I anſwer'd them, No; I did not deſign to leave the Sloop: but they told me I muſt; and they told me if I would but conſent I ſhould have any thing. And a little after Capt. Manwareing was taken.

J. Trott. And you had your Share of Manwareing's Goods?

Roſs. Yes.

J. Trott. So, tho' you were unwilling at firſt, you was willing afterward, and alſo fought Col. Rhett when he came out againſt you.

Roſs. They told me it was Capt. Thatch; for my part I did not know who Thatch was.

J. Trott. But pray what Authority had you to fight any body?

Clerk. George Dunkin, you may ſpeak what you have to ſay.

Dunkin. After we were taken at the Capes of [illegible] Major Bonnet came to me and told me I muſt go along with them. But I told him I could not leave the Veſſel. He told me I muſt.

J. Trott. But why did you join with them afterwards in taking your Share of Manwareing's Goods? and why did you fight Col. Rhett and his Men? If you had not fought, you might have ſaved the Lives of 12 or 14 Men.

Dunkin. Major Bonnet declared, if any one refuſed to fight he would blow his Brains out.

Thomas Nichols made his Defence before.

Clerk. John Ridge, what have you to ſay?

Ridge. After we came to Topſail-Inlet, and the Ship was loſt, Major Bonnnet came and told me that he would go and accept the Act of Grace, and get a Clearing for the Sloop, and go to St. Thomas's for a Commiſſion, and he expected we would go with him: ſo when he was gone up to the Country we rigged the Sloop; ſo the Quarter-Maſter, the Boatſwain, and he agreed together; but for my part I knew nothing what their Deſign was; and ſo the firſt Veſſel we ſaw they took: but it was my Reſolution to go away by the firſt Opportunity.

Clerk. Matthew King, what have you to ſay?

King. When we were at Topſail-Inlet, Captain Thatch marrooned us on an Iſland, and left us; and Major Bonnet told us he would go to St. Thomas's; but the firſt Prize we met with we took, having but little Proviſions on board.

J. Trott. How could you think of going to St. Thomas's without Proviſions?

Attor. Gen. But the Boatſwain ſays there were Proviſions on board; ſeveral Barrels of Flower, and ſeveral Barrels of Beef and Pork.

J. Trott. What need had you then to go a pirating.

King. I did not know it till we were out.

J. Trott. Bonnet had not above five Hands, and there were of you twenty five; why would you be all commanded by them? You had no need to yield to them.

Clerk. Daniel Perry, what have you to ſay?

Perry. When Capt. Thatch left us it was on a Marroon Iſland, and Major Bonnet came and told us he had the Act of Grace, and ſo we might go with him.

J. Trott. Is that all you have to ſay? You knew Thatch and Bonnet were both Pirates, and why would you go with them again?

Clerk. Henry Virgin, what have you to ſay?

Virgin. Major Bonnet ordered about thirty Hands to be ready, and in a little time we were ordered on board; and when we were about an hundred Leagues from Land, he aſked if there were any that would go a Marrooning; and I believe there were two or three that promiſed him they would, tho' I did not.

J. Trott. But had you no Opportunity to come from them?

Virgin. If we had known any thing of the Act of Grace when we were off this Bar, we had come aſhore. I went to make my Eſcape, and leapt into the Water, and had like to have been drown'd.

J. Trott. How many Veſſels have you been at the taking and burning of do you think?

Virgin. I believe about three.

Mr. Hepwarth. He was with them at the Bay of Honduras, and all along.

Virgin. But I never gave my Conſent, for Capt. Thatch never aſked any of us.

J. Trott. Would any of the Priſoners ſay any more? if they will I am ready to hear them.

Attor. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe three, Nichols, Dunkin, and Ridge, ſeem to make ſome Defence. As for Nichols, he was with them when Manwareing was taken; and the Mate tells us, that he ſeparated himſelf from the reſt of the Cabal; and when they ſhared, he told them they might do as they pleaſed with his Share, for he hoped he ſhould not be with them long; ſo that it appears that he ſeparated himſelf from the reſt of the Company from the very firſt: theſe things therefore ought to be conſider'd. And as for Dunkin, he looked upon himſelf as a Priſoner at firſt; but the Boatſwain indeed ſays he had his Shares. And as for Ridge, he ſaid, that he reſolved to make his eſcape. For all the reſt, they ſeem to be equally guilty.

J. Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand indicted for Felony and Piracy committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing Commander, and not only did they break and board the ſaid Manwareing's Sloop, which was an Act of Piracy, but it hath been proved upon them, that they were at the taking of thirteen Veſſels after they left Top-ſail-Inlet. Indeed there are three that have ſomething to ſay in their Defence, Nichols, Ridge, and Dunkin. As for Dunkin, Pell ſays he had his Share, as the reſt had: Capt. Read looked upon him as a Priſoner, but Capt. Manwareing did not. As for Ridge, he was at North Carolina, and took up with Bonnet to go to St. Thomas's, and it is poſſible for a Man to be deceived, for Pell declares that they were bound to St. Thomas's at firſt; and Killing the Mate declared, that he told him he would free himſelf from that Courſe of Life the firſt Opportunity: ſo I ſhall leave this to your Conſideration. But for Nichols, I think it's plain that he was under Conſtraint and Force; for Pell himſelf declares that he would have nothing to do with their Shares, and he did hope that he ſhould not be long with them. Capt. Manwareing, and Mr. Killing his Mate, all confirm the ſame. And when he was ſent for to come on board Bonnet, to go out to fight Colonel Rhett, he refuſed to go; and when he was forced to go on board, he ſaid he would die before he would fight; and accordingly went into the Hole, and did not fight Col. Rhett. So that by the whole Courſe of the Evidence, I think it is very clear that he was under Conſtraint and Fear. As to the reſt, I think the Proof is full againſt them; but I ſhall leave them to your Conſideration. You know that as the Innocent muſt not be condemned, ſo the Guilty ought not to be acquitted. Remember you have the Lives of theſe Perſons in your hands; and I pray God direct you to give a true Verdict.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had conſidered of their Verdict, return'd, and found William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, and Henry Virgin, Guilty; and Thomas Nichols, Not Guilty.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign James Robbins alias Rattle, James Mullett alias Millett, Thomas Price, James Wilſon, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, upon the following Indictment, for piratically taking Capt. Manwareing.

" The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King " do upon their Oath preſent, that James Rob- " bins alias Rattle, late of London, Mariner; " James Mullett alias Millet, late of London, Ma- " riner; Thomas Price, late of Briſtol, Mariner; " James Wilſon, late of Dublin, Mariner; John " Lopez, late of Oporto, Mariner; and Zacha- " riah Long, late of the Province of Holland, " Mariner; the Second Day of Auguſt, in the " Fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord " George, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, " France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the " Faith, &c.

To which Indictment James Robbins alias Rattle, James Mullet alias Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, pleaded Not Guilty. James Wilſon pleaded Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon the Trial of thoſe that pleaded Not Guilty.

The Jurors were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth:

Samuel Proileau, Foreman.	Henry Genelac.
John Hodgſon.	John Jeffers.
Garrat Vanvelſin.	Charles Marche.
Lucas Stoutenborough.	John Grimball.
Joſhua Mariner.	Benjamin Griffin.
Thomas Fairchild.	Joſeph Maſſey.

The Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners were the above-named,

Ignatius Pell, the Boatſwain.

Capt. Thomas Read.

Capt. Peter Manwareing.

And Mr. James Killing his Mate.

Who all gave the ſame Evidence againſt theſe Priſoners, as againſt the others that were tried before.

Clerk. You, the Priſoners at the Bar, have heard what the King's Evidence have ſworn againſt you. Now is your time to make your Defence.

Clerk. James Robbins, what have you to ſay?

Robbins. I was on board the Revenge, and then I was ſent on board of Capt. Read's Sloop, and was there four Days; and then was ſent on board the Revenge again: For I was about to run away, if I had an Opportunity.

Clerk. James Mullet, what have you to ſay?

Mullet. When we left Topſail-Inlet, it was to go to St. Thomas's; ſo Major Bonnet told me: And I being on a Marroon Shore, I was willing to go with him.

Clerk. Thomas Price, what have you to ſay?

Price. Capt. Thatch left us on a Marroon Shore, and had nothing left; and Major Bonnet told me I might go with him to St. Thomas's; but I deſigned not to go a pirating.

J. Trott. Had you not your Share?

Price. I was forc'd to do as I did when I was on board.

Clerk. John Lopez, what have you to ſay?

Lopez. I was at the Bay of Honduras, and was taken by Thatch and carried to Topſail-Inlet, and there he marrooned me on an Iſland, and came with five Hands and carried all away that we had and left us. And Major Bonnet told me he would go to St. Thomas's, and I might go along with him. I told Captain Manwareing I would not go a pirating, for I did not like it.

J. Trott. Did you not ſhare a little before you came to Cape Fear?

Lopez. Yes; but it was againſt my Will.

J. Trott. Capt. Manwareing, do you know any thing of this Man?

Capt. Manwareing. All as I know, he told me he had a Wife and Children; and that he did not like that Courſe of Life. That is all I can ſay of him.

Clerk. Zachariah Long, what have you to ſay?

Long. When we ſailed, I knew nothing but that it was to go to St. Thomas's, till afterwards; and then I muſt do as the reſt did.

Then the Judge ſumm'd up the Evidence.

And an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had conſider'd of their Verdict return'd, and found the above-ſaid James Mullet alias Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, Guilty; and James Robbins alias Rattle, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Saturday Morning.

Saturday, November the Firſt, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign Edward Robinſon, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayley, Neal Paterſon, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, and John Thomas, upon the following Indictment.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.
Then the Court proceeded upon their Trial.

The Petit-Jury were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman.	Thomas Chambers.
George Ducket.	Daniel Townſhend.
John Rivers.	John Lee.
William Sheriff.	Thomas Bee.
Benjamin Dennis.	John Barton.
Hugh Durfey.	Richard Fairchild.

Then the uſual Proclamation for Information was made. And the Priſoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Clerk charged the Jury with them thus.

Cl. You the Gentlemen of the Jury that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Charge.

Then the Indictment was read, as before.

Clerk. Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, &c. as before.

Then the Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners were called.

Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell, the Boatſwain.

Who appeared, and was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of the taking Capt. Thomas Read, and plundering of his Sloop.

Ign. Pell. Capt. Read was in Company with two Veſſels more, which we took, but did not ſhare, till we came to Cape Fear.

Mr. Hepworth. Were the Goods mentioned in the Indictment taken out?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Did all the Priſoners at the Bar receive their Shares?

Ign. Pell. Yes.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions? Edward Robinſon, will you aſk any Queſtions?

Edw. Robinſon. Boatſwain, do you not remember when we left Topſail-Inlet, it was with a Deſign to go to St. Thomas's?

Ign. Pell. I do believe you might think we were going to St. Thomas's; but the firſt Veſſel we ſaw, we conſented to take, and you had your Share as well as the reſt.

Clerk. Robert Tucker, will you ask any Queſtions?

Tucker. No.

Mr. Hepworth. May it pleaſe your Honours, we will proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of the ſharing of Capt. Read's Goods at Cape Fear.

Capt. Manwareing. As for taking of Captain Read, I can ſay nothing, becauſe he was taken by them before I was taken; but when we came to Cape Fear, they ſhared what they had.

Judge Trott. And had all the Priſoners at the Bar their Shares?

Capt. Manwareing. I did not ſee any of them refuſe; and they were amongſt the reſt when they did ſhare.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the Evidence any Queſtions?

The Priſoners ask no Queſtions.

Mr. Hep-

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. Capt. Thomas Read, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Capt. Read. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of your being taken and plundered by them.

Capt. Read. After we were taken, Robert Tucker with ſome others came on board; and then we ſailed to Cape Inlopen, where Capt. Manwareing was taken, and after that to Cape Fear.

Mr. Hepworth. Were thoſe Goods taken out as are mentioned in the Indictment?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Did all the Priſoners receive their Shares?

Capt. Read. Yes, I did not ſee but what they did: They were all together when they ſhared.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the Evidence any Queſtions?

Edward Robinſon. Capt. Read, when did you ſee me on board your Sloop?

Capt. Read. I cannot ſay I ſaw you on board; but you were with them when they ſhared.

Judge Trott. If you were not on board the Sloop, you was one of the Crew; and, as I told you before, it's not they only are Pirates that go on board of a Veſſel, but they that ſtand ready to aſſiſt are as much Pirates as the other, and are as much concerned in the Fact.

Clerk. Will any of you ask any Queſtions?

Priſoners. No.

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. James Killing, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Killing. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of what you know of the taking of Capt. Read.

Killing. I can ſay but little to the Matter till we came to Cape Fear, and there they ſhared the Goods.

Judge Trott. Did you ſee the Goods taken out?

Killing. I cannot ſay I ſaw them all taken out; but I ſaw them a ſharing of them together.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

Francis Griffin, Capt. Read's Mate; who was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Griffin. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give an Account of the taking the Sloop you belong'd to.

Griffin. After we were taken, Tucker and ſome more came on board, and Tucker fell to beating and cutting the People with his Cutlaſh, and cut one Man's Arm. So then we went to Cape James alias Cape Inlopen, where Captain Manwaring was taken, and thence we ſailed for Cape Fear.

Mr. Hepworth. Were all theſe Goods mentioned in the Indictment taken out? (That Part of the Indictment read.)

Griffin. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Did all the Priſoners take their Shares?

Griffin. I know nothing to the contrary.

Clerk. Will any of you aſk the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions aſked.

Judge Trott. You the Priſoners at the Bar, what have you to ſay in your Defences? I am now ready to hear you.

Clerk. Edward Robinſon, what have you to ſay.

Robinſon. I have nothing to ſay, more than what I have ſaid.

Clerk. Robert Tucker, what have you to ſay?

Tucker. I knew nothing but we were going to St. Thomas's, when I engaged with Major Bonnet.

Judge Trott. You was his Quarter-Maſter; and you was the Perſon that cut the Man with the Cutlaſh, and abuſed the People.

Clerk. William Scot, what have you to ſay?

Scot. I was never on board Capt. Read.

Judge Trott. You was never on board! What of that? You was one of the Crew, and conſented to it, and had your Share.

Clerk. Job Bayley and Neal Paterſon, what have you to ſay?

Priſoners. We have nothing more to ſay.

Clerk. John William Smith, what have you to ſay?

Smith. It was never my Deſign to go a pirating; and when I was at Sea, I could not help what others did.

Judge Trott. If it was not your Deſign at firſt, you afterwards conſented to it.

Clerk. Thomas Carman and John Thomas, what have either of you to ſay?

Priſoners. We have no more to ſay, than what we have ſaid.

Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, I think the Evidence have plainly proved the Priſoners at the Bar guilty of the Fact charged upon them in the Indictment; ſo that they were all equally guilty.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand indicted for Felony and Piracy, committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Thomas Read: All the Evidences fully prove the Fact upon them, that they were all equally guilty, and all ſhared in the Goods and Plunder; but Tucker abuſed the People, and cut one Man with his Cutlaſh, ſo that he added Barbarity to his other Crimes. They all pretend they were under Force and Conſtraint; but it is but a Suggeſtion of their own, without the leaſt Proof: But there is full Proof of their conſenting. But I ſhall leave them to your Conſideration. But the Caſe is ſo clear, that I believe you will not be long before you return with your Verdict.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had conſidered of their Verdict, return'd, and found the aboveſaid Edward Robinſon, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayley, Neal Paterſon, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, and John Thomas, Guilty.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign William Morriſon, William Livers alias Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, George Dunkin, and Thomas Nichols, upon the following Indictment, for taking Capt. Read.

" The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the " King do upon their Oath preſent, That William " Morriſon, late of Jamaica, Mariner, &c. (as " before.)

Who all pleaded Not Guilty, excepting John Levit, who pleaded Guilty.

Then

Then the Court proceeded upon the Trial of thoſe that had pleaded Not Guilty.

And the Jury were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth:

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman, &c. (as before.)

Ign. Pell, one of the Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner, was called and ſworn. He, and the reſt of the Witneſſes in general, gave the ſame Evidence againſt theſe Priſoners, as againſt the former, only they were more particularly examined as to Thomas Nichols, and George Dunkin.

Mr. Hepworth. Ign. Pell, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir, I know them all very well.

Att. Gen. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of the taking and plundering Capt. Read; and begin with Nichols.

Ign. Pell. Thomas Nichols was very much diſſatisfied on board, and did not join with the reſt of the Company, and would not take the Share, and ſaid he hoped he ſhould not continue long with them.

Foreman. Do you know any thing of Dunkin? How did he behave himſelf?

Ign. Pell. I did not ſee but he was as active as any of the reſt, and took his Share as the reſt did at Cape Fear.

Judge Trott. And had all the Priſoners their Shares?

Ign. Pell. Yes, excepting Nichols.

Judge Trott. Were the Goods mentioned in the Indictment taken out of Read's Sloop?

Ign. Pell. Yes.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions asked by the Priſoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. Capt. Manwareing, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of their ſharing Capt. Read's Goods at Cape Fear; and particularly how Nichols behaved himſelf.

Capt. Manwareing. When Nichols was on board my Sloop, he ſaid ſeveral Times, he would get clear of them the firſt Opportunity, and he hoped it would not be long firſt; and when Major Bonnet ſent for all Hands on board the Revenge, he refuſed to go, till he ſent word, if he would not come, he wou'd make him; and when he went, he ſaid, before he wou'd fight, he wou'd die: And he always kept himſelf from the Company, and from their Cabals.

Judge Trott. Do you know any thing of Dunkin?

Capt. Manwareing. What I can ſay is, There was ſome brown Bread upon Deck, and he ſaid, it was fit for nothing but Negroes to eat; and I told him, I wiſhed he might never want it. So they went, and brought ſome whiter out of the Hole.

Mr. Hepworth. How did he behave himſelf?

Capt. Manwareing. I ſaw nothing but he was as the reſt were.

Mr. Hepworth. Would any of you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions asked by the Priſoners.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe your Honours, we proceed to call another Evidence.

James Killing ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Killing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of what you know of their taking and plundering Capt. Read; and firſt begin with Nichols.

Killing. I remember when he was on board our Sloop, and Major Bonnet ſent for him, when he went off, he ſaid, he hoped to get clear of them, and he wou'd die before he wou'd fight.

Judge Trott. Pell, do you know whether he did fight Col. Rhett, or not?

Ign. Pell. He did not fight; and if one that Major Bonnet loved very well had not been ſhot down by his Side, he had blowed his Brains out; for he had his Piſtol ready.

Mr. Hepworth. How did Dunkin behave himſelf?

Ign. Pell. I can ſay nothing for any of the reſt, but that they were all as one, and had all their Shares.

Clerk. Would any of you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions asked by the Priſoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. Capt. Thomas Read, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Capt. Read. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of what Goods were taken from you, and how the Priſoners behaved themſelves; and firſt of Nichols.

Capt. Read. The moſt of the Time he was on board Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, I heard him ſay, he did not like that Courſe of Life; and the laſt Words I heard Major Bonnet ſay to him, was, that he would force no Man to go againſt his Will.

Judge Trott. Can you ſay any thing of Dunkin?

Capt. Read. As for Dunkin, I did not ſee but he acted as the reſt did.

Dunkin. Capt. Read, It was againſt my Will.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Read, were theſe Goods taken out of you, as are mentioned in the Indictment? (That Part of the Indictment read.) Were all theſe Goods taken out?

Capt. Read. Yes.

Clerk. Will any of you ask any Queſtions? George Dunkin, will you ask any Queſtions?

George Dunkin. Capt. Read, when did you ſee me as active as any of the reſt?

Capt. Read. Before Capt. Manwareing was taken, I thought you had been a Priſoner; but afterwards I ſaw no difference.

Judge Trott. You was one of Bonnet's Crew, one of that Company.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Francis Griffin, Capt. Read's Mate ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Griffin. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of what you know of Nichols, and the reſt of the Priſoners.

Griffin. As for Nichols, he was a Man I know nothing of, he being on board of Manwareing's Sloop.

Mr. Hepworth. What do you know of Dunkin?

Griffin. I knew nothing of him till we were come to Cape Fear; and I ſaw no difference, but he ſhared among the reſt.

Mr. Hepworth. Were thoſe Goods taken out of the Sloop, the Goods mentioned in the Indictment?

Griffin. Yes, Sir.

J. Trott. Now you the Priſoners, what you have to ſay in your Defence I ſhall be ready to hear.

Clerk. William Morriſon, what have you to ſay?

Morriſon. I have no more to ſay than I have ſaid already.

Clerk. William Livers alias Evis, what have you to ſay?

Evis. Nothing more.

Clerk. Samuel Booth.

Booth. When I went on board Major Bonnet, it was to go to St. Thomas's with him.

J. Trott. Why had you not continued at North Carolina, ſince you could not continue here?

Booth. I thought to have had better Buſineſs there.

Clerk. John Levit, William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand.

Priſoners. We were forced to go, and did not know what they would do.

Attor. Gen. But did you not know what you did when you ſhared? You knew that did not belong to you, did you not?

Clerk. George Roſs, George Dunkin, Thomas Nichols, aſked no Queſtions; only Dunkin deliver'd in a Paper, which was read in Court, and contained a Teſtimony of his former Behaviour when in Scotland.

Attor. Gen. Pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I think it appears from the Evidence, that Nichols was under Conſtraint, and forced. As for Dunkin, and the reſt, they all took their Shares at Cape Fear.

J. Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand indicted for Felony and Piracy committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Thomas Read. As for Nichols, Pell ſays that he was not joined to the Company, and ſaid, as for his Share they might do what they pleaſed, for he hoped he ſhould not be with them long: And when Major Bonnet ſent for him on board, he refuſed to fight Col. Rhett; and if another had not been killed, Major Bonnet had blown his Brains out. Capt. Manwareing ſays, he refuſed his Share, and kept himſelf from the Company and from their Cabals; and he ſaid when ſent for on board, that he would die before he would fight. And Capt. Read ſays, that Major Bonnet ſaid, that he would put him aſhore, for he would force no Man againſt his Will. And Killing ſays that he told him, that he would not fight Col. Rhett, when Major Bonnet ſent for him on board the Revenge. So that I think it plainly appears he was under Conſtraint. But for Dunkin, he ſays of himſelf indeed that he was a Priſoner, and under Conſtraint; but Pell ſays he was not, and that he took his Shares, and was as the reſt were. And Capt. Manwareing ſays, that he complain'd of the Bread, that it was fit for none but Negroes: ſo I ſhall leave you to conſider that. As for the reſt, they have but little to ſay in their Defence, and I think the Evidence have proved the Fact fully upon them. But I ſhall leave this to your Conſideration; and remember you have the Lives of theſe Perſons in your hands.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury:

Who after they had conſider'd of their Verdict, returned, and found the aboveſaid William Morriſon, William Livers alias Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewit, William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, and George Dunkin, Guilty, and Thomas Nichols, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Monday Morning.

Monday, November the 3d, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins alias Rattle, James Mullet alias Millet, Thomas Price, James Wilſon, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, upon the following Indictment for taking Capt. Read.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do, upon their Oaths, preſent, that John Ridge, late of London, Mariner, &c. as before.

To which Indictment John Ridge, Matthew King, Henry Virgin, James Robbins alias Rattle, James Mullet alias Millett, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, pleaded Not Guilty: and Daniel Perry and James Wilſon pleaded Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon the Trial of thoſe that had pleaded Not Guilty.

And the Jury were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth:

Samuel Prioleau, Foreman.	Henry Genelac.
John Hodgſon.	Benjamin Griffin.
Garrat Vanvelſin.	Charles Marche.
Lucas Stoutenburgh.	John Grimball.
Thomas Fairchild.	William Harvey.

The Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners were the above-named.

Ignatius Pell.
Capt. Peter Manwareing.
Capt. Thomas Read.
James Killing. And Francis Griffin.

Who gave the ſame Evidence againſt theſe Priſoners as thoſe tried before.

And fully prov'd upon them all the Fact of piratically taking Capt. Read.

Only the Witneſſes were more particularly examin'd as to James Robbins alias Rattle, who upon a former Indictment for taking Capt. Manwareing was acquitted.

Attor. Gen. Ignatius Pell, give an Account of James Robbins.

Ign. Pell. He was as the reſt were when we ſhared at Cape Fear.

J. Trott. How long was he with you before he joined himſelf to the Company, after he came on board?

Ig. Pell. As ſoon as we came to Cape Fear.

Attor. Gen. Did you ſee Robbins have his Share?

Ig. Pell. Yes, Sir, they had all their Shares.

Attor. Gen. Was Robbins on board Read's Sloop?

Ign. Pell. I cannot tell whether he was on board or not.

J. Trott. You looked upon him as one of the Company?

Ig. Pell. Yes.

Capt. Manwareing ſworn.

Mr. Hep-

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to begin with Robbins, how he behav'd himſelf.

Capt. Manwareing. He was as the reſt of the Men were: he was on board the Revenge, and I think they called him James Rattle ſometimes.

J. Trott. Did he receive his Share?

Manwareing. He was among the Company when they did ſhare.

James Killing called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of Robbins.

Killing. All I can ſay, he was as the reſt were in ſharing Capt. Read's Goods, and was amongſt them when they did ſhare.

Capt. Read ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of Robbins.

Capt. Read. I did not know him before we came to Cape Fear; but I did not ſee but he was as active there in taking out the Goods as any of the reſt.

J. Trott. Did he ſhare among the reſt?

Capt. Read. Yes, I believe he did, for he was among them when they ſhared.

Robbins. I was forced to do what I did.

J. Trott. Did they force you to take your Share?

Francis Griffin called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of Robbins.

Griffin. I did not know him till we came to Cape Fear, and there I ſaw him on board the Revenge; and I did not ſee but that he did as the reſt of the Company; and when they were ſharing he was with them and received his Share.

Clerk. What have you to ſay, Robbins?

Robbins. I never was on board Capt. Read.

J. Trott. But you was one of the Company.

Robbins. I never conſented to take out the Goods.

J. Trott. But you conſented to take part of them; and they that ſhared the Goods were as much Pirates as thoſe that took them out of the Veſſel.

Then the Judge ſumm'd up the Evidence.

And an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had conſidered of their Verdict, returned and found the ſaid John Ridge, Matthew King, Thomas Price, Henry Virgin, James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, Guilty.

THE Court then delivered a Bill of Indictment to the Grand Jury, againſt John Brierly, aliàs Timber-head, Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, for feloniouſly and piratically entring the Sloop Francis belonging to Captain Peter Manwareing the Commander, and taking certain Goods out of the ſame at Cape Fear.

And another Bill of Indictment againſt the ſame Perſons for feloniouſly and piratically entring the Sloop Fortune belonging to Capt. Thomas Read Commander, and taking certain Goods out of the ſame at Cape Fear.

The Grand Jury returned upon the ſaid Bills of Indictment Billa vera.

Then the Court proceeded to arraign the ſaid John Brierly aliàs Timber-head, Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, upon the following Indictment.

To which Indictment they all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon their Trial.

The Jurors were ſworn, whoſe Names were as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman.	Thomas Chambers.
George Ducket.	Daniel Townſhend.
John Rivers.	John Lee.
William Sheriffe.	Thomas Bee.
Benjamin Dennis.	John Barton.
Hugh Durſey.	Richard Fairchild.

Then the Witneſſes were ordered to be called.

Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell, who was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Pell, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Ig. Pell. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give an Account of what you know of them, and of their Behaviour at Cape Fear.

Ig. Pell. John Brierly and Robert Boyd came on board three or four Days after we came to Cape Fear.

J. Trott. You took them firſt, did you not?

Ig. Pell. Yes, we ſent off our Dory, and took them.

J. Trott. From whence did they come?

Ig. Pell. From North Carolina.

Attorn. Gen. How long after they came on board did they join themſelves to the Company?

Ig. Pell. Brierly did very ſoon, but Boyd did not ſo ſoon, tho' he did afterwards; and for Sharp, I do not know that ever he was joined to the Company.

J. Trott. And how did Clarke behave himſelf?

Ig. Pell. Jonathan Clarke and one came in from South Carolina: they went away from the Sloop; and then after ſome Days Clarke returned again, but it was with Hunger, tho' he ſaid then it was not.

Attorn. Gen. Were there any Goods taken out of Capt. Read's Sloop after he had joined himſelf a ſecond time?

Ig. Pell. I cannot ſay that certainly.

J. Trott. Nor you cannot ſay poſitively there were?

Ig. Pell. No.

Mr. Hepworth. What do you know of Gerrard?

Ig. Pell. I can ſay nothing to him.

Clerk. Will any of you aſk the Evidence any Queſtions? John Brierly, will you aſk any Queſtions?

Brierly. Pell, you know I often ſaid I would not bear Arms, and that I deſired no Share.

Ig. Pell. But John, you know you had your Arms ready as well as the reſt, and that you had your Share.

Clerk. Robert Boyd, will you aſk any Queſtions?

Boyd. No, Sir.

Clerk. Rowland Sharp, will you?

Sharp. No, Sir.

Clerk. Jonathan Clarke, will you aſk any Queſtions?

Clarke. Pell, don't you remember that I was abaft, and one of the Negroes came and damned me, and aſked me what I did there? why I did not go and work amongſt the reſt? and told me I ſhould be uſed as a Negroe.

Ig. Pell. I do remember it was ſo.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Thomas Read called and ſworn.

Attorn. Gen. Capt. Read, pleaſe to begin with Brierly.

Capt. Read. Brierly came on board one Morning very early, and helped to take out ſeveral Goods.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know what Goods?

Capt. Read. Some Rum and Sugar.

J. Trott. Do you know thoſe Goods to be taken out?

Capt. Read. Yes.

J. Trott. How did he behave himſelf when Major Bonnet ſent for him on board to fight Colonel Rhett?

Capt. Read. I cannot tell.

Mr. Hepworth. How did Boyd behave himſelf?

Capt. Read. I took him to be a Priſoner like myſelf at firſt, till he was ſent for on board the Revenge by Major Bonnet to fight Colonel Rhett.

Attorn. Gen. What made you think he was a Priſoner?

Capt. Read. Becauſe he was not employ'd in any Buſineſs, as the reſt were.

J. Trott. That Day they engaged Colonel Rhett, was he on board your Sloop?

Capt. Read. Yes, and Major Bonnet ſent for all Hands on board the Revenge.

Attorn. Gen. What do you ſay of Sharp?

Capt. Read. I can ſay nothing of him.

Attorn. Gen. What have you to ſay of Clarke?

Capt. Read. He run away for a time, and then he return'd again after ſome Days.

Attorn. Gen. Was there any Goods taken out after he return'd?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

J. Trott. Did Clarke himſelf take out thoſe Goods?

Capt. Read. That I cannot tell; and as for Gerrard, he belong'd to Capt. Manwareing: and as the Captain and I was together, he came and told us how they us'd him; but he was ſorry for what he had done, and was reſolved to make his Eſcape the firſt Opportunity he had to get away.

Clerk. Have any of you any Queſtions to aſk the King's Evidence?

The Priſoners aſk no Queſtions.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Francis Griffin ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Look upon the Priſoners; do you know them?

Griffin. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Begin with John Brierly.

Griffin. He was on board of us ſome time when we were at Cape Fear, and he was as the reſt of the Company was; and he ſaid he hoped when Major Bonnet ſhould go to the Northward, to be revenged on ſome at the Hore-kills, for ſome Offence they had given him there.

J. Trott. You looked upon him as one of the Crew?

Griffin. Yes.

J. Trott. What do you know of Boyd?

Griffin. He was on board of us ſome time; and when Major Bonnet ſent for all Hands on board the Revenge, he went with them: but as for Sharp, I can ſay nothing of him, nor of Clarke, only he run away, and in ſome Days he return'd again.

Mr. Hepworth. We ſhall call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Captain Manwareing, do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of what you know of them; and begin with Brierly.

Manwareing. Brierly, the 12th Day of Auguſt he came on board; and a little after he was on board, I did not ſee but he acted as the reſt did, and he hoped to come up with ſome at the Hore-kills: but as for Boyd, he was on board Capt. Read's Sloop.

J. Trott. What have you to ſay of Sharp?

Manwareing. Some time after he came to Cape Fear, and Major Bonnet ſent for him on board the Revenge, he ſaid he would go on ſhore if he had an Opportunity, and I never ſaw him among the reſt of the Company.

Judge Trott. What have you to ſay of Jonathan Clarke?

Manwareing. After we had been at Cape Fear ſome Days, Jonathan Clarke, and one Dolton, came in, and Major Bonnet ſent the Dory, and brought them on board; and after ſome Days, Clarke and went away, and was gone ſome Days, and then returned again, and then he was ordered to work among the Negroes. As for my Man Garrard, he came and told me, he was not able to bear any longer, but was forced to comply with them, for they told him they would have no regard for the Colour, but wou'd make a Slave of him; but he did not receive any of their Goods; and when he was at home, he had the Character of an honeſt Man, and fought for his King and Country.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

James Killing called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Priſoners at the Bar?

Killing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of what you know of their ſharing at Cape Fear.

Killing. Brierly was put on board our Sloop there to work at his Trade, and would often ſay, he had a Quarrel againſt ſome at the Hore-Kills, he hoped to revenge himſelf upon them.

Judge Trott. Why what had they done to him?

Killing. He was in debt, and therefore he owed them a Grudge; but for the reſt, I can ſay nothing.

Judge Trott. You the Priſoners, what you have to ſay in your Defence, I ſhall now be ready to hear.

Cl. John Brierly, what have you to ſay?

Brierly. Mr. Boyd and I was in a leaky Canoo, and we were afraid ſhe would ſink, and ſo we were obliged to keep along ſhore; and I ſtood up, and thought I ſaw a Veſſel or two, and he bid me look again, and then I ſaw it was a Veſſel. They ſent off their Dory, and aſked if we would conſent to go with them? And we ſaid, No: But they ſaid they would break the Canoo, and we might go where we pleaſed. So they made me conſent to go on board the Revenge, but I never joined myſelf while I was on board: And then I was order'd on board Captain Manwareing, and there I worked; but I never bore Arms, nor did fight Colonel Rhett.

Cl. Rowland Sharp, what have you to ſay?

Sharp. After I was taken, I went on ſhore, and travelled four Days in the Woods without eating or drinking, and could find the way to no Plantation, and ſo was forced to return again, and I refuſed to ſign the Articles; and one of the Men came and told me I was to be ſhot, and I had the Liberty to chuſe the four Men that ſhould do it, and the Boatſwain went about to get Hands to beg me off; but I was reſolved to make my Eſcape the firſt Opportunity.

Cl. Jonathan Clarke, what have you to ſay?

Clarke. The 12th of Auguſt coming into Cape Fear with Mr. Dolton, he thought he ſaw the Maſt of a Veſſel, and I deſired him to take the Helm that I might ſee, for if there was any Veſſel it was Pirates; but Dolton ſaid it was nothing but an old Tree: But when we came farther in, we ſaw three Sloops, and they ſent off their Dory and took us, and carried us aboard the Revenge; and Major Bonnet asked from whence we came? and I told him. He asked me where we were a going? we told him. The next Day he asked if I did not deſign to do as they did? I told him no. Then I went away with a Deſign to get clear of them, but with Hunger was forced to return again: And they asked me if I would ſign the Articles then? and I refuſed; and one of the Negroes came and damned me, and asked me why I did not go to the Pump, and told me that was my Buſineſs: And Major Bonnet told me if I did not, he would make me Governor of the firſt Iſland he came to; for he would put me aſhore, and leave me there.

Cl. Thomas Gerrard, what have you to ſay?

Gerrard. Some time after we were taken, one of the Men came and asked if I would join with them? I told him, No. He ſaid, I was but * like a Negro, and they made Slaves of all of that Colour, if they did not join. So I did it with a Deſign to get clear of them the firſt Opportunity; and I never ſhared any of the Goods.

Judge Trott. Pell, did he never ſhare?

Pell. He never did ſhare.

Judge Trott. And did they threaten to make a Slave of him, if he did not join?

Pell. Yes.

Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you the Gentlemen of the Jury, as for Brierly and Boyd, it appears from the Evidence that they came to Cape Fear three or four Days after Bonnet: Brierly he took up very ſoon, and Boyd ſome time after; and that there were ſeveral Goods taken out of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, and particularly Rum and Sugar. And as for Sharp, there is no Evidence proves any thing fully on him; and therefore I think he may be looked upon as under Conſtraint and Force. As for Gerrard, I think the ſame; for tho' he ſigned the Articles, yet no Evidence proves that he did ſhare any of the Goods: Nay, the Boatſwain ſays he did not ſhare; and if they did not comply with them, they would make a Slave of him all the Days of his Life. And Capt. Manwareing ſays he had the Character of an honeſt Man at home; and that he fought for his King and Country.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand charged with Piracy, committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Manwareing; and the Evidence have proved it fully upon Brierly and Boyd; and particularly, that there was Rum and Sugar taken out. Brierly took up very ſoon with them, and had his Share; and that he hoped to revenge himſelf on ſome at the Hore-Kills. Boyd did not take up ſo ſoon; but he did afterward. As for Sharp, he would have made his Eſcape, but could not; and Major Bonnet told him he ſhould die, and bid him chuſe four Men to ſhoot him; and tho' he ſigned the Articles, he never ſhared, as Pell proves. As for Clarke, he ſays he was forced to it; that he went away, and Hunger forced him to return again, and the Negroes inſulted over him; and

* He was a Mulatto.

Major

Major Bonnet told him, he would make him Governor of an Iſland, and leave him there; and none of the Evidence proves that he ſhared any of the Goods. And as for Gerrard, he was threaten'd to be made a Slave of; tho' indeed he had been better made a Slave than go a pirating: But Capt. Manwareing ſays he had the Report of an honeſt Man in his Country; and that he was faithful to his King and Country: So I ſhall leave thoſe to your Conſideration. And if you think they were under Force and Conſtraint, as indeed it appears to me, by the whole Courſe of the Evidence, that they were, then you ought to acquit them.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had conſidered of their Verdict, return'd, and found John Brierly alias Timberhead, and Robert Boyd, Guilty; Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Tueſday Morning.

Tueſday, November the Fourth, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign the ſaid John Brierly alias Timberhead, Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, upon the following Indictment.

" The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the " King do upon their Oath preſent, That John " Brierly alias Timberhead, late of Bath-Town in " North-Carolina, Mariner; Robert Boyd, late " of Bath-Town aforeſaid, Mariner; Rowland " Sharp, late of Bath-Town aforeſaid, Mariner; " Jonathan Clarke, late of Charles-Town, in the " Province of South Carolina, Mariner; and " Thomas Gerrard, late of Antegoa, Mariner; " the twenty ſeventh Day of September, in the " Fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord " George, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, " France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the " Faith, &c. by Force and Arms, &c. upon " the High Sea, in a certain Place called Cape " Fear, about half a Mile diſtant from the Shore, " in the Latitude of Thirty-four, or thereabouts, " and within the Juriſdiction of the Court of " Vice-Admiralty of South Carolina, did piratically " and felonioufly ſet upon, board, break, and " enter a certain Merchant-Sloop, called the " Fortune, Thomas Read, Commander, then be- " ing a Sloop of certain Perſons (to the Jurors " aforeſaid unknown) and then and there pira- " tically and felonioufly did make an Aſſault in " and upon the ſaid Thomas Read, and other " his Mariners, (whoſe Names to the Jurors " aforeſaid are unknown.) In the ſame Sloop, " againſt the Peace of God, and of our now " Sovereign Lord the King, then and there be- " ing, piratically and felonioufly, did put the " aforeſaid Thomas Read, and others his Mari- " ners of the ſame Sloop, in the Sloop aforeſaid, " then being in corporal Fear of their Lives, " then and there in the Sloop aforeſaid, upon " the High Sea, in the Place aforeſaid, called " Cape Fear, about half a Mile diſtant from " the Shore, in the Latitude of Thirty-four, or " thereabouts, and within the Juriſdiction afore- " ſaid, piratically and felonioufly did ſteal, take, " and carry away the ſaid Sloop Fortune, and " alſo ten Barrels of Pork, of the Value of " twenty Pounds, current Money of Penſilvania; " two Firkins of Butter, of the Value of fifty " Shillings, like current Money of Penſilvania; " and three Tierces of Bread, of the Value of " ſix Pounds ten Shillings, like current Money " of Penſilvania; the Goods and Chattels of " certain Perſons, (to the Jurors aforeſaid un- " known) then and there, upon the High Sea " aforeſaid, in the aforeſaid Place, called Cape " Fear, about half a Mile diſtant from the " Shore, in the Latitude of thirty-four, or there- " abouts, as aforeſaid, and within the Juriſ- " diction aforeſaid; being found in the aforeſaid " Sloop, in the Cuſtody and Poſſeſſion of the " ſaid Thomas Read, and others his Mariners of " the Sloop aforeſaid, and from their Cuſtody " and Poſſeſſion, then and there, upon the High " Sea aforeſaid, in the Place aforeſaid, called " Cape Fear, about half a Mile diſtant from " the Shore, in the Latitude of thirty-four, or " thereabouts, as aforeſaid, and within the Ju- " riſdiction aforeſaid, againſt the Peace of our " ſaid now Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown, " and Dignity, &c.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon their Trial.

The Jurors were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth:

Samuel Prioleau, Foreman.	Henry Genelac.
John Hodgſon.	John Ballentine.
Garrat Vanvelſin.	Charles Marche.
Lucas Stoutenburgh.	John Grimball.
Thomas Fairchild.	William Harvey.

Then the Witneſſes were ordered to be called.

Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell. Who was ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Pell, give an Account firſt of Brierly and Boyd.

Ign. Pell. As for Brierly, he ſoon united himſelf to the Company; and when we engaged Colonel Rhett, he was as active as any of the reſt. But for Boyd, he was ſent on board Capt. Read's Sloop, and was there till Major Bonnet ſent for him on board the Revenge, to fight Colonel Rhett.

Judge Trott. And did he fight?

Ign. Pell. He was wounded with one of the firſt Shot, and ſo was carried down into the Hole; ſo that he never did fight.

Mr. Dean. Why was he put on board the Sloop?

Ign. Pell. To look after the Sloop, I ſuppoſe.

Att. Gen. Had he his Arms ready when you engaged Col. Rhett?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir: So we had all in general: But I did not ſee him uſe them.

As for the other three, he thought them to be under Conſtraint, and they did not fight Colonel Rhett.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions asked by the Priſoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Manwareing give an Account of the Priſoners, of their fighting Colonel Rhett, and begin with Brierly and Boyd.

Capt. Manwareing. They came on board, and Brierly ſoon became one of the Company, and hoped to revenge himſelf on them at the Hore-Kills, and acted as the reſt did when they engaged Col. Rhett. But as for Boyd, I took him to be a Priſoner for ſome Time.

Captain Manwareing's Evidence concerning Sharp, Clarke, and Gerrard, the ſame as in the former Trial.

Mr. Hepworth. Will any of you aſk the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions aſked by the Priſoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

James Killing called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of the Priſoners at the Bar; and firſt of Brierly and Boyd.

Killing. As for Boyd, he was on board Captain Read after we came to Cape Fear, till they were ſent for to fight Colonel Rhett; and I thought he had been a Priſoner till then, and I talked very free to him. And as for Brierly, he was as the reſt of the Company.

Att. Gen. Were there any Goods taken out after Brierly came on board?

Killing. Yes.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know what Goods?

Killing. I cannot remember every particular Sort.

His Evidence againſt the other three the ſame as in the former Trial.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

No Queſtions asked by the Priſoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We call another Evidence.

Capt. Thomas Read called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Read, pleaſe to give an Account of the Priſoners at the Bar; and firſt of Brierly and Boyd.

Capt. Read. As for Brierly, I did not ſee but he acted as all the reſt of the Company did.

Judge Trott. What have you to ſay of Boyd?

Capt. Read. I thought him to be a Priſoner, and diſcours'd freely with him, which if he had diſcover'd, it had done me an Injury; for I heard him wiſh we might meet with a Thirty-Gun Ship, and I told him I ſhould be glad of it as well as he.

Foreman. What did he wiſh to meet with a Thirty-Gun Ship for?

Capt. Read. To free us from the Pirates.

His Evidence againſt the other three the ſame as before.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

None of the Priſoners asked any Queſtions.

Judge Trott. You the Priſoners may now ſpeak what you have to ſay.

Clerk. What have you to ſay John Brierly?

Brierly. When Mr. Boyd and I came in at Cape Fear, we ſaw three Sloops; and then came off a Dory with ſome Hands, and haled us, and then carried us on board; but we did not know that they were Marrooners. But Mr. Boyd trembled, and ſhook like a Leaf; and I told him not to be afraid. So they carried us on board.

Judge Trott. And ſo you united yourſelf with them to make up the Company?

Brierly. I was forced to do what I did.

Clerk. Robert Boyd, what have you to ſay?

Boyd. After we came to Cape Fear, and was taken by Bonnet's Men, I was on board the Revenge for ſome time, and they asked me to ſign the Articles, the which I refuſed; and Major Bonnet told me, if I did not, he would marroon me on an Iſland, and leave me. And after I was ſent on board Capt. Read's Sloop, I had nothing but the Proviſions I lived on; I never had any thing more. And when Major Bonnet ſent for all on board to fight Colonel Rhett, it would have been preſent Death for any to refuſe, and I was wounded with one of the firſt Shot.

The other three made it appear they were innocent, as in the other Indictment.

Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you the Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence proves the Fact fully on Brierly; that he ſoon engaged with Bonnet after he was taken, and that he acted as the reſt of the Company did; and that he hoped to be revenged on ſome at the Hore-Kills. As for Boyd, tho' he was on board the Pirate-Sloop, he never took Part with them; and he wiſhed for a Thirty-Gun Ship, that they might be ſet at Liberty. And Capt. Read took him for a Priſoner till he was ſent for on board the Revenge; and then the Boatſwain ſays he did not fight. As for the other three, I think it appears they were under Conſtraint and Force.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand indicted for piratically taking Capt. Read, in the Sloop Fortune. As for Brierly, the Evidence proves it very plain and fully upon him, that he took up very ſoon with them, and did hope to revenge himſelf upon ſome of the Hore-Kills, and that he engaged againſt Col. Rhett. As for Boyd, Capt. Read looked upon him as a Priſoner; and that he had ſuch Diſcourſe with him, that if he had diſclos'd it to Bonnet's Crew, it had done him much hurt; and the Boatſwain ſays, he did not fight Col. Rhett. And as for the other three, I think it hath been fully proved they were under Conſtraint. But I ſhall leave it to your Conſideration.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, Who after they had conſidered of their Verdict, return'd, and found John Brierly alias Timberhead, Guilty; Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Wedneſday Morning.

Wedneſday, November the Fifth, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN Robert Tucker, Edward Robinſon, Neal Paterſon, William Scot, Job Bayley, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morriſon, William Livers alias Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet alias Millett, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, James Wilſon, John Brierly alias Timberhead, and Robert Boyd, who ſtood convicted of Piracies, as appears by the above Records, were brought to the Bar, and were ſeverally aſked what what they could ſay why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon them.

And they having nothing to alledge in arreſt of Judgment;

Then Proclamation for Silence was made, while the Judge of the Court of Vice-Admiralty pronounced Sentence of Death upon the Priſoners.

J. Trott. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Robert Tucker, Edward Robinſon, Neal Paterſon, William Scot, Job Bayley, John-William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morriſon, William Livers alias Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewit, John Levit, William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet alias Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, James Wilſon, John Brierly, and Robert Boyd, ſtand here convicted of Piracy.

You have been indicted but for two Acts of Piracy; but you know upon the Trials it was fully proved againſt moſt of you, that you piratically took thirteen Veſſels ſince you joined Major Bonnet, and ſailed from Topſail-Inlet in North Carolina.

So that many of you might have been convicted on eleven more Indictments of Piracy.

Beſides, ſeveral of you were proved to be Pirates before that time, as belonging to Thatch's Crew; and ſo were guilty of the ſeveral Piracies committed while you belong'd to him.

You cannot but acknowledge that you have all of you had a fair and indifferent Trial.

You were fully heard, not only as to all you could pretend to ſay in your own Defences, but alſo as to what you alledge in Mitigation of your Crimes.

And indeed, when you ſaw that the Facts laid in the Indictment were ſo fully proved againſt you, tho' moſt of you pleaded Not Guilty for Form-ſake, yet in the open Court, upon your Trials, moſt of you acknowledged the Facts charged upon you. Therefore no one can think but that you were all of you juſtly found Guilty; and your own Conſciences will oblige you to acknowledge the ſame. So that there is not any of you who can complain of any Hardſhips at your Trials.

As to the Crime that you are convicted of, which is Piracy, the Evil and Wickedneſs of it is evident to the Reaſon of all Men: So that it needs no Words to aggravate the ſame; it is ſo deſtructive of all Trade and Commerce between Nation and Nation, that Pirates are called Enemies to Mankind, with whom no Faith nor Oath ought to be kept; and they are term'd in our Law Brutes and Beaſts of Prey, and therefore it is the Intereſt, as well as Duty, of all Governments to bring ſuch Offenders to Puniſhment.

Tho' the Greatneſs of your Crime is ſuch, that no one can think but that the Sentence of Death which will now be paſſed upon you is juſtly due to you for the ſame; yet as Pity and Compaſſion, even to the worſt of Criminals, when brought to Puniſhment, are natural to all Men who have not flung off all Senſe of Humanity, but much more firmly ingrafted in the Hearts of Chriſtians: therefore ſurely it cannot but be a very melancholy Spectacle to ſee ſo many Perſons in the Prime of their Years, in perfect Health and Strength, dropping into the Grave: And which is a more ſorrowful Conſideration, that they are in the height of their Sins; and therefore, without the infinite Mercies of God, through the Satisfaction of Chriſt, muſt neceſſarily ſink into the Dwellings of everlaſting Miſery.

And indeed, moſt ſad and deplorable is the Condition you have brought your ſelves to: To be adjudg'd by the Laws of your Country unworthy any longer to live, and to tread the Earth, or breathe the Air; and that no further Good or Benefit can be expected from you but by the Example of your Deaths; and to ſtand like Marks or fatal Rocks and Sands, to warn others from the ſame Shipwrack and Ruin for the future.

As moſt of you have been Mariners by Profeſſion, and every one of you have ſeveral times been at Sea; ſo I cannot but wonder, that being ſo often at Sea, you ſhould not conſider the great Power of God in creating the ſame, and his Providence in preſerving thoſe who paſs upon it; and conſequently, that ſuch Thoughts ſhould not cauſe in you a Dread of his Power, and a Love of his Goodneſs.

The Conſideration of God's Power in making the Sea, and ſetting Bounds to the raging Waters thereof, is uſed as an Argument by God himſelf, why Men ſhould fear him; for thus God expreſſeth it by the Prophet Jeremiah: Fear ye not me? ſaith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my Preſence, which have placed the Sand for the bound of the Sea by a perpetual Decree, that it cannot paſs it; and tho' the Waves thereof toſs themſelves, yet can they not prevail: tho' they fear, yet can they not paſs over it; Jer. 5. v. 22. Or as it is expreſſed in the Book of Job: Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no farther; and here ſhall thy proud Waves be ſtayed: Job 38. v. 11.

The Pſalmiſt ſaith, that they that go down to the Sea in Ships, that do Buſineſs in great Waters; theſe ſee the Works of the Lord, and his Wonders in the Deep. For he commandeth and raiſeth the ſtormy Wind, which lifteth up the Waves thereof. They mount up to the Heaven, they go down again to the Depths, their Soul is melted becauſe of Trouble. They reel to and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken Man, and are at their Wits end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their Trouble, and he bringeth them out of their Diſtreſſes. He maketh a Storm a Calm, ſo that the Waves thereof are ſtill. Then they are glad becauſe they be quiet; ſo he bringeth them unto their deſired Haven. But the practical Inference that he draws from theſe is, That Men ſhould praiſe the Lord for his Goodneſs, and for his wonderful Works to the Children of Men: Pſal. 107. v. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31.

But inſtead of having a Senſe of God's Power and Goodneſs, in preſerving you and others upon the Sea, your frequent Preſervations harden'd you into a Contempt of the Danger you were in; and you thereby ſlighted your Deliverance. And tho' you could not but ſee the many natural Dangers that attend the Seas, and thoſe who had occaſion to go upon the ſame, yet you were reſolved that you would contribute what in you lay to the Hazards thereof, by the frequent Rapines and Murders which you committed. So that what the Prophet ſaith of the Pride of the Tyrians, may be apply'd to you, that you cauſed your Terror to be on all that haunt the Sea: Ezek. 26. ver. 17.

Altho' it may be, while you were in your ſeeming Proſperity, and went on in your committing Spoils and Robberies without controul, you might make a mock at your Sins, Prov. 14. v. 9. and ch. 10. v. 23. and ſay in your Hearts, God hath forgotten, he hideth his Face, he will never ſee it, Pſal. 10. v. 11. 94. v. 7. 64. v. 5. and Job 22. v. 13. yet now that you ſee that God's Hand hath reached you, and his Power hath brought you to publick Juſtice; I hope your preſent unhappy Condition hath had a good effect upon you, that it hath raiſed in you more ſerious Thoughts; and that you are now ſenſible of the Greatneſs of your Sins, and that you will ſincerely repent you of the ſame.

As to the great Evil and Sinfulneſs of the Facts you have committed, ſurely you cannot but know, that it is one of the expreſs Commandments of God, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, Exod. 20. v. 15. and the Apoſtle St. Paul expreſly affirms, that Thieves ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 6. v. 10.

But then remember that to Theft you have added the Sin of Murder, in deſtroying thoſe Perſons who were ſent by lawful Authority to ſuppreſs you, and to put a ſtop to your wicked Actions. For you being no way authoriſed to uſe the Sword, or to fight any one, every one of thoſe Perſons who fell by your hands, were murdered; and their Blood now cries for Vengeance againſt you: For it is the Voice of Nature, as well as the revealed Law of God, that Whoſo ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed, Gen. 9. v. 6.

It is the Commandment of God, Thou ſhalt do no Murder, Exod. 20. v. 13. and the Apoſtle enumerating ſeveral of the Works of the Fleſh, amongſt the reſt reckons Murders; and then concludes with theſe remarkable Words: Of which I tell you before, as I have told you in time paſt, that they which do ſuch things, ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God, Gal. 5. v. 21.

And Murderers are threaten'd to have their part in the Lake which burneth with Fire and Brimſtone, which is the ſecond Death, Rev. 21. v. 8. See ch. 22. v. 15. Words which carry that Terror with them, that conſidering your Circumſtances, and your Guilt, ſurely the Sound of them muſt make you tremble; For who can dwell with everlaſting Burnings? Iſa. 33. v. 14.

I ſuppoſe you all know that you muſt appear before the Tribunal of Chriſt; from whoſe infinite Knowledge none of your Actions can be hid, and from whoſe infinite Power no one can reſcue you or protect you; and from whom, without a true and unfeigned Repentance for all your Sins paſt, you can expect no other than that dreadful Sentence of Condemnation, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels, Matth. 25. v. 41.

I do not ſpeak this to overwhelm you with Sorrow, much leſs to drive you into Deſpair of God's Mercy, which is one of the worſt of Sins, and which I hope you will not add to your other Offences againſt God. But I mention this to you, to make you ſenſible of the great Danger of your Condition, without true and unfeigned Repentance. For ſeeing I can give you no hopes of Pardon from Man, I hope you will improve the ſhort time you have now left you, to make your Peace with God, and to obtain Pardon from him.

And I wiſh that what I now ſay to you in this your deplorable Conditions, may make you all ſenſible of the Greatneſs of your Offences, that ſo you may become truly penitent; which if you are, you may yet hope for Mercy from God: For tho' your Sins be as Scarlet, [even dyed in Blood] yet he can make them white as Snow, Iſa. 1. v. 18.

Therefore if you will now turn unto God by a true and unfeigned Repentance, he will not refuſe you nor reject you, even now in your great Diſtreſs.

For the Threatnings declared by God in the Scripture againſt Sinners, muſt always be underſtood againſt impenitent Sinners; for God hath declared himſelf to be Merciful and Gracious, Exod. 34. v. 6. And that he hath no pleaſure in the death of the Wicked, but that the Wicked turn from his way and live, Ezek. 33. v. 11. ch. 18. v. 23. And hath promiſed that when he doth ſo, he ſhall ſave his Soul alive, ver. 27.

But be ſure remember that you muſt go to God, in and thro' the alone Merits and Interceſſion of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, who hath made Satisfaction to the Juſtice of God for us: For he is our Advocate with the Father; And he is the Propitiation for our Sins, John 2. v. 1, 2. For his Blood cleanſeth us from all Sin, ch. 1. v. 7. Know therefore, that there is none other Name under Heaven given among Men, whereby we muſt be ſaved, but only by the Name of the Lord Jeſus, Acts 4. v. 12.

But then conſider how he invites all them that labour and are heavy laden with their Sins to come unto him, and he will give them reſt, Matth. xi. v. 28. He will not break the bruiſed Reed, nor quench the ſmoaking Flax, Iſa. 42. v. 3. compared with Matth. 12. v. 20. The Apoſtle tells us, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the World to ſave Sinners, 1 Tim. 1. v. 15. And he himſelf aſſures us, that he came to ſeek and ſave that which was loſt, Luke 19. v. 10. Matth. 18. v. 11. And hath promiſed, that he that cometh unto him, he will in no wiſe caſt out, John 6. 37.

Doubt not therefore, but that if you will now ſincerely turn to God, he will accept you, and pardon and forgive you your Sins.

But know that the Condition of theſe and other the Promiſes of God made to Sinners, is Faith and Repentance. And great Sins (ſuch as yours are) muſt have great Repentance. You muſt earneſtly cry unto God for Pardon and Remiſſion of your Sins, and particularly, that he would deliver you from Blood-guiltineſs, Pſal. 51. v. 14.

And do not miſtake the Nature of Repentance, to be only barely a Sorrow for your Sins, by reaſon of the Evil and Puniſhment which they have now brought upon you: but your Sorrow for your Sins muſt ariſe from the Conſideration of your having offended a gracious and merciful God. To which ſhould be added, a ſincere Reſolution, and an actual Amendment for the future. Indeed, ſuch is your unhappy Circumſtances, that you cannot give any actual Proof of the Amendment of your Lives: but remember that God knows the Heart.

Time will not permit me to enlarge upon the Nature of Repentance, and of the many Miſtakes that Men make in that great Duty: Neither indeed will I ſo far preſume to meddle out of my own Profeſſion. You may have thoſe Matters better explained to you by ſome of the Miniſters of this Province, whom you may deſire to attend you, and fit you for Death; and from them you may expect more full and particular Directions: For the Prieſt's Lips ſhall keep Knowledge, and you ſhall ſeek the Law at their Mouths: for they are the Meſſengers of the Lord, Mal. 2. v. 7. And the Ambaſſadors of Chriſt; and to them is committed the Word [or Doctrine] of Reconciliation, 2 Cor. 5. v. 19, 20.

Thus having diſcharged my Duty to you as a Chriſtian, by exhorting you to an unfeigned Repentance for your Crimes, and Faith in Chriſt, by whoſe Merits alone you muſt hope for Pardon and Salvation; I muſt now do my Office as a Judge.

The Sentence that the Law hath appointed to paſs upon you for your Offences, and which this Court doth therefore award, is,

That you the ſaid Robert Tucker, Edward Robinſon, Neal Paterſon, William Scot, Job Bayley, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morriſon, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, James Wilſon, John Brierly, and Robert Boyd, ſhall go from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be ſeverally hanged by the Neck, till you are ſeverally dead.

And the God of infinite Mercy be merciful to every one of your Souls.

After the Condemnation of the above-mention'd Perſons, Thomas Nichols, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, who were found Not Guilty, were diſcharged.

And then the Court adjourn'd to Monday the 10th Inſtant.

On Saturday, November the 8th, 1718. Robert Tucker, Edward Robinſon, Neal Paterſon, William Scot, Job Bayley, John William Smith, John Thomas, William Morriſon, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Roſs, George Dunkin, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, were executed at the White Point near Charles-Town, according to the above Sentence.

Monday, November the 10th, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, [who had eſcaped, but was retaken. Nov. 6.] for feloniouſly and piratically taking the Sloop Francis, with her Goods, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander; and the Sloop Fortune, with her Goods, Capt. Thomas Read, Commander; upon the two following Indictments.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do on their Oath preſent, That Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, late of Barbadoes, Mariner; Robert Tucker, late of the Iſland of Jamaica, Mariner, &c. as before.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do on their Oath preſent, That Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, late of the Iſland of Barbadoes, Mariner; David Heriot, late of the Iſland of Jamaica, Mariner; Edward Robinſon, late of Newcaſtle upon Tine, Mariner, &c. as before.

To both which Indictments he pleaded Not Guilty.

Judge Trott. You are to come upon your Trial this Day, upon the firſt Indictment, and you have pleaded Not Guilty; ſo that what Evidence you have muſt be ready.

Bonnet. My pleading Not Guilty is becauſe I may have ſomething to offer in my Defence; and therefore I hope none of the Bench will take it amiſs.

The Court proceeded upon his Trial on the firſt Indictment, for piratically taking the Sloop Francis, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander.

Then the Jurors were ſworn, whoſe Names are as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman.	Thomas Bee.
George Ducket.	James Mazyck.
William Sheriff.	Thomas Lamboll.
Benjamin Dennis.	Henry Beaton.
Jonathan Main.	Moſes Wilſon.
John Lee.	Claas Joor.

Mr. Hepworth. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: The Priſoner who now ſtands arraigned at the Bar, has been guilty of many Piracies, committed many Robberies, ruined many Families, and been the Occaſion of many moſt cruel and inhuman Murders, and all that within a very ſhort Time paſt. Should I here deſcend into all the Particulars, I ſhall take up too much of your Time. You know (all of ye) I believe, after what manner he lately fled from Juſtice. Nay, he was not ſatisfied with his own Eſcape, but he muſt tamper with the King's Evidence, to avoid others being proſecuted; and prevailed with the Maſter Herriot to run away with him, who has been ſince killed. And I believe the Priſoner at the Bar cannot, upon Reflection, but think himſelf anſwerable for that Man's Death. Nay, ſome People took particular notice of the Priſoner's Behaviour at the Time when Thatch having got the Command from him, he began to reflect upon his paſt Courſe of Life, and was filled then with ſuch Horror, that he was perfectly confounded with Shame at the many deteſtable Crimes he had been guilty of, and ſaid, he would gladly leave off that way of living, being fully tired, and having got conſiderably by it; but he ſhould be aſhamed ever to ſee the Face of an Engliſhman: Therefore if he could not get to Spain or Portugal, where he might be undiſcover'd, he would live and die in the ſame Courſe of Life, viz. in Piracy and Robbery.

The Trial of this Man ought to be the more conſiderable, as he was the great Ringleader of them; who has ſeduced many poor ignorant Men to follow his Courſe of Living, and ruined many poor Wretches; ſome of whom lately ſuffered, who with their laſt Breath expreſſed a great Satisfaction at the Priſoner's being apprehended, and charged the Ruin of themſelves and Loſs of their Lives intirely upon him.

We ſhall now proceed to call our Evidences.

Ign. Pell. called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Pell, begin with the firſt Indictment, and when you was firſt acquainted with Major Bonnet.

Ign. Pell. It was at the Bay of Honduras; but Capt. Thatch was Commander in Chief.

Att. Gen. This I obſerve was before they went to Topſail-Inlet at North Carolina.

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir, for when we came to Topſail-Inlet, Robert Tucker was choſe Quarter-Maſter; and we went out to go to St. Thomas's for a Commiſſion to go a privateering againſt the Spaniards; but the firſt Veſſel we ſaw we took.

Mr. Hepworth. What did you take out of her?

Ign. Pell. We took ſome Proviſions.

Att. Gen. Had you no Proviſions on board the Revenge?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir, ſome Beef, Pork, and Flower.

Mr. Hepworth. What was the next Veſſel you took?

Ign. Pell. A Sloop belonging to Bermudas. After we had diſcharged her, we took another, in which were eight Negroes. We took out two, and left three Men and two Women, and ſent three Hands more, which made eight; and the next Day we gave chace to two Ships belonging to Glaſgow in Scotland, and in the Evening we came up with them, and the other turn'd Tail, and we never ſaw them more after that. And after we had taken ſome Tobacco and other Goods, we diſcharged them. We took, as I remember, two Veſſels belonging to Briſtol, when Capt. Read was taken.

Att. Gen. What do you know of Capt. Manwareing?

Ign. Pell. We were at an Anchor near Cape James aliàs Cape Inlopen, and a little before Night we ſaw a Sloop come to an Anchor at the Mouth of the River, and we ſent off the Dory with five Hands, and in a little Time they returned with Capt. Manwareing; and the next Day we haled the Sloop long-ſide the Scooner which we had taken before, and hoiſted out ſeveral Hogſheads of Moloſſes and Rum, and put them on board the Canoo, and put ſome Pitch and Tar on board the Sloop.

Att. Gen. Who gave you Orders for the doing of that?

Ign. Pell. I cannot tell, Sir.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee Major Bonnet on board Manwareing's Sloop?

Ign. Pell. I cannot ſay he was, neither do I know certainly that he was not.

Judge Trott. Was he not your Commander?

Ign. Pell. He was called our Captain to be ſure.

Cl. Have you any Queſtions to ask the King's Evidence?

Bonnet. Don't you believe in your Conſcience, that when we left Topſail-Inlet, it was to go to St. Thomas's? And there were near forty Hands, and they concluded to go a marrooning.

Ign. Pell. I did believe it was ſo till after we were out.

Judge Trott. That was what they accuſed you for on their Trials; that you deceived them, under a Pretence of going to St. Thomas's.

Bonnet. I am ſorry that they ſhould take the Opportunity of my Abſence to accuſe me of that which I was free from.

Mr. Dean. If there were forty Hands on board, it cannot be thought that he had Power to command them.

Judge Trott. But he was Commander in Chief among them, and that after they went a pirating; was it not ſo, Boatſwain?

Ign. Pell. He went by that Name; but the Quarter-Maſter had more Power than he.

Judge Trott. What do you mean by your Evaſions? Was he Commander in Chief, or was he not?

Ign. Pell. He was.

Judge Trott. Then who had the greateſt Power?

Att. Gen. Do you know if he received his Share of Capt. Manwareing's Goods? Or did any receive it for him?

Ign. Pell. Sir, it was the Quarter-Maſter took care of that.

Judge Trott. He was Commander in Chief, and therefore I ſuppoſe he had a double Share?

Ign. Pell. I did never enquire whether he had or not.

Judge Trott. Boatſwain, tell the Truth; had he his Share, or had he not?

Ign. Pell. He had it.

Bonnet. Boatſwain, did you ever hear me force any Man to go?

Ign. Pell. No, Major, I cannot ſay I did.

Bonnet. Do you not remember, that when we left Topſail-Inlet, and they began to quarrel about Proviſion, that I ſaid I would leave the Sloop?

Ign. Pell. I do remember you ſaid ſo.

Judge Trott. But if you did take ſome for Proviſion, would no leſs than thirteen Veſſels ſatisfy you?

Bonnet. It was contrary to my Inclination.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Manwareing, look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, do you know him?

Manwareing. I know him very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of your being taken by him.

Manwareing. I arrived at Cape James aliàs Cape Inlopen, the thirty-firſt of July; and after being at an Anchor ſome time, we ſaw a Dory coming, as I ſaid before. So I was ordered on board the Revenge.

Judge Trott. And before whom was you brought?

Manwareing. Before the Man at the Bar, Capt. Thomas he was called then; and ſo I gave him my Papers; and it being Night, he ſaid but little more that Night. Next Morning they haled the Sloop long-ſide the Scooner, and hoiſted out the Rum and Moloſſes out of the Sloop, and put on board the Scooner; and the Firſt of Auguſt we ſailed in Company to Cape Fear. But indeed the Gentleman was very civil to me.

Att. Gen. Did you ever hear him give Orders to take out any Goods?

Manwareing. He was on board the Sloop himſelf when it was done.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you remember any particular Goods taken out?

Manwareing. Yes, Sir.

Clerk. Will you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

Bonnet. I beg leave to ask whether you ever ſaw me ſhare among the reſt?

Manwareing. You was in the Round-Houſe, and a Bundle and ſome Pieces was brought; and I ſaw you take it, and give it the Negroe-Boy, to put into the Cheſt.

Bonnet. There were ſeveral that I kept their Shares for; but it was not mine.

Manwareing. It was put away by your Order.

Bonnet. Did you ever hear me order any thing out of the Sloop?

Manwareing. Major Bonnet, I am ſorry you ſhould ask me that Queſtion; for you know you did: Which was my All, that I had in the World.

So that I do not know but my Wife and Children are now periſhing for want of Bread in New-England. Had it been only myſelf, I had not matter'd it ſo much; but my poor Family grieves me.

Clerk. Will you aſk any more Queſtions?

Bonnet. No, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

James Killing called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of your being taken, and what Goods were taken out of you.

The Evidence gave in the ſame Relation as in the former Trials; and then added, That Major Bonnet ordered him to go and ſhew which was the Rum, and which was the Moloſſes.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you remember in particular what Goods were taken out?

Killing. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Were the twenty one Hogſheads of Moloſſes, and the Rum taken out?

Killing. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. And all by Major Bonnet's Order?

Killing. Major Bonnet gave Orders for it to be done.

Judge Trott. What need had you of ſo much Moloſſes?

Bonnet. I did not carry it away, and it was contrary to my Inclination.

Judge Trott. You gave Orders for it to be done, and yet it was contrary to your Inclinations.

Clerk. Will you ask the King's Evidence any Queſtions?

Bonnet. No, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

Capt. Thomas Read called and ſworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Pleaſe to give the Court an Account of Capt. Manwareing's being taken.

Capt. Read. After we came to Cape James, we ſaw a Sloop come to an Anchor, and Major Bonnet ordered the Dory, with five Hands, to go off; and in about half an Hour they came on board with Capt. Manwareing.

Att. Gen. Was you on board the Revenge when the Dory was ſent off?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. And Major Bonnet gave Orders to take out thoſe Goods?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Was he on board himſelf?

Capt. Read. Yes; and ordered the ſeveral Goods to be taken out.

Att. Gen. Do you know if the Major received his Share?

Capt. Read. The Captain was in the Round-Houſe when they ſhared, and they brought in ſeveral Pieces of Cloth, and a Bag of Money.

Mr. Hepworth. Who brought that to him?

Capt. Read. I do not know which of the Men.

Att. Gen. And did the Captain receive his Share?

Capt. Read. He ordered it to be put in the Cheſt by the Boy.

Clerk. Will you ask any Queſtions?

Bonnet. No, Sir.

Judge Trott. You now ſtand on your Defence: What have you to ſay, I ſhall be ready to hear.

Bonnet. May it pleaſe your Honours, there is a young Man come from North-Carolina, that will ſay ſomething in my Defence.

James King called and ſworn.

Judge Trott. What do you know of the Priſoner at the Bar.

King. When Major Bonnet took out his Clearance at North Carolina, the Sloop was cleared for St. Thomas's, for a Commiſſion to go againſt the Spaniards a privateering.

Mr. Dean. Do you certainly know it was ſo?

King. It was reported to be ſo by the Governour.

Att. Gen. Did you hear the Governour declare this?

King. No; but Colonel Brice's Son told me ſo.

Judge Trott. Colonel Brice lives fifty Miles in the Country, how did he come to inform you of this?

King. He came down out of the Country?

Judge Trott. If this be all the Evidence you have, I do not ſee this will be of much uſe to you; but if you have any thing further to ſay, I ſhall be ready to hear you.

Bonnet. I ſhould be glad to go through both Indictments at once.

Judge Trott. We ſhall go through but one Indictment now; therefore you muſt prepare to ſpeak to that ſingly.

Bonnet. May it pleaſe your Honours, and the reſt of the Gentlemen, though I muſt confeſs my ſelf a Sinner, and the greateſt of Sinners, yet I am not guilty of what I am charged with. As for what the Botſwain ſays, relating to ſeveral Veſſels, I am altogether free; for I never gave my Conſent to any ſuch Actions: For I often told them, if they did not leave off committing ſuch Robberies, I would leave the Sloop; and deſired them to put me on ſhore. And as for taking Capt. Manwareing, I aſſure your Honours it was contrary to my Inclination. And when I cleared my Veſſel at North Carolina, it was for St. Thomas's; and I had no other End or Deſign in view but to go there for a Commiſſion. But when we came to Sea, and ſaw a Veſſel, the Quarter-Maſter, and ſome of the reſt, held a Conſultation to take it: But I oppoſed it, and told them again I would leave the Sloop, and let them go where they pleaſed. For as the young Man ſaid, Col. Brice's Son can teſtify that I had Clearance for St. Thomas's.

Judge Trott. Was Col. Brice's Son there when you cleared for St. Thomas's?

Bonnet. Yes; and Col. Brice's Son knew I was deſigned for St. Thomas's.

Judge Trott. But pray what Buſineſs had you at St. Thomas's? Surely after you had contracted ſo much Guilt upon your Conſcience by your former Piracies and Robberies, you might have been contented to have lived a retired Life in North Carolina, reflected on your former wicked Courſe of Living, and repented of the ſame, and not engaged in new Actions.

Bonnet. I never took a Veſſel but with Capt. Thatch.

Judge Trott. Did you not take Capt. Manwareing's Sloop?

Bonnet. It was contrary to my Inclinations; and I told them ſeveral Times if they would not leave off that Courſe of Life, I would leave the Sloop: And when Capt. Manwareing was taken, I was aſleep.

Judge Trott. How came you to order the Dory to be ſent off with five Hands to take him? And Capt. Read ſwears it was by your Order.

Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar hath pleaded Not Guilty to the Indictment; but the Boatſwain, tho' he ſeems to bear a very great Affection to him, yet tells you that he was Commander in Chief among them at the Time when Capt. Manwareing was taken. Capt. Manwareing tells you, when he was brought on board the Revenge, he was brought before him, and no other, and that he delivered his Papers to him; and he ſaw his Share brought to him in the Round-Houſe, and put into the Cheſt.

Then Capt. Manwareing's Mate ſays, Major Bonnet was on board the Sloop, and ordered him to ſhew which was the Moloſſes, and which was the Rum. And then Capt. Read ſays, Major Bonnet was Commander in Chief; and that he ordered the Dory to be ſent off with five Hands to take Capt. Manwareing. Indeed the Priſoner pleads he was under Conſtraint from his Men, and that it was contrary to his Inclinations; but I think it not common for one that is forced to have ſuch Command. And as for what James King ſays in behalf of the Priſoner, that he had his Clearance for St. Thomas's, is what he was accuſed of before, that he deceived his Men with a Notion of his going there for a Commiſſion.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for Felony and Piracy, committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing, for breaking and boarding the ſaid Sloop. The firſt Evidence, Ignatius Pell, through the great Affection he ſeem'd to have for him, was unwilling to ſpeak the Truth; yet he cannot deny but he was at the taking of thirteen Veſſels, and particularly Capt. Manwareing's, and that he had his Share. Then comes Capt. Manwareing, and he ſays Major Bonnet was Commander in Chief; and that he was brought before him, and he gave his Papers to him, and by his Order it was that the Goods were taken out. And then Killing the Mate, he ſays Bonnet was on board when the Goods were taken out. Then comes Capt. Read, and he ſays the Dory was ſent off by Major Bonnet's Order; and that his Share was brought into the Round-Houſe to him. As for his Pretence, that his Men forced him againſt his Will, it appears by the Evidence he did not act like a Perſon under Conſtraint. And in the former Trials, ſeveral of you remember, that his Men generally ſaid, that he deceived them under Pretence of his going to St. Thomas's; and that he forced them. So that I think the Evidence have proved the Fact upon him: But I ſhall leave this to your Conſideration.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had conſider'd of their Verdict, return'd, and found the aboveſaid Stede Bonnet alias Edwards alias Thomas, Guilty.

Then the Court adjourned till Tueſday Morning.

Tueſday, November the 11th, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded on the Trial of Stede Bonnet alias Edwards alias Thomas, upon the ſecond Indictment for feloniouſly and piratically taking the Sloop Fortune, with her Goods, Capt. Thomas Read, Commander.

To which Indictment upon his Arraignment he pleaded Not Guilty; but now deſired leave to withdraw his Plea, and pleaded Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Wedneſday Morning.

Wedneſday, November the 12th, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN Stede Bonnet alias Edwards alias Thomas, who ſtood convicted of Piracies, as appears by the above Records, being brought to the Bar; and being asked what he had to ſay why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon him:

And he having nothing to alledge in Arreſt of Judgment;

Then Proclamation for Silence was made, while the Judge of the Court of Vice-Admiralty pronounced Sentence of Death upon the Priſoner.

Judge Trott. Major Stede Bonnet, you ſtand here convicted upon two Indictments of Piracy: One by the Verdict of the Jury, and the other by your own Confeſſion.

Although you were indicted but for two Facts, yet you know that at your Trial it was fully proved, even by an unwilling Witneſs, that you piratically took and rifled no leſs than thirteen Veſſels, ſince you ſailed from North Carolina.

So that you might have been indicted and convicted of eleven more Acts of Piracy, ſince you took the Benefit of the King's Act of Grace, and pretended to leave off that wicked Courſe of Life.

Not to mention the many Acts of Piracy you committed before; for which, if your Pardon from Man was never ſo authentick, yet you muſt expect to anſwer for them before God.

You know that the Crimes you have committed are evil in themſelves, and contrary to the Light and Law of Nature, as well as the Law of God, by which you are commanded that you ſhould not ſteal, Exod. xx. 15. And the Apoſtle St. Paul expreſly affirms, that Thieves ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. vi. 10.

But to Theft you have added a greater Sin, which is Murder. How many you may have killed of thoſe that reſiſted you in the committing your former Piracies, I know not: But this we all know, that beſides the wounded, you killed no leſs than eighteen Perſons out of thoſe that were ſent by lawful Authority to ſuppreſs you, and to put a Stop to thoſe Rapines that you daily acted.

And however you may fancy that that was killing Men fairly in open Fight, yet this know, that the Power of the Sword not being committed into your Hands by any lawful Authority, you were not impower'd to uſe any Force, or to fight any one; and therefore thoſe Perſons that fell in that Action, in doing their Duty to their King and Country, were murdered, and their Blood now cries out for Vengeance and Juſtice againſt you: For it is the Voice of Nature, confirm'd by the Law of God, that whoſo ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed, Gen. ix. 6.

And

And consider that Death is not the only Punishment due to Murderers; for they are threaten'd to have their Part in the Lake which burneth with Fire and Brimstone, which is the second Death, Rev. 21. 8. See Chap. 22. 15. Words which carry that Terror with them, that considering your Circumstances and your Guilt, surely the Sound of them must make you tremble; For who can dwell with everlasting Burnings? Chap. 33. 14.

As the Testimony of your Conscience must convince you of the great and many Evils you have committed, by which you have highly offended God, and provoked most justly his Wrath and Indignation against you, so I suppose I need not tell you that the only way of obtaining Pardon and Remission of your Sins from God, is by a true and unfeigned Repentance, and Faith in Christ, by whose meritorious Death and Passion you can only hope for Salvation.

You being a Gentleman that have had the Advantage of a liberal Education, and being generally esteemed a Man of Letters, I believe it will be needless for me to explain to you the Nature of Repentance and Faith in Christ, they being so fully and so often mentioned in the Scriptures, that you cannot but know them. And therefore, perhaps, for that Reason it might be thought by some improper for me to have said so much to you, as I have already upon this occasion; neither should I have done it, but that considering the Course of your Life and Actions, I have just reason to fear that the Principles of Religion that had been instill'd into you by your Education, have been at least corrupted, if not entirely defac'd, by the Scepticism and Infidelity of this wicked Age; and that what time you allowed for Study was rather applied to the Polite Literature, and the vain Philosophy of the Times, than a serious Search after the Law and Will of God, as revealed to us in the Holy Scriptures: For had your Delight been in the Law of the Lord, and that you had meditated therein Day and Night, Psal. 1. 2. you would then have found that God's Word was a Lamp unto your Feet, and a Light to your Path, Psal. 119. 105. and that you would account all other Knowledge but Loss, in comparison of the Excellency of the Knowledge of Christ Jesus, Phil. 3. 8. who to them that are called is the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. even the hidden Wisdom which God ordained before the World, Chap. 2. 7.

You would then have esteemed the Scriptures as the Great Charter of Heaven, and which delivered to us not only the most perfect Laws and Rules of Life, but also discover'd to us those Acts of Pardon from God, wherein we have offended those righteous Laws: For in them only is to be found the great Mystery of fallen Man's Redemption, which the Angels desire to look into, 1 Pet. 1. 12.

And they would have taught you that Sin is the debasing of Human Nature, as being a Deviation from that Purity, Rectitude, and Holiness, in which God created us; and that Virtue and Religion, and walking by the Laws of God, were altogether preferable to the Ways of Sin and Satan; for that the Ways of Virtue are Ways of Pleasantness, and all her Paths are Peace, Prov. 3. 17.

But what you could not learn from God's Word, by reason of your carelesly, or but superficially considering the same, I hope the Course of his Providence, and the present Afflictions that he hath laid upon you, hath now convinced you of the same: For however in your seeming Prosperity you might make a Mock at your Sins, Prov. 3. 17. yet now that you see that God's Hand hath reached you, and brought you to publick Justice, I hope your present unhappy Circumstances hath made you seriously reflect upon your past Actions and Course of Life; and that you are now sensible of the Greatness of your Sins, and that you find the Burden of them is intolerable.

And that therefore being thus labouring, and heavy laden with Sin, Matt. 11. 28. you will esteem that as the most valuable Knowledge, which can shew you how you can be reconciled to that supreme God, whom you have so highly offended; and which can reveal to you him who is not only the powerful Advocate with the Father for you, 1 John 2. 1. but also who hath paid that Debt that is due for your Sins by his own Death upon the Cross for you, and thereby made full Satisfaction to the Justice of God. And this is to be found no where but in God's Word, which discovers to us that Lamb of God which taketh away the Sins of the World, John 1. 29. which is Christ the Son of God: For this know, and be assured, that there is none other Name under Heaven given among Men, whereby we must be saved, Acts 4. 12. but only by the Name of the Lord Jesus.

But then consider how he invites all Sinners to come unto him, and that he will give them rest, Matt. 11. 28. for he assures us that he came to seek and to save that which was lost; Luke 19. 10. Matt. 18. 11. and hath promised that he that cometh unto him, he will in no wise cast out, John 6. 37.

So that if now you will sincerely turn to him, tho' late, even at the eleventh Hour, Matt. 20. 6, 9. he will receive you.

But surely I need not tell you that the Terms of his Mercy is Faith and Repentance.

And do not mistake the Nature of Repentance to be only a bare Sorrow for your Sins, arising from the Consideration of the Evil and Punishment they have now brought upon you; but your Sorrow must arise from the Consideration of your having offended a gracious and merciful God.

But I shall not pretend to give you any particular Directions as to the Nature of Repentance: I consider that I speak to a Person whose Offences have proceeded not so much from his not knowing, as his slighting and neglecting his Duty: Neither is it proper for me to give Advice out of the way of my own Profession.

You may have that better delivered to you by those who have made Divinity their particular Study; and who by their Knowledge, as well as their Office, as being the Ambassadors of Christ, 2 Cor. 5. 20. are best qualified to give you Instructions therein.

I only heartily wish that what, in compassion to your Soul, I have now said to you upon this sad and solemn Occasion, by exhorting you in general to Faith and Repentance, may have that due Effect upon you, that thereby you may become a true Penitent.

And therefore having now discharged my Duty to you as a Christian, by giving you the best Counsel I can with respect to the Salvation of your Soul, I must now do my Office as a Judge.

The Sentence that the Law hath appointed to pass upon you for your Offences, and which this Court doth therefore award, is,

That you the ſaid Stede Bonnet ſhall go from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be hanged by the Neck till you are Dead. And the God of infinite Mercy be merciful to your Soul.

On Wedneſday December the 10th, 1718. the ſaid Major Stede Bonnet was executed at the White-Point near Charles-Town, according to the above Sentence.

CLXXXVII. Proceedings of the Houſe of Lords in Ireland againſt Jeffery Gilbert, Eſq; Lord Chief Baron, John Pocklington, Eſq; and Sir John St. Leger, Kt. Barons of the Exchequer there, for iſſuing Proceſs in the Cauſe of Anneſley and Sherlock, in oppoſition to an Order of that Houſe, July 28. 1719. 5 GEO. I.

Alexander Burrowes, High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, having been ſeveral times fined by the Court of Exchequer, for not obeying an Order of that Court, which he apprehended to be a Breach of a former Order of the Houſe of Lords, preſented the following Petition.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Aſſembled, the Humble Petition of Alexander Burrowes, Eſq; late Sheriff of the County of Kildare, Moſt humbly Sheweth,

THAT on the 3*d* Day of October, 1717. your Lordſhips were pleaſed to Order, that the High Sheriff of the County of Kildare ſhould forthwith put Heſter Sherlock into the Poſſeſſion of the Lands of Little-Rath, and other Lands in the ſaid Order mentioned, which were to be held by her till ſhe ſhould receive thereout the Sum of 1507*l*. 14*s*. 8*d*. Farthing, chargeable upon the ſaid Lands.

That Charles Nuttal, Eſq; then High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, in Obedience to, and by Vertue of your Lordſhips ſaid Order, on the ſixth Day of October aforeſaid, put the ſaid Heſter Sherlock into the Poſſeſſion of the Premiſſes; and ſhe was in the actual Poſſeſſion thereof, when your Petitioner was appointed and ſworn Sheriff of the ſaid County of Kildare for the Year, ending at Michaelmas 1718.

That on the 15th Day of March, 1717. an Injunction iſſued out of the Court of Exchequer, Sign'd by the Right Honourable Jeffery Gilbert, Eſq; Lord Chief Baron of the ſaid Court; and under the Seal thereof, directed to your Petitioner, being then Sheriff of the ſaid County; whereby your Petitioner was required immediately after Receipt thereof, purſuant to an Order of the ſaid Court of Exchequer, bearing Date the 19th Day February preceding, (although the Barons of the ſaid Court had due Notice of your Lordſhips ſaid Order of the 3d of October aforeſaid) to reſtore Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; to the Poſſeſſion of thoſe Lands, whereof the ſaid Heſter Sherlock was then actually poſſeſſed by Vertue of, and under your Lordſhips ſaid Order. And your Petitioner was alſo required by the ſaid Injunction to ſupport and keep the ſaid Maurice Anneſley in ſuch Poſſeſſion of the Premiſſes till the further Order of the ſaid Court, or till the ſaid Maurice Anneſley ſhou'd be thereout Evicted by due Courſe of Law, which Injunction was delivered to your Petitioner by John Anneſley (the ſaid Maurice's Brother) who required your Petitioner to give him the Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Lands, having a Letter of Attorney from his ſaid Brother for that Purpoſe, (as he informed your Petitioner) but your Petitioner refuſed to execute the ſaid Injunction, conceiving it to be a Breach of your Lordſhip's ſaid Order of the 3d of October 1717. and of the Rights and Privileges of this Honourable Houſe.

Whereupon the ſaid John Anneſley in his proper Perſon, on the 13th Day of May, 1718. moved the ſaid Court of Exchequer on his Affidavit, ſetting forth, that your Petitioner refuſed to execute the ſaid Injunction, and pray'd that the ſaid Affidavit might be read, which was order'd, and accordingly read by John Beauman, Gent. one of the Attornies of the ſaid Court, and the ſaid Lord Chief Baron, and the Honourable John Pocklington, Eſq; and Sir John St. Leger, Kt. two other of the Barons of the ſaid Court, then ſitting in the ſaid Court of Exchequer, Ordered, that your Petitioner ſhou'd be fined 40*s*. if he did not return the ſaid Injunction in four Days; and on ſeveral Motions afterwards made by the ſaid John Beauman, the ſaid Barons impoſed ſeveral Fines on your Petitioner, which amount to 77*l*. Sterl. and upon ſaid Beauman's Motion on the 30th Day of June, 1718. ordered an Attachment to the Purſuivant againſt your Petitioner, for the Matters aforeſaid, which accordingly iſſued.

That on the 7th Day of July, 1718. your Petitioner returned the ſaid Writ of Injunction, and thereon returned in hæc Verba, your Lordſhips ſaid Order of the 3*d* Day of October 1717. and the Reſolutions of this Honourable Houſe, bearing ing Date the 11th Day of February, 1703. on the Petition of Edward Earl of Meath, and Cecilia Counteſs of Meath his Wife; of which the ſaid Barons had likewiſe due Notice. And that your Petitioner by reaſon of your Lordſhips ſaid Order and Reſolutions, and of the Rights and Privileges of this Honourable Houſe, durſt not reſtore the ſaid Maurice Anneſley to the Poſſeſſion of the Premiſſes, as by the ſaid Writ of Injunction was required.

That all the ſaid Fines being impoſed on your Petitioner for not Returning ſaid Writ, and your Petitioner having complied with the ſaid Orders by Returning the ſame; the ſaid Barons Pocklington and St. Leger, on the 16th Day of July, 1718. ſitting publickly upon the Reducing of Fines in the Exchequer Chamber, and having heard the ſaid ſeveral Fines impoſed upon your Petitioner read unto them by the proper Officer, and being by him informed, that your Petitioner had Return'd ſaid Injunction, were pleaſed to reduce, and accordingly took off the ſaid Fines, upon paying 6*d.* in the Pound, (as by a Rule made by the Barons has been practis'd in ſuch Caſes, tho' the ſame was never taken before, as your Petitioner is informed;) but in the Afternoon of the ſaid Day, John Draycot, one of the Attorneys of the ſaid Court, (who paid the Box for your Petitioner on taking off the ſaid Fines) was ſent for by the ſaid Lord Chief Baron to his Lordſhip's Houſe, where the ſaid other two Barons then were; and after the ſaid Barons had heard the ſaid Writ of Injunction and Return read, and what was offered in behalf of your Petitioner in Juſtification of the ſaid Return, the ſaid Barons were pleaſed at his Lordſhip's ſaid Houſe, to oblige the ſaid Draycot to take back the Money he ſo paid for taking off ſaid Fines; and eſtreated the ſame, which have ſince iſſued in Proceſs againſt your Petitioner; although the ſaid Return was never complained of by the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, or his Council, nor had your Petitioner an Opportunity or Day given him to juſtify the Legality of the ſaid Return, tho' the ſame was prayed by the ſaid Draycot in behalf of your Petitioner.

That the ſaid Barons, without having any regard to the ſaid Return, on the 7th Day of November laſt, upon ſaid Beauman's Motion, ordered the ſaid Attachment to the Purſuivant to be renewed againſt your Petitioner; which having iſſued, your Petitioner was obliged to abſcond, and keep as private as poſſible, ſo that he could not attend his Affairs, whereby your Petitioner has ſuffered very much in his Fortune.

That by Reaſon of the ſaid Attachment to the Purſuivant, ſo from time to time iſſued againſt your Petitioner, he could not come upon his Accounts before the ſaid Barons in the ſaid Court of Exchequer: your Petitioner being adviſed and well aſſured, that if he ſhould appear in the ſaid Court, the ſaid Barons would commit your Petitioner into cloſe Cuſtody, for not obeying their ſaid Injunction: and the ſaid Barons taking Advantage of your Petitioner's ſaid Circumſtances, ordered your Petitioner to be Fined 1200*l.* and upwards, for not coming upon his Accounts; tho' your Petitioner always was, and ſtill is ready to give his Majeſty a juſt and true Account of his ſaid Office of Sheriff-wick, while he was concerned therein.

May it therefore pleaſe your Lordſhips to take the Premiſſes into Conſideration, and make ſuch Order therein for your Petitioner's Relief, as to your Lordſhips in your great Wiſdom ſhall ſeem meet, &c.

And your Petitioner will ever Pray,

ALEX. BURORWES.

Upon reading this Petition, the Houſe of Lords referr'd it to the Committee for Courts of Juſtice, who after an Examination into the Affair, made the following Report by the Lord Biſhop of Cloghet their Chairman.

My LORDS,

THE Lords Committees for Courts of Juſtice, to whom the Petition of Alexander Burrowes, Eſq; late Sheriff of the County of Kildare was referred, do find,

That by the Order of this Houſe of the 3*d* of October, 1717. Heſter Sherlock, Widow, was upon the 6th of the ſame Month put into the actual Poſſeſſion of the Lands of Little Rath, Bodingſtown, Darr and Mullenafooky in the County of Kildare, by Edward Conyers Under-Sheriff to Charles Nuttall, Eſq; then High Sheriff of the ſaid County; to continue therein till ſhe ſhould receive thereout the Sum of 1507*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* Farthing, chargeable on the ſaid Lands; and the ſaid Heſter continued ſo poſſeſſed by Vertue of the ſaid Order for near two Years.

That by the Minutes of the Chancery ſide of the Exchequer it appears, that the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, on the 19th February, 1717. produced a Letter [a] dated London the 8th February, 1717. ſign'd Cowper, C. in which two Papers [b] were incloſ'd, dated the 6th February,

[a] London, the 8th February, 1717. My Lord Chief Baron, By Order of the Houſe of Lords (a Copy whereof I herewith ſend you) I Tranſmit to your Lordſhip, and the reſt of the Barons of his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, the Order of the ſaid Houſe; whereby the Barons of that Court are commanded to Reſtore Mr. Anneſley to the Poſſeſſion of his Eſtate. Your Lordſhip will immediately communicate this to the reſt of the Barons, and let me know, as ſoon as can be, what is done by your ſelf, and the reſt of the Barons, in purſuance to their Lordſhips Order, as you ſee by the above-mentioned Copy I am ordered to require of you. I am your Lordſhip's moſt faithful Servant, Cowper, C.

To the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and the reſt of the Barons of the ſaid Court.

[b] Die Jovis, 6° Februarii, 1717. Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Aſſembled, That the Lord Chancellor do Tranſmit the Order of this Houſe to the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland, which requires them to cauſe Poſſeſſion to be forthwith delivered to Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; of the Lands of which he was diſpoſſeſſed, pending his Appeal in this Houſe, commanding the Barons of the Exchequer at the ſame time to return to this Houſe, as ſoon as they can, an Account of what ſhall be done therein.

William Cowper, Cler'. Parliamentor'.

Die Jovis 6 Die Februarii, 1717. Upon Report from the Committee of the whole Houſe, to whom it was Referr'd, to conſider by what Methods the Order of this Houſe, for the Reſtoring Poſſeſſion to Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; of the Eſtate in Ireland, whereof he was Diſpoſſeſs'd, pending his Appeal in this Houſe, may be moſt properly enforced and Executed: It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Aſſembled, that the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, do cauſe the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; to be forthwith Reſtored to the Poſſeſſions of the Lands of which he was Diſpoſſeſs'd, pending his Appeal, which was received by this Houſe the 8th Day of June laſt.

William Cowper, Cler'. Parliamentor'.

1717, ſign'd William Cowper, Cler' Parliamentor' directed to the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and the reſt of the Barons of the ſaid Court; alledged by the Lord Chief Baron to be Orders from the Lords in Great Britain, requiring them to reſtore Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; to the Poſſeſſion of the Lands he was diſpoſſeſſed of; pending his Appeal in the Houſe of Lords of Great Britain.

That on the ſaid 19th Day of February, 1717. in purſuance of the ſaid alledged Orders and Letter (inſerted at the end of this Report) tho' no Affidavit had been made, that the ſaid Orders or Letter were regularly Compared and ſigned, the ſaid Lord Chief Baron, and the other Barons, without any Motion by Council or Attorney, ordered an Injunction for the reſtoring the ſaid Maurice Anneſley to Poſſeſſion of the Lands he was diſpoſſeſs'd of, pending his ſaid Appeal, in the Name of the Chancellor, Treaſurer, and Barons of the ſaid Court of Exchequer, whereby the Sheriff or Sheriffs of the County or Counties where the ſaid Lands lay, was forthwith to put the ſaid Maurice into the Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Lands.

That in order to make out the ſaid Injunction, the ſaid Court ordered the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, his Attorney, Agent, Sollicitor or Council, ſhou'd forthwith attend the Chief Remembrancer, or his Deputy, with the Names of the Lands of which the ſaid Maurice Anneſley was ſo diſpoſſeſſed of, and alſo the County or Counties where the ſaid Lands lay.

That upon the 14th of March, 1717. Affidavit was made before the Lord Chief Baron by John Anneſley of Ballyſax in the County of Kildare, Eſq; wherein Heſter Sherlock was made Plantiff, and Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; Defendant; that he the ſaid John was diſpoſſeſs'd of the Lands of Little Rath, Darr, Bodingſtown, and Mullenafooky, which he the ſaid John held by Vertue of a Leaſe from the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, pending his ſaid Appeal; and that the ſaid John's Leaſe was then in being and undetermined.

That upon the 14th of March, 1717. the ſaid Affidavit of the ſaid John Anneſley was filed in the Chief Remembrancer's Office, in order to have the ſaid Injunction made out; but before the ſaid Injunction iſſued, it appears by the Examination of Mr. John Draycott, Attorney for Mrs. Sherlock in the Exchequer (after having been ſworn at the Bar of this Houſe) that he the ſaid Draycott attended Mr. John Becher, then Deputy Chief Remembrancer, at his Office, and in the Preſence of the ſaid John Anneſley informed the ſaid Becher, that the ſaid Affidavit was inſufficient, and that the ſaid Draycott was ready to prove, that the ſaid Maurice Anneſley was not at the time of his ſaid Appeal, nor at any time ſince, in Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Lands mentioned in the ſaid Affidavit; having ſold the ſaid Lands ſome Years before to Andrew Wilſon, Eſq; and Mrs. Frances Harman.

That by two Copies of Memorials out of the Regiſter's Office (for Regiſtring Deeds, &c. purſuant to Act of Parliament) proved by the ſaid Draycott to be true Copies of the Memorials remaining in the ſaid Office, it appears, that by Deeds of Leaſe and Releaſe bearing Date reſpectively the 1ſt and 2d Days of March, 1714. the Leaſe being made between Jeffery Paul, Eſq; of the one Part, and Andrew Wilſon, Eſq; of the other Part; and the Releaſe made between the ſaid Jeffery Paul of the firſt Part, ſaid Andrew Wilſon of the ſecond Part, and Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; on the third Part, whereby the ſeveral Lands of Little Rath, Darr, and Bodingſtown in the Barony of Naas, and County of Kildare, were for the Conſiderations therein mentioned, conveyed to the ſaid Andrew Wilſon and his Heirs for ever: And the Right Honourable the Lord Altham upon his Honour declared, that he knew that John Anneſley of Ballyſax, Eſq; had paid Rent to the ſaid Andrew Wilſon by Vertue of, and under the ſaid Purchaſe; but believed that the Lord Chief Baron or the other Barons knew nothing thereof. It alſo appears, that by Deeds of Leaſe and Releaſe, bearing Date reſpectively the 2*d* and 3*d* Days of April, 1715. made between Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; of the one Part, and Frances Harman of the City of Dublin, Widow, of the other Part; By which ſaid Releaſe the ſaid Maurice Anneſley for the Conſiderations therein mentioned, conveyed to the ſaid Frances Harman, and her Heirs for ever, the Lands of Mullenafooky in the ſaid County of Kildare. That notwithſtanding there was no County mentioned in the ſaid Affidavit, and ſaid Notice given of ſaid Sale to the ſaid Officer as aforeſaid; neither did it appear by the ſaid Affidavit, that the ſaid Maurice Anneſley was diſpoſſeſſed of the ſaid Lands therein mentioned, pending his Appeal; the ſaid Injunction iſſued directly to the Sheriff of the County of Kildare, bearing Date the 22*d* February, in the Fourth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, ſign'd Galfridus Gilbert, and returnable into the ſaid Court in Quindec. Paſch. then next enſuing.

That by an Affidavit ſworn by John Anneſley on the 7th of May, 1718. before Mr. Baron St. Leger, and filed in the Chief Remembrancer's Office the 9th of the ſame Month; wherein he made Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; Plantiff, and Heſter Sherlock, Widow, Defendant; in which the ſaid John Anneſley depoſed, that on or about the 15*th* of March preceding, he delivered the before-mentioned Injunction to Alexander Burrowes, Eſq; then High Sheriff of the ſaid County of Kildare; and ſhewed the ſaid Sheriff a Letter of Attorney from the Plantiff, impowering the ſaid John Anneſley to receive the Poſſeſſion of the Lands in the ſaid Injunction mentioned; but the ſaid Sheriff refuſed to execute the ſaid Injunction.

That the ſaid John Anneſley in his proper Perſon, on the 13th of the ſaid Month, moved the ſaid Court upon an atteſted Copy of the ſaid Affidavit; but the ſaid Draycott inſiſting, that there was no ſuch Cauſe in Court, the ſaid Anneſley was directed by the ſaid Court to amend his Affidavit and move it again.

That the ſaid Anneſley thereupon eraſed and altered the ſaid Copy, and made Heſter Sherlock, Widow, Defendant; and ſwore the ſame before Mr. Baron St. Leger, and filed the ſaid Affidavit ſo amended in the Chief Remembrancer's Office, without any Alteration made in the Body of the ſaid Affidavit; which was proved by the Depoſition of Daniel Reading, Eſq; Deputy Chief Remembrancer; who was ſworn at the Bar of this Houſe, and examined before the ſaid Lords Committees.

That the ſame Day (viz.) 13th May, upon reading the ſaid Affidavit, the ſaid Court was informed by Counſellor Dixon, that what was ſworn in the ſaid Affidavit could not be true: For that the ſaid Anneſley ſwore he had a Letter of Attorney from the Plantiff (who was Mrs. Sherlock) to receive Poſſeſſion of the Lands therein mentioned; when, in truth, Mrs. Sherlock was then in actual Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Lands.

That the Lord Chief Baron ſaid it was only a Miſtake, and without rectifying the ſame, on Motion of Mr. John Beauman an Attorney, the Court ordered the ſaid Sheriff to be fin'd forty Shillings, if he did not return the ſaid Injunction in four Days; and on ſaid Beauman's ſeveral Motions, there were Fines at ſeveral Times laid upon the ſaid Sheriff for not returning the ſaid Injunction, which amounted to 77*l.* which was proved by the Minutes of the ſaid Court, and the Teſtimony of the ſaid Draycott.

That the ſaid Draycott likewiſe proved, that the ſaid Lord Chief Baron, and the other Barons, had due notice of the ſaid Order of this Houſe; and the Reſolutions thereof made the 11th February, 1703. before any Proceedings were had in the ſaid Cauſe, ſubſequent to the ſaid Order of this Houſe of the 3d of October, 1717. and that the ſaid Anneſley and Beauman were ſerved with Copies of the ſaid Order and Reſolutions, before any Motions were made by them in the ſaid Cauſe.

That by the Minutes of the 13th June, 1718. taken in the ſaid Court, it appears, that Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer declared, That the Orders of the Houſe of Lords of England being only directed to the Barons of that Court; and that he found, that the Order of that Court, which was made thereon, was made, as if done by him, and the Treaſurer, as well as by the Barons; that he apprehended, that in regard the ſaid Orders were not directed to him, or he preſent when the ſaid Order of the Court of Exchequer was made, That he had nothing to do therewith, and did not conſent thereto.

That it appeared by the Teſtimony of the ſaid Mr. Reading, that the ſaid Cauſe between Sherlock and Anneſley was of the Chancery Side of the Exchequer; and that all Bills in the Chancery Side of the ſaid Court were directed to the Chancellor, Treaſurer and Barons, and believed, that if a Bill was directed otherwiſe, it would be Error.

That upon the 30th of June, 1718. on Motion of the ſaid Beauman, an Attachment to the Purſuivant was awarded againſt the ſaid Burrowes for not returning the ſaid Injunction, bearing Teſt the 1ſt Day of July, in the Fourth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, and returnable before the Chancellor, Treaſurer, and Barons of the ſaid Court, in Craſt. Animar. then next.

That upon the 7th July, 1718. the ſaid Burrowes return'd the ſaid Injunction, and the ſaid Beauman was acquainted therewith by the ſaid Draycott; who told the ſaid Beauman, that he was ready to pay him the Coſt of impoſing the ſaid Fines and Purſuivant, which the ſaid Beauman refuſed, and told the ſaid Draycott, that he muſt firſt have the ſaid Sheriff in Cuſtody: That the ſaid Draycott applied again to the ſaid Beauman; and the ſaid Beauman ſaid, he muſt firſt lay the ſaid Sheriff by the Heels.

That by the Teſtimony of the ſaid Mr. Reading and Mr. Draycott, Barons Pocklington and St. Leger, upon 16th July 1718. ſat in the Exchequer-Chamber on the reducing of Fines: That the Fines impoſed upon the ſaid Sheriff were then read by Mr. Becher the Officer, who inform'd the ſaid Barons, that the ſaid Injunction was return'd; that a Piſtole and ſeven Half Crowns were paid to the Box, and the ſaid Fines were then taken off by the ſaid Barons.

That upon the ſame Day in the Afternoon, the ſaid Becher, Reading, and Draycott were ſent for to the Lord Chief Baron's Houſe, where the two other Barons were with his Lordſhip; that the ſaid Injunction was ſent for, and ſaid Injunction and Return thereon was read, and the Barons declared that it was no Return; that the ſaid Draycott told his Lordſhip, that he hoped he would at leaſt reſpite the ſaid Fines till the then next Term, or give the ſaid Sheriff an Opportunity to juſtify his ſaid Return, which was refuſed: That the Liſt of Fines, which was that Day read in the Exchequer-Chamber, was then call'd for, and the Fines impoſed upon the ſaid Burrowes were then read; That the ſaid Draycott was obliged to take back the ſaid Money, which he had paid to the Box for taking off the ſaid Fines, and the ſame were then eſtreated.

That the Return made by the Sheriff upon the ſaid Injunction, was to this Purpoſe, (viz.) That before the ſaid Writ came to him, the Order of this Houſe of the 3d of October, 1717. and the Reſolutions of this Houſe of the 11th of February, 1703. were delivered to him, which he recites in hæc verba. Your Lordſhip will immediately communicate this to the reſt of the Barons, and return, as ſoon as you can, an Account of what ſhall be done by yourſelf, and the reſt of the Barons, in Purſuance of your Lordſhip's ſaid Orders, as you ſee by the abovementioned Copy I am order'd to require of you.

I am, Your Lordſhip's moſt faithful Servant, Parker, C.

Upon Report from the Lords Committees, appointed to enquire into the Reaſon of the Delay, in not obeying the Orders of this Houſe, relating to the Appeal of Maurice Anneſley, Eſq; and how the ſame may more properly be enforced: It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland be, and are hereby directed to proceed by the moſt ſpeedy and effectual Methods, to cauſe Poſſeſſion of the Eſtate of the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, as required by Order of this Houſe of the 6th of February laſt, to be reſtored to him.

William Cowper, Cler' Parliamentor'.

regularly ſigned and compared? and without Motion of Council or Attorney, it was ordered in the Name of the Chancellor and Treaſurer, Lord Chief Baron, and the reſt of the Barons of his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, that the Injunction of that Court ſhould forthwith iſſue, directed to the ſaid Heſter Sherlock, and to the ſeveral and reſpective Tenants of the Lands in Queſtion; requiring them, and every of them, quietly to reſtore to the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, the Poſſeſſion of the Town and Lands of Little Rath, Bodingſtown, Darr, and Mullenafooky, lying and being in the County of Kildare; the ſaid Lands by the ſaid Barons ſuppoſed to be comprehended in the ſaid Order.

That the ſaid Injunction was ordered to be ſerved upon the ſaid Perſons by the Purſuivant attending the ſaid Court, or by any other Perſon or Perſons whom the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, or his Agent ſhould appoint: And the ſaid Maurice Anneſley, or his Agent, was thereby required to leave the Names of the ſeveral and reſpective Tenants of the ſaid Lands at the proper Office, in order to be inſerted in the ſaid Injunction: And alſo ordered, that the Rents of the ſaid Lands remaining in the ſeveral Tenants Hands from the Time the ſaid Heſter Sherlock was put in Poſſeſſion, ſhou'd be forthwith by them paid over to the ſaid Maurice Anneſley; and that a Copy of the ſaid Order ſhould be ſerved upon the ſaid ſeveral Tenants of the ſaid Lands, together with the ſaid Injunction: Tho' by the Order of the Houſe of Lords of Great Britain, the Barons were only directed to oblige Heſter Sherlock to account before them upon Oath, for the Rents of the ſaid Lands, received by her ſince her gaining the Poſſeſſion thereof; which ſhe was to pay to Maurice Anneſley, without Prejudice in Caſe of an Appeal.

That purſuant to the ſaid Order of the 4th of February, an Injunction iſſued out of the ſaid Court, ſign'd *Geff. The ſaid Lords Committees had alſo the Oath adminiſtred to the Barons of the Exchequer, laid before them by Mr. Hartley Hutchinſon, Deputy Clerk of the Crown in the High Court of Chancery, and is as follows, viz.

Cryer. O yes, &c. If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeants, or the King's Attorney, of the Felony and Murder whereof the Priſoners ſtand indicted before this Inqueſt be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for the Priſoners now ſtand at the Bar upon their Deliverance.

Clerk of the Crown. Hugh Reaſon hold up your Hand, Robert Tranter hold up your Hand.

Gentlemen of the Jury look upon the Priſoners and hearken to their Cauſe; they ſtand indicted, for that they not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the 17th Day of October laſt, about the Hour of Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon of the ſaid Day, by Force and Arms, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middleſex, in and upon one Edward Lutterel, Eſq; in the Peace of God and of our Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought did make an Aſſault; and that the ſaid Hugh Reaſon, with a Piſtol of the Value of 5 s. then and there charged with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets; which ſaid Piſtol the ſaid Hugh Reaſon in his Right Hand then and there had and held into and againſt the aforeſaid Edward Lutterell, then and there feloniouſly and of his Malice afore-thought did ſhoot off and diſcharge: And that the ſaid Hugh Reaſon with the leaden Bullets aforeſaid iſſuing and ſhot off out of the Piſtol aforeſaid, then and there by the Force of the ſaid Powder, the ſaid Edward Lutterell in and upon the right Part of the Body of the ſaid Edward Lutterell, under the right Pap of the ſaid Edward Lutterell, then and there feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought ſtruck: And that the ſaid Hugh Reaſon then and there feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforeſaid, gave to the ſaid Edward Lutterell, with the leaden Bullets aforeſaid, out of the ſaid Piſtol then and there by Force of the ſaid Powder ſhot off and diſcharged in and againſt the right part of the Body of the ſaid Edward Lutterell, one mortal Wound of the breadth of one Inch, and the depth of nine Inches, of which ſaid mortal Wound the ſaid Edward Lutterell, from the ſaid tenth Hour of the ſaid 17th Day of October, untill the tenth Hour in the Afternoon of the ſaid Day he languiſhed, and languiſhing lived, at which ſaid Hour the ſaid Edward Lutterell, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, of the Wound aforeſaid, died: And that the ſaid Robert Tranter at the time of the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, by the ſaid Hugh Reaſon in manner and form aforeſaid, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforeſaid, committed and perpetrated, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforeſaid there was preſent, aiding, abetting, aſſiſting, comforting and maintaining the ſaid Hugh Reaſon to commit the aforeſaid Felony and Murder in manner and form aforeſaid. And the Jury ſay, that the ſaid Hugh Reaſon and Robert Tranter the ſaid Edward Lutterell in manner and form aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, did kill and murder againſt his Majeſty's Peace, &c.

They likewiſe ſtand charged on the Coroner's Inqueſt for the ſaid Murder.

Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, and thereto have pleaded Not Guilty; and for their Trial have put themſelves upon God and their Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire whether they be guilty of this Felony and Murder in Manner and Form as they ſtand indicted, or not guilty; if you find them guilty, you ſhall inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had at the time of the ſaid Felony and Murder committed, or at any time ſince: If you find them not guilty, you ſhall inquire whether they fled for it: If you find that they did fly for it, you ſhall inquire of their Goods and Chattels as if you found them guilty; if you find them not guilty, and that they did not fly for it, ſay ſo and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Strange. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel in this caſe for the King. This is an Indictment againſt the Defendants Hugh Reaſon and Robert Tranter for the Murder of Mr. Lutterel. The Indictment ſets forth, that the Defendants not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, on the 17th of October laſt at Ten of the Clock in the Morning, in the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middleſex, did make an Aſſault on Edward Lutterell, Eſq; that the Defendant

Hugh Reaſon with a Piſtol charged with Gunpowder and Bullets, which he then and there held in his Right Hand, into and againſt the ſaid Edward Lutterell then and there feloniouſly, and of his Malice afore-thought, did ſhoot off and diſcharge, and that the Priſoner Hugh Reaſon with the leaden Bullets aforeſaid, iſſuing and ſhot off out of the Piſtol aforeſaid, then and there by the Force of the ſaid Powder the ſaid Edward Lutterell, in and upon the right part of the Body of the ſaid Edward Lutterell, under the right Pap of the ſaid Edward Lutterell, then and there feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought ſtruck, and that the ſaid Hugh Reaſon then and there feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-thought, did give to the ſaid Edward Lutterell, with the leaden Bullets aforeſaid, out of the ſaid Piſtol, then and there by Force of the ſaid Powder ſhot off and diſcharged in and againſt the right Part of the Body of the ſaid Edward Lutterell, under the right Pap of the ſaid Edward Lutterell, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, and the Depth of nine Inches, of which mortal Wound the ſaid Edward Lutterell, from the ſaid 10th Hour of the ſaid 17th of October, to the 10th Hour in the Afternoon of the ſaid Day languiſhed, and languiſhing lived, at which time the ſaid Edward Lutterell at the Pariſh aforeſaid, of the Wound aforeſaid, died: And that the other Defendant Robert Tranter, was aiding and aſſiſting the ſaid Hugh Reaſon to commit the ſaid Felony and Murder in manner and form aforeſaid, and that they the ſaid Hugh Reaſon and Robert Tranter, the ſaid Edward Lutterell in manner and form aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of their Malice afore-thought did kill and murder, which is laid to be againſt the Peace of his Majeſty, his Crown and Dignity, to which the Defendants have ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty; they are likewiſe charged on the Coroner's Inqueſt for the ſaid Murder. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and if we prove them guilty you will find them ſo.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel in this Caſe for the King, the two Priſoners at the Bar, Hugh Reaſon, and Robert Tranter, ſtand indicted before you, and are charged before you on the Coroner's Inqueſt, for the Murder of Edward Lutterell, Eſq; and according to my Inſtructions, which I will keep exactly to, he came by his Death in this manner: On the 17th of October laſt, this Gentleman coming out of his Lodgings in Surrey-ſtreet, going towards the Water ſide to take Water at the Stairs there, the two Priſoners came to him and did arreſt him, and told him, they arreſted him at the Suit of one Mr. Rous for 10 l. He ſubmitted to their Arreſt, deſired them to return with him to his Lodging and he would pay the Money: They conſented, and both return'd to the Door with him, but Reaſon was the only Perſon that went up with him; Tranter ſaid he would go and fetch the Attorney or Sollicitor's Bill: The Deceaſed went up one Pair of Stairs, Reaſon went with him, they were together in the Dining-Room, Words happened between them, as will come from the Evidence; they called him Rogue, Raſcal, and Minter, charged him as a Perſon that refuſed to pay honeſt Debts, and ſheltered himſelf under reputed Places of Security. He directed his Lady, who was then in her Bedchamber on the ſame Floor up one Pair of Stairs, to go and fetch the Money, by which it may be ſuppoſed that it was in order to pay the Debt, but the Witneſs did not hear the Sum, but it is reaſonable to preſume, he had told her what it did come to. The Defendant Reaſon ſaid, You muſt order more than that, I muſt have three Guineas for my Civility: No, ſays the Deceaſed, you have not uſed me ſo as to deſerve three Guineas or any other Sum for Civility, without making any Demand you arreſted me publickly in the Street. My Lord, according to my Inſtructions, the Deceaſed went up one Pair of Stairs, and he returned down with a Caſe of Piſtols; the Maid Servant, Heſter Gerrard, ſeeing him with thoſe Piſtols, ſaid to him, For God ſake what buſineſs have you with thoſe Piſtols? Pray lay the Piſtols away, Miſchief may happen: Says he, I deſign to do them no harm, they have uſed me ill, called me Rogue, Raſcal, and Minter, I do not deſign to hurt them, but will not be ill uſed by them. The Maid preſs'd him, for God ſake lay them down, your Lady will be frighted. He went to the far end of the Room, laid down the Piſtols, and retreated to the Fire-place. By this time there was a knocking at the Door, and the Boy Thomas Hargrave went to let in the Perſon that knock'd, and it proved the Defendant Tranter: Tranter run haſtily up Stairs, and the Boy was following him, and hearing a Noiſe in the Dining Room, as my Inſtructions are, he haſtened the earlier to ſee what the matter was; as ſoon as he came into the Dining Room, the firſt thing he ſaw was, Tranter holding the Deceaſed's Arm in his, and the other Defendant Reaſon ſtabbing him, and he ſaw the Stab: He was going to give a ſecond Stab, but the Boy took hold of the Sword Arm; Reaſon takes the Sword with his other Hand, and ſays to the Boy, Damn you, if you don't get out of the Room, you ſhall die before your Maſter: Upon this he ſaw a ſecond Paſs at the Gentleman, and he cryed Murder: Upon his crying Murder, the Maid Servant Sarah came, and ſhe ſays ſhe ſaw her Maſter upon his Back on the Floor with his Hands up begging for Mercy, and ſaw the Men ſtab him ſeveral times: ſhe likewiſe cries out Murder, and as ſhe went down the Stairs, and not till then, ſhe heard a Piſtol go off, which muſt be after the poor wounded mangled Man lay upon the Floor. Some time after, not two Minutes, ſhe heard another Piſtol go off; by this time the Noiſe was ſo great that the Neighbourhood came in, particularly one Waters a Waterman; Waters runs up Stairs, and he finds the Deceaſed at the further end of the Room, lying there in a ſtrange mangled Condition; one of the Priſoners endeavour'd to make his Eſcape, but he was ſeized, and ſo was the other.

It was thought proper in this dying Condition, as it was apprehended the poor Gentleman was in, that they ſhould ſend for the Curate of the Pariſh, Mr. Peters; Mr. Peters did come, and according to my Inſtructions, as they apprehended him to be dying, ſays a Friend of the Defendants, Pray inquire of the Gentleman how this Accident happened. He did ſo, and he will give you an Account of what paſs'd between him and the Deceaſed before the Juſtices of the Peace came. But Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haynes, the two Juſtices of the Peace, ſoon after came in, and at their Requeſt they having no Clerk with them, Mr. Peters was pleaſed to ſit down and take the Examination in writing; having given him his Oath, Mr. Peters was pleaſed to ſet it down; the Subſtance of what he did ſay was this, The Bailiffs took the Piſtols from my Table and ſhot me twice, the fat Man run me thro', and then drew my Sword, which I broke my ſelf in his Hand, and beg'd for my Life: I never fired a Piſtol, nor made one Puſh, they both run me thro', I offer'd to pay them the Money. The Condition the Gentleman was in at that time was ſuch, as it was not thought reaſonable that he ſhould ſign it, but they will give you an account that he was perfectly ſenſible. My Lord, in the Afternoon ſomebody ſent for Mr. Peters the Clergyman again, and it was with an intent that the Deceaſed might receive the Holy Sacrament; and Mr. Peters, like a prudent Man, ſays, According to the Account you have given you have been hardly uſed, however it becomes me to hope and deſire, and you to expreſs, that you are in Charity, before I adminiſter the Holy Sacrament. Says he, As I ſhall appear before the great God of Heaven, what I told you is true, I was barbarouſly murder'd; however I am in perfect Charity with them, I forgive them, and I pray Almighty God to forgive them their Indiſcretion. My Lord, he did continue for ſome time in a languiſhing Way, tho' all Care was taken to ſave his Life. On Examination after his Death, (which is a ſad Circumſtance in the Caſe) there are found no leſs than ten Wounds on him, many of them mortal; he did continue till the 17th about Ten at Night and then he died. My Lord, here is a Caſe of great Conſideration; and as on the one hand the Defendants are Officers and Miniſters of Juſtice, and muſt be protected in ſerving of their Proceſs, and as long as they do their Duty muſt not be abuſed; yet when People ſubmit to their Authority, they too muſt be protected, and the Law, that requires the one to ſubmit, requires the other to protect and preſerve their Lives; and if any Officer gives unreaſonable Correction, where they make no Reſiſtance in Caſes of Durance only, where Hardſhips and Difficulties are put upon them, ſo as to ſhorten their Lives. I ſubmit it to my Lord's Direction, whether they are not guilty of Murder. To ſhew how careful the Law is of the Life of a Man, my Lord Coke * ſays, If any Man who is in Cuſtody of a Goaler dies, the Coroner's Inqueſt muſt ſit upon him; and it is for this Reaſon, that the King may be appriſed that the Subject had no foul Play, but came to a natural Death; this Policy of Law is a good one. Theſe, Gentlemen, are the Bounds which will be taken into Conſideration, and when we have called our Witneſſes, it muſt be left to my Lord's Direction and your Conſideration, whether the Defendants Caſe is a Caſe to be juſtified, or whether or no they won't deſerve the Puniſhment due to Ruffians and Aſſaſſins.

Mr. Reeve. I am Counſel likewiſe in this Caſe for the King: The Facts have been fully open'd in every particular Circumſtance, and I apprehend this is not a Matter proper for us to ſhew with its uſual Aggravations; for conſidering the Priſoners are not allowed Counſel, we are only to lay the Matter fairly before the Jury and the Court, both in relation to Matters of Fact and of Law.

True, the Defendants are Officers of Juſtice, and as ſuch are entitled to the Protection of the Law, ſo far as the Law authorizes them in what they do, but in caſe they exceed that Authority, and uſe Barbarity to their Priſoners, where there is no occaſion for it, they exceed the Bounds of their Authority, and what happens afterwards by a needleſs Quarrel, they themſelves are the occaſion of, and if a Perſon is killed, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip if they are not guilty of Murder.

We agree, my Lord, if Reſiſtance is made by a Perſon arreſted, and it is neceſſary for the Preſervation of the Priſoner, or for the Life of the Officer, if his Life is attempted by the Priſoner, and in doing what is neceſſary for their Defence, and for the keeping of their Priſoner, there happens a Quarrel commenced by the Fault of the Priſoner, we agree the Officers are not to be blamed: But if a Quarrel is commenced by the Officers againſt a Priſoner ſubmitting to the Law, and to their Authority, and willing to do that which the Law requires, namely, to pay the Debt, then only for Civility Money they uſe Durance, and they uſe him ill, and they begin the Quarrel and fight with the Man on that account, we muſt ſubmit it, whether it is not Murder. We muſt agree in our Evidence, that there was not any Perſon preſent at the time of the beginning of the Quarrel, nor who continued there during the Quarrel: But from the Circumſtances, and the Evidence we have to lay before the Jury, it will amount to a Proof, that this Quarrel was begun by the Officer. It is true, there were Piſtols fetch'd by the Deceaſed, but theſe Piſtols, if we ſhew they were not deſigned to be made uſe of to injure the Bailiffs, but were only for his own Preſervation, if he ſhould be ill uſed by them; if after he had taken theſe Piſtols he diſmiſs'd himſelf from the Cuſtody of theſe Piſtols, as we apprehend will appear from the Evidence, and they take up theſe Piſtols, and with one of theſe Piſtols ſhoot their Priſoner, we apprehend that will take off the Circumſtances, that would ſeem in favour of them. My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes, and prove all our Facts, and then we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Direction to the Jury, whether on thoſe Facts it doth not appear that the Offence committed is Murder.

L. C. J. Call your Witneſſes.

Thomas Hargrave ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, Thomas Hargrave was the Deceaſed's Servant, and he ſaw more than any Body; he will give your Lordſhip an account of the Matter.

Serj. Cheſhire. Thomas Hargrave, do you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know in relation to your late Maſter Mr. Lutterell, what paſt between him and the Defendants, and either of them, tell from the beginning, and be ſure you tell the Truth.

At the Priſoners Deſire the other Witneſſes were order'd out of Court.

Hargrave. The firſt beginning, my Lord, was my Maſter ſent me out of the Houſe to call a Pair of Oars to go up to Weſtminſter on Tueſday between Nine and Ten a Clock.

L. C. Juſt. What Day of the Month?

Hargrave. I don't know; with that I went and called a Pair of Oars, and came back and told him I had called them; ſays he, Thomas get your Hat and go along with me; when we had got two or three Doors from our Lodging, a little Man, whose Name is Tranter, clapt him on the Shoulder, and presently after came another Man Reason, and said they arrested him; with that my Master says, Gentlemen, if you will go with me, you shall have your Money, my Wife is with Child, and I am afraid she will be frightened.

* 3. Inſt. 52. 91.

No, Damn you, we will go with no such Minter, with that with great Persuasion my Master got them to go to his Lodging; my Master said, fetch the Attorney and I will pay the Money: Reason sent Tranter for the Attorney, and Reason went up with my Master, who said to my Mistress, My Dear, don't be frightened, here are two Rascals who have abused me in the Street; and my Mistress said to me, Go to my Nephew, I went, but he did not immediately come; when I returned I went into the Room, and there was no harm then, my Master was walking about the Room, and Reason stood with his Back to the Ceiling with his Face to the Pistols. My Master said, Let me see your Warrant: Reason shew'd it him, and he said, wipe your Arse with it, and throw'd it down upon the Ground. Reason ask'd for Civility Money; my Master said, No, he would give him none, for he had not used him well. At last Tranter came; I open'd the Door to him, he run up Stairs, I staid to shut the Door, and I heard a Rustling, or Noise; upon which I ran up Stairs after Tranter, and I saw Tranter close with my Master and throw him against the Closet Door, and Reason took his Sword and run my Master thro'; I took Reason hold of the Sword Arm, and he said, Damn me, if you don't go out of the Room you shall die before your Master; I heard no Pistol all that time.

Serj. Cheshire. Did you go in after the Pistol was shot off to see your Master?

Hargrave. No, I did not see him till after he was carried into t'other Room.

Serj. Cheshire. Do you know of any Direction given by your Master about fetching the Money?

Hargrave. Yes, I heard my Master say to my Mistress, Fetch the Money and I will pay these Rascals.

Mr. Reeve. I think you say upon hearing of a Scuffle you ran up Stairs, and you saw Tranter run your Master against the Closet Door.

Hargrave. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Reeve. Had your Master any Weapon?

Hargrave. No.

Mr. Reeve. Where were the Pistols?

Hargrave. One was on the Table, and the other in the Window.

Mr. Hungerford. How far were the Pistols from your Master, were they within his Reach?

Hargrave. No, Sir.

Mr. Reeve. You say you saw him stab your Master.

Hargrave. Yes.

Mr. Reeve. Was there any Attempt to give another Stab?

Hargrave. Yes, he went to give another Stab, I took him by the Sword Arm, and he said, Damn you, you shall die before your Master; upon that I went and cried out Murder.

L. C. Just. You say that before that he demanded Civility Money.

Hargrave. Yes.

L. C. Just. What said your Master?

Hargrave. He said, I will give no Rascals as you are Civility Money, for you have shew'd me no Civility.

L. C. Just. Then you went down by your Mistress's Direction to call her Nephew; when you return'd, before you came up, what did you hear? Did you hear any Noise, or Bustle, or Blow?

Hargrave. No.

L. C. Just. None at all?

Hargrave. No, it was after Tranter came that I went up Stairs again.

L. C. Just. When Tranter came you opened the Door to him, and followed him up Stairs.

Hargrave. Yes.

L. C. Just. Did you hear before Tranter enter'd the Room any Noise, or Stroke?

Hargrave. Only two or three Words.

L. C. Just. What were those Words?

Hargrave. I don't know.

Mr. Hungerford. What said Reason, when your Master told him he did not use him well?

Hargrave. Then he was mad, he swore and called him a great many Names, called him a Minter, and I don't know what.

Reason. Did not your Master request us to go to the Tilt-yard Coffee-house?

Hargrave. No, he said, if you'll go with me I will pay the Money; you said, I will go with no such Minter.

L. C. Just. Did your Master desire them to go to any particular Place?

Hargrave. He said, If they would go with him to Westminster, he would pay them the Money; but they refused and said, they would go with no such Minter.

L. C. Just. Did your Master propose to go to his own Lodgings?

Hargrave. Yes, when they would not let him go there.

L. C. Just. Why would he had them have gone to Westminster?

Hargrave. Because for fear of frightning his Wife, she was great with Child; with great Persuasion he got them to go to his Lodging.

Reason. Did he not ask us to go to his Lodging?

Hargrave. I don't know, I did not hear him.

L. C. Just. You said just now with much ado your Master persuaded them to go to his Lodging, now you say you did not hear him ask them to go; I only admonish you not to be too hasty in your Answers, but to consider. Who proposed going to your Master's Lodging?

Hargrave. Why my Master, when they would not go there.

Reason. Did not I ask him to go to the Crown Tavern?

Hargrave. Not that I heard; I heard Reason bid Tranter go for the Attorney.

L. C. Just. Did you hear Tranter ask Mr. Lutterell to go to the Crown-Tavern.

Hargrave. No, Sir.

Tranter. At whose Desire did I go to the Attorney?

Hargrave. Why my Master said, fetch your Attorney, and I will pay you your Money.

Tranter. Did not I desire your Master to send you, and he said, Damn you, you shall go?

Hargrave. No, I heard no such thing.

Hester Gerrard sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know when the Defendants, or either of them were at Mr. Lutterell's Lodgings, and what pass'd there; begin at the beginning, tell all you know.

Hester.

Heſter. I happen'd to be in the Kitchen when my Maſter came in.

Serj. Cheſhire. Tell us the time and the Day of the Month.

Heſter. I don't know indeed, it was of a Tueſday.

Serj. Cheſhire. Do you know what Month?

Heſter. I don't know. Being in the Kitchen I heard my Maſter return again, when he was but juſt gone out before; hearing his Tongue I ſtep'd to the Stairs, and wonder'd he ſhould come in again ſo ſoon; I ſaw him come in with another Man, I heard him go up Stairs, I liſten'd, and I heard him ſpeak loud; I underſtood he was arreſted, I was ſurpris'd at it; I ſtaid a little while till he went up, then I went up to my Miſtreſs, becauſe ſhe was with Child; I was afraid ſhe would be frighted; when I came up ſhe was in the Dining-Room with my Maſter and Mr. Reaſon, and in a little time ſhe went out of the Dining-Room into the Bed-Chamber, and ſhe was heaving, and in ſome time my Maſter and Mr. Reaſon was in the Room together, my Maſter talk'd and walk'd about the Room; I ſtaid with my Miſtreſs ſome time, and at laſt I heard my Maſter go up Stairs, and he came down immediately again; upon this I went into the Room, my Maſter had two Piſtols, and he put them on each ſide of his Coat; I aſk'd him, What do you do with thoſe Piſtols? if my Miſtreſs comes ſhe will be frighted: Says he, I do not deſign to do any hurt. Then he told me how they had abuſed him in the Street, and called him Miniter; this Man (pointing to Reaſon) was in the Room all the time. Sir, ſays I, pray lay down the Piſtols, and he came and laid down both the Piſtols on the Table at my Requeſt, and he had only his Cane in his Hand. I went into the Room again to my Miſtreſs, and when I came there ſhe was in her Cloſet taking out ſome Money: She got up, lock'd the Cloſet Door, and ſat down on the Bed-ſide, and was frighted. I perſuaded her not to be frighted: Afterwards I heard ſomebody knock at the Door, and I ſtep'd out to the top of the Stairs to ſee who came in, and I ſaw I ſuppoſe that Man: (pointing to Tranter) the Boy let him in, I ſaw him come along the Entry and the Boy follow him: upon that I went into my Miſtreſs, and ſaid there was a ſecond Perſon come, I don't like him, ſhall I ſtop him on the Stairs; he went into the Room, and I ſaw the Boy follow him; I went into my Miſtreſs again for fear ſhe ſhould be frighten'd; I heard a Noiſe, but did not know what it was; I heard the Noiſe grow greater; I ſtep'd ſoftly thro' the Paſſage, threw open the Dining-Room Door, and I ſaw this Gentleman (pointing to Reaſon) ſtabbing my Maſter with all his Might and Main, and he on his Back on the Floor, lifting up his Hands as if he beg'd for Mercy. The other Bailiff had his Back towards me, ſtanding by the ſide of my Maſter; I ran to the Door and cried out Murder; then off went the Piſtol: I was frighten'd, for I thought they had ſhot after me; and in about two Minutes there went off another.

Mr. Hungerford. In that Place where your Maſter was, could he come at the Piſtols?

Heſter. No, my Maſter had his two Hands lifted up thus.

Mr. Hungerford. Had your Maſter any thing in his Hand.

Heſter. No.

Serj. Cheſhire. What Condition did you leave your Maſter in when you went out of the Room?

Heſter. He was upon the Ground on his Back, and his two Hands lifted up thus, and Mr. Reaſon ſtabbing him when upon the Ground; he ſtab'd him upon the left ſide.

Serj. Cheſhire. I aſk you, conſider, by the Oath you have taken, whether the Piſtol did go off till after you had left your Maſter, and he was ſtabbing of him?

Heſter. It was after that I ſaw him, within two Minutes after; upon my crying out Murder the People came up Stairs.

Reaſon. How long was this after Tranter came?

Heſter. Immediately.

Reaſon. How long was it after Tranter came in before you ſaw this?

Heſter. Not long, all the Action was not long.

Mr. Strange. You did not obſerve where the Piſtols lay?

Heſter. No.

Mr. Strange. Did you obſerve your Maſter had any thing in his Hand?

Heſter. No, I did not.

L. C. Juſt. Did you ſee your Maſter when he went out in the Morning?

Heſter. No, I heard him.

L. C. Juſt. You ſaw him when he returned?

Heſter. Not till he was up in the Dining-Room.

L. C. Juſt. Had your Maſter any Sword on?

Heſter. I believe he had, I did not mind.

L. C. Juſt. When your Maſter came in and Reaſon after him, you heard your Maſter talk of an Arreſt, and that you had the Curioſity of hearing what paſt between them; did you hear any words of Heat or Paſſion?

Heſter. No, my Lord, I heard my Maſter talk ſomething, by which I underſtood my Maſter was arreſted.

L. C. Juſt. Did your Maſter ſeem angry?

Heſter. Yes, becauſe they ſeem'd ſo uncivil that they did not come and give him Notice of it.

Mr. Hungerford. You ſay you ſaw your Miſtreſs telling Money, can you gueſs at the Quantity of it?

Heſter. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Can you tell for what Purpoſe ſhe was telling the Money?

Serj. Cheſhire. Did you hear Mr. Lutterell ſpeak to his Lady to fetch any Money?

Heſter. I was not in the Room.

Reaſon. Did I ſtay in the Room by my ſelf when your Maſter went up Stairs?

Heſter. Yes, you did.

L. C. Juſt. And when he came down he had a Caſe of Piſtols?

Heſter. When I ſaw him he had them in his Hand, and when I inſiſted upon his laying them down, he came and laid them down on the Table by me.

Hungerford. When did your Maſter die?

Heſter. He died the Night following, I was with him all the time.

Thomas Waters the Waterman ſworn.

Serj. Cheſhire. Thomas Waters, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know on the occaſion of a Noiſe and crying out Murder at Mr. Lutterell's Lodging.

Waters. My Lord, I was at the Water-ſide when Capt. Lutterell came down to go by Water, I went down to carry him, there two Men croſs'd over the Way to him; I was gone down to my Boat to wait for him, but he not coming down,

I came back again, and seeing them go into the House, I went to the Water-side, and staid there some time, and the Lad running out of the House, and crying Fire, Murder, I run up, and run into the Door, and when I was about half way up Stairs, Lord, says the Boy, they are murdering my Master; I run to the Stair-head and heard the Pistol go off, and then said to the Boy, is there any more Pistols? Then I opened the Door, and went in, and met Reason with his Sword drawn in his Hand, and as he was putting it in it stuck.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Where was Captain Lutterell?

Waters. Laid down on the Floor, all in his Gore; when I came into the Room the young Man followed me in; I saw one Pistol lay upon the Table; Tranter was behind Reason, Reason was putting his Sword into his Scabbard, and it stuck; and as I came in Tranter shew'd me his Hand, and said, see how I am used, Reason was opening the Door, I took hold of him and said, you must go no further, here is Murder done; then the Constable came in, and I charged the Constable with them. The Captain's Sword was in the middle of the Room broke, he lay on his Right Side with his Arm on the Chair.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How far was the Table off?

Waters. The whole Breadth of the Room; he lay just before the Fire-Place; I saw but one Pistol; I came in when the last Pistol went off, and I met Mr. Reason, and put him by with my Hand, to come into the Room.

Tranter. What Wound did you see me have?

Waters. No more than in your Hand, he shew'd me his Hand.

L. C. Just. Did it appear to you upon looking on his Hand, that he had received a Wound in his Hand?

Waters. Yes, my Lord, I believe he was wounded, because he shew'd me his Hand, and it was bloody.

Tranter. Was my Head broke?

Waters. I did not see that.

L. C. Just. When you came into the Room, you saw but one Pistol?

Waters. I saw but one, and that upon the Table, just as I come into the Room.

L. C. Just. How far from Mr. Lutterell was it?

Waters. I believe three Yards.

L. C. Just. How far from the Prisoner, or either of them?

Waters. The Prisoner stood by the Table, as I came into the Room.

L. C. Just. Was the Sword in the Scabbard, that was broke.

Waters. It was out, and please you my Lord.

L. C. Just. Whose Sword was it?

Waters. It must be the Deceased's, because the other had his Sword with him in his Hand drawn. I saw the Blood: I desired the Constable to draw the Sword, and I saw it bloody a good way.

Mr. Peters sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Mr. Peters will you tell my Lord and the Jury, whether on the 17th of October last you was sent for, and by whom?

Mr. Peters. On the 17th of October last, I think it was in the Forenoon, about 12 o' Clock, I was sent for to visit Mr. Lutterell; the Messenger told me he lay expiring: I came into his Room, where I found him on his Bed, in a wounded Condition, and languishing of his Wounds; he seem'd desirous, that I would pray to Almighty God for his Soul, for he believed he had but a little time to continue in this World, and therefore he desired to make the best Use of it; I was ready to assist him; and desired him to consider how far he might be instrumental in bringing this Misfortune on himself, I desired him to consider, that as a dying Man great Weight would be laid on his Words, therefore if he said any thing not strictly true, he might involve innocent People in the Guilt, and the Punishment: Therefore I desired him to lay his Hand upon his Heart and consider.

He told me, As a dying Man, as he expected to be tried for this very Fact at the Bar of Heaven, as well as the Persons, who had injur'd him, he assur'd me he was murdered in a barbarous manner. Afterwards came in one Church, a Bailiff in the same Street, and desired me to put it home to him: I did; upon which he made me the same Answer, That he was barbarously murder'd; he wanted Spirits, or would have express'd himself more fully: On this I pray'd by him, and when I had done, I took my leave of him. In about an Hour afterwards I was sent for again; when I came there, I met Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haines, Justices of the Peace; one of the Justices gave Mr. Lutterell his Oath, and there being no Clerk there, desired me to take his Words in Writing, which I did; the Words were these; The Bailiffs took the Pistols from my Table; they fired them twice; the fat Man drew his Sword, and run me into the Body with his Sword; and then drew my Sword, which I broke in his Hand, and begg'd for Life; I neither fired a Pistol nor made one Push; they both run me through; I offer'd to pay them the Money. I think these are the very Words he said: After this I pray'd by him again, and still desired, that he would not lay any thing to the Charge of People that were not guilty: I left him then, and came again a third Time, and as I was praying by him, he interrupted me, and ask'd me, If it was not proper to receive the Holy Sacrament, which he was desirous to do: I ask'd him, if ever he had received the Sacrament; he told me he had; I desired him to consider; and to assist him, I put him into a Method; I told him one Thing which was necessary, which perhaps he might come into with Reluctance, and that was Charity and forgiving his Enemies. I told him he had been hardly dealt with I believed, yet it did behove him, as he died a Christian, to forgive them; he told me he did forgive them, and he hoped Almighty God at the last Day would forgive their Indiscretion; he died some time afterwards, but then in so dosing a Condition, that I could not attend him to any purpose.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he say any thing about who fired the Pistol?

Mr. Peters. I mentioned it to him; when I ask'd him, if he had fired either of the Pistols, I told him one of the Bailiffs was wounded, and that there were two Balls taken out of his Hand; he assured me, as he was a dying Man, he fired neither of the Pistols.

Reason. Did not he confess, that he had broke one of their Heads?

Mr. Peters. No, he did not say, he broke one of their Heads, nor any thing like it; so far from that, that he said he did not design to hurt a Hair of their Heads.

L. C. Juſt. I think Mr. Peters you ſay, when you came there you met with two Juſtices of the Peace, Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haines, and becauſe they had no Clerk there, they deſired you to take the Examination.

Mr. Peters. Yes, my Lord, I did take it.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. My Lord, I apprehended we had it ready to produce, or elſe I had not opened it; but upon my calling for it, I am told, to my Surprize, that Mr. Vernon hath it, and he is gone into the Country.

Mr. Peters. I have a Copy of it.

L. C. Juſt. We muſt have the Original.

Mr. Peters. My Lord, there is a Copy of it in my Depoſition before the Coroner.

L. C. Juſt. Is Mr. Haynes here?

Mr. Haynes called.

L. C. Juſt. You have given an Account of the Examination of this Gentleman, firſt before the Clergyman, afterwards before two Juſtices of the Peace, his Examination is taken and reduced into Writing, and if it was reduced into Writing, by the Rule of Law, unleſs you ſhew you are diſabled to do it by ſome Accident or other, you muſt produce that Writing.

Mr. Reeve. I am very much ſurprized, I apprehended they had the Writing ready in Court to produce. My Lord, Mr. Haynes will inform you.

Mr. Haynes ſworn.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Haynes we have been inform'd by that Gentleman that ſtands before you, the Miniſter, that upon hearing of this unhappy Accident, you and one of your Brethren, Mr. Vernon, came there in order to inquire into the Matter, and take the Examination of the Priſoners; did you do it?

Mr. Haynes. My Lord, on the 17th of October laſt, the Priſoners at the Bar were brought before me, and charged with the Murder of Mr. Lutterell; I underſtood Mr. Lutterell was not actually dead, ſo Mr. Vernon, another Juſtice of the Peace, went with me to Mr. Lutterell's Lodging, and there we found him in a very weak Condition, but ſenſible; we adminiſter'd the Oath, in order to take the Information in Form; Mr. Vernon and the Miniſter were there; my Hearing not being good, Mr. Vernon examined him, but before they could perfect his Examination in form he fainted away, and could not go on: then we went to my Houſe, where the Priſoners were, and examined them, and afterwards committed them. What the Deceaſed ſaid to Mr. Vernon and the Miniſter I did not hear, ſo can give no Account of it.

Mr. Reeve. Had you a Paper taken?

Mr. Haynes. There was a Paper taken, but it was imperfect.

Mr. Reeve. And I think that is not in your Cuſtody, had you the Paper?

Mr. Haynes. No, I had it not.

Mr. Reeve. Do you know where it is?

Mr. Haynes. No, I do not.

Mr. Peters. I gave it to Mr. Vernon, and obtained it of him to ſhew the Coroner, and afterwards I gave it him again; I took a Copy of it.

L. C. Juſt. The Copy you took is from the Paper produced to the Coroner.

Mr. Reeve. You was examined before the Coroner.

Mr. Peters. I brought the Original Paper to the Coroner.

Mr. Reeve. Whether that, which is mention'd in your Affidavit before the Coroner, was a Copy from the Original Paper?

Mr. Peters. Yes.

Mr. Reeve. And did you examine it?

Mr. Peters. Yes.

L. C. Juſt. We muſt have the Original.

Mr. Hungerford. We hope we may have Liberty to read the Depoſition taken before the Coroner, if what the Gentleman ſays be ſo; he ſaw the Examination taken in the Preſence of the Juſtices of the Peace, and the very Paper, the Words of the Paper, are contained in the Depoſition taken before the Coroner.

L. C. Juſt. That won't do, you have not the Examination of the Deceaſed. This is ill done of Mr. Vernon, he ought to have taken Care, and attended here, and had the Examination before the Court, and without that we can't arrive at the Truth of this Caſe; I doubt you muſt lay aſide all the Evidence of this Gentleman for want of the original Examination.

Mr. Reeve. We muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, as to the Confeſſion, that Part of it that is not contained in the Examination, which was not propoſed to him at the Time of his Examination, whether that is not Evidence; there are two or three Things he gives an Account of, that he ſaid before it was reduced into Writing. But ſuppoſe we can't have the Benefit of the Examination, yet the Diſcourſe that was had with the Deceaſed at another Time, whether we may not be admitted to give that in Evidence, we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip. But ſuppoſe no Examination had been taken, we humbly apprehend what he ſaid would be proper to lay before the Jury. Therefore when he gives an Account of what he ſaid at another Time than that of his Examination, though we can't produce what he ſaid at the Time of his Examination, yet we may give in Evidence what he ſaid at other Times. There were two other Times which he gives an Account of; the firſt was, when he was ſent for to pray by him, and one Church came in; he then declared on the Words of a dying Man, He was barbarouſly murder'd.

L. C. Juſt. You know in the Court of Chancery, when the Party is examined on his Oath, he gives in a firſt Anſwer; and on Examinations taken to it, he gives in a ſecond, and ſo a third; all theſe are taken but as one Anſwer and entire Confeſſion of the Party.

Mr. Reeve. Here is not an Examination before a proper Officer.

L. C. Juſt. You are to be heard no more to it becauſe you ought to produce it.

Mr. Reeve. I am ſure it is a Surprize on all of us.

Mr. Hungerford. As to us, we have the very Confeſſion in our Brief, and I believe, if we had thought it could not have been produced, we ſhould not have opened it.

L. C. Juſt. And there is too an Examination in Print; that ought not to be, and the Perſon that did it ought to be cenſured; are Juries to be prepoſſeſſed; here is a printed Pamphlet, whereof the Title is, Mr. Lutterell's Cry for Juſtice.

Mr. Hungerford. I never ſaw it, but am told it is moſt in Favour of the Priſoners at the Bar.

L. C. Juſt. If the Examination is true, it ought to be produced, and the Priſoners ought come fairly to their Trial, and, if guilty, God forbid but they ſhould ſuffer, but not by paſſionate Inſinuations in Print; and it is an unprecedented Thing, and if it comes out who did it, I ſhall take a Courſe with them: It is a way of preventing all Manner of Juſtice.

Mr. Hungerford. No doubt it is a very unjuſt Thing, and unwarrantable, no more to be juſtified, than Officers are, when under the Colour of Juſtice, they ſhall murder a Gentleman at his own Lodging; but as to the Caſe in Chancery, firſt, ſecond, and third Anſwers are but one Anſwer. I ſpeak it with all Deference, whether that be the ſame Caſe, the Words that he did deliver at other Times, when the Juſtices were not preſent, when he was a dying Perſon on the Brink of Eternity, and then ſaid the ſame Words, and now this Paper can't be produced, whether the Words of the Paper may not be admitted as Evidence, we humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip; and we believe the Witneſſes will give you an Account of what he ſaid at other Periods of Time, when there was no Examination in Writing, which was only when the Juſtices attended.

L. C. Juſt. Give an Account how it comes to paſs, that you have not this Examination to produce, that was in Writing.

Mr. Mitchell ſworn.

Mr. Reeve. Will you give an Accout of this Paper, and whether there hath been any Application made to get it, and why it is not here?

Mr. Mitchell. I called at Mr. Vernon's, but they told me he was gone into the Country, and he had not fixed any one Place, which he not doing, they did not know where to ſend to him.

L. C. Juſt. Here is a printed Narrative goes about the Town. Do you know who was the Author of that?

Mr. Mitchell. No, my Lord, we have been enquiring in order to proſecute the Perſon; I have ask'd the Widow, and Mr. Keate her Nephew, and they ſay they know nothing of it.

Mr. Hungerford. It ſets out with this Fact, that the Deceaſed ſtruck firſt; and if ſo, it is very reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that this Paper was done rather in Favour of the Priſoners at the Bar, than of the Proſecutors.

L. C. Juſt. The Juſtice of Peace that had not the Examination doth appear, but he that hath it is out of the way. Mr. Peters, how many Times was you with the Deceaſed?

Mr. Peters. Three Times; at 12 o' Clock, about an Hour after, and about an Hour after that, the third Time.

L. C. Juſt. When was it you reduced what he ſaid into Writing?

Mr. Peters. The ſecond Time; the third Time I adminiſter'd the Sacrament.

L. C. Juſt. And when you examined him the firſt Time, and afterwards a ſecond and third Time, the Deſign of that was to perfect the Examination which you took the firſt Time, and then it is all of a piece.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the third Examination was after the taking any thing in Writing; when he took the Sacrament on the ſolemn Occaſion, he declared, &c.

Mr. J. Powis. The laſt Examination therefore was an Advice to a forgiving Temper.

Mr. J. Eyre. Mr. Peters ſhould declare what he ſaid the firſt and the third time.

Mr. Peters. I preſs'd him to conſider and recollect whether what he had ſaid was true, he ſaid it was.

Mr. J. Eyre. What did he ſay the firſt time?

Mr. Peters. The firſt time he told me, he was barbarouſly murdered: As I told you before there came in one Church a Bailiff, and then I put him to conſider, whether he was not Acceſſary to his own Misfortune; to which he returned the ſame Anſwer, that he was barbarouſly murdered, that he did not draw his Sword, nor fire his Piſtol.

L. C. Juſt. Did you aſk him about any Blow, or Provocation given?

Mr. Peters. I aſk'd him, to which he ſaid, he did not deſign to hurt a Hair of their Heads.

L. C. Juſt. I muſt confeſs for my part I am not entirely ſatisfied: Mr. Peters at his firſt coming examines him, and after that he comes to him a ſecond time, and then he is examined in the Preſence of two Juſtices of the Peace, and by their Authority; and he ſays the intent of that was to perfect the firſt Examination; and being ſo examined a ſecond time, his examination is taken in Writing; whether or no the firſt and ſecond do not make an entire Examination, and ſo that you can't produce the firſt without the ſecond; I make no doubt it might be produced, if there had not been a ſecond; but he that examines him firſt, examines him afterwards a ſecond time, in order to perfect that Examination, and when he doth it, it is reduced into Writing; to me it ſeems a Matter of great Conſequence, if the firſt is allowed without producing the ſecond.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. It can't properly be called an Examination.

Mr. Hungerford. The firſt time he examined him as a Chriſtian, as a Miniſter; as to the ſecond Examination, Mr. Peters had no more to do in it than as a Juſtice's Clerk.

L. C. Juſt. The Examination taken before the Juſtice, was to confirm the former Examination, and upon that Examination all was reduced into Writing.

Mr. J. Eyre. That which is ſet down in Writing, if it be an Examination taken in Writing of a Priſoner before a Juſtice of the Peace, you can't give Evidence of that Examination vivâ voce, unleſs the Examination be loſt; but what Declaration or Confeſſion was made at any other time, may be given in Evidence; the particular Examination of what he ſaid before the Juſtices, and was reduced into Writing, cannot be proved but by that Writing; but as to what he ſaid at any other time, the firſt and third time, and not before the Magiſtrates, that may be given in Evidence.

Mr. J. Powis. The great Matter I obſerve is, that Mr. Peters did ſay, he did look upon the ſecond Examination to perfect the firſt, the firſt was not ſo perfect, and then it was to be aſcertained by a ſecond, and which they not caring to truſt to their Memory, put into Writing; that Writing indeed the Juſtice of Peace hath; it is not produced, but if it be agreed that it was put into Writing, and after it was reduced into Writing, it ſeemed to be all of a piece, ſo as plainly to relate to what was done the time before, how will they aſcertain the whole, but by producing the Writing? Then this Writing can't be ſeen, the Juſtice of Peace hath it, and doth not come here to produce it.

Mr. J. Eyre. I don't know how to call this perfecting the former Examination, you can't call the Diſcourſe between him and Mr. Peters an Examination, when there was no Juſtice of Peace preſent; it is not an Examination what paſs'd between Mr. Peters and this Gentleman. It is always taken ſo at the Old-Bayley, where Evidence is allowed to be given vivâ voce of what was ſaid by People at other times beſides the time of Examination.

Mr. J. Powis. What doth Mr. Peters mean by perfecting the Examination?

Mr. Peters. I beg your Pardon, it was not my word.

L. C. Juſt. Not to differ about words, whether this is an Examination before the Miniſter, when the Juſtices of Peace were not there; it is very likely this Miniſter came to inquire of this Gentleman about the Circumſtances of his Death; after that the ſame Gentleman is preſent when the Juſtices of Peace come; thereupon the Juſtices of Peace deſire him to take it in Writing; he aſks the ſame Queſtions as he did before, and they are taken in Writing; he takes it, deſigning to make the firſt Examination more authentick to charge the Perſon that gives the Examination. Now really when all this is done, the Examination of him before the Juſtice, taken in Writing by the ſame Perſon that inquired of him before, and all this done in order to perfect and conſummate the Examination, whether you will not take them both together as one entire Account given by the Deceaſed? He gives the Account, he gives it as true in the Preſence of the Juſtice; they were not preſent the firſt time, but the ſame Perſon that aſk'd him the firſt time, he aſks him when the Juſtices were there, if what he ſaid before was true, and on that an Account is taken in Writing: Now upon this, when there is an Examination in Writing in the Preſence of the ſame Perſon, and when they give you no reaſonable Excuſe why they don't produce it, there ought to be the leſs Credit given to them.

M. J. Eyre. I think there is the leſs Credit to be given, becauſe the Examination is not produced; however it is Evidence.

Mr. J. Powis. If they were both of equal Validity you ſay ſomething, but it is confeſſed on all Hands, that the ſecond Examination was more ſolemn and valid, becauſe two Juſtices of the Peace were preſent, and there was the Awe of Magiſtracy over the Perſon, and the ſecond Examination relates to the firſt.

Mr. J. Forteſcue. It is a hard Caſe on the Priſoners at the Bar; it is the Confeſſion of Mr. Lutterell, and if they had that in Evidence, they might be compared together; but they not having that, I own, as to point of Law, they cannot give it in Evidence: It is a great Hardſhip, but where it lies I cannot tell; I think it ought to be cenſured in a proper Time. The moſt material of what is ſaid by word of Mouth is detained from us, and not produced; but I think we ſhould allow what was ſaid at other times to be given in Evidence, becauſe the firſt is no Examination, becauſe no Juſtice of Peace then preſent; ſo that the Examination ſtands diſtinctly by it ſelf, and that Evidence is to be laid aſide and not produced: but ſhall we not allow that to be Evidence which he ſaid at other times, becauſe he had an Examination taken in Writing? Therefore we ſhall hear no other Evidence, the firſt was no Examination, only what Mr. Peters will take upon him to ſay paſs'd between them.

L. C. Juſt. Go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Hungerford. There can be no doubt of the third Declaration; my Lord, the third Examination was certainly the moſt honeſt Examination; as to the ſecond Examination, it had the Solemnity of two Juſtices of the Peace, one happens to be deaf, the other to be abſent; whether what a Man ſays juſt as he is going to die, and on his receiving the Holy Sacrament, is not to be regarded?

Mr. J. Eyre. He ſhould diſtinguiſh between what paſs'd in the firſt Diſcourſe, without any regard to what is contained in the ſecond Examination.

Mr. Reeve. Mr. Peters, you hear the Opinion of the Court, that what paſs'd at the writing of this Paper you muſt not take any notice of, but give an Account of what paſs'd at any other time.

Mr. Peters. I told your Lordſhip before I was ſent for to viſit him the firſt time, when I found him dangerouſly ill; after I had talk'd to him ſome time to put him in mind of Death, I deſired to know of him, how far he had been any way inſtrumental or acceſſary to bring this Misfortune upon himſelf; he ſaid, As he was a dying Man, and expected to be judged at the laſt Day, they murder'd him barbarouſly. I repeated it to him again at the Requeſt of Mr. Church a Bailiff, and the laſt time I came to him, when he receiv'd the Sacrament.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Peters, I deſire you to conſider with your ſelf, did you not aſk him whether he had ſtruck any of the Bailiffs?

Mr. Peters. I did not.

L. C. Juſt. Did you aſk him if he had given them any Provocation?

Mr. Peters. I did, to which he anſwer'd, He had given them no Provocation.

L. C. Juſt. Did you aſk who gave the firſt Blow?

Mr. Peters. No, I did not.

L. C. Juſt. Did you ſee the Wound; did he ſay he gave that?

Mr. Peters. I told him, it appears one of the Bailiffs is wounded in the Hand, and it is probable he was the Perſon that diſcharged that Piſtol; upon which he aſſured me, He fired neither of the Piſtols; he neither drew his Sword, nor fired either of the Piſtols.

L. C. Juſt. When you had this Diſcourſe with him, did you reduce it into Writing?

Mr. Peters. What I reduced into Writing, was only my Depoſition, which I writ with my own Hand, and which Mr. Juſtice Harper ſwore me to, and I believe he hath it in his Cuſtody.

L. C. Juſt. Here this Gentleman is allowed to give an Account of what Diſcourſe paſs'd between him and Mr. Lutterell the firſt time; the Juſtice of Peace can't be allowed to give an Account of what is ſaid at his other Examination, becauſe it was reduced into Writing, and that Writing can't be produced.

Mr. Reeve.

Mr. Reeve. I beg you would give an Account of what he ſaid at any other time, when this Paper was not written: When you talk'd with him about this Matter you ſay he ſaid, The Bailiffs did barbarouſly murder him without any Provocation; that he ſaid, He gave them no Provocation: And when you aſk'd him about the Wound that one of the Bailiffs had, he ſaid, He fired neither of the Piſtols, nor drew his Sword; I deſire to know at any other time, whether there was any thing material paſs'd between you at any other time than at that time when the Paper was wrote: Can you recollect?

L. C. Juſt. You diſcours'd him three times, the firſt you have given an Account of, the ſecond time it was reduced into Writing, that Writing doth not appear; what paſs'd the third time, pray repeat it again?

Mr. Peters. As he was going to receive the Holy Sacrament, I beg'd of him to conſider whether what he had ſaid was true: He ſaid, Every Article he had ſaid, as he was a dying Man, and as he hoped to receive Benefit by the Sacrament, every thing he had ſaid was ſtrictly true.

Mr. Reeve. We ſhall trouble your Lordſhip with one Evidence more, that is, the Surgeon, who will give you an Account of his Wounds.

Mr. Sparham ſworn.

Mr. Reeve. I think you was ſent for as a Surgeon, give an Account in what Condition you found the Deceaſed, how many Wounds, and of what Nature.

Mr. Sparham. I found him labouring with a Wound under the Right Pap with a Shot; upon this I examined him, and putting him into a proper Poſture, I found ſeveral other Wounds; one near the Liver, the lower part of the eighth Rib, near the Back-bone; ſeveral other Wounds with a Sword, three or four on his Belly. Upon opening of his Body I found that the Wound with the Bullet had penetrated about nine Inches towards the Back, which Wound was mortal, the firſt to be of the Lungs, having a hole thro', and the ſecond to be torn, and the Diaphragma wounded: I found one other Wound with a Sword near the eighth Rib, three Inches and a half broad, penetrating the Thorax, and wounding the Diaphragma, which was alſo mortal; I found eight other Wounds with a Sword about a quarter of an Inch wide each, and a quarter of an Inch deep, one near the left Pap, four others on the right ſide of the Belly, two more on each ſide the Back Bone.

Mr. Reeve. So you look'd upon two of the Wounds to be mortal, one whereof was with the Piſtol-ſhot.

Mr. Sparham. Yes, I ſaw two leaden Pieces taken out of his Body.

Mr. Strange. Who attended at the ſame time?

Mr. Sparham. Mr. Gifford.

Strange. Did he or you take out thoſe Bullets?

Mr. Sparham. We both took them out, I think.

Mr. Reeve. My Lord we have done.

L. C. Juſt. What ſay the Priſoners? The Counſel for the King have called what Witneſſes they think proper, it is now your time to anſwer for your ſelves.

Reaſon. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we arreſted the Gentleman in Surrey-ſtreet, and he deſired me to go to his Lodging; when we came there, he ſaid he would pay the Money, ſays he, Go and ſee for the Attorney, and I will pay the Money; upon that Tranter went to the Attorney for his Bill, I went up Stairs with the Gentleman into the Dining-Room; when he came up, ſays he, My Dear, I am arreſted, it is for Mr. Rous's Bill. He began to look a little angry, with that he went to his Scrutore and took ſomething out of it, a Key, and he went up Stairs and fetch'd his Piſtols, and when he came down again, he clap'd one to my Breaſt, and threatened to ſhoot me; I was ſurpriſed, his Lady runs out of the Room, with that I gave him good words; ſays he, Sirrah I will let you live a little till your Partner comes back, and then I will ſend all your Souls to Hell together: Then the Foot-boy came back and ſaid, the Gentleman was coming; he order'd the Boy out of the Room, and one knock'd at the Door; when the Boy was gone, he clap'd his Piſtols one on one ſide of his Boſom, and the other on t'other, and my Partner came, and when he came into the Room he gave him a Blow over the Head; with that he clos'd in with him, and then one of the Piſtols went off and wounded him; then he drew his Sword, and I drew mine, and then the other Piſtol went off, which was the occaſion of his Death.

L. C. Juſt. Have you any Witneſſes?

Mr. Twine ſworn.

Mr. Twine. My Lord, I was employ'd by the Plaintiff Mr. Carr, to take out a Writ againſt Mr. Lutterell, on an Indors'd Note; I did take out a Writ and gave it to Mr. Reaſon, and he got the Warrant upon it, and afterwards came to me, and deſired to know where Mr. Lutterell was to be found, and that I would deſcribe him to him, whether young or old, &c. I told him where to go, and deſcribed him to them; then they went and arreſted him, and after he was arreſted Tranter came to me and told me the next Morning, they had taken the Captain: they ſaid they took him at the lower end of Surrey-ſtreet, and that he was very angry, and ſaid they had not uſed him civilly.

L. C. Juſt. What Tranter ſaid is not Evidence.

Mr. Twine. I know no more, my Lord; Tranter came to me for the Bill, and I gave him a Bill of the Debt and Charges.

L. C. Juſt. Did you give the Bill of the Debt and Charges to Tranter?

Mr. Twine. I did; he told me they had juſt taken the Captain, and then I gave it him; the Bill of Charges was one Pound thirteen Shillings.

Mr. Tims ſworn. The Warrant ſhew'd to him.

Mr. Tims. This is the Warrant made out upon the Bill of Middleſex, at the Suit of Mr. Carr, to arreſt the deceaſed; The Warrant read, and alſo the Bill of Middleſex produced and read.

Mr. Hickman ſworn, and the Warrant ſhew'd to him.

Mr. Hickman. This I know to be my Hand, I made out this Warrant all of it.

Mr. Hungerford. I would humbly offer it to your Lordſhip's Obſervation, here is a Fact we have omitted to prove, here is a Witneſs in Court, one Lucas, can prove that Reaſon ſhot off the Piſtol.

L. C. Juſt. It is irregular; but altho' you have omitted it, and come out of time, I would have the whole Fact, and if my Brothers pleaſe we will hear it.

Conſtance Lucas ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mrs. Lucas, what do you know of ſhooting off the Piſtol?

Conſt. Lucas. I was oppoſite to the Captain's Lodging in Surrey-ſtreet, in a Room up two Pair of Stairs, and I heard a Piſtol go off, upon that I went to the Window, and I ſaw a luſty fat Man take a Piſtol out of the Window in the Captain's Lodging up one Pair of Stairs, and let it off towards the Fire-ſide.

Mr. Strange. Do you know Mr. Lutterell?

Conſt. Lucas. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Can you take upon you to ſay it was not Mr. Lutterell?

Conſt. Lucas. Yes, I am ſure it was not he.

L. C. Juſt. When you ſaw a luſty fat Man take a Piſtol off from the Window and diſcharge it, was any Body by him at that time?

Conſt. Lucas. No Body that I ſaw.

L. C. Juſt. What ſort of Man was Mr. Lutterell?

Conſt. Lucas. He was a little Man.

One of the Jury. Was there any Light in that Room to diſtinguiſh one Man from another?

L. C. Juſt. What ſhe ſaid was, ſhe ſaw a luſty fat Man come to the Window, and take up a Piſtol and diſcharge it, and that ſhe ſaw no Body elſe at the Window.

Mr. Hungerford. The Coroner's Inqueſt came into this Room, and was ſatisfied, that from thence ſhe might ſee into this Window.

Mr. Gifford the Surgeon ſworn.

Mr. Gifford. On Tueſday the 17th of October laſt, about ten or eleven a Clock in the Morning, I was ſent for to a Gentleman, Mr. Lutterell; when I came to him, I found him ſitting on a Chair, and he lean'd back with his Shirt and Clothes very bloody; Mr. Sparham was with him in order to look to his Wound; we put him to Bed, we found a Wound about an Inch below the right Pap, by Gun or Piſtol Shot, and we dreſs'd it and all the other Wounds we could find; I went into the Parlour, and there were the two Priſoners at the Bar; I was told one of them was wounded; upon that I went to examine into it: Upon coming into the Parlour I examined Tranter, and there I found two pieces of Balls which were lodged in his Hand; we extracted the Balls; I found a ſmall Wound in his Wriſt, and a Razure on his Head; that was a ſmall Wound which was on the Wriſt, it ſeem'd to be from a Prick, ſomething that had entered the Skin. Then I went to Mr. Lutterell again, as he was in a good State of Senſe; I aſk'd Mr. Lutterell, Whether he had fired a Piſtol? I aſk'd him ſeveral times, he denied it at firſt, ſecond, and third time, and he uſed this Expreſſion, I call God to Witneſs, I neither fired a Piſtol, nor drew my Sword, but was barbarouſly murder'd. I was there again when Mr. Peters gave him the Sacrament, when he was aſk'd the ſame Queſtion; he then anſwer'd, He neither did the one or the other. In the Afternoon Mr. Keat and I went together, he was then in a calm State, ſeem'd reaſonable, and we aſk'd him, Sir, you can give ſome Account of this Matter, your Reaſon and Judgment are ſtrong; I have heard that you fetch'd down the Piſtols: He told me, He had, but with no malicious Deſign, only he would not be forc'd out of his Lodgings. I aſk'd him, If there was any Blow given: He ſaid, They had given him abuſive Language, which induced him to ſtrike one of them; upon that they immediately ſeized him, the luſty Man ſeized him and drew his Sword, he tumbled down, and he ſtab'd him; he often beg'd them to ſpare his Life; the other ſaid, Damn him, draw his own Sword and ſtab him. Mr. Lutterell's Finger and Thumb were cut, as if it was with graſping of a Sword. Then he ſaid, The leſſer Man took a Piſtol and clap'd it cloſe to his Breaſt, and ſhot him in the Body, and the luſty Man held the other Piſtol to his Head and ſhot it off; which I the rather believe, becauſe he had ſome Powder Spots or Marks on his Face.

Reaſon. He own'd to you that he ſtruck one of us.

Mr. Gifford. Yes, but it was upon your giving ſawcy Language.

L. C. Juſt. When you ask'd him about bringing down the Piſtols, and upon what Account, what ſaid he?

Mr. Gifford. He acknowledg'd he brought down the Piſtols, but with no evil Intent; but as he was willing to pay his Debts, he was not willing to be forc'd out of his Lodging and be expoſed.

Mr. Bonner ſworn.

Mr. Bonner. My Lord, juſt as Mr. Lutterell was got to Bed I came up Stairs, and ask'd him, if he had fired the Piſtol; he diſowned it, and ſaid, He had no Deſign to do them any Harm, or make any Reſiſtance, but (ſaid he) they kill'd me cowardly and cruelly.

Reaſon. After that he had declared to you that he had no Deſign to make any Reſiſtance, what followed?

Bonner. When I came out of the Room, ſays Mr. Gifford to me, Mr. Bonner, Mr. Tranter is ſhot in the Hand; it is certain Mr. Lutterell ſhot him in the Hand; therefore let us go back and ask him: we went and ask'd him both of us, and he ſaid, No, as God ſhould judge him he did not, nor had he any Deſign of doing them any Harm, but he did threaten them ſeveral times. He ſpoke inwardly and ſeem'd to be faint, and deſired we would leave him.

Reaſon. Pleaſe to take notice, that my Partner is ſhot in the Right Hand.

Tranter. My Lord, I have loſt the Uſe of my Thumb.

Blake the Surgeon ſworn.

Blake. My Lord, Mr. Tranter was wounded in the Thumb of the Right Hand, and in his Left he had a Wound here in his Wriſt, I did not take the Ball out of his Hand, but I dreſs'd it.

L. C. Juſt. What was that Blow on his Head? what do you think it was done with?

Mr. Blake. It ſeem'd to be done with a Cane.

L. C. Juſt. Was it a Wound or a Bruiſe?

Mr. Blake. A Wound, the Skin was broke. Mr. Reaſon had a little Wound in one of his Fingers, which ſeem'd to be done with the Point of a Sword.

Thomas Hargrave call'd again.

L. C. Juſt. Heark you, young Man, hear the Queſtion and conſider well; upon your former Examination you ſay, when Tranter knock'd at the Door you went down to let him in; that Tranter made up to the Dining-Room, and you follow'd him; you heard a little Buſtle before you came in, but the firſt thing you ſaw, when you came, was Tranter running your Maſter againſt the Cloſet Door, and Reaſon pricking him with a Sword: I ask you this Queſtion, whether or no, when you was going up Stairs after Tranter, before you enter'd the Room, you did not hear a Blow?

Tho. Hargrave. I heard a Blow, but did not know who ſtruck it.

Mr. J. Eyre. Did you ſee to whom the Blow was given?

Hargrave. No, I ſaw nothing at all of it.

L. C. Juſt. The Reaſon of my calling him again, was to be ſatisfied as to this Particular; for the Coroner informs me, that before him, he had ſwore to the ſame Effect; he anſwered haſtily before, but I believe not with any Deſign; he ſaid he did not hear any Blow, his Meaning then might be, tho' he did hear a Blow, yet not ſeeing who gave it, therefore he thought it not material; I did not believe he did it with any Deſign.

L. C. Juſt. Have you any other Witneſſes?

Reaſon. My Lord, we had none but ourſelves, we are Officers of the Court; he aſſaulted us and brought down his Piſtols and ſtuck them in his Boſom.

L. C. Juſt. Did he not afterwards take them out and lay them on the Table?

Reaſon. No, my Lord.

Tranter. While I was gone, I did not know what happen'd, but when I came back, the Minute I enter'd the Room he ſtruck me over the Head with his Cane, and the Piſtol went off, and ſhot me in the Hand.

The Clothes were produced, and by the Hole in the Waiſtcoat it appeared, that the Wound given by the Piſtol under the Right Pap could no way happen by any Poſition of the Piſtols in the Boſom of the Deceaſed, by the Piſtol going off of itſelf.

Reaſon. My Lord, we are Officers of the Court, and what we did was for our own Security.

L. C. Juſt. What ſays Tranter?

Tranter. My Lord, we have no more to ſay.

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, I beg leave to obſerve a few Things by way of Reply. They have endeavour'd to differ the Caſe with reſpect to three Particulars; the firſt Particular is with relation to the Bolw given by Mr. Lutterell; they ſay Mr. Lutterell himſelf being preſs'd very much, did own that he had given one of the Bailiffs a Blow on the Head; there appears Reaſon to think that to be true, becauſe the Surgeon ſays he dreſs'd him of a Wound received by a Blow with a Cane; we ſubmit it, whether that is a ſufficient Juſtification of the Officers for what followed, to kill Mr. Latterell in this manner, ſuppoſing it to be true. What the Boy ſays, he ſaw afterwards, immediately upon his coming into the Room, in an inſtant, as ſoon as he had heard the Blow, he found Mr. Tranter running him up againſt the Wainſcot, and the other Bailiff ſtabbing him, he ſwears Mr. Lutterell had then no Sword or Stick in his Hand, ſo that whether or no after the Bailiff had received the Blow on his Head, it will be a Juſtification ſufficient for the Bailiffs to murder him? Another Part of the Evidence is in relation to the bringing down of the Piſtols; I beg leave to obſerve, my Lord, he did confeſs that the Piſtols were brought down, but not with an Intention to do them any Prejudice; that he laid them on the Table; they don't pretend Mr. Lutterell fired either of them, but in the Struggle, the Piſtols were in his Breaſt, and there they went off of themſelves. One wounded the Priſoner, the other went into his own Breaſt. As to what is ſaid with relation to the Intention of Mr. Lutterell, he did own he did threaten them: If he did, yet he had not Power over the Piſtols, one was on the Table, and the other was in the Window, and they ſay the Piſtols were not fired by any of them: Our Witneſs the Maid-Servant, juſt a little before the Piſtols were fired off, ſaw Mr. Lutterell on the Ground upon his Back, and his Hands lifted up, and them ſtabbing him, and this before any one of the Piſtols went off; there is another Witneſs ſwears expreſsly, ſhe ſaw a fat Man take a Piſtol out of the Window, and fire it towards the Chimney: Mr. Lutterell was not a fat Man, ſo it muſt be ſomebody elſe that fired the Piſtol, and not Mr. Lutterell, in all probability. It was Mr. Reaſon, as to the Evidence given in relation to the Cloaths, becauſe here is a Hole in the Waiſtcoat, the Piſtol that was in his Breaſt muſt go off of itſelf, and make that Hole. It can be no ſuch Thing, the Jury have ſeen the Cloaths, and where the Wound is given, and in what Poſition Mr. Reaſon himſelf hath attempted to place the Piſtols, and it is impoſſible the Piſtols ſhould go off, and give that mortal Wound. We ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Diſcretion upon the whole, whether it is a ſufficient Juſtification, though they are Officers of Juſtice, and ought to be protected, yet ſuppoſe ſuch a Misbehaviour, where there is no Neceſſity for it, they are not to be juſtified.

L. C. Juſt. There will be two Points in Law; the one is whether the Officers are to be juſtified in what they have done; if they have done nothing, but what was proper to ſecure their Priſoner, and their own Lives when they were aſſaulted, they are not guilty of Felony; and if they are guilty of Felony, then of what Degree, whether of Murder or Manſlaughter.

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, we muſt ſubmit it, whether a Man ſtriking another over the Head be a Juſtification for him immediately to kill him, and take it with this Circumſtance, that they had given him ill Language.

L. C. Juſt. Is ill Language a Juſtification for Blows? Beſides you will conſider, whether there was not ill Language on the other Side.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I won't take up much of your Lordſhip's Time, if your Lordſhip will ſpare me a Word or two. Here is a Man's Life taken away by two Perſons, that had a Precept from a Court of Juſtice to arreſt, the only Thing they had to do, was to ſecure the Perſon, to make him anſwerable to Juſtice, whether that could not be done without this Outrage? Whether Officers of Juſtice may execute their Proceſs with ſo much Cruelty? It amounts to as great premeditated Malice, as can be conceived. There is a Malice contained in Cruelty; I need not mention the Matter; it hath been fully laid before you; I ſhall only mention a Precedent or two; one is that of * Holloway's Caſe: There was ſomething of a Provocation, but the Judge there in that Caſe did enter into the Fact, whether the Provocation was ſufficient to juſtify the killing of the Boy. The Boy was ſtealing Wood in his

* Croke Charles, 131.

Park,

Park, and had a Rope about his Middle, and as he was up in a Tree, he bid him come down out of the Tree, and he took hold of the Rope and dragg'd him ſo, that he was killed, and this was not a ſufficient Provocation. Another Caſe is that of Mawgridge [b], it is reported by my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, there was a Provocation; Cope had deſired Mawgridge to go out of the Room, and then turned him out of the Room; and there the turning him out of the Room was not a ſufficient Provocation, and it is a very juſt Obſervation of my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt; when Caſes are attended with ſo much Cruelty and Barbarity, (as appears to be here, here are nine Wounds, eight beſides that with the Piſtol on the ſame Perſon, and certainly two luſty Men, as the Priſoners at the Bar are, might have made him anſwerable to Juſtice, without any ſuch barbarous Treatment:) The Obſervation my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt made is, that the Law ſhould be ſo conſtrued. As to the Buſineſs of the Cloaths, it ſeems to be abſurd, that the Piſtol went off, and made that Wound on the Right Side; by no Poſition he could put the Piſtols in, could their going off make that Wound.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, I would only obſerve two or three Things. If Mr. Lutterell at the time they aſſaulted him with a Sword, had held his Piſtols in his Hand, and their own Lives had been in danger, the Caſe had been different; but when he had put the Piſtols out of his Hand, and they were between him and the Piſtols, ſo that it was impoſſible for him to do them any ſuch Harm (for I do admit if it was in Mr. Lutterell's Power at that Time, and he had ſhew'd an Intention, that if they did not kill him, he would kill them, that might be ſomething of a Juſtification) they are the leſs excuſable in doing what they did. As to the Circumſtance of the Piſtols firing of themſelves, as they were in Mr. Lutterell's Boſom, and ſo giving this Wound, it ſeems to be impoſſible it ſhould be ſo, and that this muſt be a Wound given by a Piſtol levelled directly at him.

L. C. Juſt. I think you mentioned the Caſe that is in Keilyng, and if you have read that Caſe lately, you will remember, there a Blow is a Provocation, and if a Blow be firſt given, it will not be Murder, tho' Death do enſue upon it.

L. C. Juſt. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar, Hugh Reaſon and Robert Tranter, are charged by the Coroner's Inqueſt, and by an Indictment, with the Murder of Mr. Lutterell; they ſay they are not guilty of this Murder, and whether they are guilty or not is your Buſineſs to enquire, and receive Satisfaction in. In order to prove them guilty, they have called ſeveral Witneſſes for the King. The firſt is Thomas Hargrave, who it ſeems was a Servant to Mr. Lutterell; he tells you, that upon Tueſday, but he doth not remember the Month, or the Day of the Month, but it comes out from the other Witneſſes, that it was the 17th Day of October, he ſays his Maſter was going down to the Water-ſide in order to take Boat, for it ſeems he lodged in Surry Street, and he ſays a little Man ran after him, and clapp'd him on the Back. He did not then know him, but now ſays his Name is Tranter; on that his Maſter told him, he would pay the Money. He did differ in the Evidence he gave, at firſt he did not remember, that he deſired them to go to his Lodging, but he deſired them to go with him to Weſtminſter. But the Officers thought, that was not reaſonable; then afterwards he ſays, that with much Perſuaſion he prevailed with them, to carry him back to his Lodging; and that his Officers did carry him back to his own Lodging; he ſays his Maſter went up Stairs, he followed after; when he came up Stairs his Maſter demanded of the Officer, that was with him, the fat Man, which is Reaſon (for Tranter was gone to get a Bill of Coſts from the Attorney) he demanded of the Officer his Warrant; the Officer did ſhew him his Warrant; he ſaid, he took the Warrant in his Hand, and afterwards threw it on the Ground, uſing a very indecent Expreſſion, he ſhould take it and wipe his Back-ſide with it. He tells you while he was there ſomebody knock'd at the Door, with that he went down to open the Door, and he ſays he let in Tranter, and he ran up to the Dining-Room, and he followed him. Now he ſays on his ſecond Examination, before he came into the Dining-Room, he did hear the Noiſe of a Blow given; formerly the Lad giving his Evidence haſtily, and not ſo well conſidering, he ſaid he did not hear any Blow given, but on his ſecond Examination, he doth ſay he heard a Blow given before he came into the Dining-Room. He ſays when he came into the Dining-Room Tranter had got hold of Mr. Lutterell, and was running of him againſt the Wainſcot, and that Reaſon had his Sword drawn and was ſtriking at him with his Sword; and he ſays, as he was preparing himſelf to make another Thruſt, he took hold of his Sword-Arm and prevented that; and Reaſon with ſome Paſſion ſaid, Damn you, get you out of the Room, or elſe you ſhall die before your Maſter. With that the Boy went out of the Room, and went down Stairs and cried out Fire and Murder, in order to alarm the Neighbourhood, he tells you while he was there he heard a Piſtol go off, and before he could get up Stairs he heard another Piſtol go off; this is the Evidence given by Hargrave. They have called another Witneſs, Heſter Daron; ſhe ſays ſhe heard her Maſter go out in the Morning, and in a little time after ſhe heard him return again, and there came with him Reaſon, one of the Priſoners at the Bar. Obſerving this, that her Maſter came in ſo ſhort a Time after he went out, ſhe had the Curioſity to hearken what the Meaning or Occaſion of her Maſter's returning ſo ſoon was; ſhe ſays, ſhe heard her Maſter talking of an Arreſt, and he ſeem'd to be in a Paſſion with the Bailiff, that was with him, and ſaid he had not uſed him well, but ſhould have given him notice before he arreſted him in the Street; ſhe ſays ſhe withdrew afterwards into her Miſtreſs's Bed-Chamber, which was near the Room where they were, and in a little time ſhe heard her Maſter go up Stairs, and in a ſhort time after return again; with that ſhe had the Curioſity to go in, and ſee what was the Matter; her Miſtreſs being big with Child ſhe was therefore more curious than ordinary to prevent the Misfortune falling on her Miſtreſs; ſhe found her Maſter with two Piſtols in his Hand, he ſtuck one of the Piſtols on one Side, and the other on the other Side in his Coat; ſhe ſays, ſhe admoniſh'd her Maſter, and deſired him to conſider the Condition of her Miſtreſs, and not to do any thing to fright her; upon that he ſaid the Bailiffs had affronted him, and abuſed him, and called him Minter, however he did not deſign to do them any harm with the Piſtols, and her Maſter at her Deſire laid down the Piſtols on the Table; with that ſhe went out of the Room; but ſoon after hearing a great Noiſe ſhe came into the Room again, and found her Maſter on his Back on the Floor, and the Bailiffs ſtabbing him: She ſays ſhe went out with an Intent to give notice of it to the Neighbourhood, and that ſhe cried out Murder; that while ſhe was doing this, ſhe heard one Piſtol go off, and preſently after another; but before either went off, ſhe ſaw her Maſter lying upon his Back, and the Priſoner at the Bar (pointing at him) ſtabbing him. Then they call Thomas Waters, a Waterman, he was ſtanding by the Water-ſide, and ſeeing Mr. Lutterell coming down, who was one that uſually employ'd him, he expected a Fare from him, and that he ſhould carry him, as he uſually did; he ſaw Mr. Lutterell make back again and go into his own Lodging; but ſtill he ſaid he expected his Maſter to come down, and go by Water; but he not coming in ſo ſhort time as he expected, he made toward his Lodging, and as he came near he heard the Boy cry Fire and Murder: He went up into the Room, where he found Mr. Lutterell lying in the Room wounded all in Blood. The next Witneſs is Mr. Peters, who is a Reverend Divine, and came to do his Office and Duty on this melancholy Occaſion; he hearing Mr. Lutterell was wounded, and in danger of dying, came to him to perform his Office on that Occaſion: He ſays, that he requeſted and admoniſhed him to tell him, if he was not acceſſary to his own Misfortune, and that it may be, if it was not diſcovered whilſt he was living, it might be the Occaſion of an innocent Perſon's Suffering. When he admoniſhed him to tell the Truth, he did with the moſt ſolemn Aſſeveration, as he was to anſwer at the dreadful Day of Judgment, ſay, That he was barbarouſly murder'd; but did not you give any Provocation or Occaſion for it? No, I gave none. With that, ſays he, I told him I underſtood one of the Bailiffs was wounded with a Piſtol; did not you diſcharge either of the Piſtols? No, upon the Word of a dying Man, and as he was to anſwer it to Almighty God, he never diſcharged either of the Piſtols, nor did he run his Sword at them, draw his Sword at them, or give them any Provocation. The Miniſter ſays, he adviſed him to be very ſerious, and examined him as to the Fact, and ſaid it would be of very dangerous Conſequence, if he ſhould die with any Falſity in a Caſe of this Nature, and it would draw preſent Ruin on innocent Perſons; he ſaid, He never drew his Sword, nor diſcharged either of the Piſtols, but was barbarouſly murder'd. Mr. Peters then went away, and a little time after came again, when Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haynes, two Juſtices of the Peace, came to take an Examination from Mr. Lutterell himſelf; he ſays, he was preſent at that Time, that becauſe they had no Clerk with them, he was deſired to take an Account in Writing of what was ſaid; he preſs'd him as formerly, and having taken an Account in Writing, that ought to be produced, but it is not produced, and therefore no Regard is to be had to it, for a Perſon is to give the beſt Evidence the Thing is capable of, eſpecially where a Perſon's Life is concerned, and he of his own ſhewing, ſays it was taken in Writing, and that Writing is not produced, and no Account is given that they are diſabled to produce it, but the Juſtice of the Peace that hath it is out of the Way, and it doth not appear, that proper Endeavours have been taken to have him here, that this Examination might appear more perfect than the former. He tells you afterwards he came to him a third Time, and the End of his coming a third Time was to admoniſh him with reſpect to his Fate in the other World, and at that Time he deſired to take the Sacrament; he told him what was neceſſary, that he might take the Sacrament worthily, and that it was proper above all Things that he ſhould diſcharge himſelf and his Conſcience, and give a true Account of what happen'd on this melancholy Occaſion, that ſo no innocent Perſon might ſuffer. He ſtill inſiſted, That he was barbarouſly murder'd, and ſaid, that every Article of what he had ſaid was true. He ſaid to him further, before you receive the Holy Sacrament, and as you are going before God, and there hope to have Remiſſion of your Sins, it is neceſſary for you to forgive even your Enemies; and with that ſays he, he told me, He did heartily forgive all the World, and did forgive the Perſons that had been guilty of this Indiſcretion, and hoped God Almighty would forgive them: He gives it a ſoft Term there, their Indiſcretion. Indeed I ſhould have been very glad if the Examination that was reduced into Writing was here, that it might be laid before you. Mr. Peters is a very worthy Perſon, there is no Reaſon to doubt, but he ſwears upon his Memory; and when a Man ſwears upon his Memory, he may miſtake, and the Miſtake of a few Words may alter the Senſe; therefore it was very proper to have had the Examination here; that might poſſibly have corrected his Memory; and tho' he hath ſhew'd himſelf a Man of great Probity and Worth, yet he might be miſtaken in ſome Particular; and it ſeems ſtrange, that of two Juſtices of Peace the one appears, and the other, Mr. Vernon, with whom the Examination is left, doth not appear, nor any Endeavours uſed to have him here; and therefore it muſt be taken as an Objection, not as to his Veracity, but that the Proſecutor hath not produced the Evidence that is proper, and only relies on the Memory of the Witneſs, and this ſeems to affect the Evidence that is given by Mr. Peters. They have called another Witneſs, whom they called at laſt after they had cloſed their Evidence; ſhe lived in an Houſe over againſt Mr. Lutterell's Lodging; ſhe was in a Chamber, two Pair of Stairs, and ſhe ſaw a luſty fat Man come to the Window, take up a Piſtol, and as ſhe thought diſcharged the Piſtol; and ſhe ſaw no other Perſon but this Man, and therefore concluded the fat Man fired the Piſtol: This is the Evidence given for the King. The Priſoners are asked what they have to ſay for themſelves, in Anſwer to this Charge, which ſeems to be a weighty one given againſt them: They tell you they are Miniſters of Juſtice, and they give you an Account not only by their own opening, but by the Evidence they have produced, in what manner they behaved themſelves; that upon the firſt Arreſt, at the Requeſt of the Priſoner that then was, they ſubmitted to carry him back to his own Lodging: I muſt confeſs this doth ſeem to make ſome Impreſſion, it is what Bailiffs are not not bound to do, they are uſually rough, and not eaſy to be intreated, unleſs well paid for it; this ſhews, that theſe Men went beyond the Bounds of their own Duty, for when they had arreſted him, they ought to have ſecured him by carrying him to Jail, or ſome Place of Safety; it was incumbent on them to give him an Opportunity of paying the Money, or ſending for Bail, in Caſe he deſired to be diſcharged that Way; but when a Bailiff hath arreſted a Man, to carry him back to his own Lodging, is an unuſual way of treating Priſoners, and ought not to have been; but ſtill it is not to be imputed to the Bailiffs, as an Aggravation in the Charge, they were too favourable in truſting him in his own Lodging. What is next? When they had him there, Tranter is ſent for the Attorney's Bill, this is pretty extraordinary when they had taken him, not only to give him Leave to go to his own Lodgings, but one of them goes upon an Errand, which Mr. Lutterell might have ſent his own Servant upon, and leaves none but Reaſon; this was extreme civil Uſage, and not often done by Men of their Character; what then? Lutterell goes up Stairs, what did Reaſon then do? When he had carried him to his own Lodging and ſent his Partner away, he gives him leave to go into another Chamber; this doth not ſeem to be ill Treatment of the Deceaſed, but ſhews exceſſive Favour to their Priſoner, which they could not in Strictneſs juſtify: He went up Stairs and returned again, and the Maid-Servant of Mr. Lutterell tells you, ſhe ſaw him with a Caſe of Piſtols, one ſtuck on one Side of his Coat, and the other on t'other; if their Treatment was ſo extraordinary and civil, this ſeems to be an untoward Return of Mr. Lutterell's, when he was truſted to go out of the Room, for to return with a Caſe of Piſtols; but the Maid-Servant ſays, he ſaid, He had no Malice towards them, and would not hurt a Hair of their Heads, he only brought down the Piſtols that he might not be impoſed upon. I don't know what he meant, when he was in Cuſtody of the Officers, and had been ſo civilly uſed, to bring down a Caſe of Piſtols to prevent his being ill uſed, ſeems an untoward Return, and to affright the Officers, that they might not carry him away. This is not all, Mr. Gifford ſays, that he being a Surgeon was called to give his Aſſiſtance on this very unhappy Accident; he gives an Account of the Wounds, and the Diſcourſe that paſs'd on that Occaſion, and upon what he had done, and how the Bailiffs had treated him. Says he, I confeſs, although he ſays he had examined, and asked him ſeveral Times before, and that he refuſed to give any Account then, but did perſiſt in it, that he did not give any Provocation, but at laſt when Mr. Gifford repeated it with ſome Earneſtneſs, out it comes at laſt, That he did give one of the Bailiffs a Stroke on his Head with a Stick. He goes on, and ask'd him the Intent of bringing down the Piſtols; he ſays, I did not deſign any Harm; I have no Malice, but brought them down, that I might not be ill uſed: This was ill Behaviour, where he had been treated civilly, to declare that he brought down his Piſtols, that he might not be ill uſed: It was the Duty of the Bailiffs to carry him off, and he brought down his Piſtols to prevent that; as to the Blow, ſay the Bailiffs, the Aſſault begun on his Side; the young Man hath told you he heard a Blow given: Mr. Lutterell declared, he brought down the Piſtols to prevent their carrying him off, and that he did give one of the Bailiffs a Blow with a Cane; it is ſurprizing, that immediately when Tranter came back he ſhould run him againſt the Wainſcot, and the other aſſault him with a Sword; this Behaviour is not of a Piece with the other, that Tranter ſhould come back, and without any Provocation run him againſt the Wall, and Reaſon ſhould take his Sword and ſtab him: There muſt be a Provocation; the Boy ſays there was a Blow given, but he can't tell who gave it. Mr. Lutterell declares he gave a Blow, and another Surgeon confirms it; ſo that it appears beyond Contradiction, by the Evidence, that the Piſtols were brought down with a Deſign to prevent his being carried off, and that he did give one of the Bailiffs a Blow with a Stick: Then Mr. Bouman hath given you an Account of ſeveral Matters, but that which is material is, that he did not diſcharge any of his Piſtols, or draw his Sword; that he did not intend it, but did threaten it ſeveral Times. One Blake, who was another Witneſs, ſays, that upon Examination afterwards there appeared, that there had been a Blow on the Head of Tranter. This is the Nature of the Evidence given on the Side of the Priſoners. Upon the whole Matter, I think it is plain beyond Contradiction, that the Priſoners at the Bar did kill Mr. Lutterell. It is plain that firſt of all, when Tranter had him againſt the Wall, that Reaſon ſtabb'd him, and when lying upon the Floor, that Reaſon ſtabb'd him; and it appears afterwards by the Evidence of the Witneſs, who ſays ſhe ſaw the fat Man take up the Piſtol and diſcharge it, that Reaſon ſhot off the Piſtol; ſo that I think there can be no doubt at all, but the Priſoners at the Bar did give theſe Wounds, of which he died. The Surgeons give an Account, and I think there are ſome eight or nine Wounds with a Sword, one of them only mortal; a Wound with a Bullet that is mortal; ſeveral other Wounds he ſpeaks of, that are but ſlight. Then the Queſtion will be, whether upon this Evidence the Defendants are guilty of Felony, and if guilty, then in what Degree, whether of Murder or Manſlaughter. Gentlemen, it hath been opened truly, that the Bailiffs are Miniſters of Juſtice; they are arm'd with the Authority of Law, and thoſe, who reſiſt a Bailiff in the Execution of his Office, reſiſt the Law. They are not bound to give way and let their Priſoner Eſcape, but they being to execute their Warrant, if in doing what is neceſſary for this purpoſe, for obtaining their Priſoner, and the Security of their own Perſons, Death doth enſue, the Bailiffs having the Authority of the Law on their ſide, it is not ſo much as Felony; and it is very neceſſary it ſhould be ſo, for without it all our Properties would be precarious. When any Man offers an Injury to another, there is no Remedy but by bringing an Action at Law, and in order to bring the Perſon to do Juſtice a proper Officer muſt be imployed; and therefore it is highly reaſonable that Bailiffs ſhould have an Authority to carry off the Perſons they have arreſted, and if in doing of it Death enſues, the Party muſt thank himſelf. That being the Queſtion, I would recommend to your Conſideration theſe Circumſtances; it appears in the beginning, that the Bailiffs treated Mr. Lutterell with all Civility, gave him leave to go to his Lodging; one of them ſends his Companion away, and gives him leave to go up Stairs; but altho' they did do that, that will not juſtify them for being guilty of any Barbarity, without any juſt occaſion offer'd; therefore you are to conſider what happen'd afterwards: It appears Mr. Lutterell brought down the Piſtols, he did do this to prevent his being carried off; that is, to prevent the Bailiffs from carrying him from his Lodgings, which was their Duty to do in caſe the Money was not paid, or Bail given in; and if ſo, this is good introductory Evidence to that, which they offer to prove, namely, that he endeavour'd to reſcue himſelf: He ſays, he did not diſcharge either of the Piſtols, or draw his Sword upon them; that he did not intend to do any Miſchief, but he threatened them; then ſee how this is when taken together: Here is Mr. Lutterell under an Arreſt, fetches down his Piſtols with an intent to prevent his being carried off; I doubt his threatening muſt have reference, that he threatened to diſcharge his Piſtols, or draw his Sword upon them; then when his Piſtols are brought down with that intent, when he threatens what uſe he would make of his Piſtols or Sword, what is done afterwards? Mr. Lutterell gives one of the Bailiffs a Blow with his Cane; it is proved undeniably that there was a Blow given, that is proved by the Boy, that the Blow was given by Mr. Lutterell; that appears by what he own'd himſelf. Then conſider, here are Piſtols brought down with a Deſign to make Oppoſition; that he threatened them, and not only ſo, but gave one of them a Blow with his Cane; what is the Conſequence? Tranter runs him againſt the Wall, and Reaſon ſtabs him: If this were all that was in the caſe, when Piſtols are brought down, and Threatenings uſed, and a Blow given, the Officers are not to ſtand ſtill till they are murdered, nor could they tell what Mr. Lutterell's Intention was: As he had made an Appearance of Reſiſtance, and had made an Aſſault, you are to conſider whether this was not a neceſſary Defence of the Officers to ſecure their Priſoner. It is of no weight what Mr. Lutterell ſaid, that he intended to do them no harm; if he made an appearance of Reſiſtance, and actually aſſaulted them, the Queſtion is, whether the Baliffs, in this caſe, are not juſtified in what they have done; you will conſider their Circumſtances. The Maid tells you, when the Piſtols were brought down, at her Perſuaſion her Maſter laid them on the Table; ſo one would think that was an Indication that no ill uſe was intended to be made of them: It doth not appear whether one or both were in the reach of Mr. Lutterell. Then it appears, that notwithſtanding the running him againſt the Wall, he had in ſome meaſure reſcued himſelf from that Force, and there was a ſtruggling, and throwing down, which ſhews this Man was not ſo in the power of the Bailiffs, ſo as they could be ſecure of preſerving their Priſoner, or their own Lives. It muſt be left to your Conſideration, whether there was any Deſign of Mr. Lutterell to reſcue himſelf; but if you think they had a juſt Provocation, and they had Reaſon to be apprehenſive of loſing their Priſoner, the Law does allow them to do what is neceſſary for their own Security, and the Security of their Priſoner. This is what I recommend to your Conſideration, whether or no it appears to you that this was done out of Heat, and out of a Paſſion by the Bailiffs, when there was no juſt Cauſe for them to apprehend the Priſoner's being reſcued; if you believe that, then the Priſoners will be guilty of Felony: But if you believe there was juſt occaſion for the Priſoners to be apprehenſive they were in danger of their Lives, and of loſing their Priſoner, then whatever is done in their own Defence to ſecure their Priſoner, and their own Lives, it will not be Felony. I muſt confeſs it looks barbarous to think, that when a Man was in his Blood on the Ground, they ſhould follow their Blows, giving him more Wounds; this is carrying the thing a great way, and it looks like ſome Barbarity. But if Mr. Lutterell gave the firſt occaſion, whatever happened after, if done for the Security of their own Lives, and of their Priſoner, won't make them guilty of Felony; but ſuppoſe you ſhould be of Opinion that the Bailiffs have done more than they ſhould, then the next thing to conſider is, in what degree they are guilty: It appears a Blow was given, and that by the Boy before he came up Stairs; it appears by Mr. Lutterell that he gave the Blow; Gentlemen, I don't know, Men of Honour are not to juſtify themſelves by ſaying, ſaucy Language is given them, and therefore I am to be my own Avenger; Mr. Lutterell gave one of them a Blow over the Head, afterwards the reſt fell out as you have heard.

The Queſtion is, whether it be Murder; it muſt be done maliciouſly, and without Provocation, or elſe it is not Murder: Blows have always been allow'd to be Provocations, and here this is accompanied with fetching down the Piſtols, threatening the Bailiffs what he would do, and afterwards giving one of them a Blow; and if ſo, the Defendants will not be guilty of Murder, but only of Manſlaughter: Firſt, you are to aſſert a juſt and true Authority of the Bailiffs; on the other ſide you muſt not encourage the Bailiffs on a few angry Words immediately to fall into a Paſſion, and take away the Life of a Man. Here it appears, that a Blow was given under untoward Circumſtances, after the Bailiffs had been threatened with a Deſign to prevent his being carried off by them; and if it be ſo, the moſt you can make of it will be Manſlaughter.

They did behave themſelves civilly at firſt, ſhew'd him their Warrant, which he threw down and bid them wipe their backſide with it; that is a Matter which if this Gentleman had not ſuffered in the manner he hath done, muſt have been reſented in its place; then two or three times they are called Rogues and Raſcals, and that might provoke the Bailiffs: I think this unhappy Buſineſs was occaſioned by too great a Lenity of the Bailiffs in carrying back their Priſoner to his own Lodging; that was not well done of them. However I muſt leave it to your Conſideration, whether or no they are guilty of Felony; and if they be guilty of Felony, then in what degree, whether of Murder or Manſlaughter. I forgot one thing, the Surgeon did ſwear that one of the Bailiffs had a Wound in his Hand by a Bullet, each of them had a Wound, tho' it doth not appear how; all this is likewiſe to be conſider'd: you will conſider the whole, and give your Verdict accordingly.

Reaſon, as hath been proved, ſaid, he hoped he would give him Civility Money; he ſaid he would give nothing to ſuch Rogues as they were, for they had given him no Notice, but had arreſted him in the Street; that is the great Ground of Complaint, and at that the Offence is taken; they did not give him due Notice, therefore it was not civilly done, which if they had done, and it had come before us, we ſhould have puniſhed with great Severity.

Upon this the Jury withdrew, and after ſtaying out about an Hour, brought them both in Guilty of Manſlaughter: Upon which they prayed the Benefit of the Clergy, and were immediately burnt in the Hand.

CLXXXIX. The Trial of John Woodburne and Arundel Coke, Eſq; at Suffolk Aſſizes for Felony, in wilfully ſlitting the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, Gent. March 13, 1721. 8 Geo. I.

ON Tueſday the 13th of March 1721, at the Aſſizes held at Bury St. Edmonds in the County of Suffolk, John Woodburne and Arundel Coke were arraigned upon an Indictment found by the Grand-Jury: And the Court proceeded thus.

Clerk of the Arraignments. John Woodburne, hold up thy Hand; Arundel Cooke aliàs Coke, hold up thy Hand; which they ſeverally did.

You ſtand indicted by the Names of John Woodburne, late of the Borough of Bury St. Edmonds in the County of Suffolk, Labourer; and Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, of the Borough aforeſaid, Eſq; for that you, after the twenty fourth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand ſix hundred and ſeventy one, viz. the firſt Day of January, in the Eighth Year of our Sovereign Lord George, of Great Britain, &c. intending one Edward Criſpe, Gent. then and yet being a Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to maim and disfigure at the Borough aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, by Force and Arms, &c. in and upon the ſaid Edward Criſpe, in the Peace of God, and of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, did unlawfully and felonioufly make an Aſſault. And that you the ſaid John Woodburne with a certain Bill value a Penny, which you the ſaid John then had and held in your right Hand, the Noſe of the ſaid Edward Criſpe, on Purpoſe, and of your Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, did then and there unlawfully and felonioufly ſlit, with an Intent by ſo doing, the ſaid Edward Criſpe to maim and disfigure. And that you the ſaid Arundel Coke, at the time of the Felony aforeſaid, by the ſaid John Woodburne in manner aforeſaid, unlawfully and felonioufly done and committed, to wit, the ſaid firſt Day of January, in the eighth Year aforeſaid, at the Borough aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, on Purpoſe, and of your Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully and felonioufly was preſent, aiding and abetting the ſaid John Woodburne the Felony aforeſaid, in manner aforeſaid, felonioufly to commit and do. And ſo the Jury aforeſaid, upon their Oaths ſay, that you the ſaid John Woodburne and Arundel Coke, the ſaid firſt Day of January, in the eighth Year aforeſaid, at the Borough aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, by Force and Arms, &c. on Purpoſe, and of your Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, the Felony aforeſaid, in manner aforeſaid, did, and each of you did, commit, and do againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignities, and alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. [Vid. A true Copy of the Indictment it ſelf in Latin, at the end.]

Cl. Arr.

Cl. Arr. John Woodburne, and Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, hold up your Hands. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Charge: They ſtand indicted by the Names of John Woodburne, late of the Borough of Bury St. Edmonds, in the County of Suffolk, Labourer, and Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, of the Borough aforeſaid, Eſq; for that they (as in the Indictment before-mentioned) upon which Indictment they have been arraign'd, and pleaded ſeverally Not Guilty: Your Charge is to enquire whether they, or either of them, are Guilty of the Felony whereof they ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty.

Mr. Lee. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, who are indicted for Felony on the 22° and 23° Car. II. entitled, An Act to prevent malicious Maiming and Wounding. And the Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoners, the firſt Day of January, in the eighth Year of his preſent Majeſty, at Bury St. Edmonds in this County, did on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, make an Aſſault unlawfully and felonioufly upon Edward Criſpe, Gent. and that the Priſoner John Woodburne with a Bill which he then had in his Right Hand, did on Purpoſe, of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, ſlit the Noſe of the ſaid Edward Criſpe, with an Intent in ſo doing to disfigure the ſaid Edward Criſpe; and that the Priſoner Arundel Coke at the Time of committing the ſaid Felony, on Purpoſe, and of his Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, was unlawfully and felonioufly preſent, aiding and abetting the ſaid John Woodburne to commit the ſaid Felony: All which is laid to be done contrary to the Form of the Statute. If we who are Counſel for the King prove this Matter, you will find them Guilty.

Serj. Selby. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel, pro hac Vice, for the King againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, who ſtand indicted upon the Statute of the 22° of King Charles II. the one for maliciouſly maiming and disfiguring of Edward Criſpe, the other for abetting that Fact, which by that Act is made one and the ſame Offence; I ſaid, Gentlemen, I was Counſel for the King, for that his Majeſty, as the Father of his People, and for their Safety, out of his natural Goodneſs, hath been graciouſly pleaſed particularly to regard this Proſecution for ſo horrid and bloody an Aſſaſſination. And though, Gentlemen, 'tis difficult to ſtand in this Place without the greateſt Tenderneſs to our Fellow-Creatures, yet theſe, who have diveſted themſelves of all Humanity, now ceaſe to be ſuch; 'tis even Cruelty to the King's People not to ſtand up againſt them ſo far as is conſiſtent with Law and Juſtice. Their Proſecution is become the common Concern of Mankind; for ſo long as theſe Priſoners have a Being here, the Life of every Man is precarious, and but at the Will of ſo infernal a Contriver as the one, and ſo helliſh an Executioner as the other. We ſhall firſt, Gentlemen, prove the Fact committed, and that by Mr. Criſpe himſelf, who by a particular Providence hath ſurvived this horrid Attempt, and is here to give Evidence of it, and that he was invited with his Wife by Mr. Coke (who married Mr. Criſpe's Siſter, and who was to have Mr. Criſpe's Eſtate by his Deceaſe) to ſup at his Houſe; that Mr. Coke propoſed to him to go after Supper to make a Viſit to Mrs. Monke (whoſe Name we mention without any the leaſt Imputation) to which Mr. Criſpe conſented; that Mrs. Monke's Houſe opens into the Church-yard, which is but croſs the Way from Mr. Coke's Houſe; that Mr. Coke took Mr. Criſpe along with him about ten or eleven at Night, it being dark, into the Church-yard, and walked him about near Mrs. Monke's Door without going in, and then making ſome Noiſe or Whiſtling, a Perſon came up to him and knock'd him down, after which he was not ſenſible; that being left for dead, after ſome Time he got up, and return'd, he did not know how, to Mr. Coke's Houſe, where the Company receiv'd him with great Conſternation, as did Mr. Coke himſelf, who ſoon returned after walking out with Mr. Criſpe, out of Breath, and called for a Glaſs of Wine; and being aſked what was become of Mr. Criſpe, ſaid he was ſtumbling home in the dark. This we ſhall prove by Mr. Browne, another Relation. We ſhall prove by Mr. Sturgeon, who was called as his Surgeon, the Condition of his Wounds; and by Carter, a Blackſmith, that Mr. Coke about the Friday before the Fact was committed, ſent for him, and aſked (after a previous Diſcourſe of Carter's Poverty, and how he might live well in the World) if he would cut off ten Men's Heads without Remorſe; which when Carter ſaid he could not, If he would cut off one Man's Head, and lay it before Coke; which Carter refuſing, Mr. Coke bid him conſider on't, and come again; then gave him a Glaſs of Brandy, and diſmiſſed him, bidding him ſend Woodburne to him. We ſhall prove by one Moone, a Taylor, that Mr. Coke about three Years ſince ſollicited him to the like Effect. We ſhall prove by Willet the Conſtable, that after Woodburne was taken up, he confeſſed the Fact, ſaid he did it with a Hedging-Bill, and gave him Directions where to find it, and he found it accordingly; which Woodburne, when ſhew'd him, acknowledged to be the ſame, and which we have here to produce. We ſhall prove by Mr. Wetherell the Goaler, that Mr. Coke, ſince he was in his Cuſtody, confeſſed the whole Fact, and that Woodburne was placed in a Porch of an empty Houſe near Mr. Coke's, to come out on a Whiſtle to do the Fact; and that he deliver'd Mr. Criſpe to Woodburne, and was preſent when the Fact was committed. And after this Evidence, there can be no doubt, Gentlemen, but you will find the Priſoners at the Bar guilty of this Indictment.

Serj. Brantbwayt. My Lord, the Defendants are indicted of Felony, upon an Act of Parliament made 22° & 23° Car. II. by which Act, if any Perſon or Perſons, on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, ſhall unlawfully cut out or diſable the Tongue, put out the Eye, ſlit the Noſe, &c. with an Intention in ſo doing to maim or disfigure; the Perſon or Perſons ſo offending, their Counſellors, Aiders, and Abettors, knowing thereof, are Felons without Benefit of Clergy. The Indictment charges the Defendants with feloniouſly making an Aſſault on Mr. Criſpe; that Woodburne ſlit his Noſe with a Bill or Hook; that Coke was aiding and aſſiſting therein. We ſhall be able by undoubted Evidence to prove and make clear the Charge of the Indictment, and every Particular thereof, as has been opened to you, and that the manner of doing it was attended with ſuch Circumſtances of Inhumanity, Baſeneſs, and Villany, as no Inſtance can parallel. Mr. Criſpe is Brother-in-Law to Mr. Coke, who on the firſt Day of January laſt, under the Colour of Friendſhip and Affection, invites Mr. Criſpe and Family to Supper at Coke's Houſe. Before this Invitation he had agreed with Woodburne for Hire, to lie in wait on Purpoſe to effect the deſigned Miſchief. When Woodburne was lying in wait, Coke came ſeveral times to him to encourage him in his vile Purpoſe. After Supper, Mr. Coke, unmindful of all the Obligations of brotherly Love, of Hoſpitality, and of the Protection due to Mr. Criſpe, by falſe and vile Arts and Perſuaſions entices him into the Church-yard, the Place deſigned and agreed upon for the Execution of their wicked Purpoſes. When he had got Mr. Criſpe into this Place, by Sign he gave notice of it to Woodburne, who had follow'd at ſome diſtance; and then deliver'd him into the Poſſeſſion of Woodburne, and was preſent at the ſtriking ſeveral Blows with the Hook. By the Nature of the Inſtrument every Blow muſt maim and disfigure; and the Blows being given by the Order and Direction of Mr. Coke by Woodburne, Mr. Criſpe's Noſe was ſlit on purpoſe to maim and disfigure by one lying in wait: Which are all the Circumſtances requir'd by the Act of Parliament to make them guilty of the Felony with which they are charged. Which ſeveral Facts we ſhall call our Witneſſes to make out, and doubt not but the Jury will find them guilty.

Serj. Selby. We deſire in the firſt Place, Mr. Edward Criſpe himſelf may be ſworn, (which was done accordingly.) Mr. Criſpe, give an Account to my Lord and the Jury of the whole Matter.

Criſpe. On New-Year's-Day laſt I was invited to ſup at Mr. Coke's, and being there, he propoſed to me to go to Mrs. Fanny Monke's.

L. C. Juſt. Was this before or after Supper?

Criſpe. This was before Supper: We ſupp'd about ſeven, and after Supper about ten o' Clock he call'd me out of his Parlour, I follow'd him; we went into the Church-yard: It was then very dark, the Moon did not ſhine. He took three or four Turns before the Houſe where Mrs. Monke dwelt, then he ſtood ſtill and made a Noiſe.

L. C. Juſt. What kind of Noiſe did he make?

Criſpe. It was like a Hollowing.

L. C. Juſt. Were you under any Fear or Apprehenſion from that Noiſe?

Criſpe. Yes, my Lord, I was afraid, and made up towards the Wall; but in a quarter of a Minute ſomebody came behind me, and knock'd me down.

L. C. Juſt. Did you then know who that Man was?

Criſpe. I did not.

L. C. Juſt. Can you tell what was done to you afterwards?

Criſpe. My Lord, I cannot, for on that Blow I loſt my Senſes for ſome time.

L. C. Juſt. How long was it before your Senſes returned?

Criſpe. My Lord, I cannot tell, but in ſome time I got up, and return'd to Mr. Coke's.

Serj. Selby. In what Condition did you find yourſelf?

Criſpe. I was ready to die and faint, and I was found very much wounded.

Serj. Branthw. Did any Surgeon come to you at Mr. Coke's?

Criſpe. Yes, Sir, Mr. Sturgeon.

L. C. Juſt. After the Perſon came up who knock'd you down, did you hear Mr. Coke ſay any thing?

Criſpe. No, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. Can you tell whether he ſtaid any time, or what became of him?

Criſpe. No, I cannot.

L. C. Juſt. Was he there when the firſt Blow was given?

Criſpe. Yes, he was.

L. C. Juſt. Will the Priſoners aſk Mr. Criſpe any Queſtions?

Coke. Mr. Criſpe, was I preſent when you were knock'd down?

Criſpe. Yes, Sir.

Coke. Do you remember that you ſaw me?

Criſpe. Yes.

Coke. How near was I to you?

Criſpe. You were cloſe by me when I was knock'd down.

Serj. Selby. Call Mr. Brown and ſwear him, (which was accordingly done.) I think you are a Relation of Mr. Coke's?

Brown. Yes, Sir, I married his own Siſter, and he married Mr. Criſpe's Siſter.

Serj. Selby. Was you at Mr. Coke's Houſe laſt New-Year's-Day at Night?

Brown. A Day or two before laſt New-Year's-Day, I and my Wife and Daughter were invited to ſup with him, and accordingly we went. I came about ſix o' Clock, and found Mr. Coke and Mr. Criſpe drinking a Glaſs of Wine in the Parlour before Supper.

Serj. Selby. Was there any other Company with them?

Brown. No, the Women were above Stairs. I ſat down with them, and we three ſtaid in the Parlour till Supper-time. When Supper was ready, we went up Stairs. Then after Supper, between eight and nine, we three came down into the Parlour again. Some time after, Coke went out of the Room, and then came back again and gave a Call, or beckon'd to Mr. Criſpe, who follow'd him out of the Room.

Serj. Selby. At what Time of Night was this?

Brown. After nine o' Clock at Night.

Serj. Branthw. How long was it before Mr. Coke return'd?

Brown. He was gone about ten Minutes and then return'd.

Serj. Branthw. Was he in any Diſorder when he returned?

Brown. He ſeem'd to be out of Breath, as if he had been walking faſter than ordinary.

Serj. Branthw. How far diſtant is the Church-yard, where this Gentlewoman dwelt, from Mr. Coke's Houſe?

Brown. The Church-yard is about twice the length of this Shire-Houſe from Mr. Coke's Houſe.

Serj. Branthw. What did Coke do when he came in?

Brown. Immediately he drank a Glaſs of Wine to me, and after he had ſat ſome time, he went out of the Room. I heard a Noiſe up Stairs, and being told my Daughter was ill, I went up, and in a little time came down again into the Parlour, where I found Mr. Coke.

Serj. Branthw. Did you aſk him what was become of Mr. Criſpe?

Brown. I did then ask him what was become of Mr. Criſpe, and he told me that he believed he was gone home in the dark. In about two or three Minutes after, Mr. Criſpe came in. He was very much wounded and bloody. I was ſo ſurprized that I could not take particular notice of him.

Mr. Raby. How long was it from Criſpe's going out to his coming in again?

Brown. It was near half an Hour.

L. C. Juſt. So then Coke returned in about ten Minutes, and Criſpe in near half an Hour.

Brown. Yes, my Lord.

Serj. Selby. Did Mr. Coke ſee Mr. Criſpe when he came back to his Houſe?

Brown. Yes.

Serj. Selby. What did he ſay?

Brown. He ſeem'd to be in a great Conſternation.

Mr. Raby. Do you know of any Eſtate that would have come to Mr. Coke after Mr. Criſpe's Death?

Brown. I cannot poſitively ſay it of my own Knowledge.

Mr. Raby. We will aſk Mr. Criſpe that Queſtion. Pray Mr. Criſpe, would any Eſtate have come by your Death to Mr. Coke?

Criſpe. In caſe I had died, one hundred Pounds per Annum would have come to his Wife, as one of my Siſters.

L. C. Juſt. Have you then no Children, nor Brothers?

Criſpe. No, my Lord; my next of Kin are three Siſters, one of which is Mr. Coke's Wife, ſhe would have been one of my Heirs.

Serj. Selby. Call Mr. Sturgeon; (who appeared, and was ſworn.) What do you know concerning this wounding of Mr. Criſpe?

Sturg. I am a Surgeon by Profeſſion; and the firſt Day of January laſt at Night, about eleven o' Clock, I was ſent for to Mr. Criſpe at Mr. Coke's Houſe: When I came, I found him very much wounded and cut, and in a very weak Condition, and that he had loſt a great deal of Blood. I examined his Wounds: One Wound began at his Right Ear, divided the fleſhy Part of his Cheek, and ended on his upper Lip juſt under his Right Noſtril; the Fleſh was all divided, and the Jaw left naked. Another Wound divided the Right Side of the Noſtril, and made an oblique Croſs over the Wound, and ended near the Right under Jaw.

Serj. Selby. Was his Noſe ſlit?

Sturg. Yes, Sir, the Noſe was cut from without into the Noſtril; the Edge of the Noſe was not cut through, but there was a Cut or Slit in the Noſe that went through: I ſow'd it up: It was indeed but with one Stich; it is yet viſible, and the Noſe was cut through.

Serj. Selby. Were there any other Wounds?

Sturg. There was another deep Wound under his Chin, that reach'd from one Jaw to the other. There was another Wound, which began at his Chin, croſs'd the Left under Jaw, and tended towards his Ear. There was alſo a ſmall Wound on his Left Cheek, another on his upper Lip, and another on his Left Temple.

Serj. Selby. How many Wounds had he in all?

Sturg. Seven.

Serj. Selby. Do you think there were ſeven diſtinct Wounds, that had ſeven diſtinct Blows?

Sturg. I take it, that every one of the ſeven Wounds had a diſtinct Blow.

Serj. Selby. With what Inſtrument did you apprehend thoſe Blows were given?

Sturg. It was cut ſo clean, that I thought it was done either by a Knife or Razor.

L. C. Juſt. Let the Jury ſee Mr. Criſpe's Wounds.

[Then his Face and Wounds were ſhewn to the Jury for their Obſervation.]

Serj. Branthw. Swear Charles Willet; (which was done accordingly.) I think you are a Conſtable in Bury St. Edmonds?

Willet. I am.

Serj. Branthw. Had you any Occaſion to ſpeak to Woodburne concerning this Matter, and what did he ſay?

Will. I had a Warrant from Alderman Wright and Mr. Serjeant Reynolds to apprehend Coke upon Woodburne's Examination.

Serj. Branthw. The Queſtion aſk'd you is, What you know of Woodburne's Confeſſion, and what he hath ſaid to you about this Matter?

Will. After Woodburne was committed, I was with him, and ask'd him, Whether he was concerned in the wounding of Mr. Criſpe? He told me, Yes, he was. I ask'd him how long Coke ſtaid with him: He ſaid, that he had ſtruck Criſpe three or four Blows before Coke left him.

Serj. Branthw. What elſe did you aſk him, or did he ſay to you?

Will. He told me, that he was walking up and down in the Church-yard when Coke whiſtled to him, and that on that Signal he went up and aſſaulted Mr. Criſpe.

Serj. Branthw. Did he give you any Account how long and where he waited before the Fact was done?

Will. He told me, that he was deſired by Mr. Coke to be up and down in the Church-yard about nine o' Clock that Night; and that being a cold Night, Coke gave him a Bottle of Brandy, and told him he could not tell what time Criſpe would come home, but deſired him to be ready and to ſtay let it be never ſo long.

Serj. Branthw. Did he tell you with what Inſtrument he did it?

Will. He told me, he did it with an Hook or Bill, that was new ground for the Purpoſe, and that it was in his Houſe at the Right Hand of his Door. I went according to his Direction, and found it, and brought it to him; and he ſaid, that was the Hook.——— The Hook I have brought with me, and this is the Hook that I have now in my Hand.

Mr. Raby. Call William Wetherel; (who was ſworn.) Give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of this Matter.

Weth. I am the Goaler; and the Day after Mr. Coke was committed to me, about five Minutes after One, he ſent for me up into his Chamber, where his Wife was crying and in great Diſorder, as he ſeem'd to be likewiſe. She was deſiring her Husband to diſcover. When he came to himſelf, he told me, that he and Woodburne had had a Deſign to murder Mr. Criſpe, and had attempted it ſeveral Times; and deſired me to go and ſecure Woodburne. I went to the Alderman, and told him of it, and he gave me the like Orders. Coming from the Alderman I met Mr. Coke's Man, who aſk'd me, whether I had found found him; on which I ask'd him, who and what he meant, thinking him to be ignorant of his Maſter's Confeſſion: But he told me, that his Maſter had diſcovered it to him, and had ſent him to take up Woodburne. Whilſt we were talking, we ſaw Woodburne coming up, and we deſir'd one John Carter, a Smith, who was ſhooting a Horſe, to aſſiſt us; which he did, and we ſecur'd Woodburne.

L. C. Juſt. Did Mr. Coke confeſs any thing to you concerning this Fact, and the manner of doing it?

Weth. Yes, my Lord, he did. He told me ſeveral times, that he had a Deſign to murder Criſpe, and that he employed Woodburne, and deliver'd Criſpe into his Hands.

L. C. Juſt. Did he tell you that?

Weth. He did tell me ſo: He told me alſo, that it was done with an Hook; and that he bid Woodburne to cut his Weaſand or Wind-pipe; and that if Woodburne had not been a cow-hearted Dog, he would have ſo done, and ſecur'd Criſpe from telling Tales.

Mr. Raby. Did Coke tell you what Means he uſed to do this to Mr. Criſpe?

Weth. He ſaid, that he call'd him out of his Houſe, went into the Church-yard with him, and there he delivered him into Woodburne's Hands.

Mr. Raby. Did he ſay what Signal was given?

Weth. Not that I remember; but he ſaid, that Woodburne was placed there by his Appointment.

Mr. Raby. For what Deſign?

Weth. With an Intent to murder him. When Woodburne ſtruck him, Coke ſaid, he went away immediately.

Mr. Raby. What have you heard Woodburne ſay concerning this Fact?

Weth. I have heard Woodburne ſay, that he and Coke had lain in wait ſeveral Times and at ſeveral Places to murder Mr. Criſpe.

Mr. Raby. Did Woodburne give you any Account what he did at this Time to Mr. Criſpe?

Weth. Yes, he did; he ſaid, that he ſtruck him a Blow with his Hook, and that not quite ſtriking him down, he gave him a ſecond Blow which did; and that Criſpe, as he was falling, (who was never us'd to ſwear) cried out, God damn him; and that then it went to his very Heart to think that he ſhould kill a Man with an Oath in his Mouth.

Mr. Raby. Did he ſay he gave him many Blows?

Weth. He ſaid, he gave him ſeveral Blows, and that he thought he was dead.

Mr. Lee. Call Robert Moon; (who appeared, and was ſworn.) What did you know of this Matter?

Moon. When I heard what happen'd to Criſpe, I ſaid, I knew the Perſon who did it, or the Perſon who employ'd him to do it; and the Reaſon was, becauſe three Years, or three Years and a half ago, Mr. Coke ſent for me, and ſaid to me, at firſt I thought it to be in a jeſting Way, that he wiſh'd Mr. Criſpe out of the World, he was a good for nothing Fellow; his Wife had a Trick of playing away his Eſtate, and he wiſh'd ſomebody would knock him on the Head. Sir, ſaid I to him, what Advantage would that be to you? He ſhook his Head, and ſaid, a very good Eſtate. Said I, I thought Criſpe had but a ſmall Eſtate. Yes, ſaid he, a very good one. Then I began to think there was ſomething in it. After ſome little time, ſaid he, I do not value ten or twenty Guineas to knock him on the Head. Then I began a little to reflect that he ſhould have ſuch an Opinion of me, that I ſhould be ſuch a ſort of a Perſon.

Mr. Lee. What then did you ſay to him?

Moon. I told him, that I would not kill the greateſt Villain in the World for ten ſuch Towns as Bury.

Mr. Lee. What did he ſay afterwards?

Moon. I do not remember, I have forgot if there was any thing elſe.

Mr. Lee. How came you to remember this?

Moon. When I heard of this Fact committed on Mr. Criſpe, then it came freſh into my Memory.

Serj. Selby. Call John Carter; (who appeared, and was ſworn.) What Trade are you of?

Carter. A Blackſmith.

Serj. Selby. Did Coke at any time ſend Woodburne for you, and what paſt thereon?

Carter. On the Friday before New-Year's-Day laſt, which was on a Monday, Mr. Coke ſent Woodburne to me, who told me his Maſter Coke wanted to ſpeak with me.

Serj. Selby. Did you go?

Carter. Yes, I went to his Houſe, and he order'd me to come up to him in his Chamber. When I came up, he told me that he wanted a good ſtrong Horſe to carry his Weight. I told him I did not know of any one then; but when I did, I would let him know. Upon that he ſaid, by God, how do you go on, Boy? I hear you have loſt moſt of your Buſineſs, you have got no Iron nor Coals, and you are afraid of a Goal; I have a Thing now in Agitation that will make a Man of you as long as you live. I ſaid I ſhould be very glad of that. Said he, can you keep a Secret? Yes, ſaid I, as well as any one to ſerve myſelf and my Friend. Said he, can you keep one of the biggeſt Secrets in the World? I told him, as well as any body. Said he, you are pretty much in Debt, and if you will ſerve me in this, I can make a Man of you as long as you live: Do you think you could cut five or ſix Men's Heads off without Scruple of Conſcience? I told him, No; it was too much for a Man's Conſcience to bear. Said he, what, a Scruple of Conſcience to do ſuch a Thing as that? There are thoſe above who have done ten times worſe. I ſuppoſe, Sir, ſaid I, you mean the South-Sea Gentlemen. Yes, ſaid he, ſo I do; they have ruined Families, and beggar'd Gentlemen: To cut Mens Heads off is but a Trifle to them. Said I, Mr. Coke, I believe you ſpeak only in Joke, by way of Merriment. Said he, what do you think I ſent for you by way of Joke? I told him I could not do any ſuch Thing. Then, ſaid he, do you think you can cut off one Man's Head without Scruple of Conſcience? I told him, No. Then, ſaid he, if you can't cut off a Man's Head, and lay it down upon the Table before me, you are not for my Turn: On that he fetch'd a Bottle of Brandy, and gave me a Glaſs or two, and then ſaid to me, Carter, I would have you go home, and conſider of it for two or three Days, and if you can cut off a Man's Head without Scruple of Conſcience, you ſhall have Plenty of Gold and Silver, and any thing elſe you aſk. I told him, I needed no Conſideration, for I could could not do it. Then, ſaid he, ſend Woodburne to me. And as I went out, I ſaw Woodburne at the Door, and ſent him in to Mr. Coke.

Serj. Selby. Did he ſay any thing elſe to you, or any thing about Mr. Criſpe?

Carter. I live in a Houſe of Mr. Criſpe's, and Mr. Coke had been formerly his Steward, and Woodburne acted under him. And Mr. Coke ſaid, that he heard my Houſe was out of Repair, that it would be his after Mr. Criſpe, and whether I ſhould not like it better for him to keep it in Repair, as he had done before.

Serj. Selby. I think, my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and have ſufficiently proved Mr. Coke and Woodburne to be guilty not only within the Intention but the Letter of the Statute of the 22d of Car. II. upon which they ſtand indicted. We have proved the Malice premeditated and fore-thought, the Intention to maim and disfigure, by ſlitting the Noſe (for Mens Intentions muſt be conſtrued by their Actions) and the maiming and disfiguring accordingly; and that Mr. Coke was privy to, and the Aider and Abetter of the Offence: And therefore, Gentlemen of the Jury, we can't doubt but that you will find them both Guilty; and that your Verdict and their Conviction will be with the Suffrage of all Mankind.

Mr. Raby. My Lord, having gone through our Evidence, you will now permit me to make ſome few Obſervations upon what has been offer'd, and from which we humbly apprehend it will moſt clearly appear, that we have fully prov'd and made out every thing neceſſary to maintain this Indictment.

My Lord, it muſt be agreed, that this is an Offence created by a particular Act of Parliament, uſually call'd Sir John Coventry's Act, made on the Occaſion of the like barbarous Uſage he met with, to puniſh that Offence, and to prevent the like for the future: And I alſo agree, that the Priſoners muſt appear to be guilty of thoſe very Facts, which by that Act are made Felony, or otherwiſe they cannot be puniſhed by that Law. But we humbly apprehend, that when that Law, and the Evidence which has been given againſt the Priſoners are conſider'd, they will appear to be guilty within the expreſs Words of that Law; for which End I beg leave to mention that Act, which is the 22 and 23 Car. II. cap. 1. The Words are theſe. "That if any Perſon or Perſons, on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, ſhall unlawfully cut or diſable the Tongue, put out an Eye, ſlit the Noſe, &c. with an Intention in ſo doing to maim or disfigure, in any the Manners before-mentioned, the Perſon or Perſons ſo offending, their Counſellors, Aiders, and Abettors (knowing of and privy to the Offence aforeſaid) ſhall be Felons, &c."

From this Clauſe it appears the Offence muſt be done;

1. Of Malice fore-thought.
2. By lying in wait.
3. By ſlitting the Noſe, &c.
4. With an Intention to maim or disfigure.

And we humbly ſubmit it, that from the Evidence which has been given againſt the Priſoners, it moſt plainly appears, that the Defendants are guilty of this Offence in every Circumſtance deſcribed by this Act of Parliament.

1. For certainly there cannot be the leaſt Queſtion, but that this was done of Malice fore-thought, when it appears from the Evidence to have been under Conſideration and premeditated for three Years and an half: And Mr. Coke had tried ſeveral Perſons, before he could find any ſo hardy as to execute his baſe Purpoſe, or comply with ſo inhuman an Attempt: And therefore we apprehend there cannot be any Colour to ſay, this was not of Malice fore-thought.

2. And that this Offence was alſo done with lying in wait is as clear: For does it not fully appear upon the Evidence of Mr. Criſpe, that when he came out of Mr. Coke's Houſe, Mr. Coke gave a Whiſtle or Signal? In vain had Mr. Coke given that Signal, if no Perſon had been in waiting to have heard it: To what End had that Signal been given, if Mr. Coke had not known there was ſome Perſon to have heard it? It appears plainly Woodburne came upon the Signal given; and what enſued you have heard, I need not repeat.

3. The third Thing made material by this Act, is, That the Noſe ſhould be ſlit; and that the Noſe was ſlit appears from the Surgeon's Evidence, who has given a very particular Account of the ſeven Wounds Mr. Criſpe received in his Face and Head: And he ſays, the Noſe (the Noſtril) was cut through.

4. Whether the other Circumſtance, that this was done with an Intent to maim and disfigure, does ſufficiently appear, or not, is the only Queſtion that remains: And we ſubmit it to your Conſideration, as that which is very clear from this Evidence.

Mens Acts are the beſt Interpreters of their Intents: If a Man kills another without Provocation, tho' no expreſs Malice or malicious Intent appears, yet the very Act of the Party has always been taken to be a ſufficient Proof of his Intent and Malice fore-thought. The Intent is latent in the Mind, and can ſeldom be known otherwiſe than by the Act which is done: And as there the malicious Intent is collected from the Act of the Party, ſo here 'tis as reaſonable to collect his Intent to disfigure from the Act which is done, the maiming and disfiguring Mr. Criſpe; and the very Manner of doing it ſpeaks it.

Whoever looks upon this Gentleman (Mr. Criſpe) ſees too plainly how much he is disfigur'd: And could a Man cut another ſeven Times on the Head and Face with this Iron Bill, with this Weapon, without disfiguring him? Is it to be imagined? And when he has done the very Act, when he has disfigured him, ſhall he ſay, he had no ſuch Intent? The Act done, and the Manner of doing it, ſpeak it too plainly. 'Tis confeſs'd the Intent was to murder; this is what both the Priſoners admit to be the End deſign'd; but did they not alſo intend the Means? It would be in vain to intend the End, and reject the Means to effect it: The Means choſen to effect it have appear'd to be to cut him to death, by ſtriking him with a Bill on the Head and Face: Is it poſſible to expect to cut him to Death on the Face with the Weapon produced, and not to disfigure him? This is the Act Woodburne has done, and Coke was preſent when Woodburne ſtruck, even when he did this Fact, and Coke was a Counſellor, Aider and Abettor; he was preſent, and, in the Words of the Act of Parliament, knowing of the Offence. And therefore upon this Evidence we ſubmit it, whether we have not given Satisfaction faction to the Court and Jury, that the Priſoners are guilty.

This is not a Proſecution of the Party injured, ariſing from Revenge or Reſentment, but is carried on by the Publick, by the Crown, for the ſake only of Publick Juſtice, that by the Puniſhment of this Offence, the Subjects may have that Protection they ought to have by a due Execution of the Laws: And all we pray is, that the Jury will give ſuch a Verdict as is agreeable to Juſtice.

L. C. Juſt. Woodburne, what have you to ſay for yourſelf?

Woodburne. May it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, the firſt Time that Coke began with me about this Matter was on a Wedneſday in laſt Barley-Harveſt. He ſent for me to mend his Copper, and after I had done it, he bid me go to the further End of the Mill-Lane, and there he muſt ſpeak with me, and which came firſt ſhould ſtay for the other. I was there before him; when he came he was on Horſe-back, and his Horſe kick'd about in a furious Manner, that the People took notice of it. When they were gone, he told me, that he had a Thing for me to do, but not to be done preſently, and that if I did it I ſhould want for nothing. I aſk'd him what it was. He ſaid, about Mr. Criſpe, to ſet him aſide, that is, to kill him: But he ſaid, it was not to be done preſently: So he put his Hand in his Pocket and gave me Eighteen Pence. I told him, I never did ſuch a Thing in my Life; I could not do it. Said he, it is not to be done preſently, we have Time to conſider. A while after he ſent for me again, and aſk'd me, whether I had conſider'd of it. I told him, I could not do it. Said he, we muſt ſet Criſpe aſide; for Mrs. Criſpe hath got a Trick to play; ſhe will make away what there is from me and my Child. I ſaid, I never did any ſuch Thing; I could not do it, and deſired him to forbear. I went away and left him in his Chamber. Within a while after he came to my Houſe; ſaid he, John, what is the Reaſon you can't do this for me? Said I, I cannot do it. Said he, what ſignifies it, I would do it for you. I ſaid, I could not do it. Then he went away very uneaſy, and in a Week or Fortnight ſent for me again to his Chamber, and there was at me again. I told him I could do no ſuch Work. Said he, why can't you do this Work? I have been a good Maſter to you, I made myſelf look little to bail you when you were in Goal. I turned about and cried. Said he, what makes you cry? Your crying ſignifies nothing; the Money that I ſhall give you will do you and your Family a Kindneſs. Said I, I can do no ſuch Thing. Said he, it ſignifies no more the killing of him, than to kill a Dog, for they do no good with what they have. Yes, ſaid I, Mr. Criſpe is a very good Maſter; I work'd for him and his Father before him: And ſo I went away. Afterwards my Wife died three Days before Gunpowder-Treaſon laſt: She was buried on that Day, and being very poor, I ſent my Daughter to deſire a little Money of him to have the Bell toll'd for my Wife; but he ſent me none. My Wife was buried on a Sunday, then on the Monday he ſent his Boy for me; I went down to him, and when I came, I fell a weeping for the Loſs of my Wife, and having ten Children. Said he, what makes you cry? You muſt pull up a good Heart; tho' your Wife be dead, you may have Friends; here is that which will do you a Kindneſs hereafter. Said I, I am very ſorry for the Loſs of my Wife. Said he, what ſignifies that? She was carried well into the Church, and is, no doubt, happy; ſhe is gone before you; we muſt all go in our Time: I was a Friend to you in her Illneſs; I ſent her a good Doctor at my own Charge: This twenty Pounds that I will give you will be a brave Eſtate for you.

L. C. Juſt. What were you to have this twenty Pounds for?

Woodburne. It was to kill Mr. Criſpe; he told me that I muſt ſet aſide Mr. Criſpe; he offer'd me twenty Pounds to do it; but I then refus'd it. On Monday, New-year's-day in the Morning, Coke ſent his Boy for me to come to him; and between eight and nine in the Morning I went to him. He was in his green Room. Now, ſaid he, John, we ſhall have the faireſt Opportunity to kill Mr. Criſpe. I told him, I was loth to do it; it was very cold, and I had an Ague. Said he, I will give you that which ſhall warm you. He went to his Cloſet, and gave me out of the Bottle that he uſed to carry in his Pocket, half a Pint of Brandy, and told me, that happen how it will I muſt not come near his Houſe any more that Day, leſt afterwards there ſhould be ſome Suſpicion; but ſaid he, whether Ague or not, you muſt be at Mr. Morrice's Porch, which is in the Church-yard, about eight o' Clock in the Evening. I went there between eight and nine; about nine Coke came out, and gave me a Whiſtle: On that I went up to him; he told me, Mr. Criſpe was very jolly, and he believed it would be late before he came out. I told him, I did not care to ſtay. Said he, you muſt ſtay now; this is the Time that will do it. I ſtaid till ten o' Clock; then he came to me again in Mr. Morrice's Porch, and told me, that he believed Criſpe would not go till eleven o' Clock; but the later the better. Then he went from me again, and a little Time after ten Coke and Criſpe came out together, and on Coke's Whiſtling I came up to them; Criſpe was then before, and coming to get againſt the Wall. I came up to Coke; he bid me have a care not to hit him inſtead of Criſpe, being very dark; ſo he took me by the Sleeve to lead me up to Criſpe; and ſaid to Criſpe, Brother, ſtand ſtill; on that I hit him two Strokes with my Hook; tho' I never heard him ſwear before, yet he now ſwore, God damn him: On that Coke ſaid, what! doth he ſwear? Secure him, down with him. He ſtood by him till I gave him ſeveral Blows, and then he went away. Coke deſired me to take away his Watch; for, ſaith he, as to his Money, he don't carry above half a Crown or three Shillings in his Pocket; and when I go to London, I will ſell the Watch for you.

L. C. Juſt. What Woodburne ſaith againſt Coke, is no Evidence againſt Coke, and ſhould not have been mentioned by him; but what he ſaith relating to himſelf before the Fact, is ſo twiſted with Coke, that without the Whole it is not ſo intelligible as to himſelf. However, the Jury are to take notice, that what Woodburne ſaith, is only Evidence againſt himſelf, and not againſt Mr. Coke.

L. C. Juſt. After you had given him thoſe ſeveral Blows with your Hook, what did you next?

Woodburne. I began immediately to reflect on what I had done, and went away forthwith to my own Houſe, where I was about to take a Line to hang my ſelf.

L. C. Juſt. Have you any Witneſſes, or any body to ſpeak for you?

Woodburne. My Lord, here are my two Daughters in the Court; I deſire your Lordſhip would be pleas'd to hear them, Ann Woodburne and Sarah Woodburne; who being call'd, appear'd, and were ſworn.

L. C. Juſt. What ſay you, Ann Woodburne?

Ann Woodburne. On the Wedneſday before New-Year's-Day Coke ſent for my Father by his Boy; I told the Boy, my Father was in Bed, and ſick of an Ague, and could not come. The Boy came again, and ſaid, my Father muſt by all Means come; but he would not then go, but he went to him on New-year's-day in the Morning, and came Home again. About five or ſix a-Clock in the Evening, my Father went out with a Hook in his Hand; and he ſaid, he ſhould not be at Home till eleven or twelve at Night; and if any body came for him, he bid us not take any Notice but that he was at Home. We thought he took the Hook to cut ſome Wood with.

L. C. Juſt. Have you any thing more to ſay?

Ann Woodburne. When my Mother died, I went to Mr. Coke's to borrow five Shillings of him, to have the great Bell toll for my Mother; and told him, that my Father would pay him again. He ſaid, What ſignify'd the ringing out of the great Bell? her Soul would be never the better for it; but if he will ſatisfy me in my Requeſt, he ſhall have five times five Shillings.

L. C. Juſt. What ſay you, Sarah Woodburne?

Sarah Woodburne. Coke did frequently ſend for my Father at all times, both of Day and Night; and he would often come to my Father, and when he came, they would go out, and walk down the Back-ſide, and talk together. After this Fact was done, Coke ſent his Boy for my Father, and the Boy ſaid, they muſt not go together; for if they did, People would take Notice of them.

L. C. Juſt. Woodburne, have you any thing more to ſay?

Woodburne. This Day nine Weeks, which was a Week after the Fact committed, Coke ſent for me, and ſaid, John, I wiſh you would have done the thing I order'd you; but you have been before Alderman Wright and the Recorder, and have told your Story well; but hold you faſt, they will examine you again; I ſhall——

L. C. Juſt. This is ſubſequent to the Fact, and is not Evidence againſt Coke. If you Woodburne have done, then Mr. Coke what have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Coke. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am much aſham'd, and very unable to defend myſelf; I am aſham'd to think I ſhould be concern'd in ſo heinous a Crime againſt Mr. Criſpe's Life; I am even confounded at it; it is indeed a very great Crime, and I know not what to ſay for myſelf. As for Woodburne, he hath aſſerted againſt me ſeveral things that are falſe.

L. C. Juſt. I have told the Jury, that what he hath ſaid is no Evidence againſt you.

Coke. When I firſt ſpoke of this Matter to Woodburne, he ſaid, he ſhould value it no more than the cutting off the Head of a Dog. I did, indeed, go out with Mr. Criſpe that Night, but I was not near him when Woodburne ſtruck him, but retreated to my own Houſe in a Moment. My Lord, I am very ſenſible that a Point of Law may ariſe on the Statute whereon I am indicted.

L. C. Juſt. Whereon?

Coke. With reſpect to my Intention.

L. C. Juſt. Your Intention is Matter of Fact, and muſt be try'd by the Jury, whether your Intent was to maim and diſfigure; this doth not ſeem to me to be a Point of Law; if there be any Point of Law that ſhall ariſe, you ſhall have Counſel to ſpeak to it; but whether you ſlit Mr. Criſpe's Noſe, with an Intention to diſfigure him, is a Matter of Fact.

Coke. My Intent was to kill Mr. Criſpe, and not to maim or diſfigure him.

L. C. Juſt. But that is the Queſtion the Jury are to try, whether you did not of Malice ſlit his Noſe, with an Intent to diſfigure him. If the Jury do not find that you ſo did, you muſt be acquitted on this Indictment. Suppoſing your Deſign was to kill, yet your Deſign might be likewiſe to maim; and this the Jury muſt try; this is Matter of Fact for their Conſideration.

Coke. This is a very penal Statute, and I am unable to plead my own Cauſe; I beg your Lordſhip to aſſign me Counſel.

L. C. Juſt. If any Point of Law doth ariſe upon the Statute, you ſhall have Counſel; but as yet there is nothing but Matter of Fact; whether the Fact proved doth ſupport the Charge in the Indictment; or in other Words, whether the Evidence be ſufficient to make good the Charge; this muſt be left to the Jury; I will ſtate the Fact to them, and they are on their Oaths to give in their Verdict.

Coke. This is a very penal Statute, and I cannot argue it for myſelf; I hope your Lordſhip will aſſign me Counſel; this is the firſt Indictment that ever was upon this Statute.

L. C. Juſt. What do the King's Counſel ſay to it?

Serj. Selby. After ſo full an Anſwer as your Lordſhip has given, I think it but vain to ſay any thing; I always thought that no Matter of Law could ariſe upon this Fact and Indictment; for Woodburne did the Fact of Malice forethought, by lying in wait, and with an Intention to maim; Mr. Coke was aiding, abetting, and privy to the Fact: Therefore, though it was an Intent to kill, it muſt be to maim alſo; he could not intend to kill him with ſuch an Inſtrument, without intending to maim him firſt; and therefore, if there were two Intentions and but one executed, there is no Pretence to ſay, that what was executed was not intended. Mr. Coke ſays, there never was any Indictment before upon this Statute; if not, it muſt be becauſe no Man before ever thought of being guilty of ſo horrid an Action.

L. C. Juſt. If any Point in Law doth ariſe you ſhall have Counſel; but the Fact muſt be agreed and ſtated, before the Law can come in debate. You ſay, your Intent was only to murder; but that is not yet agreed or found to be the Fact: It is the Point now in Trial, whether you did it not with an Intention to maim or diſfigure; and according as that Intention ſhall appear to the Jury, ſo will they either acquit or convict you; therefore if you have any thing more to ſay, I deſire you to go on.

Coke. I ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgement.

L. C. Juſt. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of the Priſoners at the Bar, John Woodburne and Arundel Coke, for Felony, by lying in wait, and purpoſely and maliciouſly ſlitting the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, with Intention, in ſo doing, to maim or diſfigure the ſaid Edward Criſpe. John Woodburne is indicted for the principal Actor, or the Perſon who did the Fact; and Arundel Coke is indicted for being preſent, aiding and abetting. This Indictment is founded on a Statute made in the two and twentieth Year of King Charles the Second, intitled, An Act to prevent malicious maiming and wounding; whereby it is enacted, That if any Perſon or Perſons, from and after the twenty fourth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord 1671, on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, ſhould unlawfully cut out, or diſable the Tongue, put out an Eye, ſlit the Noſe, cut off a Noſe or Lip, or diſable any Limb or Member of any Subject of his Majeſty, with Intention in ſo doing to maim or diſfigure, in any the Manners beforemention'd, ſuch his Majeſty's Subject, that then, and in every ſuch Caſe, the Perſon or Perſons ſo offending, their Counſellors, Aiders and Abettors (knowing of, and privy to the Offence, as aforeſaid) ſhall be, and are thereby declared to be Felons, and ſhall ſuffer as in Caſes of Felony, without Benefit of the Clergy. Now the Queſtion on this Indictment is, whether John Woodburne did on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully ſlit the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, with an Intention to maim or diſfigure him therein? And, whether Arundel Coke was felonioufly preſent at the Fact, aiding and abetting Woodburne in the Commiſſion and Perpetration of it? To make out this Matter ſeveral Witneſſes have been called; the firſt Witneſs was Edward Criſpe himſelf, who informs you, that Arundel Coke married his Siſter, and Mr. Brown, Coke's Siſter; and that laſt New-year's-day they were invited to ſup at Mr. Coke's; and that before Supper Mr. Coke propos'd to go to Mrs. Monke's; and that after Supper, about ten a-clock at Night, Mr. Coke call'd Mr. Criſpe out of the Parlour to go to this Mrs. Monke's; and that when they had walked three or four Turns before the Houſe where Mrs. Monke dwelt, Coke ſtood ſtill, and made a Noiſe like a hollowing, which made Mr. Criſpe afraid, being dark, ſo he made toward the Wall; but in a quarter of a Minute's time a Man came and knock'd him down: Who that Man was, nor what was then further done to him, he could not then tell, becauſe by the Blow he loſt his Senſes for ſome time; but afterwards he got up again, and return'd to Mr. Coke's Houſe, from whence he came, but in a ſad Condition, much wounded and bloody, where Mr. Sturgeon the Surgeon came to him, from whom you have the Particulars of his Caſe, He ſays, that Coke was cloſe by him when he was knock'd down; but did not hear Coke ſay any thing. He alſo ſays, that upon his Death one hundred Pounds per Annum would have gone to Coke's Wife, as one of his Siſters and Co-heir.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Brown, who married Coke's Siſter; and he ſays, that he, his Wife and Daughter were invited to ſup at Mr. Coke's the Evening of New-year's-day; that he came about ſix a-clock, and found Mr. Coke and Mr. Criſpe drinking a Glaſs of Wine in the Parlour before Supper; that he ſate down and drank with them till Supper; that after Supper they three came into the Parlour again, and ſome time after Coke went out of the Room, and then came back again, and call'd Mr. Criſpe out of the Room, who followed him; that Coke returned again in about ten Minutes, and ſeem'd to be out of Breath, as if he had been walking faſter than ordinary; that Coke's Houſe is diſtant from the Churchyard about twice the length of the Shire-houſe; that Coke, after he came in, drank a Glaſs of Wine; and that Brown ask'd Coke what was become of Mr. Criſpe; and that Coke ſaid, he believ'd he was gone home in the Dark; and that in about two or three Minutes after Mr. Criſpe came in much wounded and bloody; and that it was about half an Hour between the time of Mr. Criſpe's going out and returning again.

Mr. Sturgeon the Surgeon ſwears, that being ſent for, he came to Mr. Criſpe about eleven a-clock that Night; that he had loſt a great deal of Blood, and was very much wounded; and that in the whole he had received ſeven diſtinct Wounds, which he apprehends were by ſo many ſeveral Blows. He hath given you a particular Deſcription of the ſeveral Wounds; the ſecond Wound is that which is alledged to be within this Statute. He tells you, That this Wound divided the right ſide of the Noſtril; and that though the Edge of the Noſe was not cut through, yet it was cut through in another Place; the Noſe was ſlit; there was a Cut from without into the Noſtril; indeed the Slit was not very great, for he ſew'd it up with one Stitch; but he is ſure that a Slit there was, and you have ſeen Mr. Criſpe's Noſe. Now the ſlitting of the Noſe is one of the particular Facts mention'd in the Statute.

Mr. Willet the Conſtable ſwears, That he was with Woodburne after his Commitment, and that he told him, he was concern'd in the wounding Mr. Criſpe; that he had been there waiting for that Purpoſe; and that when Coke whiſtled to him, he went up and made the Aſſault upon Mr. Criſpe with an Hook or Bill, that was new-ground for that purpoſe, and directed him where to find it at his Houſe, which he accordingly did, and brought it to Woodburne, who ſaid that was the Hook; and the Hook hath been now produced before you, and you have ſeen it.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Wetherell the Goaler, who ſwears, That the Day after Coke was committed to his Cuſtody, Coke ſent for him up into his Chamber, and told him, That he and Woodburne had had a Deſign to murder Mr. Criſpe, and had attempted it ſeveral times, and deſired him to go and ſecure Woodburne, which he accordingly did. He hath given you an Account how and in what manner he ſecur'd him; and he ſwears moreover, that Coke told him ſeveral times that he had a Deſign to murder Criſpe, and that he employ'd Woodburne, and deliver'd Criſpe into his Hands; that Woodburne did it with an Hook, and that he bad Woodburne to cut his Windpipe? and that if Woodburne had not been a Cow-hearted Dog, he would have ſo done, and ſecur'd Criſpe from telling Tales. Wetherell likewiſe ſwears, that Coke told him, That he call'd Criſpe out of his Houſe, went into the Churchyard with him, and there deliver'd him into Woodburne's burne's Hands; and he farther ſwears, as to Woodburne, That Woodburne own'd that he and Coke had lain in wait ſeveral Times, and at ſeveral Places, to murder Mr. Criſpe; and as to this particular Fact, he gave him this Account, That he ſtruck him a Blow with his Hook, and that not quite ſtriking him down, he gave him a ſecond Blow; and that as Criſpe was falling, he cried out, God damn him; and that then it griev'd him to kill a Man with an Oath in his Mouth.

Robert Moon ſwears, That when he heard what was befallen Mr. Criſpe, he ſaid, that he knew the Perſon that did the Fact, or him who employ'd the Perſon; and the Reaſon was, becauſe about three Years and a half before Mr. Coke ſent for him, and told him, That he wiſh'd Mr. Criſpe out of the World, and that ſome body would knock him on the Head; and that when he ask'd him what Advantage that would be to him? He replied, A very good Eſtate; and afterwards told him, he did not value ten or twenty Guineas to knock him in the Head: This made Moon reflect upon himſelf, and was concerned that he ſhould have ſuch an Opinion of him, and thereon told him, that he would not kill the greateſt Villain in the World for ten ſuch Towns as Bury.

John Carter ſwears, That on Friday before New-year's-day laſt, Coke ſent Woodburne to him, to tell him that his Maſter Coke wanted to ſpeak with him; that thereon he went to his Houſe, and was order'd to come up to him in his Chamber, which he did; and there Coke firſt enquired, whether he could help him to a good ſtrong Horſe? And then told him, that he heard he had loſt much of his Buſineſs; he had no Iron, nor Coal; and that he had a thing in Agitation that would make a Man of him as long as he lived; and thereon ask'd him, whether he could keep a Secret, and one of the biggeſt Secrets in the World? And upon his telling him that he could, he ask'd him whether he could cut five or ſix Mens Heads off without Scruple of Conſcience? And when he told him that that was too much for a Man's Conſcience to bear, he told him, there were thoſe above, meaning the South-Sea Gentlemen, who had done ten times worſe, ruin'd Families, and beggar'd Gentlemen; and that to cut Mens Heads off was but a Trifle to them. That hereon Carter told him, he believ'd he ſpoke only in Joke, and by way of Merriment; but Coke ask'd him, Whether he thought he ſent for him only by way of Joke? And then ask'd him, whether he could cut off one's Man's Head without Scruple of Conſcience? And when Carter told him, No: Then Coke told him, if he could not cut off a Man's Head, and lay it down on the Table before him, he was not for his Turn; and then gave him a Glaſs of Brandy, and bid him conſider of it for a Day or two, and if he could cut off a Man's Head without Scruple of Conſcience, he ſhould have plenty of Gold and Silver, and any thing elſe he ſhould ask: Whereto Carter replying, That he needed no Conſideration, he could not do it; then he bid him ſend Woodburne to him, which he did.

In all this Diſcourſe between Carter and Coke, I do not find that Criſpe was the Perſon named on whom this Outrage ſhould be committed; but Carter who is a Tenant of a Houſe of Mr. Criſpe's, ſays, That Coke told him he heard the Houſe was out of repair; that it would be his after Mr. Criſpe; and ask'd him, Whether he would not like it better for Coke to keep it in repair, as he had done before, whilſt he was Criſpe's Steward?

This is the Subſtance of the Evidence given againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, to prove that they maliciouſly, and by lying in wait, have ſlit Mr. Criſpe's Noſe, with an Intent to disfigure him therein.

Woodburne doth not deny the general Fact, that is, the deſign'd lying in wait to aſſault Mr. Criſpe, nor the cutting or knocking him down with his Hook; his Confeſſion is not Evidence againſt Coke, but it is againſt himſelf; and you hear what he hath own'd; that laſt Barley-Harveſt Coke ſent for him to mend his Copper, and then order'd him to meet him at another Place, which was accordingly done; where Coke told him, That he had a thing for him to do, but it was not to be done preſently; and if he would do it, he ſhould want for nothing. And when he ask'd him, what it was? He ſaid, To ſet Criſpe aſide, that is, to kill him; and Coke gave him eighteen Pence. That then he told him, he could not do it; that Coke ſollicited him ſeveral times afterwards to murder Criſpe; the Particulars whereof I do not enumerate, becauſe they principally relate to Coke, againſt whom it is not Evidence; but yet they ſo far relate to Woodburne, as to ſhew his Knowledge and Deliberation in this Matter; therefore to come to the Day whereon this Fact was done, Woodburne ſaith, That about eight or nine in the Morning Coke ſent for him, and told him, that that Day they ſhould have the faireſt Opportunity to kill Mr. Criſpe; and it was agreed between them, that Woodburne ſhould be in the Churchyard, at Mr. Morrice's Porch, about eight a-clock in the Evening. He accordingly went with his Hedge-Hook or Bill, which hath been here produced. Coke came out to him twice by himſelf, and the third time, a little after ten a-clock, Coke and Criſpe came out together; and then Coke whiſtled, which was the Signal between them; and thereon Woodburne came up, and owns, that with his Hook he cut and knock'd down Criſpe, and that though he never heard Criſpe ſwear before, yet that now, as Criſpe was falling, he ſwore God damn him; whereon he gave him thoſe ſeveral other Wounds and Blows that Criſpe received; and then reflecting on what he had done, immediately went to his own Houſe, where he was about to take a Rope to hang himſelf.

By this Defence of Woodburne, you ſee that he doth not deny the aſſaulting and wounding of Mr. Criſpe; but that that he chiefly inſiſts on is, that what he did was by the Sollicitation and Procurement of Mr. Coke; which is no Juſtification or Excuſe. However, he hath called two Witneſſes, Ann and Sarah Woodburne, his two Daughters, to prove that Coke did frequently ſend for their Father, and often came to him at his own Houſe, and would be in private Conference together, which probably was about this Matter; but if it were, this only confirms what Woodburne inſiſts on, that he was ſollicited, and hired by Coke to do this Fact; which, as I ſaid, will neither juſtify nor excuſe him; for no Man is to obey the unlawful Commands, or hearken to the illegal Advices of any other Perſon whatſoever.

As

As for Mr. Coke, that which he principally puts his Defence upon, is, that his Intent was to kill and murther Mr. Criſpe, but not to maim him, or to ſlit his Noſe, or to disfigure him in ſo doing; and therefore, tho' in Purſuance and Execution of the Attempt to murther Mr. Criſpe, they ſlit his Noſe, or might thereby disfigure him, yet that not being their Intention, and Deſign, he is to be acquitted on this Indictment, wherein the Intent of the Party is one of the principal Ingredients to make him guilty. This ſame Defence will ſerve alſo for Woodburne, that they intended to murther, but not to maim; and if they did maim, it was with an Intention to kill, and not to disfigure. Now this Indictment is, as I told you, founded on the 22d and 23d Car. II. c. 1. for that on Purpoſe, of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, the Priſoners did unlawfully and felonioufly ſlit the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, with Intention in ſo doing to maim or disfigure him. Woodburne is charged as the Actor or principal Agent, Coke as being preſent, aiding, and abetting; which, in Point of Law, is the ſame, as to the Guilt and Conſequence, both being in Law Principals.

That this Attempt on Mr. Criſpe was deſigned, malicious, and by lying in wait, the Evidence is very ſtrong; there hath been alſo very ſtrong Evidence given, that the Noſe of Mr. Criſpe was ſlit by Woodburne, and that Coke was preſent on the ſame Deſign with Woodburne.

But the Thing chiefly inſiſted on is, that the ſlitting of Mr. Criſpe's Noſe was not with an Intention in ſo doing to maim or disfigure him; and if it were not with that Intent, then the Priſoners will not be guilty upon this Indictment.

Now Gentlemen, what the Intent of theſe Perſons was in ſlitting Mr. Criſpe's Noſe, you are to try; this is a Matter of Fact for your Conſideration and Determination: It is the ſame in other Felonies, where the Intent of the Party makes the Crime. Burglary is breaking open an Houſe in the Night-time, with an Intent to commit a Felony; tho' no Felony be committed, yet if there was an Intent to do it, it is Burglary; which Intent is to be tried by the Jury. Larceny, or Theft, is taking away another Man's Goods, with an Intent to ſteal; if it were without ſuch an Intent, it would only be a Treſpaſs, and no Larceny; but whether it were or were not with ſuch an Intent, is a Matter of Fact to be inquired into and determined by the Jury. Nay, the Intent is ſo neceſſary in all Felonies, that a Perſon who hath no Intent or Deſign, as a Madman, Lunatick, Infant, &c. cannot commit Felony for that very Reaſon; becauſe he cannot have any Intent or Deſign in his Actions. So that in this Caſe you are to try no other Matter than what is tried in other Felonies, viz. The Intent of the Party.

Now how is the Intent of the Party diſcover'd in other Caſes? By the Facts themſelves, by the precedent, concomitant, and ſubſequent Circumſtances of the Facts, by the Manner of doing, and the like.

There are ſome Caſes where an unlawful or felonious Intent to do one Act, may be carried over to another Act, done in Proſecution thereof; and ſuch other Act will be Felony, becauſe done in Proſecution of an unlawful or felonious Intent: As, if a Man ſhoots at a wild Fowl, wherein no Man hath any Property, and by ſuch ſhooting happens unawares to kill a Man; this Homicide is not Felony, but only a Miſadventure or Chance-Medley, becauſe it was an Accident that happened in the doing of a lawful Act: But if this Man had ſhot at a tame Fowl, wherein another had Property, but not with Intention to ſteal it, and by ſuch ſhooting had accidentally kill'd a Man, he would then have been guilty of Manſlaughter, becauſe done in Proſecution of an unlawful Action, viz. committing a Treſpaſs on another's Property: But if he had had an Intention of ſtealing this tame Fowl, then ſuch accidental killing of a Man would have been Murder, becauſe done in Proſecution of a felonious Intent, viz. an Intent to ſteal. So a Man of Malice intends to burn one Houſe, in Execution thereof he happens to burn another Houſe; this is a malicious and felonious burning of this other Houſe, becauſe ſprung out of a malicious and felonious Intent. The like may be inſtanced where Poyſon is intended to be given to one Perſon, and another takes and eats it, and thereby dies. And other Caſes there are of the like Nature, where Acts done in Proſecution of felonious Intents, participate of the Nature of their Original from whence they ſpring.

But now the Indictment on this Statute is for a certain particular Intent; for purpoſely, maliciouſly, and by lying in wait, ſlitting Mr. Criſpe's Noſe, with an Intention in ſo doing to maim or disfigure: And you are to conſider, whether the Ingredients neceſſary to make this a Felony within the Statute, have been proved to your Satisfaction. The Facts neceſſary to be proved on this Indictment are, that on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, they unlawfully ſlit the Noſe of Mr. Criſpe, with Intention in ſo doing to maim or disfigure. As to the Fact of ſlitting the Noſe, that is directly and poſitively ſworn; There can be no doubt but that it was an unlawful ſlitting. Then the next Thing for your Conſideration will be, whether this unlawful ſlitting was on Purpoſe, of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait. As to this, a great deal of Evidence hath been given; and what paſs'd before, and at the Time of the Fact, will guide you herein. And if on a Review of the Evidence, you ſhall be of Opinion, that this unlawful ſlitting of the Noſe was on Purpoſe, of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait; then the next Queſtion will be, whether this was an Intention to disfigure? Facts do in ſome meaſure explain themſelves; and the Circumſtances preceding and accompanying thoſe Facts, and the Manner of doing them, do many times more fully explain and declare the Intent of the Party. The Priſoner, Mr. Coke, (which Defence goes both to him and Woodburne) inſiſts, that their Intention was to murder, and not to maim; and that if they did maim or ſlit the Noſe, it was with an Intention to kill, and not with an Intention to maim or disfigure. On the other Side, it is inſiſted on by the King's Counſel, that tho' the ultimate Intention might be to murder, yet there might be alſo an Intention to maim and disfigure; and tho' the one did not take effect, yet the other might: An Intention to kill, doth not exclude an Intention to maim and disfigure. The Inſtrument made uſe of in this Attempt was a Bill or Hedging-hook, which in its own Nature is proper for cutting and maiming; and where it doth cut or maim, doth neceſſarily, and by conſequence disfigure. The Attempt intended on Mr. Criſpe was immediately to his Perſon, to do him a perſonal Injury. Beſides, the Manner of doing and perpetrating this Fact is proper to be conſidered; That it was done by Violence, and in the dark, where the Aſſailant could not well make any Diſtinction of Blows; but knock'd and cut on any Part of Mr. Criſpe's Body where he could, till he had ſunk him down, and done to him whatever elſe he pleas'd. And if the Intention was to murder, you are to conſider, whether the Means made uſe of, in order to effect and accompliſh that Murder, and the Conſequences of thoſe Means, were not in the Intention and Deſign of the Party; and whether every Blow and Cut, and the Conſequences thereof, were not intended, as well as the End for which it is alledg'd thoſe Blows and Cuts were given.

All theſe ſeveral Things, which I have mentioned, are proper for your Conſideration: You will add to them your own Obſervations; and if, upon the whole, you are ſatisfied from the Evidence, that Woodburne did on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully ſlit the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, with Intention, in ſo doing, to maim or diſfigure; and that Arundel Coke was felonioufly preſent at the Commiſſion of this Fact, and aiding and abetting therein; then you will find them Guilty: But if this hath not been prov'd to your Satisfaction, then you are to acquit them, and find them Not Guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and in about half an Hour return'd again.

Cl. of the Arr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names.

Here, and ſo the reſt.

Cl. of the Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of the Arr. John Woodburne, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you, is John Woodburne Guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of the Arr. Arundel Coke alias Cooke, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) How ſay you? Is Arundel Coke alias Cooke, Guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of the Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay, that John Woodburne is Guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands indicted: You ſay, that Arundel Coke alias Cooke, is Guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands indicted; and that neither they, nor either of them, had any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the Felony committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge. And ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Mr. Coke. I deſire to know of your Lordſhip, whether the Noſe can be ſaid to be ſlit within the Meaning of this Statute, when the Edge of it was not cut through?

L. C. Juſt. It is true, the Edge of the Noſe was not ſlit, but the Cut was athwart the Noſe; which Cut ſeparated the Fleſh of the Noſe, and cut it quite through into the Noſtril: This I take to be a Slitting of the Noſe; and the Surgeon ſwore the Noſe was ſlit.

On Wedneſday the Fourteenth of March, John Woodburne, Arundel Coke alias Cooke, and one Edward Shorter, who was convicted of Burglary, were brought to the Bar, in order to receive their Sentence; and the Court proceeded thus.

Clerk of the Arr. John Woodburne, hold up thy Hand; which he did.

Thou haſt been indicted of Felony, on the Statute; for purpoſely, maliciouſly, and by lying in wait, ſlitting the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, Gent. with Intention in ſo doing, to maim or diſfigure him. Thou haſt been thereupon arraigned, thou haſt pleaded thereunto Not Guilty, and for thy Trial, thou haſt put thyſelf upon God and thy Country; which Country hath found thee Guilty; what haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon thee, and award Execution according to the Law?

To which Woodburne ſaid nothing.

Cl. of Arr. Arundel Coke alias Cooke, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.)

Thou haſt been indicted of Felony, on the Statute; for being felonioufly preſent, aiding and abetting John Woodburne, in purpoſely, maliciouſly, and by lying in wait, ſlitting the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, Gent. with Intention in ſo doing, to maim or diſfigure him. Thou haſt been thereupon arraigned, thou haſt pleaded thereunto Not Guilty, and for thy Trial thou haſt put thyſelf upon God and thy Country; which Country hath found thee Guilty; what haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon thee, and award Execution according to the Law?

Mr. Coke. Tho' your Lordſhip did not think it proper Yeſterday to aſſign me Counſel, yet I hope your Lordſhip will now give me leave to ſpeak for myſelf; eſpecially ſince I am the firſt unhappy Inſtance of an Indictment on this Statute; no Indictment, as far as it appears by the Law-Books, was ever yet founded on this Statute, and therefore ought to be very well weighed.

L. C. Juſt. Call the King's Counſel, that they may hear what is ſaid. (Then the King's Counſel were ſent for, and being come:)

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Coke, you may now go on with what you have to offer.

Mr. Coke. My Lord, I was ſaying, that I am the firſt unhappy Inſtance of an Indictment on this Statute; no Indictment, as far as appears by the Law-Books, was ever yet founded on this Statute, and therefore it ought to be very well weigh'd, eſpecially in the firſt Inſtance to which it appears to have been ever applied. It is a very penal Statute, and conſequently by the known Rule of Law not to be carried beyond the expreſs Letter of of it; conſequently no Crime, of what Nature or Magnitude ſoever, can fall within the Purview of it, but ſuch as is identically the ſame in every Circumſtance with that deſcribed by the Words of the Statute itſelf.

The Crime deſcrib'd by the Statute is the unlawful cutting out, or diſabling the Tongue, putting out an Eye, ſlitting the Noſe, cutting off a Noſe or Lip, or diſabling any Limb or Member, attended with theſe particular Circumſtances:

Firſt, On Purpoſe and of Malice fore-thought.

Secondly, By lying in wait.

Thirdly, With Intention in ſo doing to maim or diſfigure in any of the Manners beforementioned in the Statute.

Theſe Circumſtances muſt all concur to conſtitute that particular Crime deſcribed by the Statute; and where any of them are wanting, of what Magnitude ſoever the Offence may be, it is not the Offence which the Statute has ſpecified.

If the firſt Circumſtance be wanting, no Man can ſay that any Offence, though attended with the two other, can fall within the Statute; this is ſufficiently plain of itſelf.

As to the ſecond; A and B, of Malice fore-thought, appoint and meet to fight a Duel; A in the Rencounter runs B into the Eye, and puts it out; no Body has ever imagined this to be within the Statute, becauſe the Circumſtance of lying in wait is here wanting.

As to the third; ſuppoſe A lies in wait to rob B, B reſiſts, and in the Scuffle is wounded, as the Statute deſcribes, but gets off. This is a Caſe which very frequently happens, yet no one ever thought it to be within the Statute, nor was any one ever indicted for this upon it: The only Reaſon of which muſt be, becauſe the Intention was to rob, and not to maim and diſfigure the Perſon.

In my Caſe, if it be taken upon the Evidence of Mr. Criſpe, nothing more appears than the Aſſault itſelf: If my Confeſſion be read, the lying in wait, and the Malice fore-thought will be proved; but then it will be likewiſe proved, that I had no other Intention but to kill, and had no other part, but by giving Orders to Woodburne for that Purpoſe; and my Confeſſion muſt be taken together.

Nor is it an Objection to ſay, that the Crime which is proved by the Evidence is much worſe than that which is deſcribed by the Statute; for if it is worſe, then it cannot be the ſame. Even in Caſes of Crimes by the common Law, if upon an Indictment for a Crime of an inferior Nature, the Evidence proves the Fact attended with Circumſtances which brings it within the Deſcription of a Crime of a ſuperior Nature, the Perſon indicted muſt be acquitted. At Summer Aſſizes at Dorcheſter, Anno 1712, a Woman was indicted before Mr. Juſtice Eyre, for the Murder of another Woman; upon this Evidence it appeared, that the Perſon murdered was her Miſtreſs, which made the Crime Petty-Treaſon. The Judge directed this Matter to be ſpecially found, and upon Conference with all the Judges it was held, ſhe ought to be acquitted upon this Indictment, as ſhe accordingly was; and was afterwards indicted for Petty-Treaſon, and convicted and executed thereupon.

Where a new Offence has been created by Statute, or an old one made more penal, the utmoſt Strictneſs has always been us'd to comply with the Letter of the Statute, whatever Inconveniencies might reſult from ſuch a Reſtraint.

As for Example:

By the Statute of the 39 Eliz. cap. 15. Clergy is taken away from any Perſon or Perſons who ſhall be convicted of taking any Money, Goods or Chattels out of any Dwelling-houſe, &c. in the Day time, to the Value of five Shillings. One Evans and one Finch were indicted on this Statute, 1 Croke 473. Evans and Finch's Caſe: The Caſe was thus upon the Evidence, That Evans by a Ladder climbed to the upper Window of one Audley's Houſe, and took out thereof forty Pounds; and that Finch ſtood upon the Ladder in view of Evans, and ſaw Evans in the Chamber, and was aſſiſting and helping to the committing of the Robbery, and took part of the Money: Upon a ſpecial Verdict it was adjudged, that becauſe Finch did not actually enter the Chamber, and take the Money, though what he did amounted to a taking by Conſtruction of Law, and was ſuch a taking as made him a Felon; yet the very Letter of all penal Statutes muſt be purſued, and therefore he, id eſt, Finch, had his Clergy, and Evans was hanged.

Numerous Caſes might be put of this kind of Nicety in the Conſtruction of penal Statutes.

To mention but one more: By the Statute of 1 Edw. 6. cap. 12. Clergy is taken away from ſuch Perſons as ſhall be convicted for the felonious ſtealing of Horſes, Geldings or Mares.—— So ſcrupulouſly did the Judges adhere to the Letter of this Law, that there was forced to be another Statute made, viz. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. cap. 33. to enact, That a Perſon convicted for feloniouſly ſtealing one Horſe, ſhould be ouſted of his Clergy in the ſame manner as if he had ſtole two.

Nor is it in this Caſe enough to ſay, the Jury are Judges of all this: For as the Evidence now appears, and is admitted, it is Matter of Law, how far this Evidence thus admitted on all Hands is ſufficient to ſupport this Indictment. If it were in a civil Caſe, the Party might demur to the Evidence. But if he is not allowed that Liberty in criminal Caſes, it is upon the common Notion, that the Judges are the Priſoner's Counſel; and are obliged to determine all the Matters in Law ariſing upon the Evidence, as much as if the Perſons had demurred to that Evidence.

And, as in this Caſe, the Priſoner admits the Evidence given to be true, and inſiſts upon it, that it doth not ſupport the Indictment; and therefore has a Right to have the Opinion of the Judges thereupon, as much as if the Evidence were ſtated at length upon the Record (as it muſt be in the Caſe of a Demurrer to Evidence) and nothing ought to be left to the Jury, but under the Judges Directions as to Point of Law.

In all theſe Caſes therefore, my Lord, it has been uſual to allow the Fact to be ſpecially found; which gives the Priſoner the Advantage he might have had by the Demurrer to the Evidence.

Serj. Selby. My Lord, I do agree with the Priſoner at the Bar, that this is a very penal Statute, and that theſe Facts muſt be made out to bring his Caſe within the Letter of the Act, viz. An Intention or Purpoſe, of Malice fore-thought, to maim or diſfigure in ſuch a Manner as the Statute deſcribes; a lying in wait for that Purpoſe; a maiming, or disfiguring accordingly; and an abetting and being privy to theſe Facts: Theſe are all Facts which the Jury only could determine, either by poſitive, preſumptive, or circumſtantial Evidence; for no Man's Thoughts or Intentions can be otherwiſe proved, than by his Actions. My Lord Chief Juſtice hath left the whole Evidence of theſe Facts to the Jury, who by their Verdict have found all theſe Facts as laid in the Indictment, againſt which no body can now open his Mouth: We apprehend therefore that no Matter of Law hath ariſen, and that what hath been inſiſted on by the Priſoner, is beſide his Caſe, and needs no Anſwer.

Serj. Branthwait. My Lord, the Jury have found him Guilty. I apprehend nothing can properly be alledged now by Mr. Coke, that is contrary to the Verdict: If there is any Fault in the Indictment, we are ready to anſwer any Objections he ſhall make againſt it. That he does not pretend to. What is now offered by him is againſt the Verdict, and contrary to what is found by the Jury. I beg your Lordſhip's Leave to give an Anſwer to the Objections he is pleaſed to make againſt the Verdict, however improperly and out of Time made, for the Satisfaction of himſelf, and of the Perſons here preſent. I agree, a penal Act ſhall not be conſtrued by Equity, or carried farther than the Words or Letter of the Act, as the Caſes mentioned by him to prove; but affirm, that this preſent Caſe is within the Words and Meaning of the Act: For though the ultimate Intent of Mr. Coke might be to murder Mr. Criſpe (as by him is alledged in Excuſe of himſelf) all the Means made uſe of to effect that Intent were alſo on Purpoſe, and ſuch Blows could not be given by an Inſtrument, without an Intent to maim and disfigure. They were given by one lying in wait on Purpoſe; and the Fact and Manner of doing the ſame ſufficiently prove, and are a certain and neceſſary Indication of the Intent. The Defendants might have an Intent to cut off, or ſlit the Noſe; put out an Eye, or diſmember; and an Intent alſo to kill and deſtroy; one Intent did take effect, the other not. The Defendants ought not to anſwer for what was not done, but ought to anſwer for what was done; which was the ſlitting of Mr. Criſpe's Noſe, on Purpoſe to maim and diſfigure him, by one lying in wait; which is all that is required by the Act.

As to the Objection; that if A and B go together to fight a Duel, if A ſlit the Noſe of B, this is not within the Act; the Reaſon is, becauſe there is no lying in wait.

As to the Caſe of A lying in wait to rob B, I with great Submiſſion do ſay, that if A lie in wait to rob B, and to effect that Purpoſe with the greater Eaſe, A on purpoſe diſmembers B, or puts out his Eyes, or does any other Fact prohibited by the Act; though A be hindred from robbing B, he is within the Act of Parliament; for the Intent and Purpoſe to rob, will be no excuſe to one that ſhall commit the Facts prohibited by the Act.

As to the Caſe of Evans and Finch, Cr. Car. 473. on 39 El. which takes away the Clergy from him that enters and ſteals: Finch was not within the Statute, and had his Clergy; for the expreſs Words of the Statute take away the Clergy from him that enters the Houſe, which Finch did not. As to the Indictment of a Servant for Murder, in killing her Miſtreſs; it is plain, that it is a Crime of a higher Degree than Murder, it is an Offence of another Species, it is Petty-Treaſon, and not Murder.

The ſame Anſwer may be given to the other Caſes mentioned, where the Words of an Act of Parliament are expreſs. No Caſe ſhall be conſtrued within a penal Act, but what is within the Words: But as to the preſent Caſe, the Jury have found every Fact that the Act of Parliament requires, that an unlawful Aſſault was made on Mr. Criſpe by the Priſoners; that his Noſe was ſlit on purpoſe to maim and disfigure him, by lying in wait. And all theſe Facts were proved by plain, clear, and I believe convincing Evidence, to every Perſon that heard the Trial. I am ſure the Priſoners can't complain of any Hardſhip done them; the Proſecution was carried on for the ſake of Juſtice, for the Safety of his Majeſty's Subjects. This being the firſt Inſtance of a Crime ſo heinous, cruel, barbarous and inhuman, that has been committed ſince the making the Act of Parliament, it is hoped by this Proſecution a ſecond will never be committed; for which Reaſon, I pray your Lordſhip's Judgment for the King againſt the Priſoners.

Mr. Raby. My Lord, I did expect at this time I ſhould have heard, from this unhappy Gentleman, ſomething in Arreſt of Judgment; ſomething to ſhew that this Indictment and Record, now before your Lordſhip in Judgment, had been inſufficient, and ſuch as your Lordſhip could not have proceeded upon to give Judgment againſt the Priſoners: But I don't perceive any thing has been objected to this Indictment or Record; and therefore ſince nothing appears, or is objected, they muſt be taken to be ſufficient, and ſuch as your Lordſhip ought by Law to give Judgment upon againſt the Priſoners now at the Bar.

But this Gentleman has been pleaſed to take Notice of the Act of Parliament on which this Proſecution is founded: He has alſo made ſome mention of the Facts which have been given in Evidence againſt him; and cited ſome Caſes (as I apprehend) to ſhew, that penal Statutes, and criminal Acts of Parliament, ought not in Conſtruction to be carried beyond the Letter and Words of the Act. This which he has offered (as I take it) is now meant to ſhew (or at leaſt that he apprehends) that from the Evidence given, it has not fully appear'd he is guilty of the Offence with which he ſtands charged, within the ſtrict Words and Meaning of this Act of Parliament: And for this End he has been pleas'd to make ſome Obſervations from the Words of the Statute, what Things he apprehends to be neceſſary to bring him within the Compaſs of this Act, viz. That ſuch Wound or Maiming, as is deſcribed by the Statute, ought to be,

1. On Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought.
2. By lying in wait.
3. With an Intention to disfigure.

All theſe have been already admitted to him; and he will ſee every one of theſe Circumſtances not only taken Notice of by us in our Obſervations upon the Evidence, but alſo more fully by your Lordſhip, before the Jury gave their Verdict.

But with what Intent this Fact was done, whether of Malice fore-thought, by lying in wait, and with Intent to disfigure, are Circumſtances only to be collected from the Evidence and the Facts themſelves; of which neither we nor the Court can determine, but can only be enquired of, and determined by the Jury; and therefore, though it would be a full Anſwer to what is now objected, to ſay, that the Jury have conſidered of the Evidence, have determined upon it, and found you guilty of the Indictment, with all thoſe Circumſtances which the Priſoner objects are neceſſary to bring the Offence within the Statute; though this, I ſay, might be Anſwer; yet for the Juſtice of this Proceeding, and to ſatisfy the Priſoner in his own Objections, and that they ſhould not paſs unanſwered, your Lordſhip will permit me to take Notice of the Caſes cited, and alſo to recollect the Evidence, ſo far as the Priſoner has made it neceſſary to repeat it.

I confeſs, it is with Concern I mention it again; for I would not do any thing which might add to the Weight of thoſe Afflictions which this unhappy Gentleman is under, had not he himſelf made it neceſſary to take farther Notice of it.

As to the Caſes cited, only two of them which he mentions are cited to be adjudged; that at Dorcheſter by Mr. Juſtice Eyre, that a Woman was indicted for Murder, and upon Evidence it appeared to a different Offence, viz. Petit-Treaſon, for ſhe had kill'd her Miſtreſs; and that thereupon Mr. Juſtice Eyre cauſed her to be indicted for Petit-Treaſon, and ſhe was convicted. Certainly, my Lord, that Judgment was right, and very juſt; for when it appeared upon Evidence that ſhe was guilty of a diſtinct and different Offence than that of which ſhe ſtood indicted, could any thing be more juſt, than to cauſe her to be indicted for that Offence, of which, upon the Nature of the Evidence, ſhe appeared to be guilty? The ſecond Caſe cited of Evans and Finch (which is reported in Cro. Car.) is no more than this: Evans went up a Ladder, opened a Chamber Window in the Temple, went in and robbed the Chamber in the Day-time; Finch held the Ladder, and ſtood at the Foot of it when Evans enter'd: Evans was hang'd, Finch had his Clergy, and was only burnt in the Hand; and with great Reaſon: For the Statute, 39 Eliz. which takes away Clergy, takes the Clergy only from him that enters; and therefore to have taken the Clergy from Finch who did not enter, had been unjuſt and reaſonable. And as to what is mentioned of the Statute 2 & 3 Ed. VI. cap. 33. made in Explanation of the Statute which took Clergy from him who ſtole Horſes, and to take Clergy from him who ſtole only one Horſe, there is ſuch an Act of Parliament; but this Act and the Caſes cited, only ſhew that Regard has always been had, not to extend penal Statutes beyond the Words of them. But before theſe Caſes were mentioned (and indeed had they never been cited) this Rule of Conſtruction had been allowed to the Priſoner; for all the Particulars now inſiſted on by the Priſoner were before taken Notice of by the Court, as Circumſtances neceſſary to make out the Offence againſt the Priſoner: Nor has one of thoſe Circumſtances paſs'd without Obſervation; but the Court did with great Juſtice before declare thoſe Circumſtances to be neceſſary Ingredients to prove this Offence. And as to the other Caſes, they are to the ſame Purpoſe, and not cited as Caſes adjudged; and therefore I need not take further Notice of them. But certainly no Inferences can be drawn from the Caſes cited, or any the leaſt Colour to ſay, thoſe Caſes prove that the Priſoner is not guilty of the Offence he ſtands charged with, and of which he is convicted.

I am ſorry he has given this Occaſion to mention again the Fact which has been proved, from whence it appears that the Jury have given an impartial and juſt Verdict.

It cannot be forgot, that this was conſulted and premeditated for three Years and more before it was put in execution; and therefore it was certainly purpos'd and of Malice fore-thought; alſo that it was by lying in wait. Certainly this unhappy Gentleman cannot have forgot the Signal he gave: And to what Purpoſe was that Signal, if none was in waiting to hear it? And that this was with an Intent to disfigure, muſt be ſubmitted upon the Fact and the Evidence. A Man uſes a Weapon fit to maim and to diſfigure, he cuts another on the Face and does diſfigure him, ſhall he afterwards be at Liberty to ſay, it was not his Intent ſo to do? How dangerous that would be, is obvious to every one; this Act would then be eaſily eluded, if it ſhould be ſufficient, if it ſhould avail an Offender, who has maim'd and disfigur'd another, to ſay, Prove that I intended it: It would be eaſy then to be out of the reach of this Act of Parliament; indeed if that prevailed, none would be within it, it would be an eaſy repeal of this Law. 'Tis objected, his Intent was to kill: He that intends the End, certainly intends the Means, eſpecially thoſe Means which he uſes; and the Means uſed were cutting Mr. Criſpe on the Face, and diſfiguring him; and the Weapon is ſuch, that by cutting him on the Face with that Weapon, could leſs be intended or expected? And if the Intent does not appear from this Fact, ſure it never can from any: The Intent of a Man's Mind cannot appear but from the Act which proceeds from his Mind.

It is ſaid, this is the firſt Indictment on this Statute: I believe there have not been many; for this is an Offence ſo barbarous, that I muſt agree it is ſuch as ſeldom happens, and that by the general Laws of our Country, there was not a Puniſhment provided equal to this Offence: For our Laws (as the Laws of moſt Nations alſo do) provide againſt Offences which moſt frequently happen: But this is an Attempt ſo barbarous, that it was ſcarce imagined any Man could be ſo baſe and wicked as to attempt any thing like it, until it happened in the Caſe of Sir John Coventry; and then ſuch an Abhorrence was ſhewn by the Parliament, that this Law was made to puniſh it, and to prevent the like for the future: And as this is the like Offence, it ought in Juſtice to have the like Puniſhment.

I ſhall add no more, but pray your Lordſhip's Judgment.

Mr. Lee. My Lord, the Obſervations made at the Bar being after a Verdict, and therefore out of Time, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with a Repetition of the Facts that have been proved, further than the Priſoner has made it neceſſary for me to mention ſome Particulars, in order to make the Anſwers to what he hath inſiſted on the more clear and plain.

I believe

I believe it has been truly ſaid by the Priſoner, that the preſent Proſecution is the firſt Inſtance of any Proceedings on this Statute, and I hope it will be the laſt; becauſe it is to be hoped there never will be found any other Perſon ſo wicked, as to give Occaſion for a Proſecution on this Statute.

I believe likewiſe, that the true Deſign of making this Statute was to ſubject Perſons to Death, who intended to maim only, where the maiming was in ſuch manner as is mentioned in the Statute; but I can't think that it does from thence follow, that a Perſon who intends to murder, and only maims, is not within this Statute; for though it ſhould be taken that there was an Intention to murder, yet from the Fact done, from the manner of doing it, and from the Weapon made uſe of, it ſeems apparent that the Priſoner intended to maim; and the Jury have now found that he did ſo intend.

As to the Caſes which the Priſoner has cited, I beg leave to conſider each of them, and offer ſuch Anſwers to them as now occur.

The firſt Caſe he has been pleas'd to cite, is thus put:

A and B, of Malice fore-thought, appoint to meet and fight a Duel, A in the Rencounter runs B into the Eye, and puts it out: The Priſoner ſays, ſuch a Caſe would not be within this Statute.

I agree it would not, becauſe this Caſe has not the Circumſtances which the Statute requires; for in the Caſe thus put there is no lying in wait, which is a Circumſtance required by the Statute.

It is ſaid, that if A lies in wait to rob B, B reſiſts, and in the Scuffle is maim'd in the Manner deſcrib'd by the Statute, that ſuch maiming would not be puniſhable by this Statute; but I don't obſerve any Caſe is cited to prove this Aſſertion: And I am, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, inclin'd to think, that if there are a lying in wait, with Malice fore-thought, with Intent to rob, and in proſecuting this Intent the Robbers ſhould aſſault and maim in the Manner deſcribed by the Statute, that ſuch maiming would be within this Statute.

It is ſaid, that though the Intent to murder makes the Offence worſe than if the Intent had been only to maim, yet ſuch Intent proves it not to be the ſame Offence which is mentioned in the Statute: And if a Man be indicted of an Offence of an inferior Nature, and upon the Evidence it appears that he is guilty of an Offence of a ſuperior Nature, the Perſon indicted muſt be acquitted; and to prove this, a Caſe is cited, which is ſaid to have been before Mr. Juſtice Eyre at Dorcheſter Aſſizes. The Caſe, as put, is this: A Woman is indicted for the Murder of another Woman, on the Evidence it appeared, that the Perſon murdered was her Miſtreſs, which made the Crime Petty-Treaſon: This was found ſpecially, and upon Conference with the Judges, they were of Opinion, that the Woman ought to be acquitted upon this Indictment.

Admitting this Caſe to have been adjudged, I apprehend it does not affect the preſent Caſe.

The Law has diſtinguiſhed Crimes under different Denominations; and as Offences are rank'd under different Species, ſo the Indictment muſt be ſuited to that ſort of Crime whereof the Party is guilty; and therefore proving a Perſon guilty of a Fact, known in the Law by the Name of Petty-Treaſon, does not prove him guilty of an Indictment for Murder; Murder being an Offence which the Law has diſtinguiſhed from Petty-Treaſon, and to which it has aſſigned a different Puniſhment.

But in the preſent Caſe, that Offence which is charged in the Indictment, is proved in every Circumſtance, and the Facts proved do conſtitute that Crime which is made Felony without Clergy by the Statute. The Statute requires lying in wait, it requires Malice fore-thought, it requires ſlitting the Noſe, &c. with intent to maim, &c. The Indictment charges theſe Facts, the Witneſſes have proved theſe Facts to the Satisfaction of a Jury, who have found the Defendant guilty of the Charge as laid.

The Priſoner ſays farther, that this is a very penal Statute, and that penal Statutes are always taken with the utmoſt Strictneſs; and to prove this, cites a Caſe adjudged on the Statute 39 Eliz. by which Statute Clergy is taken away from any Perſon or Perſons, who ſhall be convicted of taking away Money, &c. in any Dwelling-houſe, &c. in the Day-time, to the Value of five Shillings: And to prove the ſame Matter, an Inſtance is likewiſe put of the Conſtruction on the Statute, 1 Eliz. cap. 12. which takes away Clergy from ſuch Perſons as ſhall be convict of felonioufly ſtealing Horſes, &c. The Caſe in the Statute 39 Eliz. is the Caſe of Evans and Finch, Cro. Car. 473. in which Caſe Finch had his Clergy, becauſe he did not actually enter the Chamber and take the Money. The Conſtruction on Ed. VI. was, that Clergy was not taken away from a Perſon who feloniouſly ſtole one Horſe.

But I apprehend neither of theſe Caſes come up to the Caſe now before your Lordſhip. As to the Caſe of Evans and Finch, which was a Caſe upon the Statute 39 Eliz. By that Statute a Perſon is ouſted of Clergy who takes away Money to the Value of five Shillings in any Dwelling-houſe, &c. Finch did not enter into the Houſe, for he only ſtood on the Ladder; and therefore he was not within the Words of that Statute, which ſpoke only of Perſons who took away Goods in an Houſe, &c.

As to the Conſtruction upon the Statute 1 Ed. VI. it is plain that the felonious ſtealing one Horſe could not be within an Act of Parliament which took away Clergy only from ſuch Perſons as feloniouſly ſtole Horſes. The Reaſon therefore of theſe Caſes was, that the Facts proved did not bring the Perſons accuſed within the Words of the Statute.

But it is not ſo in the Caſe now before your Lordſhip; for the Priſoner is found guilty of a Fact, which is within the Words of the Statute upon which he is indicted; and every Circumſtance required to make him guilty of the Felony mentioned in the Statute has been very fully proved.

My Lord, I am very ſenſible that the Objections taken at the Bar being after Verdict, did not require theſe particular Anſwers; but this being a Caſe wherein Life is concern'd, I hope the Impropriety will be excus'd.

L. C. Juſt. I do agree with the Priſoner, that this is a penal Law, and not to be extended by Equity: That he that is guilty within this Statute, muſt be guilty of all the Circumſtances within it; and if any one of the Circumſtances preſcribed by the Statute be wanting, he is not guilty. And therefore in all thoſe Caſes put by you, if any one of the Circumſtances preſcribed by the Statute be wanting in any one of them, ſuch Caſe is out of the Statute. But whether all the Circumſtances required by the Statute did not concur in your Caſe, was a Matter of Fact, which the Jury, who are the proper Judges, have tried; and on ſuch Trial they have found them all to concur. You ſeem to argue upon a Suppoſition of this Fact to be otherwiſe than the Jury have found it. The Jury have found you guilty of all the Circumſtances within the Statute. There was no Matter of Law in this Caſe, but Matter of Fact; whether on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, the Noſe of Mr. Criſpe was not ſlit, with Intention, in ſo doing, to maim or diſfigure; and whether you were not feloniouſly preſent, aiding and abetting. The Jury had the whole Evidence before them; they conſidered of the whole Matter, of the Preparation and lying in wait to do the Fact, of the Fact itſelf, of the Means and Inſtrument made uſe of to do it, of the Manner of doing it, and of all the other Circumſtances and Particulars relating to the Fact: And on the whole, after they had withdrawn, and conſider'd amongſt themſelves for ſome time, they have found you guilty within the Terms and Circumſtances of the Statute; ſo that tho' all the Caſes put by you ſhou'd be very good Law, yet they do not any wiſe affect yours, becauſe you are actually found guilty of the Crime itſelf: Have you therefore any thing to ſay againſt the Indictment itſelf?

Mr. Coke. No, my Lord; I hope I have one Glimpſe more from the King's moſt gracious Pardon, that was publiſhed in the Gazette.

L. C. Juſt. If you offer any Pardon by Act of Parliament, or under the Great Seal, I muſt take notice of it, and allow it to you; but if you mean only a Promiſe of a Pardon in the Gazette, or other publick Advertiſement, you muſt apply for that in another Place; this doth not belong to me.

Mr. Coke. I hope that I ſhall have the Benefit of the Pardon that was promiſed, and that his Majeſty will be graciouſly pleaſed to grant it me.

L. C. Juſt. If you have a Right to it, you need not doubt but you will have it: His Majeſty is ſo juſt, that he will make good whatſoever he hath promiſed; but for this, your Application muſt be immediately to his Majeſty.

Mr. Coke. I beg of your Lordſhip that you will give me Time, that I may not be hurried out of the World preſently.

L. C. Juſt. I ſhall conſider of it, and give you a convenient Time.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make an O Yes.

Cryer. Our Sovereign Lord the King doth ſtraitly charge and command all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, whilſt Judgment is giving upon the Priſoners convicted, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. Juſt. You that are the Priſoners at the Bar, you have been indicted and convicted of very great and heinous Offences; I am very ſorry that you have been the Occaſion of bringing your ſelves to unfortunate Ends, and that there is this melancholy Neceſſity on me to pronounce the Sentence of Death upon you: But on fair Trials the Jury have found you guilty, and by the Law you have forfeited your Lives.

Mr. Coke. My Lord, I am aſhamed of my ſelf; I did not expect to appear at this Time in this Place, where I have appear'd in another manner.

L. C. Juſt. I am ſure, Mr. Coke, you ought ſeriouſly to reflect on your paſt Life: You cannot but own that you have been a great Sinner; you have had Malice in your Heart againſt this Gentleman above three Years.

Mr. Coke. Indeed, my Lord, I know nothing of it.

L. C. Juſt. Moon hath ſworn, that three Years, or three Years and a half ago, you ſent to him, and propos'd to him the knocking Mr. Criſpe on the Head.

Mr. Coke. I do declare it, my Lord, as I ſhall anſwer it at the Great Day, I never ſpoke to Moon about any ſuch Thing.

L. C. Juſt. Suppoſing what Moon hath ſaid to be too much, yet the Crimes you own and cannot deny are exceeding heinous. You own that you invited your Brother to ſup at your Houſe, on purpoſe that you might have an Opportunity of murdering him. This is ſuch a Crime as ſhocks human Nature: The bare mentioning of it is frightful and terrible. The deeper therefore your Crime is, the deeper your Repentance ought to be. You have need to humble yourſelves before Almighty God. Beſides the Judgment of the Law, there is alſo his Judgment-Seat, before which you muſt likewiſe appear: There all Things are naked and bare, without Colour or Diſguiſe; every Man muſt there appear, and receive according to the Truth of his Actions, as they were good or bad. How far it may pleaſe God to extend his Mercy to you, I know not; he is infinite in Mercy as well as in every other Perfection: And this we are ſure, that he never denies it to any who are prepared to receive it. Endeavour therefore to reconcile yourſelves to him; improve with Diligence the little Time that may be allotted you: Send for proper Perſons who may adviſe and aſſiſt you: For as to the Judgment of the Law which is to be now pronounced upon you all, it is this;

> That you, and each of you, go from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be ſeverally hanged by the Neck till you be ſeverally and reſpectively dead; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Keeper carried away the Priſoners to the Goal to be reſerved till their Execution. And on Saturday the 31ſt of March, 1722. they were executed at Bury St. Edmond's.

CXC. The Trial of Chriſtopher Layer, Eſq; at the King's-Bench for High-Treaſon, Novemb. 21. 1722. Mich. 9 GEO. I.

Die Mercurii 31° Die Octobris, 1722.

ON Wedneſday the 31ſt of October, Chriſtopher Layer, Eſq; was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench at Weſtminſter, upon a Habeas Corpus directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, in order to be arraigned on an Indictment for High-Treaſon in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, found by the Grand Jury for the County of Eſſex before ſpecial Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we pray the Return of the Habeas Corpus may be read.

Mr. Harcourt Clerk of the Crown reads the Return of the Habeas Corpus, by which it appeared that the Priſoner was committed to the Tower for High-Treaſon.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We pray that the Return may be filed.

Sir John Pratt. L. C. Juſt. Let it be filed.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, there is an Indictment of High Treaſon found in the County of Eſſex againſt Mr. Chriſtopher Layer, which hath been removed into this Court by Certiorari; the Certiorari, and Return thereof hath been filed, and the Priſoner is now brought into Court in order to be arraigned.

L. C. Juſt. Read the Indictment.

Cl. of the Cr. Chriſtopher Layer, hold up your Hand.

You ſtand indicted by the Name of Chriſtopher Layer, late of the Pariſh of St. Andrew's Holbourn, in the County of Middleſex, Eſq; For that you being a Subject of our moſt ſerene Lord GEORGE, now King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traytor againſt our ſaid Lord the King, your Supreme, True, Lawful, and Undoubted Lord; withdrawing that Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King towards Him ſhould and of Right ought to bear; and deſigning, and with all your Might traiterouſly intending the Government of this Kingdom, under our ſaid Lord the King duly and happily eſtabliſh'd, to change, alter, and ſubvert; and our ſaid Lord the King of and from the Title, Honour, Royal Eſtate, Empire and Government of this Kingdom to depoſe and deprive; and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and draw; and the Perſon during the Life of the late King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales; and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal State and Dignity of King of this Kingdom, and to the Empire, Government, and Poſſeſſion of the ſame, to exalt and bring, the twenty-fifth Day of Auguſt, in the Ninth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is; and at divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonſtone in the ſaid County of Eſſex, falſely, malicioufly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly did compaſs, imagine, and intend, our ſaid Lord the King, your ſupreme, true, lawful, and undoubted Lord, of and from the Title, Honour, Royal Eſtate, Empire and Government of this Kingdom to depoſe and deprive; and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring. And that you the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, to accompliſh and bring about your ſaid Treaſon, and deviliſh and traiterous Intents and Purpoſes, did, with divers other falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, on the ſaid twenty-fifth Day of Auguſt, in the ſaid Ninth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, and at divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonſtone aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Eſſex, by Force and Arms, &c. falſely, malicioufly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly meet, propoſe, conſult, conſpire, conſent, and agree, to move, raiſe, and levy Inſurrection, Rebellion, and War, within this Kingdom againſt our ſaid Lord the King, for the traiterous Purpoſes aforeſaid. And that you the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the ſaid Treaſon and traiterous Intentions and Purpoſes, on the ſaid twenty-fifth Day of Auguſt, in the Ninth Year aforeſaid, at Laytonſtone aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Eſſex, by Force and Arms, &c. malicioufly and traiterouſly did publiſh a certain malicious, ſeditious, and traiterous Writing, containing and purporting (amongſt other Things) an Exhortation, Incitement, and Promiſes of Rewards, the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, to perſuade, move and excite, to take up Arms, and to levy and make War within this Realm, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, for the traiterous Purpoſes and Intentions aforeſaid. And that you the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the ſaid Treaſon and traiterous Intentions and Purpoſes, with other falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, on the ſaid twenty-fifth Day of Auguſt, in the ninth Year aforeſaid, and at divers other Days

Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonſtone aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Eſſex, by Force and Arms, &c. Falſely, Maliciouſly, Deviliſhly and Traiterouſly did meet, propoſe, conſult, conſpire, conſent and agree, by an armed Force, and by Soldiers to be raiſed and got ready for the traiterous Purpoſes aforeſaid; the ſaid Perſon, during the Life of the ſaid late King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and ſince the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal Eſtate, and Dignity of King of this Kingdom, and to the Empire, Government, and Poſſeſſion of the ſame to exalt and bring; and that you the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the ſaid Treaſon, and traiterous Intentions and Purpoſes aforeſaid, on the ſaid twenty fifth Day of Auguſt, in the ninth Year aforeſaid, and at diverſe other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonſtone aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Eſſex, by Force and Arms, &c. Maliciouſly and Traiterouſly did get ready, raiſe, and retain ſeveral Men, to the Jurors unknown, to take up Arms, and to levy and wage War within this Kingdom, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, for the traiterous Purpoſes aforeſaid; and that you the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the ſaid Treaſon, and traiterous Intentions and Purpoſes aforeſaid, on the ſaid twenty fifth Day of Auguſt, in the ninth Year aforeſaid, and at divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonſtone aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Eſſex, with other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, by Force and Arms, &c. Maliciouſly, Deviliſhly and Traiterouſly did meet, propoſe, conſult, conſpire, conſent and agree, the ſacred Perſon of our now Sovereign Lord King GEORGE, for the traiterous Purpoſes aforeſaid, moſt wickedly to take, ſeize, impriſon, and detain in Cuſtody, againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

Priſoner. If your Lordſhip will pleaſe to indulge me;

My Lord, I am brought here in Chains, in Fetters and in Chains. My Lord, I have been uſed more like an Algerine Captive than a Free-born Engliſhman: I have been dragged through the Streets by the Hands of Goalers, and have been made a Shew and a Spectacle of.

I am now in a Court of Juſtice before your Lordſhip, and I hope the Time will come when I ſhall have a candid and fair Trial, and not be made a Sacrifice to the Rage and Fury of any Party, or the Neceſſity of the Times. My Lord, I had not ſaid this, but I have been inſulted ſince I came into the Hall: A Gentleman came and told me, Either you muſt die, or the Plot muſt die. My Lord, this is Uſage inſufferable in a Chriſtian Nation; and I think I can lay my Hand upon my Heart and ſay, I have done nothing againſt my Conſcience.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If Mr. Layer hath any Objections to the Indictment he may make them, but ſhould not go on in this Manner.

Priſoner. My Lord, I hope I ſhall have theſe Chains taken off, that I may have the free Uſe of that Reaſon and Underſtanding which God hath given me. They have given me the Strangury to that Degree that is very painful, and I am told your Lordſhip is afflicted with that Diſtemper.

I hope theſe Chains ſhall be taken off in the firſt Place, and then I hope I ſhall have a fair and a tender Trial.

L. C. Juſt. There have been a great many Things ſaid by which we cannot examine into. You have given a general Charge of ſome People uſing you ill, your Expreſſions are not juſt and right; you charge no particular Perſon; we can take no Notice of them.

As to the Chains you complain of, it muſt be left to thoſe to whom the Cuſtody of you is committed by Law, to take care that you may not make your Eſcape; when you come to your Trial then your Chains may be taken off. Conſider the Matter of this Day; if you have any Objections to the Indictment the Court will hear them; if not, you muſt plead.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am ſure nothing is intended but that he ſhould have a fair Trial; but to complain here of hard Uſage, of Chains and Impriſonment, carries with it a Reflection of Cruelty, and we know what Effect theſe Things may have Abroad. Sir Robert Raymond.

My Lord, I don't believe there is any Occaſion for ſaying any thing more in anſwer to this, than that the Priſoner hath been kept, as all Perſons in his Circumſtances are, when they have been attempting to make an Eſcape; there was an Attempt of that Nature made by him, and I believe no Body will ſay, but on ſuch an Occaſion, there is Reaſon to take particular Care that he may not eſcape. My Lord, as to any other Matters of Hardſhip, I hope what he ſays is not ſo; I very believe it is not, but that he hath as much Freedom and Liberty as is proper and uſual. And as to what is ſaid in reſpect to the Man that inſulted him in the Hall, I know nothing of it, nor heard of it before; but can't but obſerve that it is an eaſy Matter for People to contrive ſuch a Thing in concert together, with ſome particular Views; and I don't know but if the Fact was ſo, it might be ſome body ſet on by himſelf that did it.

L. C. Juſt. Alas! If there hath been an Attempt to eſcape, there can be no Pretenſion to complain of Hardſhip: He that hath attempted an Eſcape once, if true, ought to be ſecured in ſuch Manner as to prevent his eſcaping a ſecond time. The Gentleman Goaler, what doth he ſay?

Gentleman Goaler. My Lord, He never attempted to eſcape ſince he was in my Cuſtody.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, it was before.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, This Complaint is made for no other Purpoſe but to captivate the Minds of the By-ſtanders, without any juſt Grounds in the World; for if the whole of the Complaint made and aggravated in this ſolemn Manner be conſidered, it amounts only to this, That a Priſoner who ſtands charged with ſo great an Offence as High-Treaſon (who I admit, notwithſtanding the Weight of that Charge, ought to have all the Juſtice and all the Opportunity of defending himſelf which the Law allows) I ſay Sir Philip York.

it amounts to no more than this; that a Priſoner in theſe Circumſtances is brought up hither under a Guard, and in Fetters, as Perſons in that Condition uſually are. It is very well known that when this Gentleman was in the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger, he not only made attempt to eſcape, but actually eſcaped, got out of a Window two Pair of Stairs high, and from thence over the Water into Southwark; and ſince that is ſo, can there be any Colour to ſay that what was done afterwards was unwarrantable? I cannot help ſaying on this Occaſion, that it does not become the Candor a Perſon in the Priſoner's Circumſtances ought to ſhew, to aggravate and make ſuch a Miſrepreſentation of the Uſage he has received. As to what has happened in the Hall we know nothing of it, nor can poſſibly tell how true it is. If any ſuch thing was ſaid, it is not impoſſible to have been by ſome body that was ſet there on Purpoſe by the Friends of this Gentleman. I ſay thus much, my Lord, not becauſe I think it material to the Buſineſs of this Day, but becauſe I would not have it gone away with that there has been any Hardſhip put upon the Priſoner contrary to Law. No, his Majeſty, who makes the Laws of the Land the Rule and Meaſure of all his Actions, though he will have Juſtice done to himſelf and his Government againſt any Perſon that ſhall conſpire to overthrow it, yet he will ſuffer no Hardſhips to be done even to ſuch Perſons, contrary to Law; and nothing has been done in this Caſe but what was legal and abſolutely neceſſary.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg to be indulged a few Words; That he is in Chains now is demonſtrable; and he hath told me, when in the Tower with him, that they are ſo grievous to him that he cannot ſleep but in one Poſture, viz. upon his Back, and that he hath not attempted to eſcape out of the Tower, is given in Evidence by the Gentleman Goaler, who hath, and will, I verily believe, execute his Authority with all Humanity, for he now helps to hold up his Chains, otherwiſe the Priſoner could not ſtand. My Lord, it is ſaid it is nothing but what is uſual in Caſes of this Nature. My Lord, I believe I might challenge them to give an Inſtance where any Priſoner was ſhackled with Irons in the Tower before Mr. Layer; his Majeſty's Priſoners of the Tower are ſuch Strangers to this Uſage, that they had not the very Materials there, they were ſent for from Newgate, and I hope they will be carried back again thither. Your Lordſhip hath hinted it as an Indulgence intended to him when he comes to his Trial, that his Irons ſhall be taken off: But I humbly inſiſt upon it that by Law he ought not to be called upon, even to plead, till his Fetters are off: My Lord Coke * is clearly of that Opinion in his Pleas of the Crown; and it is admitted on all Hands, that when he comes to be tried his Shackles muſt be off, and upon a Debate it was ſo determined in Cranburne's † Caſe. The only Reaſon aſſigned for putting of Irons at all upon a Priſoner, is to keep him in ſafe Cuſtody (for the Laws of England allow of no Tortures) and the Reaſon why they are taken off in the Courſe of Proceeding againſt him in a Court of Juſtice, ſeems to be that his Mind ſhould not be diſturbed by any Uneaſineſs his Body or Limbs ſhould be under; and as to the Diſtinction that his Chains ſhould be on when he Pleads, becauſe but for a Moment, or a ſhort Time, and off when he is Tried, becauſe that will be of longer Duration; it is poſſible that what we have now to ſay may be as long as ſome Trials. I ſhould (with Submiſſion) think that ſomething of the Dignity of the Court might be conſidered in this Matter, for a Court of Juſtice, the higheſt in the Kingdom for criminal Matters, where the King himſelf is ſuppoſed to be perſonally preſent, to have a Man plead for his Life before them in Chains, ſeems to be very unſuitable. He is now before the ſame awful and juſt Tribunal which he will be before when he is tried, and why not therefore without Chains as well now as then; and as to the ſafe Cuſtody intended by the Irons, is the Man like to run away here? Is he not here too well guarded to eſcape?

† Trial 154.

Mr. Ketelbey. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to favour me a few Words. My Lord, What hath been his Uſage in bringing him up hither I cannot tell; what the Uſage of the Tower is with reſpect to the putting Chains upon Priſoners, I am ignorant of; but this I muſt beg Leave to ſay, that he is entitled to have his Chains off before he pleads, * in point of Law: The Authorities for it are my Lord Coke in his third Inſtit. Fol. 34. who ſays, that when Priſoners come in Judgment to anſwer, they ſhall be out of Irons, and all manner of Bonds, that their Pain may not take away their Reaſon, nor conſtrain them to anſwer, but at their Free-Will *; and in Fol. 35. he cites the Words out of the Mirrour, Chap. V. Sect. 1. It is an Abuſe that Priſoners be charged with Irons, or put to any Pain before they be Attainted. At the Trial of Cranburne, when he was brought up here before my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, he inſiſted that his Chains ſhould be taken off before he pleaded, and it was ordered. This was likewiſe mentioned in the Trials of Dorrel, Gordon, and Kerr; when they came up in their Irons to plead, it was moved at firſt that thoſe Irons ought to be taken off. The Court declared, that if the Priſoners inſiſted on it, it ought to be done: But they did not inſiſt on it, they rather choſe to wave that Privilege than undergo the Trouble of having them knock'd off in Court. There is a Reſolution in this Caſe. In the 10th Fol. of Kelyng, it is expreſly declared on a Conſultation of all the Judges in England, That a Priſoner ought to have his Irons taken off before he pleads.

* Brit. c. 5. fol. 14.

L. C. Juſt. The Caſe of Cranburne, you will find that Authority is when the Party was called upon to plead, and was tried at the ſame Time.

No doubt when he comes upon his Trial, the Authority is that he is not to be in Vinculis during his Trial, but ſhould be ſo far free, that he ſhould have the Uſe of his Reaſon, and all Advantages to clear his Innocence. Here he is only called upon to plead by Advice of his Counſel; he is not to be tried now, when he comes to be tried, if he makes that Complaint, the Court will take Care he ſhall be in a Condition proper to make his Defence; but when he is only called upon to plead, and his Counſel by him to adviſe him what to plead, why are his Chains to be taken off this Minute, and to be put on again the next? It hath been ſaid (I cannot underſtand the Meaning of it) he is too well guarded, I don't think a Man charged with High-Treaſon of this Nature, can be ſaid juſtly to be too well guarded, eſpecially if it be true what hath been ſuggeſted, that he hath endeavoured to make his Eſcape; that will juſtify more than what the Law allows in other Caſes.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg leave to explain myſelf, what I mean by ſaying too well guarded, I mean ſufficiently guarded.

L. C. Juſt. Have you any thing more to offer? This is nothing but to captivate the People, and to make Impreſſions upon them that are not juſt, or elſe what ſignifies his Chains being taken off this Minute, and afterwards put on again the next? This is nothing but to bring the People to have an unjuſt Senſe of the Crime with which he is charged.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we might humbly apprehend and hope that the better to prepare himſelf for his Trial, he might continue without his Chains till after that Time.

L. C. Juſt. I am of another Opinion, and if we ſhould order his Chains to be taken off, and he eſcape, I don't know but we are guilty of his Eſcape. As your Client hath ſaid, he ſhall have a fair and a juſt Trial; but to make Objections in Matters of this Nature, is to caſt a Reflection on the Court, for not doing that which is not in their Power to do.

Mr. Hungerford. I am, my Lord, of Counſel with the Priſoner, I have been ſo appointed by your Lordſhip, and I aſſure your Lordſhip that I, and I dare anſwer for the other Gentleman that is concerned in the ſame Service with me, ſhall make uſe of that Power and Privilege you are pleaſed to give us, as we ought.

My Lord, I have read over the Record and the Indictment, we have a Copy of both, according to the Direction of the Act of Parliament: I know we have at preſent a Right to object to four ſorts of Things, viz. miſwriting, miſpelling, falſe or improper Latin: We are confined to make whatever Objections occur to us on theſe Heads at this Time, and have not the Liberty to make it afterwards; but there are likewiſe ſome Objections of another Nature, which we may have Liberty to make at another Time.

I have here in my Hand the whole Record delivered to the Priſoner, in which, not only the Indictment is ſet forth, but the Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer. After the Commiſſion hath enumerated the Names of the Commiſſioners, it goes on, and ſays, what are the Offences that they are authorized to enquire of, as High-Treaſon, Miſpriſions of Treaſon, and other Offences of a leſſer Degree; then it goes on and ſays what the Perſons ſhall be, concerning whom this Inquiry ſhall be made, Et per quos vel per quem, cui vel quibus, quando, qualiter, & quomodo, & de aliis Articulis & Circumſtantiis, præmiſſa & eorum quodlibet ſeu eorum aliquod vel aliqua, qualitercunq; concernen', plenius veritat'. My Lord, I have look'd into this Form, and conſidered the Words with all the Accuracy I can, and have endeavoured to render them into Engliſh, but cannot; I muſt ſay I look upon thoſe two Words plenius veritat', as placed in this Record, to be Nonſenſe, and not capable of being rendered into Engliſh, for they import no meaning at all. It is a Blemiſh in the Commiſſion itſelf, and if ſo, the Enquiry taken by Vertue of that Commiſſion muſt fall to nothing, and conſequently this Indictment muſt be naught. I have been ſo exact I have looked into the Forms of theſe Indictments, taken by Vertue of Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer. My Lord Chief Juſtice Coke hath, for the ſake of Poſterity, I ſuppoſe, given us the Form of the Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer in his Time; in that Form of his theſe Words are entirely left out; they ſeem to me to be Words of no Signification, therefore we hope there ſhall be no further Proceedings till this is ſet right, and that the Indictment ſhall be quaſh'd.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, there are other Objections, whether is it your Lordſhip's Pleaſure that we ſhould go on this firſt, or that we ſhould mention the others, and ſo go upon them all together?

L. C. Juſt. Make all your Objections together.

Mr. Hungerford. Then, my Lord, in the Cloſe of this Commiſſion it is ſaid the Jury were charged to enquire, but doth not ſay for what; but that Objection may be made another Time, and therefore I will not trouble your Lordſhip with it now. My Lord, the firſt Thing that occurs to me in the Indictment itſelf, and which certainly, if we prevail in, the whole Proceedings are wrong; this Gentleman's Name is not writ nor ſpelt right, Jurator' pro Dno' Rege, &c. ſuper Sacramentum, &c. quod Chriſtopherus Layer, Chriſtopherus is there writ with an E, whereas it ſhould be Chriſtophorus with an O; and if the Dictionaries and Lexicons are any Authority we are right.

Theſe are the Objections which have occurred to me, the Gentleman joined with me in this Service, hath ſome other Remarks to make.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, As it is your Lordſhip's Pleaſure to appoint us to be Counſel for this Gentleman, I ſhall not make any Apology for our appearing on his Behalf, leſt I receive the ſame Reproof from the Court, which a Gentleman in my Station once received upon a like Occaſion.

My Lord, we are at this Time proper to lay theſe four Points under your Lordſhip's Conſideration, which if we had ſtaid till after Plea pleaded by the Priſoner, would have been too late; that Matter hath been often ſettled and determined by your Lordſhip, and I ſhall ſay no more to that, I believe they don't object to it; now therefore is the only Time to make theſe Objections.

My Lord, The firſt that hath been mentioned by Mr. Hungerford is in the Caption of the Indictment as to theſe Words plenius Veritatem; in our Copy, it is plenius Veritat' with a Daſh, that it may be taken in any Caſe, but I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip whether it can be made Senſe, or is proper Latin in any of the Caſes either of the ſingular or plural Number, that there can be made made any Grammar of it, or that there is any regular or preceding Verb that can govern it in any Case whatsoever; they might have put in any Words entirely inconsistent with respect to the Part preceding or subsequent; leave out these Words and the other Part of the Sentence is plain and intelligible, but, put in the Words and it is otherwise.

And especially since we have the Authority of my Lord Coke where these Words are not in; how they came to be put in, or of what Use they are, your Lordship will observe on reading the Caption of the Indictment, Ad Inquirend', &c. plenius Veritat'.

Taking Exceptions to the Caption of the Indictment hath formerly been objected to, but I believe that Right cannot be disputed at this Time.

As to the second Exception, that, in relation to Christopherus, we submit it to your Lordship if that be not expresly within the Defects mentioned in the Act of Parliament Miswriting, Misspelling, false and improper Latin; nay, whether it is not subject to censure under each of these four Heads.

My Lord, it was impossible to bring all my Authorities, upon this Point, along with me; but I have here in Court several of the best Dictionaries and Lexicons which shew the true Word to be Christophorus; and I believe the Gentlemen of the other Side can't produce one Instance in any authentick Book either Greek or Latin, but it is always spelt with an O and not with an E, it is Christophorus from πέφορα, the Præteritum Medium of the Greek Verb φέρω; and the Rules of Etymology and Formation of Greek Verbals evince that it must be so and cannot be otherwise; and by all the Latin Dictionaries, the Latin Word for Christopher is Cristophorus.

L. C. Just. How do we know what his Name is? You must plead it in Abatement; we don't know his Name; he might be christened Christopherus for ought we know.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, for false Spelling——

L. C. Just. How doth that appear to us? You are wrong in making your Objection at this Time, we can't take notice what his Name is; in the Record of the Indictment he is called Christopherus. Can we enquire what his true Name is, whether in English it is Christopher or Christopherus? We can't tell what his Name is, perchance his Name may be Christopherus, and the Name by which he might be christen'd; I desire I may not be understood as if I would prevent you from offering any thing that is material for your Client, but if I can satisfy you that you are improper in Form, it may save the Time of the Court; but if you can offer any thing material, we are ready to hear it.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I hope your Lordship will pardon me, here is the Life of a Man concern'd, and as I would not willingly offer any thing to your Lordship that in the like Cases hath been over-ruled, so neither would I omit any thing that may be material for the Prisoner, whose Defence the Court has intrusted us with; therefore I will go on to the other Objections that we think to be improper Latin; compassavit, imaginatus fuit, & intendebat. These are the Words, I don't know whether this Latin will go down in Westminster-Hall, but I am satisfied it would not in Westminster-School.

Here is the Et Intendebat, Et a Conjunction Copulative between Verbs in several Tenses; here is Compassavit the Preterperfect Tense, Imaginatus fuit the Preterperfect Tense, and Intendebat the Preterimperfect Tense: Why should not the last Verb have been put into the Preterperfect Tense, according to the Rules of Classical Latin, as well as the two former? Therefore we submit it how far it will go as to vitiating the Indictment in Point of false Latin.

My Lord, there is one Word more, (Seisiend') the Overt-Act, as laid in the Indictment, is, that the Prisoner Conspiravit ad sacram Personam Domini Regis capiend', seisiend', & imprisonand'; by the Words that are coupled with it, I suppose Seisiend' is intended to mean, the taking, or laying violent Hands upon his Majesty's Person; but sure there was never such a Word in any Indictment before, nor to be found in any Author whatsoever; 'tis neither Classical Latin, Law Latin, nor to be met with among Littleton's Barbarisms, never naturalized nor inoculated into antient or modern Use; 'tis a mere fictitious Word coin'd for this very Purpose without any Precedent, any one Instance to warrant it.

My Lord Coke, in his 1st Instit. Fol. 17. says, That the Word Seisitus cometh of the French Word Seisin, and that in the Common Law 'tis properly applied to Freehold, in Contradistinction to Possessionatus, which relates to Chattels: For Seisitus and Possessionatus are mentioned as Terms of Art, Technical Words in the Law, that by long Use have acquired to themselves one peculiar and determined Signification; for that Reason I don't object against the Word Compassavit in this Indictment, it having been always used in Indictments of High-Treason to express compassing the Death of the King, ever since the Statute of Edward the Third; so Murdrare, Felonia, and several others, are known Terms of Art in the Law. But, where did they meet with the Word Seisiend'? And if they would fancy it to be a Gerund of some unknown Active Verb, how came they to give it this Sense, to make it signify the same as Capiendum?

My Lord, I must beg leave to say, that I apprehend the very Gist of this Indictment, (at least so much of it as relates to this Overt-Act) entirely depends upon this Word Seisiend'; and if it does appear to your Lordship to be insignificant, barbarous, false or improper Latin, I hope we are proper under the Authority of the late Act of Parliament, humbly to insist upon this Objection, and that it is sufficient to overthrow the whole Indictment.

My Lord Coke, in Calvin's Case, says, that Indictments for High-Treason ought to be drawn with the greatest Accuracy and Nicety; but if Mr. Attorney will please to shew me, that this Word was ever once used to this Purpose, I will wave my Objection, and admit it to be as elegant a Word as any in the whole Indictment.

L. C. Just. I think before the King's Counsel make any Answer to that, we had best have that Part of the Indictment read, that we may the better judge of it.

Cl. of the Cr. reads, Quod tu Christopherus Layer, &c. ad Capiend' Seisiend' & Imprisonand', &c.

L. C. Just. Ad Capiend' & Imprisonand'. Won't these Words do, suppose the other Word ad Seisiend' insignificant?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, theſe Objections have been made with ſo much Ceremony, and uſher'd in with ſuch Pomp, as if ſomething elſe was meant, than the quaſhing this Indictment.

We apprehend ſome of them are improper, and others which may be proper at this Time, are of no Force.

The Objections to the Commiſſion, we apprehend are improper; it is not in the Power of the Court to quaſh the Commiſſion, and therefore to make mention of Miſ-ſpelling, and of falſe and improper Latin therein, ſignifies nothing. As to the Indictment itſelf, the Court hath a Power, and if they think proper, if there be ſufficient Cauſe, may quaſh it; but the Commiſſion iſſues under the Great Seal, and that Part of it returned here, is not under the Power of this Court to deſtroy; but upon reading it, we think this Objection will quite vaniſh; theſe Words are uſed in all Commiſſions of the like Nature, and are inſerted in the very Form of the Commiſſion, and the Caption of the Indictment publiſh'd in the Treatiſe, allow'd by all the Judges of England, call'd, A Collection of Statutes relating to High-Treaſon, compos'd for the Aſſiſtance of the Juſtices in Scotland; and becauſe of the ſuppos'd Difficulty of underſtanding theſe Words, I will, for the Sake of the Gentlemen of the other Side, read them in the Order they are to be conſtrued, thus, Ad Inquirend' plenius Veritatem per ſacrum probor' & legal' Hom', &c. de quibuſcunq; Proditionibus Miſpriſſionib', &c. per quoſcunq; & qualitercunq; Hit' Fact', &c. ac de aliis Articulis, &c. & ad eaſdem Prodition' & al' Premiſs' audiend' & terminand'; here they are to enquire more fully the Truth, of and concerning all Treaſons, Miſprisions of Treaſon by any Perſon whomſoever committed, &c. And if the Words (plenius Veritat') had immediately followed the Word (Inquirend') every Body at firſt reading muſt be ſatisfied that no Objection could be made thereto; and the Objection now is only made on Account of the placing theſe Words at the End of the Sentence. But it makes no Difference in the Conſtruction or Senſe; how otherwiſe can it be conſtrued or underſtood? But to enquire more fully the Truth of thoſe Offences, there enumerated, and what Perſons are guilty, &c. And therefore I take it, that the Form of the Commiſſion is proper, and will be juſtified, not only by the Senſe of it, but by the uſual and common Courſe of Proceedings.——— As to the next Objection, we apprehend that hath been already over-ruled; the Word (Chriſtopherus) with an E, and not with an O: And if there be any Difference in the Name, that it muſt be pleaded in Abatement, becauſe if they would take Advantage of it, they muſt plead that his Name is otherwiſe than is expreſſed in the Indictment. This Man's Name Chriſtopherus may be with an E as well as an O for ought appears: But we apprehend, that the Name Chriſtopher is ſeldom writ in Latin with an O, but uſually with an E; if they think there is any thing material in the Objection, let them plead it in Abatement, and we are ready to anſwer them.

My Lord, as to the next Objection, that the three Verbs which charge the High-Treaſon, viz. Compaſſavit, Imaginatus fuit, & Intendebat, that they are not in the ſame Tenſes; we ſubmit that in the ſtricteſt Latin, there is no Neceſſity the laſt Verb ſhould be of the ſame Tenſe with thoſe that go before the Copulative (Et): Sure, tho' Compaſſavit and Imaginatus fuit be in the Preterperfect Tenſe, yet Intendebat may be well added in the Preterimperfect Tenſe, and that will make no Difference, they being all three alledged and found in the Time paſt, before the Indictment exhibited.

My Lord, the next Objection which they ſeem to rely upon, is at the Concluſion of the Indictment, and that is to the Word (Seiſiend', &c.) They ſay, the Precedents have been look'd into, and there is no ſuch Word to be found in any Indictment of High-Treaſon; I beg leave to ſay in Anſwer, that ſince the Aſſaſſination-Plot againſt King William, there hath been no ſuch villanous Attempt of this Nature; therefore no Wonder if it cannot be found in other Indictments where there has been no Occaſion for the Word. This is an Overt-Act of conſpiring and agreeing to take, ſeize, and impriſon, the very Perſon of the King; and it muſt be laid according to the Fact itſelf; but if this be not a proper Word, tho' I think the Word is proper and ſignificant, yet becauſe this is not made uſe of in alledging the Treaſon itſelf, but the Overt-Act or Evidence of the Treaſon, it will not vitiate that Part of the Indictment: For if any one of theſe Words alledged is proved upon the Trial, the Priſoner ought to be found Guilty, whether he compaſſed to take the Perſon of the King, or to ſeize his Majeſty, or to impriſon and detain him; any one of theſe Attempts is ſufficient, if proved, and the Priſoner ought to be convicted. There was an Objection of this Nature taken upon one of the Trials for High-Treaſon, before my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, but he was pleaſed to ſay, that in alledging the Overt-Acts, where ſeveral Overt-Acts are alledged, or ſeveral Words are uſed to expreſs the ſame Overt-Act, if they were miſtaken in one of the Words, yet if there were other Words ſufficient in the Indictment to expreſs the Overt-Act; or although one entire Overt-Act was inſufficiently alledged, yet if there was another Overt-Act well laid, the Court would not quaſh the Indictment, becauſe this would be to deprive the Crown of the Right of giving Evidence to prove any other Part of the ſame Overt-Act, or any other Overt-Act alledged in the Indictment; ſo that we hope this is not a proper Objection, becauſe the Court cannot quaſh the whole Indictment if any other Overt-Act is ſufficiently expreſſed, but the Indictment muſt ſtand. ——But the Word is proper, becauſe the Words Seiſire ad Seiſiend' are Terms known in the Law, and it is frequently uſed in Actions of Treſpaſs, Quod cepit, ſeiſivit, & abduxit, or aſportavit. My Lord, we think the Word ad ſeiſiend' is a proper Expreſſion in this Caſe, to ſignify the Attempt or Deſign to ſeize and apprehend the Perſon of his Majeſty; and we hope there is nothing in theſe Objections.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are not againſt the Gentlemen of the other Side's inſiſting upon every thing that may be for their Client's Service. But ſure theſe Objections have nothing in them; there is no Colour of Reaſon to ſupport them. My Lord, as to the Exception taken to the Commiſſion, let us conſider, if there was any Weight in it, how it can poſſibly be taken at this Time. ——— By Vertue of the Act of Parliament paſſed in the 7th Year of the Reign of his late Majeſty King William, it is provided,

That

That no Indictment for any of the Offences aforementioned in that Act, which are Treasons, &c. nor any Process or Return thereupon, shall be quashed on the Motion of the Prisoner or his Counsel for Mis-writing, Mis-pelling, or false or improper Latin (under which last Words, the Counsel for the Prisoner would entitle themselves to take this Objection) unless such Exception shall be taken and made in the respective Court, where such Trial shall be, by the Prisoner or his Counsel assign'd, before any Evidence given in open Court upon such Indictment.—— But the Commission is a Thing distinct, and neither Indictment, Process, nor Return thereupon. And by Consequence no Objection can be made to the Commission at this Time by Vertue of that Act: But however, because they may not trouble us with these Objections at another Time, we beg leave to answer them now.

My Lord, these Words (plenius Veritatem) are the very Point of the Inquiry of the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, for they are to enquire, by the Oaths of lawful Men of the Country, fully of the Truth of all Treasons, Misprisions of Treasons, &c. committed in that County, and that is the Tenour of the Commission. In the Book printed by the Approbation of all the Judges of England, soon after the Union of the two Kingdoms, all the Rules and Methods of Trial in Cases of High-Treason are laid down, there is the Commission of Oyer and Terminer printed at large; and it is exactly in the same Words with this; and your Lordship may please to observe, that immediately after those Words plenius Veritatem there is a Comma, and none before; the whole Sentence before is entire, and therefore in Construction these Words, plenius Veritatem, refer to the Words ad inquirendum, at the Beginning of the Sentence; and the Sense is plain, that the Commissioners are to enquire by the Oaths of good and lawful Men of the County, and by other Ways and Means, &c. plenius Veritatem, de quibuscunque Proditionibus, Misprisionibus, &c. and then the Commission goes on, and there comes after the Comma, & ad easdem Proditiones & alia Præmissa hac vice audiend' & terminand' secund' leges, &c. In our legal Proceedings in Latin, we are not so nice as to confine ourselves to the Latin of the Classicks; but this is very proper Latin, and the disjoining of the Words plenius veritatem, from the Words ad inquirendum, by which they are govern'd by the Interposition of so many Words, is no Objection; for nothing is more common in the best Authors, than placing the most material Words at the Close of a very long Sentence, which in Point of Construction must refer to others at the Beginning. And therefore I hope we shall hear no more of this Objection.

As to the Christopherus being with an E instead of an O, that is not a proper Objection at this Time. No Man will pretend to say, he may not be christen'd by that Name, as Henry is the usual Name, Harry is the common Nick-name for Henry, yet a Person may be christen'd Harry, and so have many Persons been.

But, my Lord, we say this is a Word used in all the Law Proceedings for Christopher, and spelt in this very manner with an E.

As to the other Objection; as to the Alteration of the Tense in the Words compassavit, imaginatus fuit & intendebat: The Objection is made as if we were tied down to those exact Forms of Grammar; if the Sense is plain, if the Facts are explained by proper Latin Words, it is enough for us, whether they are carried on sometimes in one Tense, and sometimes in another, provided they sufficiently charge the Fact to be done.

The last Objection is the Word seisiend', that it is not a Word known in the Law; if that would hold, it would not quash the Indictment, because there are several other Words to the same Effect, which sufficiently express this villanous Overt-Act, without this Word seisiend'; for it is laid, that the Prisoner did propose, consult, and agree, ad sacram Personam dicti Domini Georgii nunc Regis, &c. capiend', seisiend, imprisonand', & in Custod' detinend'. But we insist, that this is a very proper Word. In the Court of Exchequer the Words used in Cases of Seizures is seisivit. Writs issue commanding the Sheriff seisire such Lands, &c. into the King's Hands, and the Sheriff returns seisiri feci; so that if this Word was look'd upon as an unknown and unintelligible Word, what must become of many Judgments and Proceedings in that Court? It is a Law Word that is here applied to the Person of our Sovereign, and as it is in the Proceedings beforementioned applied to seizing Lands, &c. Why may it not be applied to the Seizing of a Person? And then if seisire be proper, the Gerund from that must be seisiendum. And therefore we apprehend, my Lord, that this is a plain Answer, and that there is no Colour of Reason for this Objection.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, as I apprehend these Exceptions have no real Foundation, nor scarce any Colour in themselves, so I don't know whether it would not be giving too much Credit to them, for so many of the King's Counsel as attend your Lordship on this Occasion, to spend the Time of the Court in giving Answers to them. The true Answers, and all the Answers which can be given, have been already offer'd and very fully enforced; and therefore I shall not trouble your Lordship with any thing further.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg a few Words by way of Reply. As to the first Objection, we hope it is not answer'd: We object against the Words plenius veritat' as Words of no Sense or Meaning, as ranged or placed in this Indictment. Mr. Attorney hath endeavoured to make them Sense by transposing them, and inserting plenius veritat' ten Lines before what the Indictment hath. We must take the Words as they are in the Indictment: And if they are not Grammar or intelligible there, the Objection still holds. I know not what Liberty the King's Counsel hath to transpose the Words. I know School-Boys sometimes pick up Words without Regard to Grammar, to make what they call Nonsense Verses: But I never knew an Attempt before by transposing of Words, to make Nonsense Grammar, Prose, or Poetry. There is one Thing that hath been mentioned, that the Judges have settled the Forms of Proceedings in Cases of High-Treason by Direction of the House of Lords, and this plenius veritat' is got into the Form inserted in that Treatise: That Book, my Lord, notwithstanding the solemn Allowance of it by the Judges, is not, with Submission, a conclusive Authority: It was denied to be so in the Case of Matthews; which Case I can the better speak to, because I was of Counsel in it. The Ob-

Objection taken in the Caſe of Matthews was to the Pannel of the Jury, for that the Addition and Places of Abode of the Jurymen were not inſerted in the Pannel, according to the Directions of that Book, the better to guide the Priſoner in his Challenges. My Lord Chief Juſtice King, who preſided at that Trial, aſſiſted by all the then Judges of England, (except your Lordſhip who was abſent) over-ruled that Exception; and I think the reſt of my Lords the Judges, now preſent, concurred in that Reſolution. Wherefore, if we have no Authority to combat with, but the Authority of that Book, which hath been ſolemnly denied to be a good Authority, we hope this Objection ſhall ſtand.

My Lord, as to the Word Chriſtopherus, without doubt the Etymology of the Word is as Mr. Ketelbey hath opened; and there is this further to juſtify that way of Spelling which we contend for, even the two firſt Syllables of the Word in the Indictment are Chriſto, as the Greek with an O, and not Chriſtu; and in Conformity with the Greek Spelling in the two firſt Syllables of the Word, we hope the next Syllable muſt be ſpelt ſo too: But ſince it is contended, that the Subſtance of this Objection muſt be put into a Plea in Abatement, we ſhall wait the Direction of the Court as to that Matter. As to the Words compaſſavit, imaginatus fuit & intendebat, there is ſomething in that Objection too, they all relate to a Time paſt, but they are in different Tenſes or Times; there is the Preterperfect and Preterimperfect Tenſe, and there is the Conjunction Copulative between them, as if both Tenſes implied the ſame Times, which it is certain they do not, and therefore they Charge nought; for a Thing cannot be done lately and formerly, and both at the ſame Time.

As to the other Words ad capiend', ſeiſiend' & impriſonand', we are upon the Forms of an Indictment, and muſt be govern'd by the uſual Forms: I believe there is no Inſtance on Record, where theſe Words are made uſe of in any Accuſation of this Kind; for which Reaſons we humbly hope this Indictment ſhall be quaſh'd.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I beg leave to offer a Word or two by way of Reply: Mr. Serjeant Pengelly is pleaſed to ſay, that Senſe may be made of theſe Words, and that plenius veritatem as it is, is good Latin, by lifting theſe Words from the Bottom of the Sentence to the Top, and making them follow ad inquirendum. I believe four Parts in five of the Caption interfere between the inquirendum and the plenius veritatem, a whole Catalogue of Offences, ſeveral independent Sentences, different Times, Perſons, Places, Things all ſtationed between, and yet theſe Words are to be united: I would be glad to know by what Rule of Grammar this can be done.

As to the Word Chriſtopherus, I ſhall not further inſiſt upon that as a proper Objection under this Head, becauſe your Lordſhip ſeems to be of an Opinion that we ought to have pleaded it in Abatement.

As to the Word ſeiſiend', it hath been ſaid it is a Word well known in the Exchequer, but they don't ſhew one Inſtance where-ever it was uſed: Indeed they mention a Precept to the Sheriff ſeiſiri facias, and the Return ſeiſiri feci, but what is that to ſeiſiendum; the one is juſtified by Uſage, the ſeiſitus as ſeiſiri; beſides ſeiſiri is there uſed in the very ſame Senſe which the Law hath impoſed upon it; it is to be put into Poſſeſſion, the Lands are ſo delivered by the Sheriff into the Hands of the King, that he becomes ſeiſed thereof, ut de feodo & in jure Coronæ, till an Amoveas manus be obtained: But if ever that Word was put into any Indictment to ſignify to ſeize and impriſon the King, 'tis entirely unknown to me.

Indeed here is one Piece of Doctrine offered, that if it holds good puts an End to all our Objections, and even to the Act of Parliament on which they are founded; but I muſt own it is entirely new to me: We are told there are other Words in the Indictment, and other Overt-Acts, and if one Act is ſufficiently expreſſed by any one Word, though there be Words that are improper and falſe Latin, yet it ſhall not vitiate the Indictment; what avails then this Act that empowers us to make Objections to Miſ-writing, Miſ-ſpelling, falſe and improper Latin? 'Tis impoſſible to ſuppoſe, that whoever hath the drawing of an Indictment ſhould make Faults and blunder on from firſt to laſt: No, in an Indictment for High-Treaſon the greateſt Care is, or ought to be taken in the Drawing of it; and where the Life of a Perſon, and all that is valuable is at Stake, the Law will not ſubject any one to ſuch dreadful Penalties and Forfeitures for an Offence expreſſed only by Words of an unknown or dubious Signification; and therefore, we hope that this goes to the whole, and that the Indictment ſhall be quaſh'd, or elſe it would be nugatory for us to be allowed to take Exceptions to one Part of the Indictment if the other were good.

I believe Mr. Attorney won't ſhew any Inſtance, (I ſubmit it to his greater Experience) where he ever knew one Overt-Act in an Indictment ſet aſide, and the reſt of the Indictment held good: Exceptions have ever ſince the making this Act been taken and argued by Counſel, and determined; but if this be a ſufficient Anſwer, ſurely they ſpent the Time of the Court to very little Purpoſe, in debating whether there were any Faults in the Indictment, when it was ſo eaſy to ſhew it was not faulty throughout. Mr. Serjeant Pengelly has been pleaſed to mention the Opinion of my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, upon one of the Trials before him, that although one entire Overt-Act was inſufficiently alledged, yet if there was any other well laid, the Court would not quaſh the Indictment; I wiſh he had told us in what Trial, or where it is to be found, for I don't remember it in any of the printed Trials: As to what was mentioned, with regard to the Authority of that Book, for the Words plenius veritatem, Mr. Hungerford rightly obſerved, that the Authority of that Book was utterly denied at the Trial of Matthews; your Lordſhip was not there, my Lord Chief Juſtice King preſided then upon the Bench, that Book particularly directed, that not only the Names of the Jurors ſhould be inſerted in the Pannel, but alſo their Additions, and the Places where they lived; inſtead of that, the Copy of the Pannel delivered conſiſted only of a long Liſt of bare Names, no Additions, nor where they lived; whereupon we made our Objection, and inſiſted on the Authority of that Book. Notwithſtanding which, the Objection was then over-ruled, and conſequently we hope we ſhall not be pinn'd down to the Authority of this Book any more in this Caſe, than the other; for theſe Reaſons we hope your Lordſhip will be of Opinion that the King's Counſel have not given a full Anſwer to our Objections, and that the Indictment ſhall be quaſhed.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg leave to hand up this Precedent of my Lord Coke's, where theſe Words are entirely left out.

L. C. Juſt. What is the uſe you would make of ſetting up an extrajudicial Opinion of my Lord Coke's, as you call it, againſt the Opinion of all the Judges? Becauſe it is not in my Lord Coke's Form, therefore it is not neceſſary or right; but at the ſame time you would have us governed by my Lord Coke's Opinion, you would have us reject the Opinion of all the Judges. My Lord Coke may be wrong; the Opinion of all the Judges in an extrajudicial Caſe may be wrong; but it would be very ſtrange to give a greater Weight to the extrajudicial Opinion of my Lord Coke, becauſe he hath left the Words out, than to the Opinion of all the Judges that have put the Words in; neither is concluſive, but certainly the Opinion of all the Judges of later Times, muſt have more Weight, than the extrajudicial Opinion of a ſingle Judge at any former Time.

As to the Matter of this Objection, you ſay that in the Recital of the Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, in the Caption of the Indictment, it is ſaid the Commiſſioners had Authority to inquire de quibuſcunq; Proditionibus, &c. plenius veritatem; plenius veritatem comes in afterwards: We have been told of Claſſical and Ciceronian Latin, and if there be any Regard to be had to that, is any thing more common in every Part of Cicero, than to put Words laſt, that in Conſtruction muſt come firſt? I don't know any Rule that is laid down when the Words coming laſt, are in Conſtruction to be taken firſt, but only this, that the Conſtruction is to be according to the natural Senſe and Import of the Words; and if ſo, then in the Authority of theſe Commiſſioners, where it is ſaid they were to inquire de quibuſcunq; Proditionibus, &c. plenius veritatem, in Conſtruction the laſt Words muſt be taken firſt. You ſay as they ſtand it is Nonſenſe and ſignifies nothing, and the Words are nugatory; 'tis not material where they ſtand, they muſt be taken in that manner of Conſtruction as would make them ſignificant, that is, by taking the laſt Words, plenius veritatem, to go firſt in Conſtruction; then it is very proper and juſt, and all will be well.

As to the Matter of the Miſnomer that you have given up, and very juſtly, for you are proper to plead that in Abatement.

The next Objection is, you ſay here is improper Latin, Compaſſavit in the Preterperfect Tenſe, Imaginatus fuit in the ſame Tenſe, and Intendebat in the Preterimperfect Tenſe; take theſe Words by themſelves, ſuppoſe it had been Compaſſavit only, Imaginatus fuit only, or Intendebat only, would not either of theſe Words, whether in the Preterperfect or Preterimperfect Tenſe, have been ſufficient to have charged Mr. Layer with having ſome Time before compaſs'd and imagin'd the Death of the King? Every one of theſe Words charge him with the Intent of Compaſſing and Imagining, and that relates to a Time that is paſt, whether Preterperfect Tenſe, or Preterimperfect, that is not material: Then as to one of the Overt-Acts, as here be a great many to which no Objection is made, the High-Treaſon is compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; the Overt-Acts are ſeveral, either is ſufficient to maintain the Treaſon of compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. One of the Overt-Acts is, that he did deſign, conſult, and agree ad Capiend', Seiſiend', & Impriſonand', the Perſon of the King. Suppoſe it had been ad Capiend', & Impriſonand', then you ſay it had been well enough, but the putting in this Word Seiſiend', will vitiate the whole, becauſe it is an improper and vicious Word. I don't know that, nor dare not ſay in a Court of Law that it is an improper and vicious Word: You are told of a Court of Law where the Word is uſed, and hath the ſame Signification as in the Indictment; as to ſeize Lands into the Hands of the King, to ſeize Lands, or to ſeize the King's Perſon, the Word is the ſame, and if Seiſire is good, and enough to ſignify to ſeize Lands, Seiſire is enough to ſignify to ſeize the King's Perſon; therefore I think it is a proper Word, but whether it is or not, there is ſufficient in the Indictment to maintain the Charge againſt Mr. Layer; for he is charged with a Conſultation and Agreement to take the King, with a Conſultation and Agreement to impriſon and detain the King in Priſon: Theſe are ſufficient without the Word Seiſiend', but the Word Seiſiend' hath been a Law Word, and uſed in our Proceedings at Law, never objected to; but if we ſay it would not ſignify a Seizing, we muſt ſet aſide half the Proceedings in the Court of Exchequer. Theſe are all the Objections you have made, and in my Apprehenſion they can be of no Uſe or Service to your Client; they ſignify nothing.

Mr. Juſt. Powys. I am of the ſame Opinion. Not the leaſt Doubt remains with me.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. I think the Caption of the Indictment is in common Form, and the Exceptions to the Indictment itſelf are fully anſwer'd.

Mr. Juſt. Forteſcue Aland. I am of the ſame Opinion, and think the Objections to be of no Weight.

L. C. Juſt. The Objections being all overruled: Demand of him what he hath to plead.

Cl. of the Cr. Chriſtopher Layer, hold up your Hand. How ſay you, Chriſtopher Layer, are you Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Priſoner. I deſire my Plea of Miſnomer may be received. And I plead Not Guilty as to the Fact.

Cl. of the Cr. reads the Plea.

L. C. Juſt. Your Plea is received. He hath pleaded in Abatement firſt, and then pleads over to the Treaſon. What ſay you to it?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. It can't be expected that we ſhould have a Replication ready to their Plea in Abatement: We were not aware of this; therefore we ought to have time to draw up a Replication.

L. C. Juſt. What ſay you to it?

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we have no Objection to it.

L. C. Juſt. Well, the Plea is recorded. Conſider now, the Queſtion on this Plea is, whether he was baptized by the Name of Chriſtopherus or Chriſtopherus.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, to morrow and next Day being Holy-days (elſe we ſhould have been ready by to morrow) we therefore pray, that he may be brought up again on Saturday by Rule of this Court.

Mr. Hungerford. I have ſome doubt whether it can be by Rule, or by Habeas Corpus.

L. C. Juſt. When once a Habeas Corpus hath been granted, and he is brought before us, we can order him to be brought again by Rule. He muſt be taken back again, and brought up here on Saturday next.

Die Sabbati 3° die Novembris 1722.

The Priſoner was this Day brought to the King's-Bench-Bar by the Lieutenant of the Tower, in Obedience to the Rule of Court made the 31ſt of October.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I have demurred to the Priſoner's Plea in Abatement, and pray the Demurrer may be read.

Cl. of the Cr. reads the Demurrer.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray they may join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, it is altogether a Surprize to us, and as the Clerk hath read it, it is impoſſible for us to take the Subſtance of this Demurrer. We therefore hope we ſhall be allowed a few Days to conſider of this Matter of joining in Demurrer. We ſhall not ask many. The Precedents are ſo, the Priſoner was always indulged with ſome time in a Caſe of this Nature. Before the Act of Parliament for regulating of Trials, where Matters of Law were ſtarted, or any ſpecial Pleading did ariſe, the Priſoner was indulged with a great Number of Counſel. Fitzharris had five, a greater Number than I ever knew engaged on one Side in Deliberations of this kind, unleſs it were that Number of learned Counſel which met to adviſe upon and adjuſt this Demurrer. But I think in the ordinary Courſe of the Court we are proper to deſire two or three Days. Two or three Days is but a little time, eſpecially when the Life of a Man is concerned. Mr. Attorney took from Wedneſday to Saturday to conſider of our Plea, we hope at leaſt the ſame time ſhall be allowed to us to conſider of this Demurrer. I have in my Hand the Arraignment of and Proceedings againſt Fitzharris, he was indulged ſeveral Days.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I have brought the Book along with me relating to Fitzharris: As to the Matter of having time to join in Demurrer, whether we are not entituled to it by the Rules of the Court, I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip. It is a Caſe of great Conſequence; and, as I take it, the conſtant Practice is, that a four Days Rule is always given to join in Demurrer. This is always done, as I am informed, on the Crown-ſide as well as the Plea-ſide. The Tenor of the Rule is either to join in Demurrer within four Days, or to wave the Plea; but Mr. Attorney requires us to do it immediately. In Fitzharris's Caſe the Attorney General demurred in Court, and the Counſel on the other Side refuſed to join in Demurrer immediately, and they had from Wedneſday to Saturday. We hope therefore there ſhall be a four Days Rule for us to join in Demurrer as in all other Caſes. If we are not regular in inſiſting upon four Days, we hope at leaſt your Lordſhip will indulge us with ſome time; or if we do immediately join in Demurrer, that we ſhall have ſome time to prepare ourſelves to argue it.

L. C. Juſt. How ſay you, Mr. Harcourt? How is the Courſe of the Court?

Mr. Harcourt. My Lord, in criminal Proſecutions for Miſdemeanors, two four Day Rules to plead are given, and a peremptory Rule moved for; and then if there be a Demurrer, one four Days Rule to join in Demurrer is given, and a peremptory Rule moved for: But in capital Caſes there is no Rule given, either to plead or join in Demurrer; all Proceedings on ſuch Caſes being at Bar, the Priſoner is oblig'd on all Occaſions to anſwer immediately, nor can there be any Inſtance ſhewn to the contrary.

L. C. Juſt. The Courſe of the Court is againſt you.

Mr. Hungerford. As to the Courſe of the Court, I know no better Deſcription of it, than that it is the uninterrupted Uſage of the Court warranted by Reaſon, or at leaſt not contradicted by it. The Officer tells you that in criminal Caſes

* The right Way ſeems to be, that ph ſhould be followed with an o, and f with an e, the firſt being derived from the Greek, and the other from the Latin. See Lewick's Indictment, Trial 155. where it is Chriſtophorus Knightley. See alſo Co. Entr. 51. a 55. b. 215. c. 309. c. d. 310. a. b. 319. a. 321. b.

which are not capital there are Rules for four Days, and four Days to plead, and likewiſe a four Days Rule to join in Demurrer; and ſurely, if in a criminal Caſe, which is not capital, a Man is indulged four Days; ſurely in a criminal Caſe as this is, which is capital, and doth touch a Man's Life, his Poſterity, and his Eſtate, by Parity of Reaſon, the Indulgence ought to be more than four Days. I beg leave to obſerve one thing in the Caſe of Fitzharris now in my Hand. My Lord Chief Juſtice there asks the Priſoner, will you plead over? If you will, you may have any Time in Reaſon. Now, my Lord, we have pleaded over, we have pleaded Not Guilty as to the Offence; ſo that for that Reaſon we might have till Hillary Term next, becauſe we have forwarded them in their Journey already by pleading Not Guilty as to the High-Treaſon. And we hope therefore the Gentlemen of the other Side won't contend with us for two or three Days in a Caſe of this Nature.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I only beg leave to mention this ſingle Word, that we don't inſiſt upon this for Delay, or to put off the Trial; we have pleaded over to the Treaſon, and in caſe we ſhould join in Demurrer, whatever Time is taken up in arguing it, cannot obſtruct the Proceedings in order to the Trial: Nay the Trial may be had before the Matter of the Demurrer be determined.

L. C. Juſt. In caſe you ſhould join in Demurrer, what can you do elſe?

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe we ſhall. If we had not thought our Plea would have ſtood a Demurrer, we had not made uſe of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, What he prays is againſt the Rules of the Court; in all capital Caſes there are no Rules given to plead or join in Demurrer, but the Proceedings are all Inſtanter, the Priſoner being preſent in Perſon, and therefore, my Lord, there is nothing in what they aſk. When they put in a Plea in Abatement here at the Bar, which cannot be expected or thought of, it is reaſonable that there ſhould be ſome time to conſider of that, to ſee the Nature of it, and conſider what to anſwer to it. We have demurred to their Plea; no doubt they had conſidered of their Plea whether it was a good Plea in Law or not; if it be not good, can they amend their Plea in Abatement? It was never allowed: if they can make no Alteration in that, what can they do? They can do nothing elſe but join in Demurrer; it is all they can do; and when they have joined in Demurrer, we ſhall ſee if they have any Reaſon for further Time. But as to what they ſay, that as to the Sufficiency of the Plea, it may be argued another time; and as they have pleaded over to the Treaſon, there needs be no Delay as to the Trial; I would be glad to ſee whether by this they do not deprive the Crown of the Election to proceed in ſuch Manner as ſhall be thought moſt advantageous for the carrying on the Proſecution: But is it adviſeable to leave a Plea in Abatement to the whole undetermined, and to try the Iſſue firſt? I believe they can ſhew no ſuch Inſtance, and therefore in all capital Caſes, as well as in criminal, the Plea in Abatement goes to the whole, to deſtroy the whole Indictment, and indeed ought to be determined before the Court goes on with the Trial. My Lord, we are ſurprized at what they mean by this, when they can do nothing elſe but join in Demurrer, and therefore we hope they ſhall join immediately.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, what we inſiſt upon is not a new thing; the conſtant Practice in Caſes of this Nature has been, that if a Demurrer is put into the Priſoner's Plea, he muſt join in Demurrer inſtanter. I believe the Gentlemen of the other Side can't ſhew one Inſtance to the contrary. The Priſoner can do nothing but join in Demurrer. As to what has been ſaid about our having time from Wedneſday to Saturday, the Reaſon was becauſe Thurſday and Friday were no Weſtminſter-Hall Days, for which Reaſon we could not have the Priſoner brought up before this Day. The putting in a Demurrer to this Plea can be no Surprize to the Counſel for the Priſoner; for Yeſterday we ſent Copies of our Demurrer to them. Mr. Pember, the Priſoner's Clerk in Court, had a Copy of it by two of the Clock in the Afternoon; and the Priſoner himſelf had one about four o' Clock. As to the Caſe of Fitzharris which has been cited, it was a Plea looked upon to contain Things of very great Difficulty; the Time aſked for there was not to join in Demurrer, but the Time applied for was for ſettling the Plea; but as ſoon as Mr. Fitzharris had pleaded, and the Attorney General had demurred to it, the Court ordered the Priſoner to join in Demurrer inſtanter. As to what has been ſaid, that we may proceed to Trial on the Plea of Not Guilty before the Demurrer to the Plea in Abatement is determined, that is by no Means adviſeable; the Conſequence of that may be very miſchievous; for if the Court ſhould be of Opinion that the Plea in Abatement is good, after we have diſcloſed the whole Evidence againſt the Priſoner upon the Trial, though we obtained a Verdict for his Majeſty, the whole muſt be ſet aſide; and therefore we hope your Lordſhip will not break into the common Method of Proceedings, but make the ſame Rule for the Priſoner as always has been made in Caſes of the like Nature; which is, that he ſhall join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I agree with the Counſel for the Priſoner that we are in a Caſe of Life, and that is the Reaſon why their Client ſhould have all the Indulgence the Law will allow him. But I beg leave to obſerve, that we are not now on a Queſtion that directly concerns the Merits of the Caſe, nor whether a Priſoner who is to anſwer for his Life at this Bar, ſhould have time to ſend for his Witneſſes, or prepare for his Defence. That indeed might be of a different Conſideration. But we are now barely upon a frivolous dilatory Plea, as frivolous a Plea as ever was offered in any Caſe whatſoever; and the Queſtion is, whether they, who have prepared and put in this dilatory Plea, ſhall have time given them to conſider whether they will join in Demurrer upon it or not. As to the Caſe of Fitzharris, whatever they have inferr'd from it, I think it rather turns againſt them. Was that a Plea of Miſnomer? A Letter pretended to be miſtaken in a Name, which I beg leave to ſay, when conſider'd, will appear to have been always ſo written in legal Proceedings? No, it was a Plea of the Pendency of an Impeachment for the ſame Offence, ſent up by the Houſe of Commons to the Houſe of Lords, and by Conſequence, in that Caſe, the Prerogative of the Crown, the Juriſdiction of the Lords, and the Privileges of the Commons were highly concerned. This was a Queſtion of as great Weight, and perhaps of as great Difficulty, as could come before the Court, and therefore the Priſoner had time given him to plead that Matter; but when the Attorney General demurred to it, the Priſoner join'd in Demurrer inſtantly: And as Mr. Harcourt acquaints your Lordſhip, the Practice is, that there is no ſuch Rule for proceeding upon Demurrers in capital Proſecutions as in other Caſes; and this appears by their never being ſet down in the Paper to be argued, as Demurrers always are in other Cauſes. So it was in the Caſe of Fitzharris. That was argued by four or five Counſel of a Side, without being ſet down in the Paper. In the Caſe of the Priſoner, which is your preſent Conſideration, more hath been done for him than was done for Fitzharris. Here is not only a Demurrer given in by Mr. Attorney at the Bar, but the Priſoner's Attorney had a Copy of the Demurrer at Noon the Day before, and conſequently they could not want Notice that we intended to demur, nor be under any Surprize from it. What then would they take time for? Can they do any thing but join in Demurrer? Can they amend in capital Caſes? Or could they amend a Plea in Abatement in any Caſe? They know very well that they cannot. Can they withdraw their Plea? I believe they cannot do that neither without the Conſent of Mr. Attorney General. If this be ſo, would they take time to conſider whether they ſhall join in Demurrer, when they have no Choice, when it is impoſſible for them to do any thing elſe? But, my Lord, the Method of proceeding we are now inſiſting upon, hath been always taken in capital Caſes. I agree when the Queſtion has concerned the Merits of the Priſoner's Caſe, or when he has been to prepare and conſider of ſome Matter which has been, ſtrictly ſpeaking, his Defence, time hath been allowed, but not in other Inſtances. Where the Exception taken hath been to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and time has been deſired to make it good, it hath been denied; as in the Caſe of my Lord Preſton, who was tried before my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, and other Judges at the Old-Baily. My Lord Preſton inſiſted, that he was a Peer created by Letters Patent of King James the Second, and conſequently that the Court at the Old-Baily had no Juriſdiction to try him; and he prayed time to produce his Letters Patent in order to prepare and make good his Plea; but the Court refus'd to give him time for that Purpoſe. And I believe it will be found, that in all Inſtances where Pleas have appeared on the firſt View of them to be merely dilatory, and offered for no other Reaſon but to delay that Juſtice which ought to be done to the Crown, the Judges have refuſed to aſſiſt the Priſoner with any Time beyond the ordinary Rules of the Court.

Mr. Reeve. I ſhall not take up your Lordſhip's Time much in this Caſe. My Lord, we think, in Civil Actions the Court on Motion would ſet this Plea aſide, but in a Caſe of Life it is received, and Mr. Attorney has thought fit to demurr to it. Is any Advantage loſt, for the Priſoner to join in Demurrer inſtantly? I apprehend what they move for is to have Time to join in Demurrer. Are they not as ready to do that now, as if they had a Week or ten Days Time given them? Is there any thing elſe can be done? And is there any Occaſion for Time to do that which muſt be done? And cannot they as well join in Demurrer now, as if they had more Time to do it? Certainly they may, my Lord, ſince by the Rules of the Court (as Mr. Harcourt informs your Lordſhip) there is no Rule given, but they are to join inſtantly. There is no Reaſon to allow them Time, ſince they can loſe no Benefit or Advantage by joining inſtantly. So then, as we apprehend, we are in the Courſe of the Court, and there is no Reaſon why the Courſe of the Court ſhould be altered in this Caſe, we therefore hope that they ſhall join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Weſt. My Lord, I think there is nothing in the Exception of his Counſel not being ready to argue his Plea: No doubt they conſidered of it before they brought it in; and when they had produced their Plea, Mr. Attorney demurred to it. I can't ſee why they ſhould inſiſt ſo much for Time, when they can do nothing elſe but join in Demurrer; therefore we hope that they ſhall inſtantly join in Demurrer.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg leave to ſet a Matter of Fact right, that is as to the Caſe of Fitzharris, which was mentioned as an Authority againſt us by Mr. Attorney, but in truth is not ſo; for though Fitzharris's Counſel did join in Demurrer immediately (or inſtanter, as 'tis call'd) yet that was not by the Coercion of the Court, but they voluntarily offered to join in Demurrer, upon an Opinion (as I preſume) of their own great Abilities and Self-ſufficiency in the Matter. But we have not that Opinion of our extempore Performances, but deſire time to conſider of this Matter. As to my Lord Preſton's Caſe, quoted by Mr. Sollicitor, it is true the Court did not give him leave to ſend for his Letters Patent, becauſe, as my Lord himſelf had opened them, and the Truth was, his Letters Patent were dated at St. Germains, and granted by K. James there, after his Abdication; and it would have been the higheſt Indignity both to the Court and the Government, to have ſuch Letters Patent pleaded, or inſiſted on; and I believe no Gentleman at the Bar then, or now, would have ſigned ſuch a Plea, which if allowed would have implied that the Government was not well ſettled in their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, and that King James (though at St. Germains) had a Right to create Peers, and conſequently was really King. But if my Lord Preſton had had Letters Patent regularly granted by King James or King William, in his Chambers, can any one ſay they would not have given him leave to ſend for them? Moſt certainly they would; but it appeared they were dated at St. Germains, and granted to him there; that, with humble Submiſſion, was the Reaſon why they would not indulge him with Time, and that Precedent therefore, I hope, is of no Weight in this Caſe. It is ſaid we are tied down by our Plea; we knew our own Strength when we pleaded it, and therefore ought to be ready to argue it: But if my Memory doth not fail me (and therefore I ſpeak it with ſome Doubt) I believe there are Inſtances where even in a criminal Caſe a Plea hath been amended. I believe it was ſo done in the Caſe of my Lord Banbury, which was a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

My Lord, we ſhall deſire but a very little Time, which I hope will be granted us.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, as to Fitzharris's Caſe, the Plea was amended there: The firſt time it was brought in by Mr. Fitzharris himſelf to the Bar, the Plea was brought in and read in Court; after the Plea was read the Court aſſign'd him Counſel, and gave him from Saturday to Wedneſday to put the Plea in a regular and legal Method, and it was altered and brought in again on Wedneſday. As to what the Attorney ſays, that the Court compelled him to join in Demurrer inſtantly, the Words of the Book which I have in my Hand are; "We that are aſſign'd Counſel for "the Gentleman at the Bar, we don't deſign to "delay the Proceedings, but do declare that we "will join in Demurrer with them immediately." Theſe are the Words of the Book; ſo that it was the voluntary Act of the Counſel, and they were not at all compelled to it by the Court. As to what Mr. Harcourt obſerves to be the Courſe of the Court, and that we can't ſhew one Inſtance to the contrary; I don't know whether they can ſhew one Inſtance for it, except in the Caſe of Fitzharris; if they can ſhew in any capital Caſe one Inſtance, we ſhall ſubmit.

It is called a frivolous Plea, the Variation of one Letter, and never writ otherwiſe. Whether it is frivolous or not will appear when it comes before your Lordſhip in Judgment: As to its never being wrote otherwiſe than with an E, I don't believe they can find it in any Book either great or ſmall ſpelt ſo, unleſs they have met with it in Inſtructor Clericalis: All the Books of Authority are otherwiſe; I believe that one carries with it but little Weight. As to my Lord Preſton's Caſe, which Mr. Sollicitor is pleaſed to cite againſt us, that the Court would not allow him time to make out his Plea, Mr. Hungerford hath given an ample Anſwer to that, and a true one as to the Circumſtances; but if the Caſe of that Lord had been ſuch as the Gentlemen of the other ſide are pleaſed now to ſtate it, What doth it prove, but the contrary to what the Court did in Fitzharris's Caſe, and therefore the moſt that can be made of it is one Authority againſt another? and where Authorities are equal, we hope the Indulgence of the Court will interpoſe in favour of Life, and grant us ſuch reaſonable time as the Nature of the Thing requires, and not compel us inſtantly to join in Demurrer.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I beg leave to ſtate one Fact right, and that is as to Fitzharris's Caſe: They ſay the Plea was put in, and afterwards amended; that is a Miſtake; the Fact was that his Wife brought a Plea into Court, and offer'd it to the Court, and preſs'd it might be received; but Mr. Fitzharris was adviſ'd to conſider what he did, and thereupon he took it back, and afterwards brought a Plea in, which was receiv'd, and after that it was never alter'd.

L. C. Juſt. I dare ſay it is the firſt time that ever in a capital Caſe, when a Plea in Abatement was pleaded, and the Attorney-General thought fit to demurr to it, that the Party deſir'd time to join in Demurrer. You are not entitled to any time by the Courſe of the Court, you can't ſhew any Inſtance to prove it: The Queſtion then is, Whether you have given any Reaſon for us to indulge you with time, that never was granted in a Caſe of this Nature.

You have pleaded in Abatement; you were enabled ſo to do by having a Copy of the Indictment; you brought your Plea ready engroſs'd, and put it in. Mr. Attorney not being aware of any ſuch Plea, it could not be expected he ſhould be ready with a Demurrer in his Hand to this Plea, and therefore he deſired time to conſider of it. The next Day it could not be, nor the next after that, they being Holy-Days; but then the very firſt time that he had an Opportunity to come, he comes and demurrs to your Plea: But you deſire time, and why ſhould you not have time when they had time, to conſider whether you ſhall join in Demurrer.

Do you want time to conſider whether you ſhall join in Demurrer, after you have had time to plead and to draw up your Plea, and have brought it in to Court? Why ſhould you have time? Can you do any thing elſe but join in Demurrer? You can do nothing elſe: And unleſs you can ſhew any Reaſon why the Court ſhould indulge you, if you don't think fit to join, we muſt give Judgment againſt your Plea. You tell us of the Caſe of Fitzharris; that is as widely different from this Caſe as any thing can be. It was a Caſe of great Difficulty, that required great Conſideration, when a Party comes and informs this Court, and inſiſts he is not within the Juriſdiction of the Court. When a Matter is urged to us as a Queſtion of Law, if we were not bound as we are by Act of Parliament, we would certainly aſſign Counſel to the Priſoner to plead a Matter of that Nature; and when the Court in Fitzharris's Caſe had aſſigned him Counſel, were thoſe Counſel to argue immediately? It was nothing but Juſtice to give them time after they were aſſigned, to argue a Plea of that Nature; a Plea in which the Prerogative of the Crown, the Juriſdiction of the Houſe of Lords, and the Rights of the Commons were concerned. The Court would not run haſtily into the determining of that Matter, without hearing it debated by Counſel, and therefore they gave the Counſel time, upon which they might be able to give a juſt Judgment. Is there any thing in this Caſe like it? You have pleaded in Abatement. Mr. Attorney hath demurred to your Plea, and you deſire we would give you time to do that which you muſt do, or do nothing at all. Is there any Pretence? Could you in this Caſe come with any Colour or Pretence of Juſtice, and deſire of us to amend your Plea? Is there any thing elſe you can do? This is nothing but a pure dilatory Plea, and he puts in this Plea. The Queſtion is whether it ſhould be an O inſtead of an E. You are not entitled to any thing of this Nature; it is nothing but an affected Delay; and it cannot be thought to be for any other Reaſon; therefore you muſt join in Demurrer immediately: If not, we muſt give Judgment againſt your Plea.

Mr. Juſt. Powys. My Lord Chief Juſtice hath given ſo full and clear an Account of the Matter, that I am ſatisfied, and do think you muſt inſtantly join in Demurrer.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. I am of the ſame Opinion. In capital Caſes the Party is obliged to plead inſtanter; for the Proceedings are carried on at the Bar without giving Rules: This is the conſtant Courſe; and the Courſe and Practice muſt be the ſame, in regard to the time for joining in Demurrer: But the Court is ſtill at liberty to allow further time, if it be neceſſary to the Juſtice of the Cauſe; and if it could be of any Uſe to the Priſoner in the next Step he is to make, I ſhould not be againſt it: But as the Caſe now ſtands, that he has nothing to deliberate upon, that he can lay no new Matter before the Court, but is obliged to abide by his Plea, and can neither withdraw nor amend it without Conſent, but muſt neceſſarily join in Demurrer, and has no other Choice; I think it would be a manifeſt Delay of Juſtice to allow further time; and am therefore of Opinion, that he ought to join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Juſt. Forteſcue Aland. I am of the ſame Opinion. The Priſoner can have no Benefit by our giving him time to join in Demurrer, except it be to put off the Trial: The Court makes a Difference in all Caſes, both Civil and Criminal, between dilatory Pleas and other Pleas. An affected Delay is never to be ſuffered, more eſpecially in a capital Caſe; and here it is plain, that when the Counſel for the Priſoner brought in this Plea, that they had conſider'd it before, and thought it of Service to the Priſoner, and nothing more remains now than to join in Demurrer. The Attorney-General, by his Demurrer, ſays it is not a good Plea; and the Priſoner has nothing further to ſay, but that it is a good Plea; and if he does not think fit to ſay that, we muſt give Judgment againſt him. I remember in the Caſe of the King and Gordon, when the Priſoner came to the Bar, having lapſed the time of taking Exceptions, in order to quaſh the Indictment, he moved the Court for time to plead in Abatement; but the Court refuſed it, alledging they would give no Opportunity for a dilatory Plea; and I think there is the ſame Reaſon, if not ſtronger, in this Caſe, where the Priſoner has nothing to do but to join in Demurrer; that is to ſay, to ſubmit to the Judgment of the Court, whether this be a good Plea or not; and that may be done immediately, as well as if the Priſoner had never ſo much time for it.

Priſoner. My Lord, I know not how conſiſtent this Rule of Court may be, that in a capital Caſe of the higheſt Nature whatſoever that I ſhould not be allowed time to join in Demurrer, when in criminal Caſes of an inferior Nature there is a Four-days Rule given. The Counſel for the King were indulged from Wedneſday to Saturday: I hope I ſhall have the ſame Indulgence on my Part, to conſider whether I ſhall join in Demurrer or not.

I am ſo far from deſiring to give any Delay, tho' I am ſatisfied how maliciouſly this Proſecution is carried on, and am pretty well acquainted with every Step taken in the Management in Eſſex; and I am willing, rather than to continue to be thus hunted up and down the World, to retract my Plea, and plead generally Not guilty.

L. C. Juſt. If Mr. Attorney conſents to it.

Priſoner. I am obliged to my Counſel for the Care they have taken of me, and have here in my Hand a Joinder in Demurrer engroſſed and ſigned by them, and ready to deliver in; but I won't offer it, becauſe I won't give any Delay to the Juſtice of the Court.

Mr. Hungerford. He ſtands upon his Plea of Not guilty to the Indictment.

L. C. Juſt. You have pleaded Not guilty; you have likwiſe pleaded a Miſnomer, which hath been demurred to: Your Plea therefore now muſt be as pleaded in chief, and as put in at the time when it was firſt pleaded; you don't deſire you may plead the ſame Matter again this Day?

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Ketelbey. We do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. If I underſtand the Priſoner right, he pretends to be deſirous that his Trial may come on, and therefore he is willing to withdraw his Plea in Abatement, and abide by his Plea of Not guilty: 'Tis what we deſire likewiſe; and I wiſh we could go on in this Caſe as we ought, in a decent Manner, without having groundleſs Reflections continually made. Something hath been ſaid of the Maliciouſneſs of this Proſecution, and indirect Management, by ſome Body, 'tis not ſaid whom, in the County of Eſſex. My Lord, I defy any Man to ſhew any ſingle Step taken in carrying on this Cauſe, but what is perfectly right and juſtifiable.

I wiſh, out of Charity, that the Priſoner would conſider the Circumſtances he is in; if he did, he would not ſay this Proſecution is carried on by Malice; for if I know any thing of Evidence, I have no Reaſon to doubt but at the proper time there will enough appear againſt him to convict him.

Mr. Hungerford. I dare ſay the Priſoner did not entertain a Thought of reflecting upon any of the Profeſſion concern'd in carrying on this Proſecution. But pray, my Lord, give me leave humbly to repreſent, that the Man's Caſe is hard; he tells you he is in Chains, and I ſee he is in great Pain even now; and I earneſtly wiſh that he were eaſed in that Matter. I do not pronounce theſe Words out of any Affectation of Popularity, or to captivate the Auditory, as was inſinuated in the Beginning of this Proceeding, but in mere Compaſſion I have to the Priſoner, and to all Mankind, which Temper I have ſhewn thro' all the Stages of my Life.

L. C. Juſt. You have been told by the Court already our Opinion, that it is not in our Power. We were told, and I perceive it is not denied, that he did once eſcape after he was taken; and if ſo, for the better ſecuring him he was put in Chains: Do you aſk us to take thoſe Chains off? Can we do it? Or ſhould we do it? If he ſhould eſcape out of the Tower, ſhall not we be guilty of that Eſcape? The Circumſtances of the Caſe ought and muſt govern. He ſays he is Innocent, and I hope he is; and if he be, he takes the propereſt Meaſures to knock his Chains off, let him make his Innocence appear; and it will appear whether he is Innocent or not, when we come to try the Cauſe.

Priſoner. If I thought it was contrary to Law to take off theſe Chains I ſhould not mention it. I deſire to obſerve, that theſe Chains were not put on till after a fourth or fifth Examination.

As to the Eſcape out of the Meſſenger's Hands, he never ſhewed me his Warrant, and I did not know any Authority he had to keep me. As to eſcaping out of the Tower, it is not in my Power, neither is it in my Inclination. I deſire therefore to be eaſed of theſe Chains.

And another thing I deſire is, that I might have an Opportunity to ſee my Relations, my Wife, that ſhe might come to me.

Mr. Ketelbey. That was granted in Fitzharris's Caſe.

L. C. Juſt. As to the taking off the Chains you have had the Opinion of the Court, we cannot, we ought not to do it, it is a Breach of our Duty; as to the other Matter, he deſires to ſee his Relations, what do you ſay to it?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to Fitzharris's Caſe, there was a great Deal of Caution uſed as to the Perſons permitted to ſee the Priſoner; before they went in they were to be ſearched, and they were to be with him only in the Preſence of the Keeper.

Mr. Ketelbey. It is mentioned there, that the Wife had miſbehaved herſelf, and that a particular Caution ought to be taken with reſpect to her; but the Acceſs of a Wife to her Huſband under ſuch unfortunate Circumſtances was never denied, I believe, in any Caſe whatſoever.

L. C. Juſt. Upon a proper Application to the Court, the Court hath ſometimes ordered that Perſons named in their Rule may have Acceſs to the Priſoner in the Preſence of the Jaylor, and not otherwiſe, and that they ſhould be ſearched before they come in. If you think fit to deſire it on thoſe Terms, the Court will conſider of it.

Priſoner. My Lord, I muſt deſire upon thoſe Terms as the Court thinks fit, and that my Siſter may have Liberty to come with my Wife.

L. C. Juſt. Your Wife and Siſter: It may be reaſonable for them to have Acceſs to you, but they are not to be with you but in the Preſence of the Jaylor *.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, I beg leave to obſerve, whether it is uſual for the Court to make ſuch Rule: On the Trial of Sir John Friend, there it was only intimated by my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, but the Court did not order it by making any Rule; they know they may apply properly, and there may be Directions given to the Lieutenant of the Tower: As to the Counſel, that is allowed in the Act of Parliament; and as the Court hath a Power to aſſign Counſel, it is proper for the Court to give Directions for them to be admitted at all Seaſons, and at all times.

L. C. Juſt. Why the Wife and the Siſter?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord, my Wife and Siſter. I don't put in a Number of Relations.

L. C. Juſt. I do think, Brother Pengelly, that the Court are truſted in a Matter of this Nature, and may regularly give Directions with what proper Cautions they think fit. Why, he ſays, he is denied the Comfort of his Wife; he deſires that his Wife and Siſter may be admitted to come to him. You ſay it hath been ſometimes intimated, but not ordered; if it was intimated by us, and not complied with, I believe I ſhould make no Difficulty to order it, provided it be with a reaſonable Caution, and no Inconvenience in it.

Whether is it the Wife or Siſter you deſire? I think one is enough, and ſhe muſt ſubmit to be ſearched †.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Before your Lordſhip makes any Rule in this Caſe for the Priſoner, I beg that he may be obliged to amend his Plea of Not guilty, and that he may plead by the Name of Chriſtopherus, by which he is indicted. You have been brought to the Bar, and have put in a Plea by the Name of Chriſtophorus; if you are in Earneſt that you deſire to wave your Plea in Abatement and have it withdrawn, you muſt change the Name wrote in the Commencement of the Plea, and make it as it is in the Indictment, that there may be no Embarraſſment in the Proceedings in the End.

L. C. Juſt. You conſent to have it amended?

Mr. Hungerford. The Priſoner at the Bar hath conſented to withdraw his Plea in Abatement; and though the Plea were ſuch that he might have prevailed upon it, yet after his pleading Not Guilty in general, there is not in the Courſe of this Proceeding any Period of time wherein he can avail himſelf with the Matter of this Plea in Abatement; and therefore we ſubmit it to the Court, and to the King's Counſel themſelves, to put this Matter into ſuch a Form, that the Priſoner may come to a fair Trial upon the Iſſue of Guilty or Not Guilty.

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe the Priſoner is willing to come into the Method offered; and though this Plea hath been called a frivolous Plea, yet the Precaution taken by the Gentlemen of the other Side ſeems to give a Sanction to it, and makes it not ſo frivolous as hath been repreſented.

L. C. Juſt. What do you mean, Mr. Ketelbey? Here is nothing aſked of you: You do deſire to wave and withdraw your Plea; we deſire to know, if you do, whether you will plead by the Name as it is in the Indictment.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we do.

Mr. Att. Gen. We deſire the Plea of Not guilty may be amended, upon the Conſent of the Priſoner.

Mr. Hungerford. We offer now, let the Piece of Parchment be entirely aboliſhed, take it entirely out of the way, and we plead Not guilty.

L. C. Juſt. Your Plea muſt be now & prædict' Chriſtopherus ductus hic ad barram, &c.

Mr. Ketelbey. We ſubmit it.

Priſoner. I deſire to withdraw and retract the other Plea, and do plead Not guilty.

L. C. Juſt. No, it muſt be mended; you will hear how it is when it is ſtruck out and amended, and then you will tell us whether it is mended according to your Intent or no.

Cl. of the Cr. Et prædictus Chriſtopherus Layer allocutus exiſtens per Cur' hic de alt' prodition' prædicta per Indictament' prædict' ei ſuperius impoſit' qualiter ſe velit inde acquietari, Idem Chriſtopherus Layer dicit quod ipſe in nullo eſt inde culpabilis & inde de bono & malo ponit ſe ſuper Patriam.

L. C. Juſt. Is this according to your Intention?

Priſoner. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, I believe it is uſual in theſe Caſes for the Court to appoint a Time for the Trial; the laſt Return but one in this Term is the 19th of November, ſo if you pleaſe it may be the quarto die poſt, which I think is Wedneſday, if that be ſuitable and convenient to the Court.

L. C. Juſt. What ſay you to it?

Priſoner. I deſire your Lordſhip would give me a longer Day to prepare for my Trial. I have a great Number of Witneſſes, twenty or more, moſt of them People of the firſt Quality. I hope I ſhall have the common Proceſſes of the Court to bring them here; and, my Lord, another thing I deſire is, that I may have a Habeas Corpus ad teſtificand', to bring my Lord North and Grey and my Lord Orrery at my Trial. That,

* See Hambden's Trial, N°. 136. and Rookwood's Trial, N°. 153.

† See the Proceedings againſt Fitzharris, N°. 102.

my Lord, you would pleaſe to give me as long a Day as you can to prepare for my Trial; if your Lordſhip pleaſe it may be Monday the 26th, and then your Lordſhip will have a Day of Reſt between.

L. C. Juſt. That will be out of the Return.

Mr. Hungerford. They muſt appear, and then may be adjourned.

L. C. Juſt. It cannot be adjourned over beyond the Return.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, the Priſoner hath ſhewn that he hath in no Reſpect affected Delay.

L. C. Juſt. It cannot be.——God forbid that we ſhould deny the Priſoner to have a reaſonable time to prepare for his Defence; it is three Weeks from hence; you have been aware of it long before; you have known the Indictment was found; you have had a Copy of it; you have known your Charge; and is not all this Time enough? Conſider, the Term draws toward an End, and it interferes with the common Buſineſs of the Term if we carry it to a further Day: we do agree the Venire to be returned Octab. Martini, and the Trial then muſt be the quarto die poſt, which will be Wedneſday the 21ſt. And it is proper for us to give you an Intimation now, not to expect any further time, or the Jury to be adjourned; do but conſider what a Multitude muſt be brought up, eighty at leaſt: The Priſoner hath a Privilege to challenge thirty five peremptorily, and after, for Cauſe, as many as he pleaſes; ſo that a great Number muſt be brought up; and for them to be forced to attend here the 21ſt, and ſtill the Trial to be put off, it will be a great Inconvenience and a great Charge, therefore that muſt be the Day, we ſhall not conſider to put it off till any farther Time.

Priſoner. I beg leave for one Word more; I have a Witneſs that is to come from Edinburgh, and I can hardly have him here by the 21ſt. If I could but be indulged a few Days longer——

L. C. Juſt. We cannot do it, without making an Error in the Proceedings.

Priſoner. Is there no other Return for a Venire to be returnable?

L. C. Juſt. No, there is none but that, and the laſt Return of the Term; and it is impoſſible to try him that Day, without doing a manifeſt Wrong and Injuſtice to the People of England.

Priſoner. My Lord, where a Man's Life is at Stake, if I ſhould not be indulged over till the laſt Day of the Term, for want of a Witneſs I may be in danger of my Life: I hope therefore your Lordſhip will pleaſe to indulge me.

L. C. Juſt. You have had a great deal of Time already, Time ſufficient to bring your Witneſs from Edinburgh, or any other Place, and we cannot do it. To put you off to the laſt Day of the Term, is to do a manifeſt Wrong to the People of England.

Priſoner. The Reaſon why I mention it over and over again, is becauſe I would not give your Lordſhip the Trouble to be turned over to another Day, on troubling your Lordſhip with Affidavits.

L. C. Juſt. In what you lay before us as Matter proper for Conſideration, we ſhall do what is juſt. It is not proper for you to tell us what we have to do, and to make Bargains with us. That is the Day of Trial; it muſt be on Wedneſday the 21ſt: Your Counſel will tell you it is impoſſible to comply with your Requeſt, without doing the manifeſteſt Injuſtice in the World. Or elſe, whether to try you upon the 21ſt, or in two, or three, or four Days after, I don't think the Conſequence worth diſputing, but we can't do it without doing Wrong and Injuſtice to the People of England.

Priſoner. I hope I ſhall be indulged two or three Days.

L. C. Juſt. We can ſay no more. The Time you have had for Preparation for your Trial we think abundantly ſufficient to prepare your ſelf, therefore we are of Opinion that the Trial go on at that Day; and we order it accordingly.

Mr. Ketelbey. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to order a Rule for his Wife and Siſter to come to him.

L. C. Juſt. No, not for his Wife and Siſter.

Priſoner. My Lord, for a ſingle Woman to come thro' the Courts and the Guards, to be examin'd by her ſelf, it's not ſo proper, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. You ſhall have a Rule from the Court for your Wife to come; as for your Siſter, we muſt leave that to the Direction from another Place. We muſt not be too forward in granting Women to come, we remember an Eſcape occaſion'd by a Woman coming thither.

Mr. Att. Gen. There muſt be a Rule to bring him up at the Day of his Trial.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, as to having his Habeas Corpus ad Teſtificand' for my Lord North and Grey, and my Lord Orrery.

L. C. Juſt. You muſt give Notice, and then move what you pleaſe.

Mr. Hungerford. By what was ſaid, I did underſtand, I muſt confeſs, that though the Rule was made for the Wife only, yet that it might be in the Power of the Gentleman Jaylor to permit her Siſter to come with her.

L. C. Juſt. We give no Direction concerning it. He will have a Rule from the Court that will be his Direction, unleſs he receives any additional Direction from another Place, but the Court names his Wife only.

Mr. Ketelbey. There was another thing mentioned, that he may have Copies of his Papers that were ſeized.

L. C. Juſt. Give Notice for what you think fit, and move it.

Die Mercurii 21 die Novembris 1722.

THIS Day Chriſtopher Layer, Eſq; was brought to the Bar, in Cuſtody of the Lieutenant of the Tower, in purſuance of the Rule of Court made for that Purpoſe, in order to his Trial.

Cl. of the Cr. You Chriſtopher Layer, now Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men which you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death: If you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Heneage Norton, Eſq;

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we deſire that his Irons may be taken off.

L. C. Juſt. The Irons muſt be taken off; we will not ſtir till the Irons are taken off.

Priſoner. I hope, my Lord, that the Irons ſhall be now taken off.

L. C. Juſt.

L. C. Juſt. They ſhall be taken off.

Mr. Hungerford. The poor Man hath been ſo oppreſs'd by theſe Chains, that he was not able to prepare his Brief. I had it not till late laſt Night; and it is ten Sheets of Paper.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe Fault is that? You have had Time enough.

Mr. Hungerford. It is the Fault of the Irons, Mr. Attorney, the Brief was not brought to me till Eleven of the Clock laſt Night.

L. C. Juſt. It was an Omiſſion; they ſhould have been taken off before he came to the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. There was Direction given for their being taken off before; how they came not to be taken off, I can't tell.

L. C. Juſt. Are the Irons taken off?

Gent. Jaylor. Yes.

L. C. Juſt. Go on.

Cl. of the Cr. Heneage Norton, Eſq;

L. C. Juſt. You muſt call over all the Jury.

Mr. Hungerford. I thought they would be all called over once, before any one is endeavoured to be ſworn.

Cl. of the Cr. They have been called over already.

Mr. Hungerford. When? Not ſince the Court ſate, I am ſure. I would know whether the Intention is, that all the Pannel be called over before any one of them is ſworn, or that the Pannel is to be called over but once, and the Jurymen ſworn as they then appear. What I have obſerved is, the Clerk calls over the whole Pannel firſt, to ſee how many appear; and then calls it over again, and ſwears them as they anſwer to their Names, if not challenged.

L. C. Juſt. What you obſerve is what hath been done at the Old Bailey; there they call them over firſt, and then they call them over again, and as they appear they are ſworn preſently. But by the Courſe of the Court here they are called over before the Court is ſitting, and they mark thoſe that appear. That is not ſufficient; but they are called over again in Court, and then their Appearance and Non-appearance being marked, they do call thoſe over again that did appear; and as one appears, if there is no Objection to him, he muſt be ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. I have obſerved them to be called over when no Body is by, in civil Caſes; but in ſuch a Caſe as this, a Caſe of High Treaſon, where peremptory Challenges are allowed, it is ſome Guide to the Priſoner in making his Challenges, to know before-hand who do and who do not appear.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, with Submiſſion, in all criminal Caſes there is no other Method than calling over the Pannel according as it is tranſmitted into Court. 'Tis probable ſeveral of the Jurors who did not appear at their being called over before the ſitting of the Court will now appear; and therefore what we pray is that the whole Pannel may be now called over in the Order as it ſtands, not only thoſe who anſwered to the firſt Call, but thoſe alſo who then made Default.

Mr. Att. Gen. I can't imagine what they mean.

L. C. Juſt. This Debate ariſes from not underſtanding one another: You have the Direction of the Court; the Pannel is to be called over, if any Man doth not appear, his Default is mark'd and recorded. When any one doth appear, and he is not challenged, he is to be ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. I came thro' the Hall juſt now, and there is ſuch a Crowd that it is almoſt impoſſible for any one to hear when they are called.

Priſoner. My Lord, I hope they ſhall be once called over before they come to be ſworn; for as to their being called before, that was before I came; it will ſpend but a little time to read over forty or fifty Names.

L. C. Juſt. Call them over. I would not deny any thing that is deſired in Reaſon by or on the Priſoner's Behalf: Conſider what you are doing; the Priſoner hath had a Copy of the Pannel, he hath examined it, and conſidered who are proper for him to challenge peremptorily, and he hath conſider'd who they are that he may challenge with Cauſe.

I can't imagine; it was never done in this World: We have aſk'd our Officer: They ought to call over all the Pannel; but if they do not appear, their Default is mark'd; if they do appear, the Priſoner knows whether he likes them or not.

Therefore when they come to the Bar, if not challenged, they muſt be ſworn.

Conſider what this Demand is; we ſhall be an Hour calling them over the firſt time, that it may appear to the Priſoner whether they appear or not; then afterwards you are to call them over again, and to have them brought up again when they come to be ſworn. But if it ever hath been done, it is fit it ſhould be done now; but our Officer tells us it never was done, and why ſhould you inſiſt upon it now? you have had all the Indulgence the Law allows you.

Priſoner. I have not had a Copy of the Pannel above two Days before. Here hath been in this Cauſe all the vile Practices—

L. C. Juſt. You muſt keep within due and proper Bounds. You are come now to be tried for an Offence you are charged withal; but you are not to arraign and challenge every Body elſe; you have no Right to do it. If in proper time it appears you have been ill uſed, the Court will do you Juſtice, and puniſh thoſe that have been guilty of any Misbehaviour.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, if they have any Objection to the Jury, they are to challenge them peremptorily when the Jury come to be ſworn. Then is their time; they are not to entertain the Court with Speeches before.

L. C. Juſt. No, it is not proper.

Conſider how unreaſonable it is for the Priſoner to arraign ſome Body's Miſbehaviour without naming him. But in this Method he is inſinuating Objections, which we can't examine whether they are true or falſe, on purpoſe to captivate People; and it may be, miſlead them in the Trial of the Cauſe.

Mr. Ketelbey. As I came in, I obſerved that all the Avenues to the Court are barricadoed up, and only a narrow Place left on the Stone Steps, and a Guard kept there to keep out whom they don't think fit to let in.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know nothing of it; and I dare ſay no Body will give any Countenance to hindering either Jury-men or Witneſſes coming into Court, when their Attendance is required here.

Mr. Ketelbey. I had much ado to get in my ſelf.

L. C. Juſt. There ſhall be due Care taken, that any of the Jury that appear, we will order Way to be made for them.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I will take up but very little of your Time in this Matter; I find I was not underſtood before; that which I contend for is, that the Pannel be read thro' once in the Priſoner's Preſence, to ſee what Jury-men appear, before any Jury-man is ſworn. The Priſoner hath a Right to challenge thirty five peremptorily, or without aſſigning any Cauſe at all. Now, my Lord, this is a Favour, an Indulgence granted to him by Law, and he is therefore entitled to it in Juſtice. It is of great Uſe to the Priſoner, in order to enjoy the true Benefit of this Indulgence that the Law gives him, that he knows who doth and who doth not appear, for this Reaſon perhaps, if he did know that ſuch an one appears he will take him, and if he knows that ſuch an one appears he will challenge him. And if he know that ſuch an one, who perhaps ſtands low in the Pannel, and of whom he has a good Opinion for being an honeſt Man, will appear, he will challenge as many as he can of the preceding Perſons, in order to have him, that honeſt Man, of his Jury. And as to the Time the reading of the Pannel will take us, (tho' by the way it might have been over by this time) I am ſure your Lordſhip and the Court will not regard what Proportion of Time you ſpare us, to let the Priſoner enjoy the Benefit of the Law in this Caſe, and to have a full Enjoyment of the Indulgence of the Act of Parliament in its full Latitude, that he may know and judge (as far as the Law hath enabled him) who is to paſs upon him as to his Life and Death. I beg therefore, my Lord, that the whole Pannel may be called over once before the Priſoner is put to challenge.

Priſoner. My Lord, What we humbly move for is what is every Day done at the Old Bailey, that they may be once called over.

All I deſire is what is done there, and by the ſame Reaſon ought to be done here in the ſame Caſe where a Man's Life is concern'd. I humbly move it that they may be called over.

L. C. Juſt. We ſhall grudge no Time to do the King and you Juſtice. It is dangerous to make a Precedent, an Innovation: But if you deſire it, I don't find the King's Counſel object to it.

Call over the Pannel.

You don't expect all ſhould be brought into Court, but only to know if they do appear?

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Ketelbey. No, no.

L. C. Juſt. The Priſoner hath a Sollicitor; let ſome Body go down upon the Steps, the Sollicitor be preſent, and then he will hear who do and who do not appear.

Mr. Hungerford. We humbly thank your Lordſhip; this is a real Indulgence, and we humbly thank your Lordſhip for it.

Cl. of the Cr. calls over the whole Pannel.

You the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men which, &c.

Mr. Ketelbey. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to ſtay till the Sollicitor comes in, becauſe he went out to obſerve who did appear, and who did not appear.

Cl. of the Cr. Heneage Norton. Have you ten Pounds a Year Freehold and Copyhold in the County of Eſſex?

Norton. I have no Freehold, only Copyhold.

[Then he was ſet aſide.]

John Wilks. [Ask'd the ſame Queſtion, as were all the others who appear'd, before they were either challenged or ſworn.]

Priſoner. I challenge him.

Mark Froſt.

Priſoner. I challenge him.

Thomas Clarke.

Priſoner. I don't challenge him.

Crier. Thomas Clarke. Sworn.

Henry Longbotham.

Priſoner. I ſay, I think his Name is wrong ſpelt.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We are not now upon Exceptions for Miſ-ſpelling. If his Name is written as he is uſually called, it is right.

Priſoner. He ſays his Name is with an o, and it is written here with an a.

L. C. Juſt. Doth the Copy deliver'd to you agree with the Pannel? if it doth, as long as it hath the ſame Sound, it will do.

Priſoner. With humble Submiſſion, in the Caſe of Francia there it was allowed.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, it is not the ſame Sound Longbothàm and Longbothòm, and in Francia's Caſe the Difference of a Letter was allow'd to be a good Exception.

L. C. Juſt. You are by Law to have a Copy of the Pannel deliver'd to you; if that Pannel varies from the other, it is a juſt Exception; but if you object againſt a Jury-man becauſe his Name is not right ſpelt, and that hath the ſame Pronunciation, and he may be called ſometimes one and ſometimes another, it is well enough.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, as to this Objection, whether the Longbotham is right, or the Longbothom, whether it is with an A or an O.——

Cl. of the Cr. You miſtake, it is Longbotham, and not Longbothom.

Priſoner. The laſt ſhould be an O inſtead of an A, Longbothom.

L. C. Juſt. Therefore we will aſk the Gentleman how his Name is uſually pronounced, whether it is not pronounced ſometimes Longbothom as well as Longbotham.

Mr. Longbothom. Yes, My Lord, it is.

Priſoner. He ſays he ſpells his Name with an O, and here it is with an A.

Longbothom. I always ſpell my Name with an O, but my Letters are generally directed to me with an A.

Mr. Hungerford. He hath a Copy of the Pannel deliver'd him by vertue of the Act of Parliament; if the Copy be not a true Copy, it is not right according to the Direction of the Act.

L. C. Juſt. Right.

Mr. Hungerford. Now the Pannel which the Priſoner hath is ſpelt with an A, and the Pannel of which this is a pretended Copy, is, I take it, ſpelt with an O.

Cl. of the Cr. No, they are both ſpelt alike.

L. C. Juſt. You know it, Gentlemen, as well as can be. Don't let us ſpend Time where there is nothing in it; we will hear what is proper for our Conſideration.

Suppoſe a Man is called and writ ſometimes Longbothom, and ſometimes Longbotham; and ſuppoſe he was called by either of theſe Names, may he not therefore be called by one as well as the other? Is that an Objection to ſay he writ with an O, but People write to him with an A? there is nothing at all in it.

Priſoner. Then I challenge him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Attorney is pleaſed to challenge him for the King; we humbly inſiſt on it, that Mr. Attorney is to ſhew his Cauſe of Challenge immediately. I own it has been otherwiſe in one or two late Inſtances; but I ſubmit it, if that Practice ſhould prevail, whether the Act of Parliament made on that Occaſion would not be in Effect thereby abrogated. The Act is the 33 Edward I. and the Words of it are: "If they "that ſue for the King will challenge any Ju- "ror, they ſhall aſſign of their Challenge a Cauſe "certain, and the Truth of the ſame ſhall be in- "quired of according to the Cuſtom of the "Court." Now, my Lord, I beg leave to obſerve upon this Pannel there are one hundred and odd Perſons, if Mr. Attorney is not obliged to ſhew his Cauſe of Challenge, when he challenges for the King, till all the Pannel is gone through, this Act of Parliament will be of no Validity whatſoever. If there had been but a few returned (twenty four, or ſuch a Number,) then there might have been ſome Colour for going through the Pannel before there was any Cauſe aſſigned for the Challenge; but ſince this modern Practice has obtained to make ſo numerous a Pannel, if they are not obliged to ſhew Cauſe till the Pannel is gone through, that Law is intirely a dead Letter, and of no Significancy.

L. C. Juſt. You know your Objection is of no Validity; you cite an Act of Parliament, and you know the conſtant Practice is againſt you.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. Though the Counſel for the King muſt aſſign their Cauſe of Challenge, yet they are not obliged to do it till the Pannel is gone thro', and the Jury-men returned, who are not challenged, are all ſworn: This is a Rule laid down in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, and has been always the conſtant Practice in Caſes of this kind.

Mr. Hungerford. What your Lordſhip directed in the laſt Caſe is certainly precedented; but I would propoſe it as a Convenience that the Attorney ſhould, as he is every ways entitled, have the Precedence, and might challenge firſt, and then we will determine after him.

L. C. Juſt. No, we muſt not do that.

Priſoner. Whenever I make a full Stop and don't ſay I challenge, you do.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Priſoner is to declare whether he challenges or not; afterwards the King's Counſel are to declare whether they challenge for the King, and the Jury-man is not to put his Hand on the Book till then.

L. C. Juſt. He ought not to put his Hand on the Book till he is allowed a Jury-man; that if the King or the Priſoner challenge him, they may do it before he lay his Hand on the Book.

Cl. of the Cr. Joſeph Capon.
Priſoner. I don't challenge him.
Mr. Att. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Cl. of the Cr. Benjamin Rutland.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire he may be aſked whether he doth not farm ſomething under the King or on the Foreſt.

L. C. Juſt. If it was of any Service to you it ſhould be done; but if it is ſo, it is no Objection.

Mr. Ketelbey. The Objection was once made in the Caſe of Sir William Perkins. It was recommended to the King's Counſel.

L. C. Juſt. I deny it. It was not recommended to the King's Counſel, but the King's Counſel did not inſiſt upon it.

Mr. Juſt. Forteſcue Aland. The Court in that Caſe gave their Opinion, that to be a Servant to the King was no good Cauſe of Challenge, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt and Treby were preſent, and Mr. Attorney General did not inſiſt on the Jury-man ſo challenged, but waved the Matter without any Recommendation of the Court.

Mr. Ketelbey. I know no other ways, than if Mr. Attorney will do it, as it was done in that Caſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know nothing of the Fact.

David Martin call'd.

Cryer. You ſhall true Anſwer make, &c.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know Mr. Millegande?

Martin. Yes.

Mr. Hungerford. What have you heard him declare concerning the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Martin, do you know William Sandford of Rumford?

Martin. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you had any Diſcourſe with him about the Priſoner at the Bar?

Martin. He ſaid, before he was ſummoned on the Jury, that if he was one of the Jury, he would be for hanging of him. Set aſide.

Cl. of the Cr. Thomas Waters.

Cl. of the Cr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes. If any one can inform, &c.

Cl. of the Cr. Chriſtoper Layer, Hold up your Hand. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe.

He ſtands indicted by the Name of Chriſtopher Layer, late of the Pariſh of St. Andrew's Holborn, in the County of Middleſex, Eſq; For that he, &c. —— Upon this Indictment he hath been lately arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of this High Treaſon, in Manner and Form as he ſtands indicted, or Not guilty. If you find him him Guilty, you ſhall enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had, at the Time of the ſaid High Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince. If you find him not Guilty, you ſhall enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he did fly for it, you ſhall enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty. If you find him not Guilty, and that he did not fly for it, ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Wearg. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment againſt the Priſoner for High Treaſon. The Indictment ſets forth, That he being a Subject of his preſent Majeſty King George, but not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor conſidering the Duty of his Allegiance, as a falſe Traitor againſt his ſupreme, true, lawful, and undoubted Lord, contriving and to the utmoſt of his Power intending to change, alter and ſubvert the Government of this Kingdom, lawfully and happily eſtabliſhed under his preſent Majeſty, and to depoſe and deprive his ſaid Majeſty of his Title, Honour, Royal State and Government of this Kingdom; and to advance to the Crown and Government of this Realm, the Perſon in the Life of the late King James II. pretended to be Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid King James pretending to be and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James III. did upon the twenty fifth Day of Auguſt, in the ninth Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, and at ſeveral other Days and Times, at Layton-Stone, in the County of Eſſex, falſely, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly, compaſs, imagine, and intend to depoſe our ſaid ſovereign Lord King George, from his Title, regal State and Government, and the ſaid King to kill and bring to utter Deſtruction.

The Indictment further ſets forth, That he the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, to perfect and bring to Effect his Treaſon and traiterous Purpoſes, on the ſaid twenty fifth Day of Auguſt, and at ſeveral other Days and Times, at Layton-Stone aforeſaid, together with divers other falſe Traitors, to the Jury unknown, did falſely, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly meet, conſult, conſpire and agree, to move and ſtir up an Inſurrection and Rebellion in this Kingdom, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King.

The Indictment further ſets forth, That he the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, to perfect and compleat his Treaſon and traiterous Purpoſes, on the ſaid twenty fifth of Auguſt, at Layton-Stone aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, did falſely, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly publiſh a certain malicious, ſeditious, and traiterous Writing, containing in it ſelf, and purporting to be, an Exhortation and Promiſe of Rewards to the Subjects of his ſaid Majeſty, to perſuade and excite them to take up Arms, and levy War againſt our ſaid Sovereign King George.

The Indictment further ſets forth, That the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, together with other falſe Traitors, to the Jury unknown, to compleat and bring to Effect his traiterous Purpoſes, on the ſaid twenty fifth Day of Auguſt, at Layton-Stone aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, did falſely, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly meet, conſult, conſpire and agree, to exalt to the Crown and Royal Dignity of this Realm the Perſon in the Life of the late King James II. pretended to be Prince of Wales, by means of an armed Force and Troops of Soldiers, for that Purpoſe to be raiſed and levied.

The Indictment further ſets forth, That the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, to perfect his ſaid Treaſon, on the ſaid twenty fifth Day of Auguſt, at Layton-Stone aforeſaid, maliciouſly and traiterouſly did raiſe, levy, and retain ſeveral Men, to the Jury unknown, to take up Arms and levy War within this Kingdom, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King.

That the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, to perfect his treaſonable Purpoſes on the ſaid twenty fifth Day of Auguſt, at Layton-Stone aforeſaid, together with divers other falſe Traitors, to the Jury unknown, did falſely, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly meet, conſpire and agree, to take, ſeize, impriſon and detain in Cuſtody the Sacred Perſon of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. To this Indictment the Priſoner hath pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and Gentlemen of the Jury; the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Layer, comes now to be tried before you, for a wicked and deteſtable Conſpiracy againſt the Perſon of his Majeſty, and againſt his Government; and this, in favour of an attainted and abjured Pretender; a Pretender whom the Priſoner himſelf has abjured in Words, and ought to have renounced in his Heart.

The Indictment contains a Charge of High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, for compaſſing and intending the depoſing the King, and alſo his Death and Deſtruction.

The particular Facts laid to prove this traiterous Imagination and Intent, and which the Priſoner put in Execution, in order to bring to Effect his treaſonable Purpoſes, are five.

The firſt is; That the Priſoner, with other Traitors, did conſult, conſpire, and agree to raiſe a general Inſurrection and Rebellion in this Nation againſt his Majeſty.

The next; That he did publiſh a ſeditious and treaſonable Declaration, containing Incitements, and Promiſes of Rewards, whereby to excite and ſtir up his Majeſty's Subjects to take up Arms, and to levy War againſt his Majeſty within this Realm.

And farther; That he, with other Traitors, conſpired, conſulted and agreed, by an armed Force, to exalt, and bring the Pretender to his Majeſty's Crown, to the Throne of theſe Kingdoms, and to put him into the Poſſeſſion of the Government thereof.

That he hath provided, levied, and retained ſeveral Perſons, to take up Arms, and to levy War againſt his Majeſty within this Kingdom, for the executing theſe traiterous Purpoſes.

The laſt Overt-Act alledged, and to finiſh this Conſpiracy, is, That he, with the other Traitors, conſulted, conſpired, and agreed to ſeize upon, and to impriſon the ſacred Perſon of his Majeſty.

Gentlemen, it is unneceſſary, when theſe Facts are opened to you, to acquaint you, that an Attempt of this Nature, if it had ſucceeded, would have been the Subverſion of the preſent happy Eſtabliſhment, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, ſo often confirmed by the Conſent of the whole Nation, and the only Security of your religious and civil Rights and Liberties; they would all have been expoſed to the Arbitrary Power of a popiſh Faction, under the Tyranny of the Pretender.

Gentlemen, having ſaid this to ſhew the Nature of the Offence; we (who are Counſel for his Majeſty) ſhall proceed to lay before you the particular Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar: Gentlemen, we have been ſo fortunate as to diſcover, and ſhall produce before you, the very Plan it ſelf, upon which theſe Conſpirators proceeded, and which was to be put in Execution.

We ſhall produce the Plan under the Priſoner's own Hand-writing, and ſhew his acting correſpondent to that Plan, and in the Execution thereof; this Plan is a compleat Scheme of a treaſonable Inſurrection, if that may be called compleat which tends to utter Deſtruction; for if the ſeveral Parts therein contained had been executed, it would have been a total Overturning of the Government and Conſtitution.

But you may obſerve a Regularity going thro' the whole Scheme.

The Place of Action, and the Scene where this Conſpiracy was firſt to be put in Execution, was in the City of London, and tho' in the Plan it ſelf the Day is not mentioned, yet we ſhall ſhew to you, by the Priſoner's own Declaration and Diſcovery, the Time when it was to be executed; it was at the breaking up of the Camp of his Majeſty's Forces in Hide-Park.

Gentlemen, the Plan contains a Diſpoſition of ſeveral Officers, who were appointed to their particular Stations, and were to be ſupply'd with Men deſigned to be procured for the Execution of this Plan; and, as the Conſpirators hoped to debauch part of the Army, theſe Officers were to be diſpoſed at ſeveral Places, to receive the private Men, who, to the Number of about two Hundred (towards the Evening of the Day agreed upon for Execution) were to go ſingly out of the Camp, without their Arms, that they might more eaſily paſs without Obſervation, and were to be collected together at a Place of Rendezvous appointed them.

Gentlemen, from the management of the Conſpiracy, and the Method they had taken to carry it on, and the Hopes they had entertained, the Conſpirators concluded, they ſhould have that Number of two hundred Men ready in one Body, to be commanded by proper Officers, to make the firſt Attempt, and the firſt Stand.

At the Place of Rendezvous they were to be ſupply'd with Muskets ready loaded, and to receive their Arms, which were to be diſtributed to them a little before the Hour of Nine; at which Hour exactly, they were to march directly to the Tower of London, (as the Plan propoſes, and as the Priſoner agreed and declared) where they might expect to be admitted, by the Help and Aſſiſtance of their Friend, the Officer upon the Guard; and as ſoon as they had entered, they were to ſhut up the Tower Gates, and ſeize the Arms.

Their General was to make his Stand in Perſon at the Royal Exchange; at the ſame time, it is directed by the Plan, and was conſulted upon, and agreed by the Priſoner himſelf, they were to attempt to arreſt the Perſons of ſeveral great Men; and although the Plan doth not name the Perſons, yet the Priſoner hath explain'd it fully, and from his own Mouth we ſhall prove, who the particular Perſons are, thus intended to be ſeized.

A Declaration was to be diſperſed to excite People to come in to the Rebels; the Gates of the City of London were to be ſhut up, and Cannon brought down againſt them: They were then to ſet a Guard over the Bank; but in the firſt Place, they were to take out Money ſufficient to pay their Men, ſuch as they hoped would appear in their Intereſt: Their ſeveral other Parties were to ſecure the Artillery in the Camp, the Guns in the Privy-Garden, the Cannon and Ammunition near the Horſe-Guards in St. James's Park.

Theſe were the firſt Operations: But to finiſh this villanous and execrable Deſign, at the Time the Tower was ſeized, and the City in Arms, they were to ſend a Detachment to ſeize the Perſon of his Majeſty; and this they expreſs'd in their Plan to be, for the ſecuring his Perſon from the Mob. But our King was to be delivered to their General at the Tower, and to be put under his Cuſtody. Thus the Life of his Majeſty was to be in their Power.

After this, there are ſeveral other Diſpoſitions of Officers, and other Perſons, in order to excite and carry on the Rebellion: Some were to appear in Tothil-Fields, ſome in Southwark, who were to give Arms to the Minters; ſome at Greenwich, to engage the Watermen, and ſeize the Magazine and Powder there, and others at other Places.

Gentlemen, you will find in this Plan a Preparation to make an entire Conqueſt of the Cities of London and Weſtminſter; upon which the Conſpirators hop'd the reſt of the Kingdom would declare for the Pretender: And there is one particular Proviſion in the Plan, that as they proceeded here, and found Succeſs, the General ſhould immediately diſpatch Meſſengers into the ſeveral Counties of England, to give Intelligence of their Progreſs, and to perſuade thoſe, who they look'd upon to be in their Intereſt, to declare for the Pretender, and to riſe in their reſpective Counties with their Adherents.

This is the Plan upon which the Conſpiracy is carried on; and as we ſhall produce this Plan, which the Priſoner hath ſupplied himſelf with, and written with his own Hand, we beg leave to inſiſt upon that, as ſtrong Evidence againſt the Priſoner, upon the Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment, of his conſulting and conſpiring to raiſe a Rebellion and Inſurrection in the Nation, and to ſeize the King's Perſon.

Gentlemen, upon this Plan, which the Priſoner at the Bar had thus furniſh'd himſelf with, you will find, on the Examination of our Witneſſes, that he conſtantly acted; he declared for, and promoted the Execution of the principal Parts of it.

Gentlemen, the Witneſſes we ſhall call, who were engaged with the Priſoner at the Bar, in this Deſign, are Stephen Lynch and Matthew Plunkett; (which laſt had been a Serjeant in the Army) with whom the Priſoner conſulted, and whom he engaged in this deſperate Attempt; and we ſhall call ſome other Witneſſes to confirm ſeveral Circumſtances in their Evidence.

Mr. Lynch is a Perſon the Priſoner might have reaſonable Hopes of engaging in this Service: He had been formerly acquainted with one Dr. Murphey, who (I am inſtructed) was in the Rebellion that broke out in the Beginning of his Majeſty's Reign: Mr. Lynch having been abroad, and abſent for ſome time, retuned into England in April laſt: Upon his Return, Dr. Murphey, his old Acquaintance, meets with him, bids him welcome to England, and tells him that an Affair was going on by which he might make his Fortune, and adviſes him not to go out of England: That there was an Intention to riſe in Favour of the Pretender, whom he called his King, and he would take Care to recommend Mr. Lynch to a Perſon who had a great Part in that Affair.

that

Mr. Lynch having ſuffered before, and run a great Hazard, was unwilling immediately to enter into any Engagement, but propoſed, that if he could have ſufficient Encouragement, and what he expected as a Reward, he ſhould be willing to ſtay. Some time after Dr. Murphey introduces Lynch to the Priſoner at the Bar: The firſt time they met, I think it was the Beginning of June laſt, they went to the Priſoner's Lodgings, which were then at the upper End of Chancery-Lane; and he being about to remove his Goods, deſired them to go to a Tavern hard by, the Griffin Tavern in Holbourn. To this Place the Priſoner at the Bar came, where Dr. Murphey preſented Lynch to Mr. Layer, as the Getleman Dr. Murphey had before recommended to him; Mr. Layer received Mr. Lynch at that time with great Civility, and tells him, that the Recommendation he had received of Lynch from Dr. Murphey, made him not to doubt of his Integrity and Ability. Then they entered upon a Conſultation as to the carrying on of this Deſign; Mr. Layer introduced it with repreſenting an Uneaſineſs in the Nation in general, and how fair an Opportunity there was to bring about a Revolution: But Mr. Layer tells him, that one of the firſt and principal Steps was to ſeize upon a General, or other great Man, (which you will obſerve is one part of the Scheme) and upon Dr. Murphey's Recommendation of him as a fit Man for that Service, Layer propoſes to Lynch to undertake it. At this time Lynch acquainted Layer with the Difficulties he had been in, and that an Affair of this Nature would take up ſome time before it could be put in Execution, and he could not well engage in it without ſome farther Encouragement, and a Reward in Money, in order that he might live eaſy and well while he ſtaid here. Upon that, the Priſoner at the Bar promiſed him Supplies of Money for his Subſiſtence and Expences, what ſhould be neceſſary, beſides future Rewards; and in purſuance of that Promiſe, Layer hath ſeveral times ſupplied Lynch with Money, to engage him more effectually in this Deſign, and to ſupport him in it. By theſe Aſſurances Lynch was prevailed upon, and then agreed to enter into this Conſpiracy, and to take upon him the Part therein that ſhould be ſignified to him.

Gentlemen, the Priſoner did not then make a full Diſcovery of the Perſon that was to be ſeized; but they were to meet again, as they did, about the latter end of June, at the ſame Tavern: There the Priſoner diſcloſed to the Witneſs the particular Perſon who was deſigned to be firſt ſeized. He acquaints the Witneſs, that the Perſon he (the Priſoner) intended at their former Meeting, and whom he deſigned the Witneſs ſhould ſeize, is the General of the Army, the Earl Cadogan; and Lynch was to find out ſuch other Perſons as he could rely upon, for the aſſiſting in, and effecting that Enterprize; whereunto Lynch agreed. Layer then acquainted him what Steps were already made in the Conſpiracy, and that they were to be headed and commanded by a General, who had Wit and Courage and Reſolution, and who were ſupported by a great many Friends, who had full Power and Authority from the Pretender (whom he called King) to act, and who was Intruſted with a Commiſſion as his General, and whoſe Orders Lynch was to obey.

The Priſoner and Lynch had ſeveral other Meetings, ſome at the Griffin Tavern, and others at the Priſoner's own Houſe in Old Southampton Buildings, where the Priſoner always encouraged Lynch to perſiſt in the Undertaking, by aſſuring him, that all Things went on well, and that the Deſign was ſo well laid, that it could not probably miſcarry: That they ſhould be aſſiſted by a great many Officers, as ſoon as any Motion was made, and that the common Soldiers would declare upon the firſt Opportunity: and being aſked by Lynch, whether they had no Foreign Aſſiſtance to depend on; the Priſoner anſwered, when we begin the Buſineſs, we ſhall not want Relief, if requiſite. At one of theſe Meetings the Priſoner revealed to the Witneſs, that, upon the Riſing, the Tower would be delivered up to them, by means of an Officer, who was to be upon the Guard there on the Day of Execution; and that the People in the Mint in Southwark would come in to them; who, and all others that ſhould repair to their Party, ſhould have Arms delivered to them; and that the whole Deſign ſhould be put in Execution at the Breaking up of the Camp, which would be the moſt proper Time for the ſpeaking with the Souldiers in the Army.

But at a Meeting they had, ſome time in Auguſt, at the Queen's Head Tavern in Great Queen's Street near Lincoln's Inn Fields, Lynch complaining of the Delay in putting their Deſign in Execution, and repreſenting the Danger of it, and withal preſſing to know his intended General and Commander, the Priſoner gave him great Encouragement, from the good Proſpect of their Affairs, and the Vigilance of the Noble-Man at the Helm, who would loſe no Opportunity, when a convenient Time ſhould offer; and promiſed the Witneſs, that he ſhould be preſented to this noble Perſon in due time, from whom Lynch ſhould receive his Orders, or Commiſſion for executing his Part, and entering upon his Enterprize.

And accordingly, upon the twenty fourth Day of Auguſt, Mr. Layer invites Lynch to ride out of Town with him the next Day to take the Air, which Lynch comply'd with; and on the twenty fifth of Auguſt in the Morning, Lynch went to the Priſoner's Houſe, who appointed Lynch to go before, and to ſtay without Aldgate.

At that Time the Priſoner aſked the Witneſs, whether he mounted with Furniture or Piſtols; who anſwering, that he did not, but that he had a Double-Barrel Fowling-Piece, which the Priſoner's Servant might carry; the Priſoner directed him to get his Piece ready loaden, becauſe he (Layer) ſhould carry ſomething with him, which he would not loſe for all the World. Lynch and the Priſoner met without Aldgate at eleven before Noon, and the Priſoner's Servant carried the Gun, and they rode together towards Epping in Eſſex, which was the Place they were going to.

Upon the way as they proceeded, Mr. Layer told the Witneſs, that they were going to the Houſe of the Lord North and Gray, where he would preſent Lynch to his Lordſhip, as a particular Friend of his (the Priſoner's). When they came to the Green Man at Layton-Stone, at the Entrance upon Epping Foreſt, the Priſoner ſaid, it might be beſt to eat ſomething there, becauſe they ſhould be too late for the Lord North and Gray's Dinner; and accordingly they ſtopt at this Houſe to Dine.

Gentlemen, You will hear from the Witneſs, that at this Place, the Priſoner and Lynch had another Conſultation, wherein there was a Repetition and Confirmation of the whole Deſign and Conſpiracy. At this Green Man, in your County, Gentlemen, you will find every principal Part of the Conſpiracy, which was to be executed, conſulted upon, and agreed unto by them both: The Time and Manner of the Inſurrection, the Preparations making for it, the Aſſiſtance to be provided and expected from the Army, from many in the City of London, and from the Generality of the Nation, as was then ſuggeſted; the Seizing the Earl Cadogan as the firſt Step, and the Surprizing the Tower in the Manner mentioned in the Plan, by the Help of the Officer upon the Guard; and then they proceeded to conſider and approve the moſt daring and execrable Part of the Plan, which was then expreſly repeated by the Priſoner, the making a ſtrong Detachment to Seize on his Majeſt's Perſon.

The Priſoner then declared his great Satisfaction, in having engaged a Perſon of ſuch Courage and Conduct as Mr. Lynch, in the Attempt of Seizing the Earl Cadogan; and likewiſe named the ſeveral other great Men, hinted at in the Scheme, whoſe Perſons were to be ſeiſed, and of whom he had made up his Collection in purſuance of the Plan; and then expreſs'd his Wiſhes ſo to bring Matters to bear, that Mr. Lynch might likewiſe have the ſole Direction of apprehending the Perſons of ſome of his Majeſty's Miniſters, the Lords Townſhend and Carteret, his Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State, and Mr. Walpole, firſt Lord Commiſſioner of the Treaſury.

Theſe Perſons, moſt immediately intruſted in his Majeſty's Service, were in the firſt Place to be ſeized, in order to facilitate the Deſign, and to make it ſucceſsful. By this means the Conſpirators were to weaken his Majeſty's Power of Defending himſelf, when they had deprived him of his General, who was to command and conduct his Army; of his two Secretaries, who were to maintain and carry on his Intelligence; and of the firſt Commiſſioner of his Treaſury, who was to take Care for his Supply.

At this Place theſe things were debated and conſidered between them: Mr. Lynch then again complained of the long Delay, and wiſhed that the Affair might be carried on with more Expedition: The Priſoner thought no time ſo proper as the Breaking up of the Camp, when they might be ſupplied with Soldiers; yet he was willing to hear any Propoſal from Mr. Lynch, and deſired Mr. Lynch, that if he could think of any ſpeedier Method, or better Scheme, to let him know it: But the Witneſs was not capable to propoſe any way more proper, than what had been agreed upon the Foot of the Plan, as it had been explained by the Priſoner himſelf, and therefore Mr. Lynch acquieſced therein.

Gentlemen, at that time, and at the ſame Place, the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, of publiſhing the treaſonable Writing, was committed; which was a Declaration framed in the Handwriting of the Priſoner, to be publiſhed immediately on the firſt Breaking out of the Conſpiracy, to excite the King's Subjects to take up Arms. and to enter into a Rebellion againſt him; and that it might have an Influence on the Army, where their Hopes were placed, it took Notice, that that the King's General was ſeized, and in their Cuſtody.

In this Declaration particular Rewards are promiſed to the Horſe and Foot in the Army; different Allowances are made, to every Horſe-man and Serjeant three Guineas; two Guineas to every Corporal, and one Guinea to every common Soldier: All had Promiſes of Encouragement, Favour, and future Reward.

Gentlemen, after this was read, the Priſoner put this Declaration up into his Pocket again; and afterwards (as he acquainted the Witneſs) he himſelf made an Alteration therein; it containing at firſt a general Invitation to a Revolt, but was not directed in the Name of any particular Perſon, therefore the Priſoner thought fit afterwards to alter it, (as he informed Lynch) and to make it in the Name of the Pretender, as King.

Gentlemen, though their Hopes and Expectations were founded on corrupting and Debauching the Army; I mention it only, as it was their Expectation and Deſign, without any Imputation on the Honour or Fidelity of the Gentlemen of the Army: But Perſons who undertake an Affair of this Nature, are always forward to expect that their Deſigns will be ſucceſsful.

This, Gentlemen, which I have mentioned to you, which will be more fully and particularly given in Evidence to you, againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, was tranſacted and committed in the County of Eſſex.

My Lord, this will be Evidence of moſt of the Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment in the County of Eſſex; but we ſhall confirm this Evidence by the Confeſſion of the Priſoner, proved by two Witneſſes, in whoſe Preſence he acknowledged the ſeveral Facts, which will be charged upon him in the County of Eſſex, by the Teſtimony of Mr. Lynch; and ſhall make Proof of other Overt-Acts in the County of Middleſex; for it was impoſſible a Deſign ſo extenſive ſhould be confined to one or two particular Places within the ſame County: Their Conſultations muſt be transferred from Place to Place, as Opportunity offered, and as they thought moſt conducive to the Purpoſe they were engaged in.

But the Facts I have mentioned, were tranſacted, Gentlemen, in your County. After the Priſoner and Mr. Lynch had ſettled theſe Affairs at the Green Man, they went to the Houſe of my Lord North and Gray at Epping: They ſtaid there all Night, and dined there the next Day; the Witneſs was introduced and preſented to his Lordſhip by Layer, and was civilly received and entertained; and the Priſoner at the Bar, as he and Lynch returned home, aſked the Witneſs how he liked his Lordſhip, and aſſured Mr. Lynch for his Encouragement, that he had greatly recommended him (the Witneſs) to his Lordſhip.

The Priſoner and Lynch met a ſecond time at the Lord North and Gray's Houſe, where Lynch declared declared he would withdraw himſelf, if things were not put in Execution; to which Layer replied, they would be ſooner put in Execution than Lynch imagined.

Gentlemen, you may perceive, by this Evidence, the Priſoner's Explanation of the whole Scheme, and his Execution of it, ſo far as was in his Power; tho', bleſſed be God, theſe, or any farther Attempts of this kind, have not hitherto prevailed.

The Priſoner proceeds farther; and the next Witneſs who will be produc'd againſt him, is one who had been a Serjeant in the Army, Matthew Plunkett. Plunkett had been formerly acquainted with the Priſoner, and done him a piece of Service; he was made uſe of to reſcue ſome Goods, when they were taken in Execution at the Houſe where Layer lodged, which was the beginning of their Acquaintance: This, with ſome other Recommendations from Perſons engaged in this Deſign, induced the Priſoner at the Bar to make Offers to him, as you will hear from the Witneſs.

In June 1722, another Perſon of the ſame Name, one James Plunkett was directed by Mr. Layer to go to this Serjeant Plunkett, and deſire him to meet Layer at the Italian Coffee-houſe in Ruſſel-Court. The Witneſs could not at that time, at leaſt did not think it proper to go to the Place appointed; but a Day or two after, Mr. Layer meets him in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and takes him aſide under a Gate-way near Turn-ſtile: Layer then told Plunkett, he would inform him of a Matter that would be of great Advantage and Benefit to him; there Layer let him into this Conſpiracy, and engaged the Witneſs in it, not only by aſſurance and promiſe of Reward, but by actual Reward and Money given him; and to induce and to encourage Plunkett the more, Layer acquainted him, that there were ſeveral Perſons of great Eſtates, who were reſolved to reſcue themſelves, and the Nation from the Calamities and Slavery that they then endured; and that they intended to bring about a Revolution, and reſtore their King the Pretender; Plunkett objected, that the Pretender was a Papiſt; but the Priſoner reply'd, there was no difference between a Papiſt and a Lutheran King, and therefore, that ought to make no Impreſſion upon Plunkett, to hinder him in joining to bring in a Papiſt.

The Priſoner enquired of Plunkett, whether he had not an Acquaintance in the Army, with ſome Officers, and with the common Soldiers; and then engaged Plunkett to levy what Perſons he could in their Service; and when the Witneſs told Layer, he knew twenty or thirty Serjeants in the Army, proper Perſons to be applied to, the Priſoner gave Plunkett Directions to make Application to them, and to have them enroll'd; and at that Meeting the Priſoner gave the Witneſs Money for his Encouragement; and as they had ſeveral other Meetings after this, to provide and levy Men, the Direction and Employment given by Layer to the Witneſs, was, to take care to find out their Lodgings, and to make Liſts of the Men, of their Names, and Places of Abode, that they might be ready upon Notice.

The Priſoner not only employed Plunkett to procure, and inroll as many as he could get; but gave him Money for one particular Perſon, one Child, who had ſerv'd in the Army, and who was recommend to Layer by Plunkett, as a Perſon that had been diſoblig'd by having been turned out of the Service; Layer himſelf gave Plunkett half a Guinea, for to give to this Perſon, to engage him in this Conſpiracy, which Plunkett accordingly paid Child; Layer likewiſe ordered Money at other times to be given to Plunkett, and at one time particularly acquainted him, that the Priſoner had left a Guinea with one Jefferies a Non-juring Parſon, to give to him, who had given Plunkett but half a Guinea.

The Priſoner at the Bar, to encourage Plunkett, acquainted him with the Perſons, whom Layer expected to join in this Conſpiracy; and aſk'd the Witneſs his Opinion of ſeveral, the Witneſs will tell you the Names of the Perſons, and what Anſwers he gave; particularly that Layer aſk'd him what he thought of the Lord North and Gray, for an Officer to be at their Head? The Witneſs anſwer'd, though he had never ſerv'd under him, he look'd upon his Lordſhip as a great Man.

They had Meetings at ſeveral times, when Layer informed him, that things were in a great Forwardneſs, tho' it was not yet a time to put their Deſign in Execution; but it went on ſo well, that it could not miſcarry; that the Duke of Ormond was to come with a ſingle Ship, with ſome Officers; and that the Deſign had been diſcover'd to the French Embaſſador, who had given Intelligence thereof to his Majeſty, or elſe the Affair had been done before that time.

This Plunkett was employed, from time to time, to prepare Liſts of, and to collect and inroll fit Perſons to go on with this Deſign; and particularly a Number of Serjeants, about twenty five, being diſmiſs'd from the Army, the Priſoner engaged Plunkett to go immediately to thoſe Perſons, and take care to ſecure them.

Gentlemen, theſe traiterous Conſults and Tranſactions were in July and Auguſt; and the Witneſs will acquaint you more fully with the ſeveral Particulars. There was one Encouragement which the Priſoner gave to this Witneſs, which he did not mention to the other; he told Plunkett there would be an Army of Dutch to come over in Aid of his Majeſty, but the Witneſs ſhould ſee a Number of half-pay Officers, eſpecially thoſe of the Name of Fitzgerald, on the Side of his King (the Pretender) that they could not doubt of Succeſs.

Gentlemen, Under theſe Encouragements and Promiſes, and with theſe Rewards, both theſe Perſons, the two Witneſſes, were engaged by the Priſoner, to enter into, and go on with this Conſpiracy: The Priſoner met them apart from time to time; they concerted and carried on ſuch Meaſures as they thought proper to execute this Deſign, upon the Foot of the Plan, which hath been mentioned, and will be produced to you.

After we have produced the Scheme, and likewiſe examined theſe two Witneſſes, who will give you an Account of the Progreſs which the Priſoner made in this Treaſon; we ſhall give you other plain and evident Proof, which will demonſtrate the treaſonable Intent of the Priſoner at the Bar, and his Hopes of Succeſs.

We ſhall prove that the Priſoner had been at Rome, and by his own Confeſſion, that he had ſeen the Pretender, and had Conferences with him.

We ſhall prove that the Priſoner had blank promiſſory Notes, or Receipts for Money, ſigned with with the Pretender's own Hand, by the aſſumed Title of James Rex, found amongſt Layer's Papers, which were remitted to him from Rome, and which he has acknowledg'd were ſent over to him, for the raiſing of Money to carry on the Cauſe of the Pretender. This is a ſtrong Evidence of the Truſt and Credit repoſed in him to execute this Conſpiracy; that the Priſoner is a Perſon fully intruſted; the Receipts are in Blank, and the Priſoner had Power to raiſe Money on them, and to fill them up with ſuch Sums, as he thought proper and neceſſary.

Gentlemen, on the Examination of our Witneſſes it will appear that Mr. Layer declared he had expended great Sums of Money in this Affair, and that he has made it an Excuſe, why he had not Money to ſupply ſome Demands, becauſe he had disburs'd ſo much.

This therefore was to be his full Power to raiſe Money towards bringing the Pretender to the Throne.

Beſides theſe Receipts, he had furniſhed himſelf with Liſts of the Officers of the Army, in order to know the Situation and Condition of the Army, and to conſider what Advantage he could make by any of thoſe in the Liſts: He had provided himſelf with Liſts of the Officers of the Tower, which we apprehend, was to render the Deſign of ſeizing the Tower, when their Friend the Officer was on the Guard, more probable and hopeful.

Beſides this, we have Letters which will be produced, that paſſed between Sir William Ellis, an Adherent of the Pretender's at Rome, and Mr. Layer, by the Name of Fountain, (a Name he went by) encouraging him to go on with this Deſign: We have the Cypher, and the Explanation of the Cant Words uſed in thoſe Letters. In one Letter Ellis ſays, the beſt Method of carrying on the Manufactory, (which is the Inſurrection) is to get good Workmen, (by which is meant Soldiers) and particularly to gain ſome of the ableſt of Mrs. Barbara Smith's, (by Mrs. Barbara Smith is ſignified the Army) and this would be very agreeable to all concerned, particularly to Mr. Atkins (which by their Cypher or Key is a Name for the Pretender.)

And in another Letter, there is particular Mention of Mr. Layer's intended General; you will find in the Letter an Explanation of him, thus; that he, who the Priſoner in his Letter called Simons, and deſcribed as a Tenant, tho' his Name was not then found in the Rentall, this Writer believed he ſhould be called Simmes, and ſays he is of the North, a grey hair'd ancient Man, for whom his Friend has a particular Eſteem and Value, as a very good Tenant. This is the Deſcription, and this is the Cant that paſſed between them; the Explanation you will apprehend, by the Cyphers that were found amongſt the Priſoner's Papers.

Mr. Layer was not wanting in other Preparations for this Attempt; for he had provided Arms in his own Houſe, more than he could have Occaſion for, as a private Subject; he had ſeveral Muſquets and other Fire-Arms; he had forty or fifty Cartridges loaded with Bullets, ready made up for ſo many Diſcharges, which might be delivered out to the People who ſhould come in to them: If he had any uſe for ſuch a Quantity, he will ſhew upon what Occaſion.

The Diſcovery of the Facts made by the Witneſſes, occaſioned the apprehending Mr. Layer, in whoſe Houſe theſe Arms were likewiſe ſeized.

Mr. Layer was ſo conſcious of his own Guilt, that after he was apprehended, he made his Eſcape out of the Cuſtody of the Meſſenger, in whoſe Houſe he was placed; he offered a great Reward to Watermen to carry him off: This is a Demonſtration of his Guilt, from the Conviction of his own Conſcience.

Gentlemen, there are ſome other Matters and Papers which it will be proper to offer to your Conſideration; and moſt of theſe particular Facts, which I have mentioned, or the moſt material of them, have been confirmed by Mr. Layer's own Confeſſion which he made upon his Examination before the Lords of the Privy Council. And when we have laid before you this Evidence, as according to my Inſtructions we ſhall very fully, I don't doubt but that you will do your Duty as honeſt Men.

We don't apply to your Zeal, as you are Proteſtants and Engliſhmen; but upon the Weight of the Evidence, we ſhall appeal to your Juſtice, to your Oaths and to your Conſciences; whether upon the whole Proof to be laid before you, you will not remain fully ſatisfied, that the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, and then that you do find him ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel on the ſame Side for his Majeſty againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, who ſtands indicted for High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. The Preſervation of the Life of the King is of that great Importance to the Safety and Proſperity of his Subjects, that even Imaginations and Intentions (which are but Acts of the Heart) to take it away, manifeſted by Overt-Acts are an Offence of the higheſt Nature which the Law takes notice of; but as Imaginations and Intentions of Men are ſecret, and can't be diſcover'd but by their Actions, there muſt be Proof of ſome Fact done in order to carry ſuch Intentions into Execution, to make the Offenders guilty of Treaſon: Therefore in this Indictment five ſeveral Overt-Acts are laid; the firſt is, that the Priſoner at the Bar propoſed, conſulted and agreed with divers Perſons unknown to the Grand-Jury, to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion within this Kingdom againſt his Majeſty; the ſecond, that he publiſhed a traiterous Writing, purporting an Exhortation, Encouragement and Promiſe of Rewards, to perſuade his Majeſty's faithful Subjects to take up Arms againſt him; the third, that he propoſed, conſulted and agreed to ſet the Pretender on the Throne by armed Force; the fourth, that he liſted Men to levy War againſt the King; and the fifth, that he propoſed, conſulted and agreed to ſeize and impriſon his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon.

Gentlemen of the Jury, you will readily agree with me that nothing can be more dreadful to a true Briton who hath any Regard to himſelf or his Poſterity, or Love to his Country, than the fatal Conſequences that muſt have inevitably attended ſuch wicked Deſigns, had they been carried into Execution with Succeſs: Suppoſe a Rebellion had been only raiſed, what could any Man have expected from a Rebellion in the Heart of the Kingdom, but Plunder and Rapine, and Murder, a total Suſpenſion of all Civil Right, and as long as the Storm had continued, a juſt

but terrible Apprehenſion of ſomething yet worſe to come: This would certainly have been the Caſe, though the Attempt ſhould have been diſappointed at laſt. But had it been attended with Succeſs, had his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon been ſeized and impriſoned, and had the Pretender been placed on the Throne, what a Scene of Miſery had open'd! A mild Adminiſtration, govern'd by the Law of the Land under an excellent Prince, and as juſt and merciful as ever wore the Crown, muſt have given way to Arbitrary Power; all your Eſtates and Properties muſt have been at the Will of a provok'd and exaſperated Uſurper; Liberty muſt have given Way to Slavery, and the beſt of Religions to Popiſh Idolatry and Superſtition; and this, humanly ſpeaking, without any Proſpect or Hopes of Relief: Nor would theſe dreadful Calamities have been confin'd within the Bounds of the King's Dominions, for ſhould the preſent happy Eſtabliſhment in his Majeſty and his Royal Family (the chief Bulwark and Support of the Proteſtant Intereſt) be deſtroyed, the Proteſtant Religion in general muſt be reduced to the loweſt Ebb, if not totally extinguiſhed.

This is the Nature of the Crime, and theſe ſome of the fatal Conſequences that muſt have enſued, if the Deſigns charged upon the Priſoner by the Indictment had took Effect. But whether he is guilty of this great Offence, is what you Gentlemen of the Jury are now to try.

My Lord, 'tis my part to open the Nature of the Evidence that we ſhall produce to prove the ſeveral Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment; and in ſtating it to your Lordſhip and the Jury, I ſhall follow the Courſe of Time in which the Facts were done, that the Caſe may be more eaſily apprehended, and ſhall open nothing but what I believe will be clearly verified by Proof.

This Priſoner at the Bar, tho' brought up to the Profeſſion of the Law, and a Practiſer in it, went beyond Sea in the Year 1720, and at the Cloſe of that Year, according to our Stile, or the Beginning of the Year 1721. arrived at Rome, where the Pretender then was; while the Priſoner was there, he procured himſelf to be introduced to the Pretender, and had two private Conferences with him, in which (but by what Methods or Repreſentations is beſt known to himſelf) 'tis plain he obtained the Pretender's good Opinion ſo far, that he thought him a fit Perſon in whom a Confidence for carrying on any Deſigns againſt his Majeſty, and for ſetting himſelf on the Throne, might be ſafely repos'd: For this Purpoſe a Correſpondence was then ſettled between the Priſoner and ſome Perſons of Diſtinction about the Pretender, and a Cypher of Names of Perſons and Things was agreed on, in order to carry this Correſpondence on. The Priſoner returned to England about July 1721. after which he writ Letters to his Correſpondent at Rome, and Anſwers to them came from thence, whereby it will appear, that the Priſoner had undertook a conſiderable Part in the Deſign then carrying on to bring the Pretender in; and altho' theſe Letters are in obſcure and cant Terms, and fictitious Names, yet by the Help of the Cypher and from the Nature of the Letters themſelves, it will eaſily appear to a common Underſtanding for what Purpoſe they were writ: This Cypher and Letters we ſhall prove to have been found among the Priſoner's Papers, which were ſeized ſoon after his Commitment, and your Lordſhip and the Jury will ſee, when they come to be read, that notwithſtanding the obſcure Terms, and the myſterious Expreſſions inſerted to dazzle the Eye of the Reader, when compar'd with the Cypher they will be ſo intelligible, that they will be a plain Evidence that a Deſign was carrying on of raiſing a general Rebellion in favour of the Pretender; for which Purpoſe a Scheme in Writing was prepared, which we ſhall lay before your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury, that was likewiſe found among the Priſoner's Papers; we ſhall prove it to be writ with his own Hand.

Mr. Serjeant Pengelly opened the Nature of this Scheme very fully, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with a Repetition of what he ſaid; when it comes to be read it will appear to be calculated for a general Riſing, it will prove a form'd Deſign to ſeize the Tower, to ſeize Perſons in great Stations, to ſeize the Bank, and then at laſt to ſeize the Perſon of the King himſelf, and to ſeize his Royal Highneſs the Prince of Wales. This we apprehend will be a ſtrong Evidence of the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, and will confirm the Teſtimonies of the Witneſſes which we ſhall produce.

There are two Witneſſes we ſhall call to prove the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, they have already been mentioned to your Lordſhip, Mr. Stephen Lynch, and Serjeant Matthew Plunkett. Mr. Lynch will prove the ſeveral Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment to have been committed by the Priſoner in the County of Eſſex, where this Indictment was found; as alſo Overt-Acts of the ſame Nature committed by him in the County of Middleſex. But as 'tis improper to fall directly upon the Proof of thoſe Facts, without firſt proving ſome other Facts by way of Introduction, as how the Acquaintance between Mr. Lynch and the Priſoner at the Bar began, and how they came to be ſo intimate as to enter into a Deſign of this Nature, Mr. Lynch will give your Lordſhips and the Jury an Account; that there had been an Acquaintance between this Mr. Lynch and one Dr. Murphey eight or nine Years ago, that they had agreed to join in the Rebellion which was in the beginning of his Majeſty's Reign; after that was over Mr. Lynch went beyond Sea, and continued there ſome time, and arrived in England in April laſt; that their Acquaintance continued, and their Principles were not altered; Mr. Lynch meeting Dr. Murphey, Dr. Murphey (who hath been mentioned to your Lordſhips on a late Occaſion in this Court, and is not now to be found, but had a great Acquaintance with the Priſoner at the Bar) told him he had ſomething advantageous to communicate to him, and appointed a Meeting next Morning at a Coffee-Houſe in Cornhil, where they accordingly met, and Murphey then adviſed him not to go out of England, becauſe he had an Opportunity of making his Fortune, telling him there would be a general Riſing in Favour of the Pretender (whom he called King) and that it was carry'd on by Gentlemen of Note and Credit; and if he would accept of the Service, he would recommend him to one greatly concerned in that Affair; Mr. Lynch after Conſideration agreed to ſtay—— After ſeveral other Meetings between this Dr. Murphey and Mr. Lynch, at which their Diſcourſe generally turned upon this intended Riſing; about the Beginning of June, Dr. Murphey introduced Mr. Lynch to the Priſoner, as a Perſon fit to be entruſted in the intended Enterprize; terprize; they went to the Griffin Tavern in Holbourn; Mr. Layer there expreſſed the good Opinion he had of Mr. Lynch upon the Character he had received of him from ſo good a Friend as this Dr. Murphey. They ſoon enter'd upon Buſineſs, and the Priſoner after having made a Repreſentation of the Uneaſineſs of the Nation in general, and of the fair Opportunity there was to bring about a Revolution, propos'd to Mr. Lynch to ſeize ſome General, to which the Witneſs agreed. After this they had ſeveral other Meetings, at which their Diſcourſe turn'd upon the ſame Subject of a general Riſing in order to ſet the Pretender on the Throne, and at one of them the Priſoner declared he intended Lynch ſhould ſeize the Earl of Cadogan, and that the Scheme was laid on a ſound Foundation, having a great Man at the Head of Affairs, who wanted neither Wit, Courage nor Reſolution, and who would be backed by his Friends. Several other Propoſitions were made by the Priſoner tending to the ſame End; to all which Mr. Lynch agreed, and they conſulted how they might put thoſe things in Execution. In July laſt, Mr. Layer went into the Country for fourteen or fifteen Days, and after his Return in the beginning of Auguſt, in Purſuance of what they had concerted, Mr. Lynch and he went to view the Earl of Cadogan's Houſe, to ſee how practicable that Deſign of ſeizing him at his Houſe was. Mr. Lynch thought it feaſible, but he grew uneaſy at Delays, and frequently told the Priſoner that his Circumſtances would not permit him to continue here at his own Expence; therefore to encourage him to ſtay, and perſevere in the Deſign, Mr. Layer gave him ſeveral Sums of Money.

My Lord, upon the twenty fourth of Auguſt laſt, the Priſoner and Mr. Lynch agreed to ride out the next day to take the Air; on the twenty fifth, according to Appointment, (which brings us now to the Overt-Acts in the County of Eſſex) they rid out together; the Priſoner thought it proper to ride with Arms, alledging that he had things about him he would not loſe for any thing in the World. Upon the Road he told Mr. Lynch they would go to Lord North and Grey's, with whom the Priſoner had the Honour to be well acquainted, and he would preſent Mr. Lynch to my Lord as his particular Acquaintance. It happened to be too late to get to Lord North and Grey's by Dinner, whereupon they put in at the Green-Man near Epping-Foreſt, which, Gentlemen, is at Layton-Stone in your County. Dinner not being ready at their coming thither, they enter'd into Converſation on the former Topicks, and Mr. Lynch deſiring to give him ſome inſight into the Scheme that was formed, the whole ſubject matter of their former Conſultations and Diſcourſes were repeated about ſeizing Lord Cadogan, ſeizing the Miniſters of State, of getting Part of the Army to declare for them, and for ſeizing the King's Perſon; and theſe things were then agreed to by them. At this Place it was, that the Priſoner pulled out of his Pocket, and ſhew'd to Mr. Lynch the traiterous Writing laid in the Indictment, which was a Declaration to encourage a general Riſing, writ, as the Witneſs believes, in the Priſoner's own Hand; and that Part which contained the Promiſes of Rewards to be given to the Soldiers and other Perſons to encourage them to come into their Deſigns; was read by the Witneſs, after which Mr. Layer took his Paper away, and put it up in his Pocket again. My Lord, when they had dined, they went on to Lord North and Grey's Houſe (whom your Lordſhip will hear mention'd by the Evidence as the Perſon thought on to be General in this Undertaking) they ſtaid there that Night, and dined there next Day, and afterwards they had a ſecond Meeting at Lord North and Grey's. Your Lordſhip, and the Jury will be pleaſed to obſerve that this Evidence will be a full and poſitive Proof by this Witneſs, that the Overt-Acts of publiſhing this traiterous Writing, encouraging Perſons to take up Arms againſt his Majeſty, of the Conſultations and Agreement to levy War, to ſet the Pretender on the Throne, and to ſeize his Majeſty's Perſon, were done at the Green-Man in the County of Eſſex: And this will likewiſe be an Evidence, that all the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment (except publiſhing the traiterous Writing) were done in the County of Middleſex.

My Lord, the next Witneſs we ſhall produce is Matthew Plunkett, formerly a Serjeant in ſome Regiment; he had been formerly acquainted with, and had been ſerviceable to the Priſoner, and was very well acquainted with one James Plunkett, which James Plunkett was a great Acquaintance of the Priſoner's. This James Plunkett deſired the Witneſs Matthew Plunkett to meet the Priſoner in July laſt, at the Italian Coffee-houſe in Ruſſel-Court, which the Witneſs could not comply with; but the Witneſs met the Priſoner the Sunday following in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, they were together near an Hour, the Priſoner gave him an Account of the intended general Riſing, and aſk'd the Witneſs if he knew any old Serjeants or Soldiers who could diſcipline a Mob, agreed with him to procure ſuch, mentioned to him ſeveral Perſons fit to be at the head of this Enterprize; and in order to make him diligent, he gave him at that time half a Crown: And Money was not only given him at that time, but a Promiſe was made to him of further Rewards. The Priſoner having Occaſion to go into the Country, one Jeffreys, a Nonjuring Clergyman, was ſent to Matthew Plunkett by Layer (and this Fact that I am going to open muſt not be barely conſidered as an Act between Jeffreys and Plunkett, but it will be brought directly home to the Act of Layer himſelf.) Jeffreys told Plunkett he came from the Priſoner, and that he was employ'd by him to go to ſuch as the Witneſs was, who were old Serjeants, to get a Number of them together to diſcipline the Mob, in order to the general Riſing: The next Day they met again, and had the like Diſcourſe, and Jeffreys gave Matthew Plunkett half a Guinea; and what brings this home to the Priſoner, is, that he told Plunkett he had left a Guinea with the Nonjuring Parſon to give him, and talked with him on the ſame Subject that Jeffreys had diſcourſed the Witneſs before. But in fact Jeffreys did not give Plunkett the Guinea, he gave him but half a Guinea.

My Lord, after Mr. Layer went out of Town Plunkett gave him an Account what Progreſs he had made in the Affair. Plunkett told him that he had got ſeveral old Soldiers that would bear a Part in this Buſineſs: The Priſoner ſaid he muſt take care to keep a Liſt of their Names, and the Places where they lived, that they might be in a Readineſs when they ſhould have Occaſion for them. And on Sunday before the Priſoner was taken up, he told this Plunkett that a great many many of his Countrymen were turned out of the Guards, and aſk'd him if he knew where they lodg'd, and upon the Witneſs's Anſwer that he did not, the Priſoner directed him to take a Liſt of their Names and Places where they lodg'd, that he might have them when Occaſion required. So that here is Mr. Lynch a poſitive Witneſs as to the Overt-Acts in Eſſex; Mr. Lynch and Mr. Plunkett poſitive as to the Overt-Acts in Middleſex, and their Teſtimony confirmed by the Scheme under the Priſoner's own Hand, and other Papers which we ſhall produce, found among his Papers, which will leave no room to doubt of the Truth of their Evidence. Beſides, my Lord, the Priſoner being ſeized in September laſt, we ſhall give an Account when he was in Cuſtody of a Meſſenger lock'd up in a Room two Pair of Stairs high, he made a ſhift to make his Eſcape, got to the Water-ſide, and got a Sculler to carry him over the River; he actually got over the River, but he was retaken again in St. George's Fields, and brought back to the Meſſenger, and offer'd very conſiderable Sums to the Perſons who retook him to let him go. I believe it is hardly to be imagin'd, a Perſon perfectly innocent would venture to get out of a Room two Story high, and in the manner he did, and offer to give ſuch a Reward to the Perſons who retook him to let him get off; he muſt be conſcious to himſelf that he was in very great Danger. There were likewiſe found in his Houſe Arms more than neceſſary for his Uſe, and which he has confeſſed were to be uſed if there had been a Riſing.

My Lord, to corroborate the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes, we ſhall lay before your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury, the ſeveral Papers which were found, I may ſay, in Mr. Layer's Cuſtody; I don't ſay they were actually taken in his Cuſtody, but it will come to the ſame thing; for he had delivered them in two Parcels to Mrs. Maſon the Witneſs, whom we ſhall produce, with Directions that ſhe ſhould take particular Care of them; and they were ſeized in her Cuſtody not long after the Priſoner was committed to the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger; ſhe ſaw every one of them mark'd by the Perſons who ſeized them, and marked them her ſelf: There are not only the Scheme and the Cyphers and Letters mentioned before, but alſo ten promiſſory Notes ſubſcribed by the Pretender: Theſe promiſſory Notes run,

I Acknowledge to have received from the Sum of which Sum I promiſe to repay with an Intereſt for it at the Rate of per Ann. JAMES R.

Can any Man imagine, if there was nothing elſe to explain them, that theſe Notes were there for nothing? Every Body muſt believe that they were intended to be made uſe of to carry on the Conſpiracy: But we ſhall ſhew by the Priſoner's own Confeſſion, that they were ſent over to him by Sir William Ellis, in order to be made uſe of as Occaſion ſhould ſerve, to promote theſe Deſigns in favour of the Pretender. Among theſe Papers ſeveral Liſts were found, which will be produced, ſome of which contain the Number of the Officers and of the Soldiers in the Guards, ſome the Names of other Officers and Soldiers, and ſome the Number of the Officers belonging to the Tower. It muſt be owned, that in ſome of thoſe Liſts, there are the Names of ſeveral Perſons of as great Honour, Loyalty, and Fidelity to his Majeſty, as any Subjects his Majeſty hath; yet the procuring theſe Liſts could be for nothing but to get an Information of the Number and Character of the Perſons in his Majeſty's Service, to know the Strength of his Majeſty's Forces, that Intelligence might be given and Schemes framed accordingly, and that there might be tampering with ſuch as there could be any Hopes of bringing over into the Pretender's Intereſt: If the Priſoner can put any other Conſtruction upon his having theſe Liſts in his Cuſtody, he will have an Opportunity to do it. Theſe things being proved, I apprehend there remains no doubt but that the Priſoner will appear to be guilty of the Crime charged on him in this Indictment: But beſides all this we ſhall prove his Confeſſion, by two Witneſſes, whereby he has confeſſed every Overt-Act laid in this Indictment, the ſeveral Tranſactions that Mr. Lynch and Plunkett will give account of, and almoſt all the Facts that I have mention'd before. I ſhall conclude with this, Gentlemen of the Jury, that if we make out theſe Facts as they have been opened, and according to my Inſtructions I have no Reaſon to make the leaſt Queſtion of it, it muſt be left to your Conſideration whether the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of the Offence for which he ſtands indicted or not: If you ſhall be ſatisfied by the Evidence that he is, I do not doubt but you will do Juſtice (which is all that is deſired of you) and find a Verdict for the King.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, we will now proceed to examine Witneſſes; and we deſire that room may be made for the Witneſſes to come into Court. Call Mr. Stephen Lynch.

L. C. Juſt. You muſt make way there.

Priſoner. My Lord, I humbly deſire, before this Witneſs be ſworn, that he may be examin'd upon a Voyer dire, whether he hath not a Promiſe of Pardon, or ſome other Reward, for ſwearing againſt me.

L. C. Juſt. Sir, you can't ask him that Queſtion.

Mr. Hungerford. I hope we ſhall be at Liberty, and have a Right to enter into an Examination of this Matter. If a Man is repreſented to be in the ſame Circumſtances with the Priſoner, and the Priſoner led into the ſame Circumſtances by the Perſon propoſed as a Witneſs, and afterwards by him involved in the ſame Offence; if the Perſon therefore propoſed as a Witneſs, hath a Promiſe of Pardon or ſome Reward, upon Condition that he would ſwear againſt the Priſoner, he cannot by Law be a good Witneſs; the Perſon propos'd as a Witneſs muſt be a credible Witneſs, muſt be a legal Witneſs, muſt be not convicted of Perjury or any other notorious Offence, a free Witneſs that is not under Reſtraint for the Offence he accuſes another of; and therefore we hope we have a Right of aſking whether he acts under the Influence of any Promiſe of Reward, or the Promiſe of a Pardon: And the Right we have of examining him to the Promiſe of a Reward or Pardon, is ſupported by the Authority of my Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, as reported by Kelynge.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I would not take up your Lordſhip's time, and ſubmit the Weight of what Mr. Hungerford has offered to your Conſideration, but we found our Right of asking this Queſtion upon my Lord Chief Juſtice Hale's expreſs Declaration, ſet forth at large in Kelynge's Reports fol. 18, which I have here in my Hand.

I muſt likewiſe beg Leave to obſerve to your Lordſhip, that this Queſtion was formerly asked in the Trial of Gordon and Dorrell to one Adams that had been in the ſame Conſpiracy with thoſe that were brought to Trial for High-Treaſon, and was then produced as a Witneſs againſt them; the Book was then brought into Court, and the Quotation read before your Lordſhip, and according to my Notes of that Trial, which I have here brought with me for my Juſtification, (I ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Correction if I don't ſtate it right) Adams was ask'd that Queſtion, though it was long objected to by the King's Counſel. The Diſtinction my Lord Chief Juſtice Hale made was this.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. Read the whole Paragraph.

Mr. Ketelbey. I will, my Lord. The Words are theſe: "It was reſolved that ſome of thoſe "Perſons equally culpable with the reſt, may "be made uſe of as Witneſſes againſt their Fellows, and they are lawful Accuſers or Witneſſes "within the Statute 1 Ed. VI. 12. 5 & 6 Ed. VI. "c. 11. & 1 Mar. I. and accordingly at the Trial of theſe Men, ſome of them who were Parties in the Treaſon were made uſe of againſt "the reſt: For lawful Witneſſes within thoſe "Statutes are ſuch as the Law alloweth; and "the Law alloweth every one to be a Witneſs, "who is not convicted or made infamous for "ſome Crime; and if it were not ſo all Treaſons would be ſafe, and it would be impoſſible for one who conſpires with never ſo many "Perſons to make a Diſcovery to any Purpoſe.

I was aware of what was here laid down, and therefore did ſubmit Mr. Hungerford's Reaſon to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, and did not inſiſt farther upon it; the ſubſequent Words are theſe, "But the Lord Chief Baron Hale ſaid, That if "one of theſe culpable Perſons be promiſed his "Pardon, on Condition to give Evidence againſt "the reſt, that diſableth him to be a Witneſs "againſt the others, becauſe he is bribed by ſaving his Life to be a Witneſs: So that he makes "a Difference where the Promiſe of Pardon is "to him for diſcloſing the Treaſon, and where "it is for giving of Evidence. But ſome of the "other Judges did not think the Promiſe of "Pardon, if he gave Evidence, did diſable "him. But they all adviſed that no ſuch Promiſe ſhould be made, or any Threatnings uſed "to them in caſe they did not give full Evidence.

So that, my Lord, we have not only the Authority of that Book with us, but a ſolemn Precedent in this Court in point eſtabliſhed upon a long Debate, and grounded on that very Authority. And when I moved this Matter at the Trial of Dorrell, Gordon and Ker, I then cited another Inſtance where it had been allowed by the Court, and that was before Mr. Juſtice Powell at Worceſter Aſſizes, upon the Trial of Palmer and Symonds for the Murder of Mrs. Palmer: There a third Perſon concerned in the Fact came in as a Witneſs againſt the other two, and after it had been argued by Counſel, and that learned Judge had read upon the Bench, and conſidered this Authority, the Witneſs was at laſt asked this Queſtion upon a Voyer dire: And for the Truth of this Caſe as I reported it, I appealed to my Lord Lechmere, then Attorney-General, and who had been one of the Counſel at Palmer's Trial.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we hope if there is any room for this Pretence which is inſinuated, it only goes as to his Credit, and does not diſable him from being a Witneſs; the Authorities produced are no more: The Judges directed that no ſuch Promiſe ſhould be made, but if ſuch a Promiſe was made, they agreed it doth not diſable him from being a Witneſs, as was mentioned by my Lord Chief Baron Hale; it is not like Money given, which is an actual Corruption; the Promiſe of Pardon is a thing voluntary in it ſelf: Who is the Promiſe to be made by? Is it in the Power of any Perſon but his Majeſty to perform it? If there is any thing in the Suppoſition, it is not proper to aſk in relation to it upon a Voyer dire to prevent the Witneſs from being ſworn to give Evidence; but when he hath been ſworn, if they think fit to aſk the Queſtion, they may.

Mr. Att. Gen. The aſking the Witneſs this Queſtion, as 'tis irregular, ſo if it was anſwered in the affirmative, wou'd be of no Service to the Priſoner; for with Submiſſion, it will not diſable Mr. Lynch from being a Witneſs. Every Man is bound in Juſtice to give Evidence if required, and a Promiſe to have a Pardon if he gives Evidence againſt the Priſoner, can be looked on only to induce him to do that which by Law he ought to do according to the Truth: It does not import that he was to give a wrong or a falſe Evidence; ſuch a Queſtion he cannot be obliged to anſwer. And the greateſt Uſe the Priſoner could make of this, if ſuch a Promiſe was made to the Witneſs (which is not admitted) wou'd be only againſt the Credit of the Witneſs, but not entirely take off his Teſtimony; his Credit, as well as the Credit of all Witneſſes, muſt be left to the Conſideration of the Jury. As to the Opinion of my Lord Chief Baron Hale cited out of Kelynge, the other Judges differ'd with him, and therefore we hope Mr. Lynch ſhall be ſworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We who are Council for the King don't oppoſe the asking this Queſtion, out of any apprehenſion that the Anſwer would come out againſt us, but for fear of overturning a Point that hath been long ſettled. As to the Book, which theſe Gentlemen cite to ſupport their Objection, with Submiſſion, it is rather an Authority to over-rule it. The Opinion they found themſelves upon is, that of my Lord Chief Baron Hale, but the reſt of the Judges were of Opinion againſt him; ſo that we apprehend the Authority is with us, and likewiſe the Reaſon of the thing. I take it that no Queſtion is to be asked a Man upon a Voyer dire, but to a Fact that would take off his Teſtimony. Suppoſe then, for Argument ſake, that there was a Promiſe of Pardon made to a Man upon Condition that he ſhould give Evidence; I apprehend that would not diſable him from being a Witneſs, any more than if the Condition had been that he ſhould declare the Truth, which it was his Duty to have done, although no ſuch Promiſe had been made: And ſurely the Promiſe of a Pardon upon a Condition to do that which was his Duty before, won't take off his Teſtimony. If they would ask the Witneſs whether he has accepted a Promiſe of a Pardon upon Condition to give falſe Teſtimony, that is a Queſtion, to which, with great Submiſſion, he is not bound to anſwer; becauſe that would be to examine him to accuſe himſelf of a thing which is unlawful. For theſe Reaſons, as well as upon account of the Authority they produce, we apprehend there is no Force in the Objection.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. My Lord, I know not whether it would not be laying too great a Weight upon the Objection, for ſo many of the King's Counſel to anſwer it; for my part I think it would.

Mr. Hungerford. I urge it thus far: Whatſoever Perſon is produced in a Court of Juſtice for a Witneſs, he muſt appear to be utterly unconcerned in point of Intereſt in the Conſequence of of the Trial. If a Man produced as an Evidence to prove the Debt upon the Defendant, ſhall, upon being examined upon a Voyer dire, diſcloſe that he is to have a part of the Money recovered, is not ſuch a Perſon diſabled from being a Witneſs at all? And is not a Promiſe of Pardon to the Witneſs, in Caſe he convicts the Criminal, a greater Byaſs than the Witneſſes's having part of the Money recovered? In a Civil Cauſe the Queſtion is not whether the Witneſs be tempted to ſwear a Truth or Falſhood, but whether the Witneſs doth not appear to be ſo far concerned in Intereſt, that he ought not to be examined at all? And therefore I humbly inſiſt that we ought to have an Account whether the Witneſs Lynch hath the Promiſe of a Pardon, or any Reward for that which he is to do here, viz. for the Evidence he is to give againſt the Priſoner. As to the Conſequence of ſuch an Enquiry, it is indifferent to me whether it will diſable him from being a Witneſs abſolutely, or go to his Credit only: For if it ſhould come out that he hath ſuch a Promiſe, we ſuppoſe no Jury or Man living will believe him, and that is much the ſame as if he were not produced; tho' it ſeems more agreable to the Practice in Civil Caſes, that he ſhould not be admitted as a Witneſs at all.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Sollicitor miſtakes the Words of the Book as I read them; he is pleaſed to underſtand them as if all the reſt of the Judges differed in Opinion from my Lord Chief Baron Hale; but the Book does not ſay ſo, 'tis only that ſome of the other Judges were of Opinion that it did not diſable him, but all agreed that it went to his Credit, and that was all I read in the Book; and I would not have offered it otherwiſe than as it was truly there, upon any Conſideration whatſoever; but whether this Queſtion be asked at firſt or laſt, ſo as we have an Anſwer to it, I am contented.

L. C. Juſt. You ſee the moſt you can make of it is, that it is an Objection to his Credit; and if it goes to his Credit, muſt he not be ſworn, and his Credit left to the Jury? He muſt be examin'd as a legal Witneſs; but if this Man, under Expectation and Promiſe of a Pardon, comes here to ſwear that which is not true, and you would ask him to that, he is not obliged to anſwer it. No body is to diſcredit himſelf, but always to be taken to be innocent till it appears otherwiſe. It is expreſſed that he has a Promiſe of Pardon: What to do? To give Evidence. Give Evidence! Why ſhould he not? Is he not obliged to't? Suppoſe he gives Evidence according to the Truth, he would be entitled as much to his Pardon, as if he gave Evidence of that which is not true. The moſt you can ſay is, he has a Promiſe of Pardon if he gives Evidence; and can you conclude from thence that he can give no Evidence except a falſe Evidence? If they who ask the Queſtion inſinuate any thing like that, it ought not to have an Anſwer: But if he hath a Promiſe of Pardon if he gives a true Evidence, it is no Objection to his being a Witneſs, or to his Credit.

Priſoner. My Lord, I humbly hope our Objections will thus far prevail, and that we ſhall come at the Fact.

L. C. Juſt. When he is ſworn you ſhall ask him what Queſtions you pleaſe.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. The Objection which gives Occaſion to inſiſt upon this Queſtion, ariſes from the Influence which the Hopes of Pardon may poſſibly have upon the Witneſs; and if this be a Reaſon for ſetting aſide a Witneſs as incapable, no Accomplice who diſcovers a Conſpiracy can ever be allowed to prove it upon Oath; for I believe, no Man ever yet made a Diſcovery but with the Hopes of Pardon; and a Government is obliged in Honour to grant it, where the Confeſſion appears to be ingenuous and ſincere: And therefore if the Hope or Proſpect of Pardon, which is all that can be inferr'd from a Promiſe, ſhould be an Objection to the Competency of a Witneſs, no Government would be ſafe; for treaſonable Conſpiracies might be form'd and carried on with Impunity, when the Perſons concern'd, from whom alone a full Diſcovery can be had, are utterly incapable of proving the Fact, though they give all poſſible Marks of their Sincerity and Truth. They have therefore been always allowed to be Witneſſes; and I don't remember that ever any Objection was made to their Competency, 'till the Caſe of the King and Gordon, when the Council for the Priſoner would have asked the ſame Queſtion which is now propoſed, but the Court did not think it proper before the Witneſs was ſworn; for no Perſon produced as a Witneſs can be examin'd to any Matter which only affects his Credit, and is no Objection to his Competency, till after he is ſworn to give Evidence, and has been examin'd.

Mr. Juſt. Powys. Mr. Hungerford would do well to remember the ſeveral Acts of Parliament made to give Encouragement, by a Reward of forty Pounds, for the apprehending and convicting of every falſe Coiner, Highwayman and Houſe-breaker; and if a Criminal in thoſe Offences ſhall come in, and diſcover and convict two of his Accomplices, he ſhall be entitled to a Pardon; and by the expreſs Words of the 5th of Queen Anne, ſhall have the Reward of forty Pounds for each Houſe-breaker, and ſhall alſo himſelf be entitled to a Pardon; ſo that the Parliament thought it proper to give even Money as well as a Pardon to ſuch Diſcoverer. Yet ever ſince the making of thoſe Acts, the Perſons ſo promiſed and encouraged, have upon thoſe Trials been admitted as good Witneſſes even before a Pardon. And indeed there cannot be too great Encouragement given to Criminals to become honeſt, and to come in and impeach their Accomplices, it being often impoſſible fully to diſcover thoſe ſecret Confederacies, but by ſome of the Accomplices and Actors therein.

The Law thinks theſe are fit Witneſſes, and you will find it in the Book that Mr. Ketelbey hath mention'd that they were thought fit to make Diſcoveries of thoſe ſecret Combinations; I don't ſay to come in and give falſe Evidence, but to make a fair Diſcovery.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we ſubmit; we ſhall ask the Queſtion whether he hath any ſuch Promiſe made; let the Truth come out, and we ſhall be ſatisfied.

Mr. Juſt. Forteſcue Aland. I was Council in the Caſe of the King and Gordon; and I very well remember remember the Council of the other Side inſiſted the Witneſs produced ſhould be ask'd this Queſtion on a Voyer dire, his Name was Mayer. The Reaſon the Court gave that it was improper to ask this Queſtion on a Voyer dire, was, that if he had this Promiſe, ſuch Promiſe was made either to ſpeak the Truth, or to ſpeak a Falſhood; if it were to give a juſt and true Evidence, there was no Harm in it; and if it was a Promiſe of Pardon for ſpeaking that which was not true, the Witneſs was not bound to anſwer that Queſtion, and conſequently it can be of no Uſe whatſoever, therefore the Witneſs muſt be ſworn.

Mr. Stephen Lynch was ſworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Lynch. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long have you known him?

Lynch. I firſt knew him about the Month of June laſt.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray give an Account to the Court and the Jury by what Means you firſt became acquainted with him.

Lynch. I became acquainted with him by Dr. Murphey: About the Month of April laſt I came into England from Flanders; at my Arrival in England I met with Dr. Murphey, that was my Acquaintance ſeveral Years before, who met me and told me he had ſome particular Buſineſs to tell me, and deſired me to meet him at Cooper's Coffee-houſe in Cornhill, where I met him; and he told me that material Things were acting in the Kingdom in order to a Riſing, and if I would be of the Party, he would recommend me to a Gentleman that had the Management of it: I ask'd Time to conſider it, and in two or three Days time I told him that I was reſolved to be of the Party. I frequently told him I was impatient to know who the Gentleman was that I was to be recommended to; about the Month of June he told me I ſhould go with him to his Lodgings, which were at the upper End of Chancery-Lane, right over againſt the White-Hart.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Whoſe Lodgings did you go to?

Lynch. The Lodgings of Mr. Layer: Mr. Layer was at home, and deſir'd us to go to the Griffin Tavern in Holborn and he would meet us there; we went, and in a little while Mr. Layer came to us; and then Dr. Murphey told him that I was the Gentleman he had ſpoke to him of. Mr. Layer was glad of my Acquaintance, and told me that he had had ſuch a ſtrong Recommendation of me, that he was fully ſatisfied in me; and then he held a Diſcourſe about a Riſing that was to be in the Kingdom in favour of the Pretender, and that it would be back'd by a great many of the Army and the Guards, and ſeveral other Gentlemen.

Mr. Hungerford. The Overt-Act is laid in Eſſex, and here is an Evidence given of an Overt-Act in Middleſex; with Submiſſion, they can give no Evidence of an Overt-Act in another County, till they give Evidence of an Overt-Act in Eſſex, where the Indictment is laid.

L. C. Juſt. All they ſay of Matters in the County of Middleſex, unleſs they give Evidence of an Overt-Act in the County of Eſſex, it ſignifies nothing.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, with Submiſſion, they ought not to be ſuffered to give Evidence of any Overt-Act in Middleſex, before they give Evidence of ſome Overt-Act in Eſſex; for the proving ſome Overt-Act in Eſſex is the only thing which can entitle them to prove any Overt-Act elſewhere. For by the Method they would go on in, the Jury may be captivated with a Story of the Griffin Tavern, and of Mr. Layer's other Aſſignations and Actions in Middleſex, which cannot be imputed to him upon this Indictment until ſome Treaſon be proved in Eſſex: I hope therefore the King's Council ſhall receive your Lordſhip's Directions to go on regularly, to begin to give an Account of the Overt-Acts in Eſſex, before they go into another County.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Hungerford, you muſt give them leave to go on in their own Method, of that that firſt happened in Middleſex, and afterwards of what happened in Eſſex; and if you dare not truſt them and us, but will have your own Method, it would be to put us into Confuſion.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we inſiſt upon it in point of Law, that we are intitled to give Evidence of Overt-Acts of the ſame Species of Treaſon laid in the Indictment, though done in any County in England, provided we alſo prove an Overt-Act in the County of Eſſex; which we muſt do, otherwiſe this will paſs for nothing. Mr. Lynch, go on, and give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what Mr. Layer ſaid, when you were together at the Griffin Tavern.

Lynch. The firſt thing he told me was, That he was very glad to meet me, that he had had a good Recommendation of me from Dr. Murphey, as being a Man he could confide in; and beginning his Diſcourſe of an Inſurrection in the Kingdom, he told me, that they were back'd with a great many of the Army and the Guards; that there was a great many of the Nobility and Gentry of the Country that would come in to 'em: He told me then, that he wanted a Man of Reſolution that would take upon him the ſeizing of ſome Perſon of Note, as a General, or ſome other great Man. The Diſcourſe run all upon the ſame thing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Recollect as well as you can, the Particulars Mr. Layer told you relating to this Deſign.

Lynch. He told me the general Deſign of a Revolution in the Kingdom, in favour of the Pretender, and that they were back'd by a great many of the Army, and a great many of the Nobility and Gentry; and then he told me he wanted a Man of Reſolution, to undertake with ſome others, to ſeize a great Man, as a General or ſome other great Man: At that Time I took upon my ſelf to do it, ſo at that Time we diſcours'd no more.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long were you together?

Lynch. About half an Hour.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When had you the next Meeting?

Lynch. A Day or two afterwards.

Mr. Soll. Gen. At what Place?

Lynch. At the ſame Tavern, the Griffin Tavern; when I came there, I ſent a Boy for Mr. Layer, as he had ordered me to do when I wanted to ſee him.

L. C. Juſt. When was your firſt Meeting?

Lynch. About the Month of June.

L. C. Juſt. And the ſecond Meeting was two or three Days after the firſt?

Lynch.

Lynch. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. At your parting after the firſt Meeting, what did Mr. Layer ſay to you?

Lynch. Mr. Layer told me, if I had Occaſion to ſpeak to him that I ſhould not come to his Lodgings, but to go to a Tavern and ſend for him, which I did; I ſent a Boy for him, and he came to me. Then talking over a Glaſs of Wine, he told me that he had pitched upon me to ſeize the Earl of Cadogan, and that I ſhould chuſe as many Perſons as I thought fit who would anſwer the ſame Deſign; and he being the principal Man in the Army, it wou'd diſcourage the King's Party, and animate the Pretender's Party; which, as I ſaid before, I agreed to undertake, and to do the utmoſt of my Endeavours to do it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was you to do it alone, or was you to have any Aſſiſtance?

Lynch. Yes, I was to have Aſſiſtance.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Aſſiſtance?

Lynch. Such that I ſhou'd chuſe; ſuch People that I cou'd confide in.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you undertake it?

Lynch. Yes, I did undertake it, and to pitch upon ſuch Perſons as ſhou'd be proper to aſſiſt me in it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was any thing ſaid at that time relating to any Perſon, who was to have the Conduct of the Deſign?

Lynch. He told me that there was ſome great Man that did not want Wit, Courage or Reſolution, and was at the Head of this Affair, who wou'd at a proper time give me an Order to effect ſomething further about it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had you any more Diſcourſe with the Priſoner about this Affair?

Lynch. Yes, we had ſeveral Diſcourſes about it.

Mr. Att Gen. Tell my Lord and the Jury what more Diſcourſe you had, if you can remember.

Lynch. The chief Part I was to act was to ſeize the Earl of Cadogan, with ſuch Gentlemen as I ſhould think proper to anſwer the end of ſeizing him.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Was there any other Meeting, and when, and how long after?

Lynch. After that I came to a Tavern in Holborn.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. How long after?

Lynch. Some few Days; it was at the Caſtle Tavern in Holborn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was with you at the Tavern?

Lynch. I came to the Tavern and ſent for Mr. Layer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he come to you?

Lynch. Yes, he came to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you with him at that time?

Lynch. We had no particular Diſcourſe, but in general we talk'd about the Uneaſineſs of the Nation, and the fair Opportunity there was to riſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of what elſe paſſed.

Lynch. I ſay, the Diſcourſe that we had at two Meetings before, he repeated, and ſaid, Now is a fair Opportunity, the Uneaſineſs of the People being ſuch, to bring about a Revolution, ſince they would be back'd by the Army and the Guards, and ſeveral other People. Soon after that we parted.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. When had you any other Meeting?

Lynch. Some Meetings we had at Mr. Layer's Houſe in Southampton-Buildings.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. How long after?

Lynch. A few Days only.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. At the ſeveral Meetings at his Houſe, what was the Subject of your Diſcourſe?

Lynch. It was upon the ſame, about the Riſing and Uneaſineſs of the People, and the fair Opportunity of bringing about a Revolution; of the Diſpoſition of the Army and the Guards.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Did he give you any Encouragement?

Lynch. After I met him at his Houſe in Southampton-Buildings, I told him of my Uneaſineſs; becauſe he had told me at the beginning, that theſe Things would be ſoon put in Execution: I told him, if they were delay'd, I was afraid they wou'd not ſucceed. He then animated me, by telling me that there was no fear of its ſucceeding; and that I ſhould not be diſcouraged, for there was a great Man, a Man of Wit and Conduct, that was at the Helm, and that had the Management of the Scheme: That I ſhould always keep a good Heart; and that Things went on very well.

Mr. Weſt. Did he tell you in whoſe Favour this was to be?

Lynch. Yes, in Favour of the Pretender. He mentioned him by the Name of King.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Do you know any thing about his going into the Country?

Lynch. After I met him at his Houſe, he went into the Country and ſtaid ſixteen or ſeventeen Days; at his Return I went to ſee him, expreſſing how uneaſy I was about the Delay.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. About what Time was this?

Lynch. I believe it was in July. And then I told him again how uneaſy I was at the Delay. To which he anſwer'd, keep a good Heart, all Things go on very well.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Had you any Apprehenſions that all was to be done at home, or that you was to have any foreign Aſſiſtance?

Lynch. In my Diſcourſe to him of the Uneaſineſs I was under at the Delay, I asked him if he had any Promiſe of any Succour from any Power Abroad? He told me, if we once made a Beginning, we ſhould not want them: But did inſinuate, that we ſhould not want Encouragement from the Court of France.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you expreſſed your Uneaſineſs at the Delay, what did he ſay to encourage you?

Lynch. The Reaſon he told me was, that Things went on very well, and would very ſoon be put in Execution.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what manner did you expreſs your Uneaſineſs?

Lynch. Nothing but that I was uneaſy, and I was afraid that Things did go wrong.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you ſay, did you ſay any thing relating to your own Circumſtances?

Lynch. In the Beginning I told Dr. Murphey, becauſe it would be a long while, ſome five or ſix Weeks, before I was to be introduced to Mr. Layer's Company, that I came on my own particular Buſineſs, and my Circumſtances would not permit me to be long here at my own Expence.

At

At the meeting with Mr. Layer, when I firſt made this Complaint to him, Mr. Layer told me I ſhould not want for a ſmall Matter, to maintain me in England. Accordingly Mr. Layer gave me ſome Money.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember how much that was?

Lynch. I cannot remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give you Money at any other Time?

Lynch. Mr. Layer gave me ſome Money the firſt Time, and afterwards he ſent me ſome Money by Dr. Murphey.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he give you any Money at any other Time?

Lynch. Yes, the laſt Time I was with him I had more.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many Times had you Money of him?

Lynch. Five or ſix Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what the Sums did amount to together?

Lynch. I can't recollect; but I believe about eight or ten Guineas.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it given you for?

Lynch. To keep me in England, and to aſſiſt in the intended Deſign of a Revolution.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. After you went to him, upon his Return out of the Country, do you remember the Diſcourſe that paſſed between you then?

Lynch. Yes: After I came to his Houſe, I expreſſed my Uneaſineſs at the Delay: Upon which he encouraged me, giving me to hope that Things went on very well, and our Deſign would effectually take Place.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you ask him any thing about the Army?

Lynch. I asked him if he had any Encouragement from the Guards and the Army? He told me, Yes, he had; that a great many of the Officers would not engage themſelves now, being well paid; but he ſaid he had ſpoke with ſeveral Officers of the Guards, who had aſſured him, that moſt of the common Soldiers would come in, as ſoon as we made a Beginning.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he mention any thing of the Time?

L. C. Juſt. When you asked him if he had any Encouragement from the Army, what did he ſay?

Lynch. He told me, that he had Encouragement from many of the Officers of the Army: That he had diſcourſed with ſeveral Serjeants of the Guards, who told him that the common Soldiers would be glad, after they had made a Beginning, to come in to 'em.

L. C. Juſt. Did he give you any Reaſon for this?

Lynch. Mr. Layer told me, the Serjeants told him ſo before they were encamped, and complained of their ill Uſage, and hard Uſage from the ſubaltern Officers.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was you acquainted with any Time or Day that was fixed?

Lynch. There was no fix'd Time: Mr. Layer told me, it was to be on the riſing of the Camp; becauſe they could not talk with the Soldiers ſo well, while they were encamped, as they could afterwards, when they were in their Quarters.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Was there any Conſultation of viewing any one's Houſe?

Lynch. Afterwards, in Diſcourſe he told me, that it was fit to go and view the Earl of Cadogan's Houſe; in caſe it was neceſſary to ſeize the ſaid Lord in his Houſe.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Where is his Houſe?

Lynch. In Pickadilly. Accordingly we appointed a Day to go; and I came to his Lodgings, and we took Coach, and away we went; and talking to him about it, he told me, he was very well acquainted with my Lord Cadogan, and had ſome Buſineſs with him, about an Eſtate which his Lordſhip was about buying: We went to his Houſe, but my Lord was not to be ſpoke with, or was not within, I don't remember which, but we were conducted into his Houſe; we view'd the inner Part of the Houſe, afterwards we went into the Garden, we view'd the lower Part of the Garden, then we went out in the Yard, and took a View of the Avenues round about the Houſe. I don't remember exactly the Time, but it was that Day that a Soldier ſhould have been ſhot in Hyde-Park.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Had you any Diſcourſe about the Feaſibleneſs of it?

Lynch. Yes, that it was eaſy to be done; if we had but ſome reſolute Gentlemen to ſtand by us, that it was very feaſible to be done.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Had you any Talk at that Time relating to the Tower?

Lynch. He told me, the Tower would be immediately ſurrender'd to the Party; on the Day the Plot was to be put in Execution, a certain Officer of the Guards would take upon him to mount the Guards there, who would facilitate the Delivery of the Tower to them.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Was there any talk of the Mint?

Lynch. Yes, afterwards: He ſaid there would be no doubt of the Mint; they would be glad to take the Opportunity to ſhake off their Confinement: And that they would put Arms into their Hands, according as they repaired to their Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you ſee the Priſoner next after the Time that you ſpeak of viewing my Lord Cadogan's Houſe?

Lynch. I ſaw him at his own Houſe, and at ſeveral Taverns in the City; and once he wrote to me, deſiring me to come to his Lodging; accordingly I went, and when I came to his Houſe, I met with a little Paper that was left for me, directing me to go to the Queen's-Head Tavern in Great Queen's-Street near Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and to enquire there for one Mr. Wilſon; which I did, and I was conducted into a Room where they ſaid Mr. Wilſon was, with Mr. Layer and another Man, who ſeem'd, by his Clothes to be a Serjeant of the Guards. I do not know the Man.

Mr. Att Gen. What paſſed then?

Lynch. We ſtaid a little while there, we talk'd over the Buſineſs, and drank good Succeſs to the Enterprize.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to take Notice, that when he went to Mr. Layer's Lodging, he found a Letter there, directing him to go to the Queen's-Head Tavern, and enquire for one Wilſon; that when he came there, Wilſon was there, and Mr. Layer, and another Man.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What paſſed at that Time?

Lynch. Nothing material.

Mr. Att. Gen. You talked about drinking good Succeſs to the Enterprize: Who drank that?

Lynch. We all drank that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Prisoner at the Bar drink it?

Lynch. Yes, he did. I told the Prisoner, when he went out, that I was mighty uneasy at the Delay of this Affair. He told me, I need not be uneasy, for every Thing went on well; and they had a Nobleman at the Helm, who had Authority from the Pretender, and would lose no Opportunity when a fit Time offered.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What did he call the Pretender?

Lynch. He called him the King. I was uneasy at the Delay, for fear of being discover'd.

L. C. Just. What Reason did he give you, why you should not be uneasy?

Lynch. Because their Designs were quickly to be put in Execution; and there was a Nobleman at the Helm who would put the Design in Execution, as having full Power and Authority from the King to act as he thought proper.

L. C. Just. Did you ask who that Nobleman was?

Lynch. Yes; but he never told me his Name, but said, that I should, in a proper Time, be presented to him, and receive my Commission and Orders from him to seize my Lord Cadogan.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we shall now gratify the Prisoner's Counsel, with an Account of what happened in Essex; I hope they will not be impatient to hear that: Therefore, pray acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, when you went out of Town with Mr. Layer.

Lynch. My Lord, I was at Mr. Layer's House the Day when the Bishop of Rochester was sent to the Tower; he ask'd me, if I would ride abroad with him the next Day to take the Air; I consented to it, and came the next Morning to his House; and Mr. Layer asked me if I mounted with Furniture: I told him no; but that I had a double Barrel Fowling-piece, which if his Servant would carry, would do as well. He then desired me to go and stay for him without Aldgate, and get my Gun ready loaden, for he had that about him which he would not lose for any thing in the World. I went and staid till about ten or eleven a Clock, when Mr. Layer met me, and gave the Gun to his Servant to carry. On the Road he told me, we were going to my Lord North and Grey's, whom he was very well acquainted with, and that he would recommend me to him as a Friend of his. When we got to the Green Man, he told me, we had better go in and dine there, because Dinner-time would be over before we could get to my Lord North and Grey's. Whilst Dinner was getting ready, we had several Discourses on the same Subject, Of the Uneasiness of the Nation, and its Inclination to a Revolution, and how to bring it about; upon which he pulled a Paper out of his Pocket, and gave it me to read the latter Part of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Can you remember what it contained?

Lynch. I remember some Lines of it; which was, in general, to invite the Nation to an Insurrection, and to shake off the Calamities and Miseries they endured under the present Ministry. And it was mentioned in the said Paper, that the Earl of Cadogan was actually in their Custody; thereby encouraging the Army to revolt, with an Offer of three Guineas to every Horseman and Serjeant, and two Guineas to every Corporal, and one Guinea to every common Soldier, to be paid immediately on their joining the Party, and a Promise of farther Preferment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you read this?

Lynch. I did, out of the Paper in Mr. Layer's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know whose Handwriting it was?

Lynch. According to our Discourse, I thought it might be his writing.

L. C. Just. But he produced it?

Lynch. Yes, my Lord, he produced it.

L. C. Just. You say you imagine, from some Discourse between you, that it was his Handwriting; what Reason was there in all his Discourse, that induced you to think so?

Lynch. He talk'd of it as being of his own making; besides, there were several Interlineations, Dashings-out, and Interlineations afterwards. He was very well satisfied and easy as to me, and said, he could wish that he could bring Matters about so, as that I could have the sole Direction of seizing some of the Ministry, and namely, my Lord Townshend, my Lord Carteret, and Mr. Walpole.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse about seizing the King?

Lynch. He said, when the Design was put in Execution, the Army would declare in their Favour, and they would send a strong Guard to take care of the King's Person.

Mr. Att. Gen. How to take care of the King's Person? What was you to do?

Lynch. Nothing but to secure the King's Person; by what he told me, it was for the Publick Good of the Kingdom; that they did not mean, nor had they any Design on the King's Person, but only to keep him in Security from any Insult.

Mr. Att. Gen. What more passed at that Time?

Lynch. Nothing more in particular.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any talk relating to the Army?

Lynch. I said before what related to the Army.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any Discourse about a Scheme or Plan?

Lynch. He told me there was a Scheme laid on that Foot, of which I told you the first Step was to seize the Earl of Cadogan, and then, according as the Army came over, to take care and seize the King's Person; and he thought the proper Time to put this in Execution, would be at the Rising of the Camp in Hyde-Park.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any Objection made to this?

Lynch. No; I made no Objection, only shew'd my Uneasiness at the long Delay.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When you so expressed your Uneasiness, what did he say?

Lynch. He told me, if I could think or propose any Thing more proper, that I should do it. After that we rode toward Epping, and went to my Lord North and Grey's; and there Mr. Layer introduced me as his Friend. We staid there all Night, and dined there the next Day. In the Evening we came away, in company with another ther Gentleman that I did not know; but we talk'd on the Road about the Situation of my Lord's Houſe; and Mr. Layer told me he had recommended me to his Lordſhip as his particular Friend, and asked me how I liked him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he ask you any Queſtions? Do you remember what he called his Lordſhip?

Lynch. I don't remember any other Name but My Lord.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When he asked your Opinion of him, and how you liked him, did he deſcribe him in any other manner, or only called him My Lord?

Lynch. He only called him my Lord North and Grey; he only asked me how I liked my Lord North and Grey.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Liked his Lordſhip, for what?

Lynch. That was all.

Mr. Reeve. Had you any Talk with him about the Perſon that was to have the chief Command?

Lynch. Yes; but he never named the Perſon.

Mr. Weſt. Had you never any Diſcourſe who was to command the Party that was to ſeize my Lord Cadogan?

Lynch. I was to command that Party.

Mr. Weſt. Was you any other time at my Lord North and Grey's?

Lynch. Yes; another time I went to my Lord North and Grey's, where I found Mr. Layer, and expreſſed to Mr. Layer the Uneaſineſs I was in at the long Delay, and that I was afraid our Hopes would vaniſh; and told him, if things were not ſoon put in Execution, I would withdraw my ſelf. Mr. Layer bid me not be uneaſy, Things might perhaps be ſooner put in Execution than I imagined.

Mr. Weſt. Where was this?

Lynch. At Epping, at my Lord North and Grey's.

Mr. Weſt. Did you come home together?

Lynch. No; I came home that Night: Mr. Layer remained there.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you ſee him ſome time afterwards?

Lynch. I met him at his own Houſe, where I expreſſing my Uneaſineſs as formerly, he ſaid, I ſhould not be uneaſy, for Things would ſoon take Effect; and bid me get my ſelf ready to execute my Deſign; becauſe they had Notice the Camp would ſoon break up, which was the Time deſigned to put Things in Execution. And at another time he told me, that the Declaration which he had ſhewn me at the Green Man, had mentioned no particular Perſons, but in general the Safety and Publick Good of the Kingdom: There was nothing mentioned of the Pretender in it, but that he had thought fit to put it now in the Pretender's Name.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Who was you to receive your particular Orders from, for the executing your Deſign?

Lynch. From that Nobleman, who was to act as General in this Affair.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you never hear from Mr. Layer who that was?

Lynch. No; I don't recollect he was ever named by Mr. Layer; he told me, that the Declaration was afterwards put in the Name of the Pretender.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was it he recommended you to my Lord North and Grey for?

Lynch. He recommended me to him as one of his particular Friends.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Diſcourſe had you at that Time?

Lynch. We talk'd indifferently; we diſcours'd nothing of the Revolution at that Time: He told me he had given the Declaration to a Non-juring-Miniſter to get printed, and had given twenty Guineas for that Purpoſe.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was you acquainted before with my Lord North and Grey?

Lynch. No; he introduced me as one of his Friends.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Did you know when Mr. Layer was firſt taken up?

Lynch. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. How long before that had you been with him?

Lynch. I can't recollect the Time. I firſt became acquainted with Mr. Layer about June.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What paſſed the laſt time you was with him, before he was taken up? Was there any particular Conference between you?

Lynch. I told you about the Declaration, and about my Uneaſineſs, and that he told me Things would ſucceed ſooner than I thought for.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. When you expreſs'd your Uneaſineſs, did he uſe any Vehemence of Expreſſion, as to what Part he would act?

Lynch. He told me ſeveral times, when I was ſo irreſolute and uneaſy, ſaith he, don't you be uneaſy; rather than all ſhould fail, I will ſtir up and be a ſecond Maſſinello.

Mr. Weſt. Had you any Converſation about the taking up of any Perſon?

Lynch. He only told me at that Time, that if the Nobleman at the Head of Affairs ſhould be taken up, every thing would be quaſh'd.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. That Nobleman was not taken up at that Time then?

Lynch. No.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Recommendation had you to my Lord North and Grey?

Lynch. Only as a Friend of Mr. Layer's, to paſs away the Time in Summer.

Mr. Hungerford. I preſume they have done with giving the Evidence, which they intend, of any Overt-Act in the County of Eſſex; if they have, I would crave the Liberty to obſerve.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We have not done; if you have any thing to obſerve, it muſt be when we have gone through our Evidence.

L. C. Juſt. When they have given all their Evidence, then will be your proper time to object to the Evidence, and to ſhew whether 'tis competent or no.

Mr. Hungerford. I do not preſs to make any Remarks upon their whole Evidence; but if they have given all the Evidence they intend to give of any Overt-Act in Eſſex, for on that depends the Fate of this Gentleman at the Bar, I hope we are now (before they ſhall be permitted to give Evidence of any farther Overt-Act of Treaſon in another County) at Liberty to object, that the Tranſaction in Eſſex is not an Overt-Act at all of the High-Treaſon laid in this Indictment.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We have not done. When we have given our Evidence, then it will be proper for them to make their objections to the Whole.

Mr. Hungerford. I humbly offer it to your Lordship's Consideration, whether it is right and proper to go on in such a Method, and to take up the Time of the Court, when the Gentlemen on the other Side say, they have done with giving Evidence as to any Overt-Act in the County of Essex.

Mr. Soll. Gen. No; we have not done with that Evidence.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't know whether your Lordship will indulge us to ask the Witness a Question or two now.

L. C. Just. Propose your Questions, and we will tell you.

Mr. Ketelbey. Whether he hath any Offer of Pardon propos'd to him to induce him to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar; which if he hath, we apprehend will invalidate his Evidence.

Lynch. No, Sir; I have no Promise of Pardon at all: I only do this out of Justice, to make what Reparation I can, and to save the Blood of many People.

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to ask him a few more Questions. I think you say the first time you were introduced into this Gentleman's Company, the Prisoner at the Bar, was at the Griffin-Tavern in Holborn, and that he then told you he had great Designs in hand; and that there was an Insurrection design'd, and they wanted a Person of Resolution to seize a General: This, you say, was the first Time that ever you saw the Prisoner at the Bar. How came you to have that Share of Confidence in a Man that you never saw before?

Lynch. I told you I was in Discourse with Dr. Murphey a great many Days and Weeks before I saw Mr. Layer; I told you how every Day I saw him, and always discours'd about the Insurrection, and how he told me then that he would recommend me to a Man that had the Management of the greatest Part in this Affair; and I ask'd every Day when I should be introduced to him: He told me, the Time was not come yet; but when it was a proper Time, he would introduce me.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think you give that for a Reason, why you had that Confidence in him, because you had been recommended by one Dr. Murphey. How came you to have that mighty Dependence on Dr. Murphey?

Lynch. Because Dr. Murphey and I had been acquainted several Years ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. I hope you was not in any wicked Design with Dr. Murphey, and so much acquainted, as to recommend you in a Case of Treason.

Lynch. There was a common Friendship between us.

Mr. Ketelbey. How came he to trust you? Would you have trusted him in a Business of Treason?

Lynch. We have been concerned in Affairs together.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long was you at the Green Man with Mr. Layer?

Lynch. I can't say exactly the Time.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't ask you exactly to a Minute or two; but was you there an Hour, or two, or three Hours?

Lynch. I can't say whether we were there an Hour or two; but we had something dress'd for Dinner, and the Matter was discoursed of by us before Dinner.

Mr. Ketelbey. When you first alighted from your Horses, what Room was you shewn into?

Lynch. We were shewn into a Room up one Pair of Stairs on the right-hand, the first Room.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it towards the Street, or backwards?

Lynch. It look'd into the common Road.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you look out of the Window and see a Person of your Acquaintance?

Lynch. I saw two Gentlemen, but did not know them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you not look out of the Window, and say, you saw a Gentleman of your Acquaintance?

Lynch. I said I saw two Gentlemen that I thought I had seen before.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did not you go down to those Gentlemen?

Lynch. No; I did not go down to them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did not you go down to them?

Lynch. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did not you say so to Mr. Layer, in the Drawer's Presence?

Lynch. No.

Prisoner. Did not you tell me that those Gentlemen were your Acquaintance?

Lynch. I told you, those two Gentlemen I had seen before.

Prisoner. How long were we together at the Green-Man? Were the Horses put up, or not?

Lynch. I can't tell.

Prisoner. Was there any thing dress'd for our Dinner but a Beef-Stake?

Lynch. No, nothing else.

Prisoner. Did not you go down Stairs, pretending you went to those Gentlemen?

Lynch. No, I did not tell you I went to those Gentlemen.

Prisoner. Did you not go down Stairs?

Lynch. Yes, I did; and came up again immediately.

Prisoner. Was not Dinner on Table when you came up again?

Lynch. I went down twice before Dinner.

Prisoner. Then you must consequently leave me in the Room.

Lynch. I went down to make Water.

Prisoner. What did you go down the second Time for?

Lynch. Out of Curiosity.

Prisoner. How long did you stay?

Lynch. Not both Times above two Minutes.

Prisoner. I was then alone, when you went down.

Lynch. Yes.

Prisoner. Was this Discourse before or after Dinner?

Lynch. It was before Dinner.

Prisoner. When you came up the second Time, was not Dinner on the Table?

Lynch. It was come up.

Prisoner. And yet the Discourse we had was before Dinner?

Lynch. Yes, it was before Dinner.

Priſoner. How much Time might we ſpend before Dinner, half an Hour, or an Hour?

Lynch. I don't remember; but it was a good while.

Priſoner. Was not the double Barrel Gun in the Room?

Lynch. I don't know whether it was there, or whether your Servant had it.

Priſoner. At the Time of Dinner, was my Servant, or Drawer, in the Room?

Lynch. Neither of them was in the Room.

Priſoner. You ſay we were a good while, you and I, alone; pray, how long?

Lynch. I cannot ſay poſitively how long.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you any Copy of that Part of the Paper he gave you to read, and which you read?

Lynch. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Was the Whole of it of any Length?

Lynch. To the beſt of my Remembrance it was a common Sheet of Paper.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you read the Whole?

Lynch. No: He doubled it down, and gave me the latter Part of it to read.

Mr. Ketelbey. Some Things you ſeem to remember, and ſome Things you don't remember: Was it printed, or written?

Lynch. It was written.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did he not mention it to be the Prince of Orange's Declaration?

Lynch. No, he did not.

Priſoner. Was not the Paper blotted?

Lynch. In that I ſaw there were two or three Places interlined.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I think the Gentlemen did ſay they had not done with their Evidence, with relation to an Overt-Act in Eſſex; if they have not, they will do well to go on now: But we hope they ſhall not go into Overt-Acts committed in any other County, till they make the whole of their Proofs of an Overt-Act in Eſſex.

L. C. Juſt. You have been told, they ſhould proceed in their own Method, and when they have done, you may make what Obſervations may be of Service to your Client.

Mr. Hungerford. Relations of Fact ariſing in another County, which have no Relation to the Fact ariſing in Eſſex, we hope they ſhall not go into, to amuſe or captivate the Jury, the Court, and the Auditory.

L. C. Juſt. Sure never any Thing was like this! It is our Province to give Directions, and we think it not proper to interrupt the King's Counſel, but that they ſhould proceed in their own Method: You ſhall be heard as long as you pleaſe, when you come to make your Obſervations.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Priſoner hath a Right to ſay any thing that is proper to the Court and the Jury, in his Defence, but he muſt ſay it openly; he is not to talk privately with the Jury; tho' I am ſure they are Gentlemen of ſo great Worth and Honour, as not to be influenced.

Mr. Att. Gen. I dare ſay the Jury won't be influenced; but he talks to his Counſel ſo loud, that the Jury may eaſily hear every Word he ſays.

L. C. Juſt. He muſt not ſpeak ſo loud.

Mr. Att. Gen. I juſt now heard him ſay, It was ſtrange to go on with Evidence that would not be to the Purpoſe. I heard him, as I ſat here; let him deny it if he can.

L. C. Juſt. I hope you will not offer any thing of that Kind, Mr. Layer: You have a Right to diſcourſe with your Counſel, but you muſt do it in ſuch a Manner as the Jury may not hear.

Mr. Hungerford. Indeed, my Lord, he ſhall have no Encouragement from us for any ſuch Conduct.

Matthew Plunkett ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Tell my Lord and the Jury, whether you know the Priſoner at the Bar.

Plunkett. Yes, I do know him.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Will you tell my Lord and the Jury, upon what Account, and by whoſe Means, you firſt became acquainted?

Plunkett. One Major Barnewell brought me firſt acquainted with Mr. Layer; he had an Execution in his Houſe in Great Queen-Street, and this Major Barnewell came to me, and deſired me to get a Couple of Grenadiers. I brought him two; we went to Mr. Layer's Houſe, and his Clerk let us in at the Back-door, and the Grenadiers turned the Officers out, and Mr. Layer gave them a Crown, and a Glaſs of Brandy.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. When was this?

Plunkett. As near as I can gueſs, it is going on of five Years.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Tell my Lord and the Jury, what Month in this laſt Year you renew'd the Acquaintance, and who brought you to him?

Plunkett. The next Acquaintance I had afterwards, was by Major Barnewell, who was arreſted, and he ſent me with a Letter to his Houſe, to deſire him to relieve him.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Do you know any thing of one James Plunkett?

Plunkett. Yes: He came to me from Mr. Layer, in July laſt, to deſire me to meet him; but how this Counſellor Layer and this James Plunkett came acquainted I don't know.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What was he?

Plunkett. I don't know what he is; he is acquainted with Mr. Layer.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What Profeſſion is he of?

Plunkett. I don't know; nor how he lives, or gets his Bread.

L. C. Juſt. Go on.

Plunkett. Mr. Layer paid the Charges for Major Barnewell, and brought him out of the Marſhalſea.

Mr. Reeve. How long was this ago?

Plunkett. To the beſt of my Knowledge, four Years ago.

Mr. Reeve. He is giving an Account how he came to be acquainted with Mr. Layer; the firſt Time was upon the Account of reſcuing Mr. Layer's Goods; the other Time was by Mr. Layer's redeeming Major Barnewell out of the Marſhalſea, and paying his Debt: Give an Account how you came laſt acquainted with him.

Plunkett. I being at Home, in my own Room.

Mr. Reeve. How long ago?

Plunkett. I believe, as near as I can gueſs, it was laſt July.

Mr. Reeve. Give an Account of what happened then.

Plunkett. Now this James Plunkett came into my Room, ſat down, and he aſked me how I did, and ſaid, he was glad to ſee me; and he aſked me, Are you not well acquainted in the Army? Yes, ſaith I, I know a great many in the Army, both Officers and common Soldiers. Do you know, ſaith he, any of the Serjeants of the Guards? I know ſome of 'em, ſaid I. He brought me out of the Room, becauſe my Wife was there, and then he opened his Mind to me: Saith he, Do you know one Mr. Layer? (I had forgot the Gentleman, being ſo ſlightly acquainted with him;) No, ſaith I, I don't know him. No matter, ſaith he, I have appointed a Place for you to meet him at, at the Italian Coffee-Houſe in Ruſſel-Court; and at the End of this, Mr. Plunkett aſked me to keep Correſpondence with them for the Pretender's Service. I did not go to the Italian Coffee-Houſe, not being in a proper Station, nor having Money for that Purpoſe: So I did not think proper to go to the Italian Coffee-Houſe; but the Sunday following I went to St. Andrew's Church, and meeting with ſome Friends, they told me Dr. Sacheverel preach'd there; and ſo they decoyed me to go and hear him preach there. When Service was over, to the beſt of my Knowledge, as I was going Home, between twelve and one a-Clock, I met Mr. Layer accidentally in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields; Mr. Layer he look'd at me, he was really a perfect Stranger to me, for I did not know him again; ſaith he, Is not your Name Plunkett? Yes, ſaith I. Was there not one with you t'other Night, one James Plunkett? Yes, Sir, ſays I. Where did he deſire you to go? ſaid he. I anſwer'd, He deſired me to go to the Italian Coffee-Houſe in Ruſſel-Court. Saith he, 'Tis well enough: Do you not know me? No, ſaith I, you have the Advantage of me; I aſk your Pardon, for I don't remember you. Don't you remember one Layer? ſaid he. Then I call'd to Mind that I knew the Gentleman. Saith he, Will you walk on this Side? I walked back again towards Little Turn-Stile, and we ſtruck up the Wall-Side; and juſt as we came under a great Coach-Houſe Gate-Way, we went in, and in the Gate-Way he talk'd to me; ſaith he, I am told that you are a very honeſt Man, and well-affected ſo and ſo.

Mr. Reeve. Well-affected, to whom?

Plunkett. Well-affected as to the Buſineſs of the Pretender. At the ſame Time we had this Talk, he bid me not mention it to James Plunkett, that I had ſeen him: Then he aſked me if I knew any Serjeants in the Guards; for, ſaith he, I want ſuch old Soldiers as you are your ſelf, that could diſcipline a Mob, for we have other Men enough amongſt us; but if we could get ſome old Soldiers, if that could be managed, they would be finely rewarded. But Sir, ſaith I, the Pretender is a Papiſt. Saith he, what Difference is there between a Papiſt King, and a Lutheran King?

Mr. Reeve. He ſaid he wanted ſuch old Soldiers as you; for what?

Plunkett. He wanted them to diſcipline a Mob, and to put them in Order. Then we began to reaſon about the Pretender; Why, ſaith he, we had as good have a Papiſt for our King as a Lutheran.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What did you object?

Plunkett. I ſaid he was a Papiſt. Says he, We had as good have a Papiſt for our King, as to have a Lutheran, I don't know what Difference there is; but as it was, the Nation was enſlaved, and the People were obliged to be Slaves. I aſked him, Sir, who is the Promoter of this, that may join us? You ſee, ſays he, what Injuſtice is done to you, you have ſerved Abroad, and others are put over your Head; you have had and found great Hardſhips. I aſked him who promoted this? He ſaid, the Lord North and Grey. Says I, He is a Peer of the Realm. Saith he, He is a fine General. And the Earl of Strafford he mentioned.

Mr. Reeve. Who did he ſay was a fine General?

Plunkett. He ſaid my Lord North and Grey was a fine General; and aſk'd me what I thought of him? I ſaid I had never been under his Command, but I look'd upon him to be a great Man, and one of the Peers of the Land. And then he mentioned my Lord Strafford, What do you think of him? To which I made the like Anſwer. And what do you think of General Primroſe? I ſaid I had lately ſeen him at Chelſea, paſſing by in his Coach, but that he was an old Man; however, Mr. Layer ſaid he was a brave General. Then he aſk'd me what I thought of General Webb? I ſaid I had heard of his Fame.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When he ſaid my Lord North and Grey was a fine General, and when you aſk'd who promoted it, whether did Mr. Layer tell you what their Deſign was to do? When Mr. Layer aſk'd you, what do you think of this Perſon, and the other Perſon, what were they to do?

Plunkett. To raiſe a Rebellion.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was that talk'd of at that Time?

Plunkett. Not at that Time.

L. C. Juſt. You ſaid he wanted ſuch old Soldiers as you; for what Purpoſe? You ſay he wanted them to diſcipline a Mob, and put it in Order.

Plunkett. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. Did he tell you how many he wanted?

Plunkett. No; he did not ſay how many.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Was there any thing ſaid about their Names at that Time?

Plunkett. Mr. Layer would have me take a Liſt of their Names, and to enroll them, that they might know where they lodg'd, and where they quartered; that ſo when he wanted them, he might ſend for them to be in Readineſs.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Was there any Number he aſk'd you the Names of?

Plunkett. I ſaid I knew a great many, and that I could get twenty five. Saith he, you ought to have a Liſt of their Names, where they lodge, that they may be in Readineſs for a Call: And ſaith he, This would have gone on ſome Time ago, only Somebody made Diſcovery of it to the French Ambaſſador, and he wrote to the Regent, and ſo it was diſcovered to the King: And, ſaith he, The Duke of Ormond was to come in one Ship, and General Dillon in another, and they would bring their Numbers with them; and then I ſhould ſee that the Army would not oppoſe them. And when I parted from him, he gave me half a Crown to drink.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What was that to do?

Plunkett. It was to encourage me. And he ſaid he would ſend a Meſſenger to me; and in a Day or two afterwards there came a Meſſenger from him: I was not at home, but he ſpoke with my Wife.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Who was that?

Plunkett. The Un-juring Miniſter,

Mr. Att. Gen. What was his Name?

Plunkett. His Name was Jeffreys.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay you was not at home the firſt Time; did he come again?

Plunkett. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after?

Plunkett. A matter of five or ſix days after.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee him?

Plunkett. Yes, I ſaw him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What paſſed between you?

Plunkett. He aſk'd me if I knew Mr. Layer? I told him I did. He then carried me to the Caſtle Tavern in Drury-Lane, where we drank two Pints of Wine, which he paid for; after the Nonjuring Parſon told me he came from Layer, who gave his Service, and told me that he was employed by Mr. Layer to go to ſuch as I was, who were old Serjeants, to get a Parcel together to diſcipline Citizens, and other Mob in the Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. What further paſs'd between you and Mr. Jeffreys?

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to object to that Queſtion.

Mr. Att. Gen. If I don't bring it home to Mr. Layer, it will ſignify nothing.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Ketelbey, you know that many times in Diſcourſe it is neceſſary to mention Introductions, to let in what is material: Whatever paſs'd between him and Jeffreys, don't affect your Client.

Mr. Hungerford. It is a conſtant Rule, if a Man ſpeaks of a third Perſon's Tranſactions, it is declared as nothing, and commonly ſtop'd from being given in Evidence.

L. C. Juſt. If they begin right, they will give Evidence in ſuch a Method as to be underſtood: By declaring what paſſed between him and Plunkett, the Evidence may be the better underſtood.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't doubt your Lordſhip's giving Direction right; but I obſerve this, leſt ſome of the Jury ſhould not take it right.

L. C. Juſt. Let the Evidence be given in ſuch a manner as may be underſtood; what is introductory goes for nothing, but it is in order to explain the Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. What paſs'd between you and the Nonjuring Parſon, at the Caſtle Tavern?

Plunkett. He talked to me of the ſame Subject, deſiring me to get Men in Readineſs; he told me, he had a great many Places to go to beſides me with this Errand, and then we parted. Another time he came to me, we went to an Ale-Houſe, to the Cock and Bottle in the Strand, where he gave me half a Guinea, and ſaid, there is a Token, Mr. Layer had ſent it me to give me Encouragement.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. At that Time that Mr. Layer ſaid he would ſend a Meſſenger to you, did he mention any thing of Money?

Plunkett. Mr. Layer ſaid he would ſend Money by the Meſſenger to me.

L. C. Juſt. You ſay he told you, that he would ſend you Money by the Meſſenger.

Plunkett. He told me ſo.

L. C. Juſt. Afterwards you ſay, one came to you as from him, and encouraged you, and gave you half a Guinea.

Plunkett. He did: I am upon my Oath before God and Man, I will ſay nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Did you receive any Meſſage from Jeffreys to appoint a Meeting with Mr. Layer?

Plunkett. Some Time afterwards I met Mr. Layer, at eight a-Clock, at the Caſtle Tavern in Drury-Lane; there was the Landlord, and Mr. Layer, who had two Bottles of Wine, and ſome Bread and Cheeſe: He would have had me eat, but I told him I could not eat; but I drank of the Wine. When he had diſcours'd with me about the Affair, to encourage me he gave me a Crown; I went croſs Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, ſo went home.

Mr. Weſt. What did he give you the Crown for?

Plunkett. To encourage me to liſt Men for the Pretender.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Letter by the Penny-Poſt?

Plunkett. That Morning Mr. Layer was going to Norfolk, Plunkett told me Mr. Layer was going out of Town, and would be glad to ſee me. I went to Mr. Layer, and his Horſes were at the Door; he deſired me to walk up two Pair of Stairs forwards, and by the ſame Token order'd his Servant to charge his Blunderbuſs in the Room. Saith Mr. Layer, I have given a Guinea to the Nonjuring Miniſter to give you, to do what Service you can; and when I am abroad, you may be ſure I ſhall not be idle.

Mr. Reeve. Was any Propoſal made to any other Perſon?

Plunkett. I brought an old Soldier who had been in the Service many Years.

Mr. Reeve. What was his Name?

Plunkett. John Child; I brought him as thinking he might have been of Service to them.

L. C. Juſt. What was it Mr. Layer ſaid when he was going into the Country?

Plunkett. He told me he would not be idle there.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What did he deſire of you?

Plunkett. He deſired me to ſee and get what Soldiers I could for him: I came to the Nonjuring Miniſter, and told him I had got twenty five. Then Mr. Layer aſk'd me, why I did not bring a Liſt of them, that he might know where their Habitations were, and that they might be in Readineſs at the Time. I diſputed with Mr. Layer what would they do for Arms? No fear of Arms, ſaith he; Arms will be provided for them. After he returned from the Country to the Town, this Mr. Plunkett was the firſt Meſſenger that was ſent to me; he came and told me Mr. Layer was come to Town; and this Nonjuring Parſon ſent me a Letter by the Penny-Poſt; Mr. Child was in my Room and read it; the Contents were, Mr. Layer is come to Town, and would be very glad to ſee you: No more, but your humble Servant, William Jeffreys. By this I knew his Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. By this Letter he told you Mr. Layer would be glad to ſee you; did you go to him?

Plunkett. Yes, I went to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where? To his own Houſe?

Plunkett. Yes, to his own Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. What paſſed between you and Mr. Layer at that Time?

Plunkett. I remember at that Time, when I came to him, he gave me a Guinea with his own Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who gave it you?

Plunkett. Mr. Layer, after he came from the Country, gave it me, and I recommended Mr. Child to him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When you recommended Mr. Child, what did Layer ſay?

Plunkett. He ſaid he had no Buſineſs for him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. For what Purpoſe was Child recommended to Mr. Layer?

Plunkett. I recommended him as an honeſt Man, as one that was well-affected, as he deſired me.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Upon what Account did you recommend him?

Plunkett. Upon the Account to be a Pretender's Man.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you ever receive any Money to give to Child?

Plunkett. I receiv'd half a Guinea from Mr. Layer to give to Mr. Child.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. For what Purpoſe was it?

Plunkett. For to encourage him in the Service, to be truſty to him, and to be a Pretender's Man.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. By what Name did he call the Pretender?

Plunkett. He called him the King.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Talk with him any other Time?

Plunkett. The Sunday before he was taken up I was with him, and he was talking and ſaying the King was as fine a Shooter as any in Europe.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whom did he mean by the King?

Plunkett. The Pretender, that he was as fine a Shooter as any in Europe; he ſhot nineteen out of twenty. I ſaid, that was fine ſhooting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this Diſcourſe?

Plunkett. In his own Parlour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you recollect any other Diſcourſe there was at that Time, beſides that of Shooting?

Plunkett. Yes, there was; we talk'd of thoſe Men that would do Service. I aſk'd him what Rewards thoſe Men, that would do Service for their King and Country, ſhould have; he told me, that they, and their Families, were to be for ever taken Care of.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any other Promiſe made to you?

Plunkett. There was no Promiſe; only he was the Man who ſaid, if I would follow his Directions, he would promote me; that he would engage to do great Matters for me; and what I ſuffer'd in the Army, he would make me Amends for.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Diſcourſe about the Diſpoſition of the Nation?

Plunkett. He ſaid, that moſt of the Nation was tir'd with the preſent Government; and he ſaid, that King George was for ruining of the Nation.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Talk of any Perſons at Court?

Plunkett. Yes; he ſaid, what ſignified the Government; there were but only eight or nine Upſtarts that belong'd to King George's Court; that the ancient Peers of the Realm would not be run down; for they ſhould be made Slaves, if they did not prevent it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Diſcourſe any other Time about the Dutch or the French?

Plunkett. Yes; I do remember that he ſaid, here is a Dutch Army come in upon this Nation, and then the French Army will come in, and take our Rights and Liberties from us: You will keep a Dutch Army, and it will be to make a War among our ſelves.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What would he have to cure all this?

Plunkett. He told me, that when the Inſurrection was, there would be a great many Half-Pay-Officers as I knew that would be on the Pretender's Side, and eſpecially thoſe of the Names of Fitzgerald; but I never knew any Fitzgerald Abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have done examining this Witneſs.

Priſoner. You ſay your firſt Acquaintance with me was in Queen's-Street, and that Major Barnwell deſired you to aſſiſt me, there being an Execution in my Houſe; was it not ſo?

Plunkett. Yes.

Priſoner. At the ſame Time you called me Counſellor Layer?

Plunkett. Yes; I came to your Houſe.

Priſoner. Did I employ you?

Plunkett. Major Barnwell ſent me to get a Couple of Grenadiers, and you ordered your Clerk to let them in at the Back-Door; and the two Grenadiers, which were confined in the Savoy afterwards for it, drove the Officers out.

Priſoner. Was it the Landlord of the Houſe's Goods, or my Goods?

Plunkett. I cannot tell; how ſhould I know whether they were yours, or his? they were in your Houſe.

Priſoner. You ſaid it was about five Years before I ſaw you in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

Plunkett. It was when the Army was broke; and I came over from Ireland.

Priſoner. Well, you ſay, five Years afterwards I met you in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and gave you half a Crown to drink. I told you my Lord North and Grey was to be General: That my Lord Strafford was concerned in it.

Plunkett. No; you told me they were Promoters of it.

Priſoner. Promoters of what?

Plunkett. Of this Conſpiracy.

Priſoner. So you did not know me? nor I did not know you.

Plunkett. Yes, you knew me; therefore, Sir, ſaid I, you have an Advantage againſt me; for I don't know you. Afterwards we met one another by Accident. Says you, Don't tell Plunkett you met me.

Priſoner. What Plunkett?

Plunkett. James Plunkett.

Priſoner. Where lives James Plunkett?

Plunkett. I don't know: However that's not material.

Priſoner. Did not you come to my Houſe ſome time after this; and deſire me to lend you thirteen Shillings, upon Account of being Bail in an Action in the Marſhal's Court?

Plunkett. That was two Months after: There was a Soldier which was arreſted by a Marſhal's Court Writ.

Priſoner. And I lent you thirteen Shillings in order to diſcharge him?

Plunkett. Yes, you did.

Priſoner. Did not you afterwards aſk me for ſome Money on Account of Sir Daniel Carrol?

Plunkett. No.

Priſoner.

Priſoner. Did not you make a Demand on Sir Daniel?

Plunkett. No: I told you my Affairs with Sir Daniel. You ſaid you would not meddle your ſelf, but you would write to him.

Priſoner. Did you not bring a Paper, and ſay, Sir Daniel had agreed to pay you twenty Pounds when he received his Pay?

Plunkett. No: I brought no Papers to you.

Priſoner. Did not you tell me, it would be the greateſt Kindneſs in the World to you to advance twenty Shillings for you?

Plunkett. I never aſk'd you in the Courſe of my Life.

Priſoner. Did you never borrow any Money of me?

Plunkett. No; I never borrowed any Money of you, otherwiſe than to get Men liſted for the Pretender.

Priſoner. I ſhall ſhew that you are a little miſtaken by and by.

Mr. Hungerford. You ſaid you was decoyed to Church?

Plunkett. Decoyed! I ſaid it was out of my Way, when my own Pariſh Church was nearer.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you uſe to go to Church?

Plunkett. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. You ſay, the firſt time you ſaw this James Plunkett, he came to you when your Wife was in the Room?

Plunkett. The firſt time I ſaw him, was, when Mr. Layer releas'd Major Barnewell out of the Marſhalſea.

Mr. Ketelbey. When James Plunkett came to your Houſe, he took you by the Arm, and told you, he came from Mr. Layer; did he tell you that firſt time, he came from Mr. Layer?

Plunkett. Upon my Oath he did.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Diſcourſe had you the firſt Time? Did he only aſk you to go and meet Mr. Layer?

Plunkett. He came to me, and deſired me to meet Mr. Layer at the Italian Coffee-Houſe in Ruſſel-Court.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did James Plunkett talk to you about liſting Men for the Pretender the firſt time he ſaw you?

Plunkett. No; he only was ſent on an Errand from Mr. Layer.

Mr. Ketelbey. And then you came to the Nonjuring Parſon: The Unjuring Parſon, as you call him. What Diſcourſe had you with him?

Plunkett. The ſame Diſcourſe paſs'd between us about liſting Men.

Mr. Ketelbey. What, the firſt time you ſaw James Plunkett, and the firſt Time you ſaw the Nonjuring Parſon?

Plunkett. Becauſe he came from Mr. Layer.

Mr. Ketelbey. So you truſted both of 'em at firſt Sight, and talk'd to 'em about liſting Men for the Pretender?

Plunkett. Yes, both talk'd to me.

Mr. Ketelbey. How many times had this Unjuring Parſon been with you, before you knew his Name?

Plunkett. He had been with me two or three times; he told me his Name was Jeffreys, but did not tell me his Chriſtian Name.

L. C. Juſt. Did he tell you his Name was Jeffreys the firſt time?

Plunkett. He told me his Name was Jeffreys.

L. C. Juſt. How long after was it that this Letter was ſent to you by Mr. Jeffreys?

Plunkett. It was the time when Mr. Layer came from the Country.

L. C. Juſt. How long ago was that?

Plunkett. I believe about ten Moths ago: I mean ten Weeks ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. I would not ſurprize you; I would have you conſider you are upon your Oath: Is it ten Months, or ten Weeks?

Plunkett. Ten Weeks.

Mr. Ketelbey. How came you to remember the Contents of the Letter ſo exactly?

Plunkett. I heard it repeated over.

Mr. Ketelbey. Pray repeat it over again.

Plunkett. Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Layer is come to Town; I ſhould be very glad to ſee you: So I reſt your humble Servant, William Jeffreys.

Mr. Ketelbey. Where is that Letter?

Plunkett. I don't know; the Letter is loſt.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember how long 'tis ſince this Letter was loſt?

Plunkett. Why, I miſs'd it about two Months ago, or more.

Mr. Ketelbey. Two Months ago, or more. How long was it after you receiv'd it that you miſs'd it?

Plunkett. I kept the Letter in my Pocket ſome time.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long?

Plunkett. I believe I had it three Weeks.

Mr. Ketelbey. So that 'tis ten Weeks ſince you received this Letter, two Months ſince you loſt it; you kept it in your Pocket three Weeks: You can read Writing?

Plunkett. No, I cannot.

Mr. Ketelbey. What not read Writing?

Plunkett. No, Sir.

Mr. Ketelbey. How can you be ſo particular as to the Writing?

Plunkett. I have heard it read often enough.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who read it to you?

Plunkett. John Child read it over to me two or three times.

Mr. Ketelbey. Why, this is mere Romance, that at twice hearing it read, you can remember it, the very Words.

Plunkett. I can remember thoſe Words, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Mr. Hungerford. How can he tell, when he cannot read at all? There is nothing in it. If one was to aſk him, whether can you recite the Articles of the Creed, I believe he cou'd not do it; and yet is ſo exact in repeating the Words of this Letter.

Priſoner. What Countryman are you?

Plunkett. An Iriſhman: You knew that long ago; you need not aſk me that Queſtion now.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we ſhall now proceed, and produce the Plan of this Conſpiracy, which was found among the Papers taken in Mrs. Maſon's Poſſeſſion; and ſhall ſhew how they came to be in Mrs. Maſon's Poſſeſſion; and we ſhall prove this Plan to be Mr. Layer's own Hand-Writing.

John Turner, one of the Meſſengers, ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon theſe Papers.

[Turner looks upon the Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of thoſe Papers, and where they were found?

Turner. My Lord, by Warrant from my Lord Carteret, Principal Secretary of State, dated the 29th

29th of September laſt, I was directed to ſearch for one Mrs. Maſon and Mrs. Cook, and the very ſame Day I executed that Warrant. I found out Mrs. Cook's Houſe in Stone-Cutters Yard in Little Queen-Street near Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and in ſearching the Houſe——

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Who lodg'd there?

Turner. One Mrs. Maſon lodg'd there: I found her in the Houſe; and in her Lodging there was a Trunk, and being demanded to open the Trunk——

L. C. Juſt. Was your Warrant to ſearch for both Mrs. Maſon and Mrs. Cook.

Turner. For both; and in Mrs. Maſon's Lodgings there was a Trunk which the other Meſſenger and I demanded to be open'd: She open'd the Trunk, and in the Trunk there were two Bundles of Papers ſeal'd up; which Papers being open'd, this Paper was found amongſt them, (meaning the Plan or Scheme.)

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Look upon it: How do you know that to be the ſame?

Turner. I know it to be the ſame, becauſe I writ upon't, I ſet my Mark upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay that theſe Papers were found in the Trunk, in two Bundles ſeal'd up?

Turner. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. (Shewing the Witneſs another Paper) Look upon that; ſee if that was in the ſame Bundle with that you laſt gave an Account of?

Turner. Yes that was in the ſame Bundle.

And ſo he was examin'd as to ſeveral particular Papers, which he ſwore to have been all found in the two Bundles taken out of Mrs. Maſon's Trunk, and that he had ſet his Mark upon them.

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to aſk Mr. Turner a Queſtion or two. Mr. Turner, I think you give a poſitive Account of ſeveral Papers, what they are I know not; of ſeveral Papers handed to you from Mr. Paxton. You had a Warrant to ſearch for Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Maſon, and in a Trunk you found theſe Papers ſeal'd up in a Bundle.

L. C. Juſt. He ſaid he had Directions from my Lord Carteret, to ſearch for Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Maſon. That he ſearched Mrs. Cook's Houſe, and found Mrs. Maſon there; he ſees a Trunk in the Houſe, in Mrs. Maſon's Lodgings, and he demanded the Trunk to be open'd, and in the Trunk is found two Bundles of Papers; in theſe Bundles are theſe Papers which have been ſhewn to the Witneſs. When he is aſk'd how he knew them to be the ſame that were in the Bundle, he ſays, he knows them to be the ſame, becauſe he ſet his Mark upon them.

Mr. Juſt. Forteſcue Aland. Were the Bundles ſeal'd up?

Turner. Yes, my Lord, they were ſeal'd up when we took them out of the Trunk.

Mr. Att. Gen. In whoſe Lodgings were they found?

Turner. At Mrs. Maſon's Lodgings, in her Bed-Chamber.

Mr. Ketelbey. You ſay theſe Papers handed to you, you found in the Trunk in Mrs. Maſon's Lodgings. Where have they been ever ſince? How come you to be ſo poſitive that theſe Individual Papers are the ſame Papers that you found in Mrs. Maſon's Room?

Turner. I put my Name upon 'em.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is your Name put upon thoſe?

Turner. Yes, upon each of them at that time.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long were they in your Cuſtody?

Turner. About an Hour.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who did you deliver them to, when you parted with them?

Turner. I think, to Mr. Stanyan.

Mr. Ketelbey. I aſk you, when you put your Name on each of them, was it before you firſt parted with them?

Turner. After the Trunk was open, and the Bundles were open'd; in the Bundles finding Papers of Conſequence, I was directed to go and fetch Mr. Stanyan as being a Magiſtrate, to give that Perſon her Oath. While I was gone, I deliver'd the Papers into my Brother Meſſenger's Hand, and he ſigned them.

Mr. Ketelbey. So you only ſwear for your Brother Meſſenger. How long after your firſt ſeizing the Papers was it before you put your Name upon them?

Turner. I believe three Quarters of an Hour.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who had you left them with?

Turner. I left them with this Man, my Brother Meſſenger.

Mr. Ketelbey. You left them with your Brother Meſſenger before you ſet your Mark upon 'em; how comes it that you are ſure they are the ſame? How can you ſwear they are the ſame, when you went away and left them in your Brother Meſſenger's Hands, and did not ſet your Name upon them, 'till you returned?

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ſay theſe Papers were ſeized in Mrs. Maſon's Lodgings, and that ſhe was by, and unlock'd the Trunk, and you took out the two Bundles.

Turner. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay you delivered the ſame Papers to this Perſon here?

Turner. Yes, Sir.

Priſoner. Mr. Turner, in Mrs. Maſon's Lodgings you ſay you ſeized two Bundles of Papers ſeal'd up?

Turner. Yes.

Priſoner. When Mrs. Maſon had them lock'd up, were they then ſeal'd up?

Turner. They were then ſeal'd up.

Priſoner. Did not the Seals appear to have been broke open?

Turner. No.

Priſoner. You ſaw two Bundles?

Turner. Yes.

Priſoner. You ſaw this Paper, and that, and all the Papers taken out of the Bundles. What Bundle was this Paper in? (Meaning the Plan or Scheme.)

Turner. This was in the ſame Bundle.

Priſoner. Was there a ſmall Bundle, and a great Bundle?

Turner. Yes; there were two Bundles.

Priſoner. And this was out of one of the Bundles?

Turner. Out of the ſmall Bundle.

Priſoner. Did you ſee them taken out of the Bundle?

Turner. I can't ſay that.

Mr. Hungerford. If I obſerve that Paper or Bundle right, it is one that conſiſts of ſeveral Sheets of Paper; I deſire he may hold it in his Hand, till we have done examining of him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Turner, that conſiſts of more

more Sheets than one; did you ſign your Name to each Leaf, or only to the firſt and the laſt Leaf of the Book?

Turner. I ſign'd my Name to each Sheet.

Edward Speare, ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Speare, Did you go with Mr. Turner to ſeize any Papers at Mrs. Cook's Houſe?

Speare. Yes; I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give an account of what you know of ſeizing any Papers there.

Speare. My Lord, by a Warrant directed to us from my Lord Carteret, Mr. Turner and I were to ſeize Mrs Cook and Mrs. Maſon; and ſearching Mrs. Cook's Houſe, I found Mrs. Maſon there. At Mrs. Cook's I found no Papers in the firſt Room; I proceeded into a ſecond Room, where there was a Trunk, which I ordered to be opened, and I took two Parcels out of it; one of 'em was ſeal'd with three ſeals, which I looked at; they did not appear to have been open'd and ſeal'd up again. I open'd them, and mark'd them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was by?

Speare. Mrs. Maſon was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was ſhe there when you open'd them?

Speare. She was by when they were open'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon them, are they the ſame Papers?

Speare. I have look'd upon them, and know them to be the ſame.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are thoſe the Papers that were taken out of the Trunk?

Speare. The very Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. In whoſe Room were they taken?

Speare. In Mrs. Maſon's Room.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Were they ever out of your Cuſtody, till you mark'd them?

Speare. No, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. During the Time that Turner, your Brother Meſſenger, was gone for Mr. Stanyan, who had the Cuſtody of the Papers?

Speare. I had the Cuſtody of them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were any of them taken away, or was there any Alteration in, or Addition to them, during that time?

Speare. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Do you remember that Mr. Turner ſet his Name upon them?

Speare. Yes, he did.

L. C. Juſt. How long after your Brother Meſſenger returned back to you, was it before you ſet your Name upon them?

Speare. Immediately, my Lord.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long did you ſtay in the Place after the Return of Turner?

Speare. I believe I might ſtay there an Hour, or an Hour and an half.

Mr. Ketelbey. When did you firſt part with the Papers out of your Cuſtody?

Speare. I gave them to Mr. Stanyan.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long after you firſt ſeized thoſe two Bundles was it before Mr. Stanyan came to you?

Speare. I believe about half an Hour, or three Quarters of an Hour.

Mr. Ketelbey. What, did you deliver them to Mr. Stanyan then?

Speare. After Mr. Turner and I had ſign'd them, I deliver'd them to Mr. Stanyan.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it not before you ſign'd them?

Speare. No, upon my Oath.

Mrs. Elizabeth Maſon, ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Maſon, Give an Account of what you know of theſe Papers?

Mrs. Maſon. Mr. Layer left two Parcels of Papers with me: He told me they were of the Value of 500*l.* He afterwards took them away from me; and afterwards brought them to me again.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. You ſay, he deliver'd two Bundles firſt?

Mrs. Maſon. No; he deliver'd only one, and that was the largeſt Bundle: He told me it was of the Value of 500*l.* and deſir'd me to take care of it, and lock it up.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. When was the leſſer Bundle deliver'd to you?

Mrs. Maſon. Some time after; and after that, he took them away from me; and in four or five Days time he brought them to me again: He took them away, and brought them to me again, and told me they were a few Love-Letters; and begg'd of me not to let Mrs. Cook know it, for ſhe would make a Diſturbance, and tell his Wife.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. When had you the leſſer Bundle?

Mrs. Maſon. I had that ſome time after.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What Directions had you with the little Bundle?

Mrs Maſon. He deſired me to take the ſame Care of that, as of the other.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Was that ſeal'd up?

Mrs. Maſon. They were both ſeal'd.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Where did you put them?

Mrs. Maſon. I put them into my Trunk.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre, After this; you know when the Meſſengers came?

Mrs. Maſon. Before that, he came one Day in the Afternoon to our Houſe, and aſk'd where I was. It was the Beginning of Bartholomew-tide. I was not at home: He left a Meſſage for me, that I ſhould bring thoſe Writings home. I carry'd them home.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Home! What do you mean by Home?

Mrs. Maſon. Mr. Layer's own Houſe: He left word, that he wou'd be at home by eight a-Clock that Night. I was there about eight a-Clock: I aſked the Maid where he was? She ſaid he was in the Back-Parlour. I aſked her if any body was with him? She ſaid, there were two Gentlemen. Said I, tell your Maſter that I am here.

L. C. Juſt. You ſay the great Bundle was taken from you again, and afterwards he brought the leſſer Bundle; and after this you receiv'd a Meſſage, or Intimation, that you ſhou'd bring home that Bundle?

Mrs. Maſon. My Lord, I had two Bundles. He left word, that I ſhould bring his Papers Home; for he ſtay'd at Home 'till eight a-Clock that Night. I went to his Houſe: And when I knock'd at the Door, the Maid came to the Door. I aſk'd her, if her Maſter was within? ſhe told me, yes, he was in the Back-Parlour; and that there was a Gentleman or two with him. I deſir'd her to go and tell her Maſter that I was there. And he came out to me; and I gave him the Writings; and he deſired me to come again the next Morning; which was on a Saturday, about eleven a-Clock, for he was going out of Town: And that I would come and take thoſe Writings again. Which accordingly I did. It was in the Morning, at the Time that the Bell was ringing at Lincoln's-Inn Chapel, when I went to him, and he deliver'd me the Papers again.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Can you recollect the Day that he left Word for you to come to him?

Mrs. Maſon. It was the Beginning of Bartholomew-tide.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Maſon. It was on a Friday Night that I went and carried them to his Houſe.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And when was it that he deſired you would come and call for them again?

Mrs. Maſon. It was the next Morning at eleven a-Clock, or near the matter, that I went to his Houſe; and he gave me the Writings again, and charged me to take Care of them.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. What was you to do with them?

Mrs. Maſon. To take care of them.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Did you meddle with them, or open them?

Mrs. Maſon. No, Sir; I put them in my Trunk: They lay there all the time.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Were they there when the Officers came?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Was you there when the Bundles were opened?

Mrs. Maſon. I was there.

Mr. Ser. Cheſhyre. Did you mark the Papers your ſelf?

Mrs. Maſon. I did.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Look upon the Papers, and ſee if you find your Mark on thoſe Papers?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes, this is my Mark.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Mr. Speare, you was preſent at the opening of them?

Mr. Speare. I was. They were ſealed up when I opened them.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Did you put your Name on them?

Mr. Speare. I did put my Name on them.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Were they out of your Cuſtody before you put your Name on them?

Mr. Speare. No; they were not.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Did Mr. Turner put his Name to them?

Mr. Speare. He put his Name to them, before ever they were out of my Cuſtody.

Mr. Att. Gen. You have mark'd all thoſe Papers. You are ſure thoſe are the Papers you took out of the Trunk in Mrs. Maſon's Lodging?

Mr. Speare. I am ſure they are.

Mr. Att. Gen. Shew them to Mrs. Maſon. Mrs. Maſon, were thoſe Papers in the Bundles that were deliver'd to you by Mr. Layer?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes, Sir; they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. You have mark'd thoſe Papers, have you not?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes, I have.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ſaid, you gave the Bundles back to Mr. Layer on a Friday, about the Beginning of Bartholomew-tide. Do you remember whether it was upon Bartholemew Day or not?

Mrs. Maſon. Indeed I don't know.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did Mr. Layer ſay when you brought them to him again?

Mrs. Maſon. He only thanked me; and deſired me to come the next Day and take them from him again: Which I did.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he mention then, that he was going out of Town?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes: And it was about eleven a-Clock on a Saturday Morning that I went to him, and he deliver'd the Papers to me again.

Mr. Hungerford. Can you write?

Mrs. Maſon. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you made the ſame Mark on all thoſe Papers?

Mrs. Maſon. I was ſo frightned at that time, that I hardly knew what Mark I made.

Mr. Hungerford. If you was frightned at that time, and did not know what Mark you made, how can you be ſure you know your Mark again?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes, I can tell it very well.

Mr. Hungerford. When you ſay you was ſo frighted you did not know what Mark you made?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes, ſure I do.

Mr. Hungerford. Upon the Oath you have taken, hath any Body ſeen thoſe Papers before they were taken by the Meſſengers; whether Sir John Meres, or his Man Thomas hath ſeen them?

Mrs. Maſon. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Nor his Man Thomas?

Mrs. Maſon. No, nor his Man Thomas.

Mr. Ketelbey. I aſk you, can you write or can you read Writing?

Mrs. Maſon. I told you I can't.

Mr. Ketelbey. You only can make your Mark?

Mrs. Maſon. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you only make but one Mark, or uſe ſeveral Marks?

Mrs. Maſon. I make but one Mark.

Mr. Ketelbey. Pray make the Mark you generally uſe? With Submiſſion, my Lord, I deſire ſhe may have a Pen and Ink to ſee if ſhe can make the ſame Mark again.

Mr. Hungerford. Surely we are regular in deſiring that?

L. C. Juſt. What you deſire is proper. She ſays ſhe knows them to be the ſame Papers, becauſe ſhe hath ſet her Mark upon them; they doubt whether ſhe may miſtake in her Mark, and deſire ſhe may make her Mark again.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we deſire ſhe may make her Mark again.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We deſire ſhe may have a convenient Place to do it in, and that ſhe may ſit down while ſhe writes?

Mrs. Maſon. No, I can do it without. (A Pen and Ink and Paper is given to her, and ſhe ſets her Mark an E and an M.)

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here are the Letters E and M ſet to the Papers produc'd; and tho' in this Confuſion ſhe ſhould not make her Letters exactly like thoſe, yet I apprehend that would weigh very little.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I can't tell what they mean? this doth not depend——

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I deſire to go on with our Queſtions. I aſk you——

L. C. Juſt. (Having compared the Letters made by Mrs. Maſon in Court, with thoſe on the Papers) The Character which ſhe now writes is like what ſhe writ on thoſe Papers, and ſo confirms her Evidence.

Mr. Ketelbey. After the delivery of thoſe two Bundles to you by Mr. Layer, I aſk you whether Sir John Meeres's Man Thomas ever ſaw thoſe Bundles open'd?

Mrs. Maſon. No he never was up in my Room; there was no ſuch Familiarity between us.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did one Wilſon ever ſee them?

Mrs. Maſon. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did ever you produce them to one Binks.

Mrs. Maſon. No.

Priſoner. No: Nor did Sir John Meeres's Man Thomas never ſee them?

Mrs. Maſon. No, never upon my Oath.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you ever produce them ſealed up? Did you ever let Thomas or William, or Sir John Meeres, himſelf ſee either of thoſe Bundles as they were ſealed up?

Mrs. Maſon. No, they were in my Trunk: I always kept them in my Trunk; perhaps as I open'd my Trunk, they might ſee them lie in my Trunk.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know one Mrs. Buda?

Mrs. Maſon. No: I don't know the Name. I don't know one Mrs. Buda.

Priſoner. Did you ever know one Mrs. Herbert?

Mrs. Maſon. I know many of that Name.

Priſoner. Did you ever go by that Name?

Mrs. Maſon. No.

Priſoner. Did you ever go by the Name of Corbet?

Mrs. Maſon. No.

Priſoner. Did you ever go by the Name of Bevan?

Mrs. Maſon. No, I never did go by the Name of Bevan.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Ketelbey, I don't know what the Meaning of this Examination is; when it appears beyond Contradiction, that this Woman was an Acquaintance of your Client's.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, if we prove her to be an ill Woman, I hope it will take off her Credit ſo that her Evidence will not weigh with your Lordſhip, or the Jury.

L. C. Juſt. At the Time when theſe Bundles were ſeized, had they Mr. Layer's Seal upon them?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes, the Seal of Mr. Layer was upon them.

L. C. Juſt. What ſays the Meſſenger? At the time that you ſeized theſe two Bundles of Papers, was there any Seal upon them?

Meſſenger. There were three Seals upon one, and ſome Seals upon the other; the Seal was ſomething of a ſmall Head.

L. C. Juſt. What is Mr. Layer's Seal?

Mrs. Maſon. Something of a Head, but I can't tell what Head.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Mr. Layer's Seal?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes. It is ſomething of a Head.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it the Repreſentation of a Man's Head, or the Head of a Beaſt?

Mrs. Maſon. It is a Head, with ſomething of a Ruff about it.

L. C. Juſt. Mrs. Maſon, look upon the Head. Is that Head the Seal of Mr. Layer?

Mrs. Maſon. Yes. Upon my Oath it is.

L. C. Juſt. What ſays the Meſſenger. Was that Seal of a Head upon them, when you ſeized them?

Meſſenger. Yes, it was.

Mr. Ketelbey. Before that time that the two Meſſengers came, Mr. Turner and Mr. Speare, and ſeiz'd the Papers, and afterwards one of them went for Mr. Stanyan; I aſk you, whether you had ſhewn thoſe Bundles to any Body before that time?

Mrs. Maſon. No; I had ſhewn them to no Body.

Mr. Att. Gen. She hath ſaid ſo two or three times before.

L. C. Juſt. Indeed, Mr. Ketelbey, we muſt direct you not to ſpend the time of the Court ſo. You have aſk'd her that Queſtion two or three times over.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I would very fain have the Truth come out.

Mr. Hungerford. I will aſk you a Queſtion or two. What Trade or Buſineſs do you follow? What is your Trade or Ocupation.

Mrs. Maſon. What is that to you? I have no Trade.

Mr. Hungerford. I ſhould have aſk'd you another Queſtion before; Have you not a Promiſe of Reward for the Service you do here, in giving this Evidence?

Mrs. Maſon. No, I have not.

Priſoner. Nor you have received none?

Mrs. Maſon. No. You are an unjuſt Man.

L. C. Juſt. Are you promiſed any Reward! Why don't you aſk her whether ſhe is to ſwear for Hire? Is that a proper Queſtion to aſk a Witneſs?

Mr. Ketelbey. I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether it is not proper to aſk her this Queſtion; whether ſhe hath not told any Perſon, and whom, that ſhe was to have a Reward for coming hither?

Priſoner. The Queſtion is, whether ſhe hath never owned and confeſſed to any Body, that theſe Papers were opened before a Friend of hers, before the Meſſenger ſeized them?

Mrs. Maſon. No, my Lord, I never did. I never opened them before any Body.

Mr. Att. Gen. They have ask'd you what Names you went by; do you know what Names the Priſoner at the Bar has gone by?

Mrs. Maſon. He had once given me Orders, that if any Letter came directed in the Name of Fountaine, that I ſhould take it in; accordingly in two or three Days time, there came a Letter, directed to Mr. Fountaine, and I took it in; and when he came, I gave it to him, and he opened it, and read it.

Priſoner. Where is your Houſe?

Mrs. Maſon. Where! Where you left the Writings.

Priſoner. How can you tell how that Letter was directed, which you took in, ſince you ſay you cannot Read?

Mrs. Maſon. It was directed to Mr. Fountaine.

Priſoner. Did you read the Superſcription?

Mrs. Maſon. No. Mrs. Cook did.

L. C. Juſt. You ſay you was deſired by Mr. Layer, when any Letter came directed to Mr. Fountaine, to take it in; and that a Letter came directed to Mr. Fountaine, and you took it in. The Queſtion is aſked you, ſince you cannot read, how could you tell it was directed to Mr. Fountaine?

Mrs. Maſon. My Landlady told me it was for Mr. Fountaine, and ſhe knew he went by the Name of Fountaine ſometimes.

Priſoner. She ſaid ſhe read it.

Mrs. Maſon. No. I ſaid I gave it to you, and you open'd it, and you read it.

L. C. Juſt. The Occaſion of this Queſtion is, that this Miſnomer was approved of by you. She ſays that you order'd her, that if any Letter came directed to Mr. Fountaine, ſhe ſhould take it in; a Letter did come directed ſo, ſhe took it in, and then deliver'd it to you; and you receiv'd it from her, and open'd and read it; but how, ſay they, cou'd you know this Letter was directed to Mr. Fountaine, when you can neither write nor read? She having received ſuch an Order, when there was a Letter come, it was natural enough, that ſhe that could not read, ſhould aſk her Landlady the Directions of the Letter, and it was directed for Fountaine; it was natural enough for her to take it in, and give it to you.

Who brought the Letter?

Mrs. Maſon. A Porter.

L. C. Juſt. Did he ſay from whence he came?

Mrs. Maſon. He told me he came from the Ditch-Side, and aſk'd me if Mr. Fountaine lodg'd there.

Mr. Hungerford. This Trunk that the Papers were in, did it uſe to be kept open, or was it lock'd up?

Mrs. Maſon. It was always lock'd up.

Mr. Doyley, ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Doyley, do you know Mr. Layer; and how long have you known him?

Doyley. I have known him about ſeventeen or eighteen Years; he was my Clerk; 'tis thereabouts, I believe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know his Writing?

Mr. Doyley. I believe I do.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper. (He is ſhewn the Scheme.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you take that to be his Hand?

Doyley. If you aſk me as to my Belief, I believe it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you often ſeen him write?

Doyley. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ſeen him write ſince he left your Service?

Doyley. I have had ſeveral Letters from him, ſince he was my Clerk.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper; can you ſwear that you believe that is his Hand-Writing?

Doyley. I have ſeen the Paper before, and I do believe it to be his Hand-Writing.

Priſoner. Have you ſeen me write any thing but my Name, theſe fourteen Years?

Doyley. I can't particularly recollect whether I have or no.

Priſoner. How long is it ſince I was your Clerk?

Doyley. About fourteen or fifteen Years.

Priſoner. Have you ſeen me write ſince?

Doyley. I can't ſay I have, or I have not.

L. C. Juſt. How long is it ſince you received any Letters from him?

Doyley. About five Years ago.

L. C. Juſt. How do you know thoſe Letters came from him?

Doyley. Becauſe he was my Client, and writ to me about Buſineſs; and I anſwered thoſe Letters, and did the Buſineſs that he deſired me to do by thoſe Letters.

L. C. Juſt. Did he pay you for that Buſineſs done?

Doyley. Yes, very honourably.

Priſoner. You ſay you don't remember you have ſeen me write ſince I came from you; as to that Paper which you ſay you believe to be my Hand, have you compar'd it with thoſe Letters?

Doyley. I have.

Priſoner. Is that what you found your Belief upon?

Doyley. That is what I chiefly found my Belief upon.

Priſoner. Conſider, Mr. Doyley, my Life is at Stake, and you ſay you have not ſeen me write theſe fourteen Years?

Doyley. I don't know that I have.

Priſoner. Have you any of my Letters in Court?

Doyley. I have not your Letters in Court.

Priſoner. You ſay, you found your Belief only by Compariſon of thoſe Letters. Now I wiſh you had brought thoſe Letters here.

Mr. Att. Gen. He doth not ſay ſo.

Mr. Doyley. If you had deſir'd it, I cou'd have brought 'em.

Priſoner. I deſir'd it! I little thought to have ſeen you here on ſuch an Occaſion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Doyley, I aſk you, if you had no Dealings with him ſince he was out of his Clerkſhip?

Mr. Doyley. Yes, I was his Agent.

L. C. Juſt. Whoſe Name is ſubſcribed to thoſe Letters?

Mr. Doyley. Chriſtopher Layer's.

L. C. Juſt. You did the Buſineſs mentioned in thoſe Letters; and he honourably paid you for it?

Mr. Doyley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. I ſuppoſe, in your time, that you will ſhew that other People writ Letters in your Name?

Mr. Ketelbey. You ſay, you believe that Paper to be Mr. Layer's Hand-writing. And if I did not miſunderſtand you, I took it down in Writing, you founded your Belief on the comparing that Writing with the Letters which you receiv'd?

Mr. Doyley. I ſaid, I chiefly founded my belief upon ſuch Compariſon of Hands.

Mr. Ketelbey. That you chiefly did ſo; and you have not thoſe Letters here in Court, on which you chiefly founded this Belief.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Doyley, I think you ſay you have ſeen him write ſeveral Times?

Mr. Doyley. I don't remember that I have ſeen him write theſe fourteen Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. During the Time he was your Clerk, you have ſeen him write?

Mr. Doyley. Yes; he was but two Years with me: He had been Clerk with Mr. before.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then he had been us'd to Buſineſs before he came to you; and had form'd his Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. How old was he, when he was your Clerk?

Mr. Doyley. Indeed I don't know.

Mr. Hungerford. You form your Belief upon the Remembrance you have of what was his Hand-writing fourteen or fifteen Years ago?

L. C. Juſt. You ſay, you have received Letters ſubſcribed by his Name five Years ago?

Mr. Doyley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. Was the Character of thoſe Letters that you receiv'd five Years ago, agreeable to the Characters that he writ when he was your Clerk?

Mr. Doyley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. Then I aſk you upon the whole, whether you believe it to be his Hand-Writing, or not?

Mr. Doyley. Yes, I do believe it to be his Hand.

Priſoner. Since my unhappy Circumſtances, have you had no Promiſe of being reſtored to your Place again, or the Promiſe of ſome other Office or Place?

Mr. Doyley. No; I never, to my Knowledge, have ſeen one Man that had the Power to put me in my Place again; nor ever convers'd with any one Great Man upon that or any ſuch Affair.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We think we are entitled to read it: However, that there may be no Diſpute, we deſire to call Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan, in whoſe Preſence the Priſoner at the Bar confeſs'd it to be his Hand-Writing.

Mr. Delafaye was ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Sir, was that Paper ſhewn to the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Delafaye. I was not near enough when he was before the Lords of the Council, to ſee what was on the Table; neither did I look upon the Table, to ſee whether this Paper was on it or not. But upon a Queſtion that was aſk'd him, relating to ſome Arms, if he knew where any were lodg'd in ſuch a Place, he ſaid, no: Upon which, one of the Lords of the Council held up a Paper; it might be this, for ought I know; and ſaid, here is your own Paper, your own Hand-Writing; which ſays, Arms that are there lodged; ſays he, I ſhould have writ Arms that ſhould be there lodged.

L. C. Juſt. Whether is that the Paper or no, and did he own that Paper that was then ſhewn to be his?

Mr. Delafaye. The Queſtion was not aſk'd, is this your Paper and your Hand-Writing? But it was ſhewn to him as ſuch; and he ſaid, I ſhould have wrote Arms that ſhould be there lodg'd.

Mr. Stanyan, ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Stanyan, do you remember whether this Paper was ſhewn to the Priſoner at the Bar, or any Queſtions aſk'd him about it, when he was before the Lords of the Council?

Mr. Stanyan. Upon the Queſtion that was aſk'd him about the Arms, this Paper was ſhewn him; I think this is the Paper: I was nearer to the Table than Mr. Delafaye, and did obſerve this Paper to lie upon the Table before the Lords, and do take this to be the individual Paper that was ſhewn him then.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was ſaid to him at that time?

Mr. Stanyan. The Queſtion was aſk'd him, what he knew of any Arms that were lodg'd in Weſtminſter? He ſaid, he knew of none. Then this Paper was ſhewn to him, and a Queſtion was aſk'd him; here the Arms are ſaid to be lodg'd in this Scheme of your own Hand-Writing; how came you to write ſo, if there be no Arms lodg'd? Mr. Layer ſaid, it was a miſtake: It was not intended Arms that are there lodg'd, but Arms that ſhou'd be there lodg'd. He ſaid, I ſhou'd have writ Arms that ſhou'd be lodg'd, inſtead of Arms that are lodg'd.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. The Queſtion was concerning a Paper of his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, it was concluded, that the Paper was of his own Hand-Writing, and he did not deny it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ſay it was not his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. No, he did not.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was the Queſtion aſk'd, whether that Paper was his Hand-Writing, or no?

Mr. Stanyan. No, I believe not.

Mr. Ketelbey. Then if there was no Queſtion aſk'd; whether did he own it to be his Hand-Writing, or no?

Mr. Stanyan. He did not expreſly own it to be his Hand-Writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. He was not aſk'd that Queſtion, whether it was his Hand-Writing, or no?

Mr. Stanyan. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. He did not deny it to be his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. No, Sir.

Mr. Weſt. Whether the Lords in their Queſtion did ſtate it ſo, as taking it for his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. It was taken for granted that it was ſo, and he made no Offer to deny it.

Priſoner. Pray, Sir, let me aſk you one Queſtion about the Arms? When I was aſk'd, if there were any Arms lodg'd, did I not anſwer in the Negative, and ſaid, No?

Stanyan. Yes.

Priſoner. In relation to the Arms, you ſay, that I ſaid Arms that ſhou'd have been lodg'd?

Stanyan. That was upon the Lords aſking you, to explain that part of the Scheme relating to Arms; and when you ſaid you knew of no Arms that were lodg'd, then ſaid they, how come you to mention in this Scheme of your own Hand-Writing, Arms that are lodg'd? To which you anſwered, I ſhou'd have writ Arms that ſhou'd be lodg'd.

Priſoner. When I was aſk'd, why I did ſay Arms that are lodg'd? Why, ſaith I, my Lords, I know of no Arms. If that was my Paper, and I had writ it, I ſhould have writ Arms that ſhou'd be lodg'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray that the Papers may be read.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we hope that theſe Papers, (tho' for my Part I know not what they are; for there is no Hint of them in my Brief,) ſhall not be read, for this Reaſon; the Evidence which hath been given for the King, hath not brought them home to the Priſoner. There is no legal Proof that the Papers are of his Hand-writing; and conſequently he cannot be affected by any thing that is in them. As to what is ſaid of the Likeneſs of Hands, that we humbly hope is no Evidence at all. The firſt Witneſs, Mr. Doyley, he hath ſaid it is like his Hand; but he gives that Opinion of his, on the Knowledge he had of the Priſoner's Hand fourteen Years ago; and by ſome Letters he received from him about five Years ſince. Men's Hands may differ and vary even in five, much more in fourteen Years.

What follows is the Evidence that hath been given by the Gentlemen belonging to the Secretaries Office.

I perſonally know them to be Gentlemen of good Senſe, Integrity and Honour, and for my part I believe every word they ſay; which is more than I can ſay of the other Witneſſes hitherto produced. But what theſe ſay, doth not, with Submiſſion, affect the Priſoner: They were preſent when the Priſoner was examin'd before the Lords of the Council; none of them heard the Priſoner acknowledge that the Papers were writ by him, or that he did own them as his; neither was he aſked any Queſtion to that Purpoſe; neither did the nature of the Examination my Lords of the Council were then upon, lead them to ſuch a Queſtion: The Lords were not aſking Mr. Layer Queſtions to fix an Evidence upon himſelf. But the Lords having ſome Papers before them, and, according to the Duty of their high Stations, being intent upon diſcovering what might be of Danger to his Majeſty and the Publick; they aſk'd Mr. Layer, where the Arms were depoſited at Weſtminſter? He anſwers, that he knew of none there, there, or to that Purpoſe. It cannot in Law or Reaſon be from hence inferr'd, that he did own the Papers to be of his own Hand-Writing. The only Evidence therefore which can be inſiſted on to entitle theſe Papers to be read, is the Evidence of Likeneſs of Hand, which is no Evidence at all in a criminal Caſe.

In my Lady Carr's Caſe, it was not allow'd to be Evidence; and yet that was not a Capital Caſe, but a Caſe of Miſdemeanor only, it was Perjury. But there is an Authority beyond all that; we have the Act of Parliament for the Reverſal of the Attainder of Colonel Sidney, who had been convicted upon Evidence given of the Similitude of Hands, and that a much ſtronger Proof than what appears here; for Cook and Cary, two famous Goldſmiths, ſwore they believ'd the treaſonable Libel laid to Colonel Sidney to be writ by him; and aſſign'd that for a Reaſon of their Belief, for that they had receiv'd ſeveral Bills from him of the like Hand-Writing, which they conſtantly paid. Nay, one of the Goldſmiths ſwore, (as I remember the Tryal) that he ſaw the Colonel write a Receipt. Some other Caſes of this Nature might be quoted, but we depend upon the Authority of my Lady Carr's Caſe, and the Act for reverſing the Attainder of Colonel Sidney, which is inſtar omnium; for in that Act the Reaſon aſſign'd for reverſing the Attainder, is, for that the Conviction and Attainder was founded upon a Similitude of Hands. We have an atteſted Copy of the Act here ready to be read. In Conſequence of this Act, my Lord, Similitude of Hands is never to be given as Evidence in a criminal Caſe: And therefore we humbly hope, that this Paper is not ſo prov'd, as to be read in any Court, but muſt be rejected: It is not proved to be his Hand by any that ever ſaw him write; neither hath any body heard him own it to be his.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I beg Leave to ſay a few Words in Support of this Objection. We don't know what is the Purport of this Paper. I dare ſay, Mr. Hungerford, as well as my ſelf, hath not ſeen one Tittle relating to it whatſoever; but I hope, for the Sake of Evidence, the ſacred and eternal Rule of Evidence, that ſimilitude of Hands ſhall not go for Proof, where a Perſon is charg'd with a Capital Offence. We ſhall in due time endeavour to lay before the Court ſeveral material Objections to the Credit of ſome of the Witneſſes; but at preſent we muſt ſuppoſe them unexceptionable, and conſider, with reſpect to this ſingle Point, whether this Paper is ſufficiently proved to be his Hand-Writing, ſo as to be read. Mrs. Maſon and the Meſſengers have endeavour'd, by a jumbling Evidence, to prove the Identity of the Papers, and to hand them down from one to another: But how do they appear to be of the Priſoner's Hand-Writing? Mr. Doyley ſays, fourteen or fifteen Years ago he was his Clerk; that five Years ago he receiv'd Letters from him; and that he chiefly founded his Opinion that it was the Priſoner's Hand-writing, becauſe he had compared it with thoſe Letters, and that the Hands were alike: And yet thoſe Letters with which he compar'd this Paper, he hath not in Court to produce. This is the Subſtance of Doyley's Evidence.

My Lord, I humbly inſiſt, that this is not ſufficient; and if compariſon of Hands was to be Evidence, ſurely this would not do, unleſs he produced thoſe Papers, on which he owns he founded his Opinion. I refer it to the Jury, whether he may not poſſibly, nay probably make an erroneous Judgment. Shall a Man be believ'd out of his Life, becauſe the Witneſs ſaw him write fifteen Years ago, and received Letters from him five Years ago? Is any thing more changeable than a Man's Hand-Writing? Can either of you Gentlemen, take upon you to ſay what is or is not your Writing after ſo great a Length of Time? Wou'd not the different Subjects, the one a common Letter of Buſineſs, the other a treaſonable Scheme, make a ſenſible Variation even in a Man's uſual Character?

The Caſe of my Lady Carr is reported in Siderfin, fo. 419. and was upon an Indictment of Perjury, an Offence of a much lower Nature than what this Gentleman is now tried for: There a Witneſs ſwore he believed the Paper produced in Court to be her Hand-Writing, yet it did not amount to ſuch a Proof as to make her guilty: Nay, the Court ſaid expreſly, that it was not Evidence, and ſhould not be admitted; and accordingly ſhe was acquitted. But the higheſt Authority is what Mr. Hungerford hath named, the Act of Parliament for the Reverſal of the Attainder of Col. Sidney; and we have a Witneſs here ready, that examined it with the Record, that proves it to be a true Copy. Algernoon Sidney was attainted of High-Treaſon by ſimilitude of Hands, and that was the Reaſon of the Reverſal.

The two next Witneſſes are Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan, Gentlemen of Honour, and that would not ſtrain a Point upon any Account whatſoever. Mr. Delafaye doth not know whether this Paper was on the Table, when Mr. Layer was examined before the Lords of the Council, or no: Mr. Stanyan ſays, he was ſomewhat nearer the Table, and he takes the Paper that is now produced to be the ſame Paper that was upon the Table in the Room before the Lords of the Council, when Mr. Layer was there; becauſe when it was produced there, and ſhewn to him, he ſaid, I ſhou'd have wrote Arms that ſhou'd be lodg'd.

Mr. Stanyan owns, that he never was aſk'd the Queſtion, whether it was his Hand-Writing or no? How then ſhou'd he deny it, if it was never put to him? And therefore to ſay, becauſe he did not deny a Queſtion that was never aſked him, that that ſhall import, as to this particular Matter, a Confeſſion, is to me ſtrange and unaccountable! The natural Senſe of the Priſoner's Words, as proved, is no more than this: No, if I had writ it, I ſhou'd have rather wrote Arms that ſhou'd be lodg'd, than Arms that were lodg'd. Therefore, my Lord, we humbly apprehend they have not given Evidence in this Caſe, ſufficient Evidence to ſupport the Reading of thoſe Papers.

Your Lordſhips are now to lay down a perpetual Rule of Evidence: For lateſt Poſterity will pay a juſt Regard to the preſent Determinations; and if Compariſon of Hands in this Caſe be allowed as Evidence, the ſame Rule muſt for ever hold in all parallel Caſes; and God knows what may be the Conſequence of ſuch a Reſolution, or who may be affected by it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we hope, that notwithſtanding what hath been objected to the Reading of this Paper, that we are proper to have it read: Tho' they have mentioned ſome Caſes for to maintain their Objection, yet the later

Authorities, and the conſtant Courſe of Evidence ſince, as we think, are directly with us: As the Caſe of my Lord Preſton, where eight or nine of the Judges were preſent.

In the Caſe of the Lady Carr, there is that Opinion inſiſted on given at the End of the Caſe in a ſhort unintelligible Manner.

[Here Mr. Hungerford interrupted.]

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I don't know whether we ſhall be at Liberty, when the King's Counſel have done, to read the Act; and therefore I offer it to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, whether we ſhould not read it now.

L. C. Juſt. Read the Act of Parliament.

Mr. Ketelbey. Call Mr. Tbeedam.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are apprized of that Act of Parliament; I have an examined Copy of that Act; but we apprehend it will not come up to what they cite it for.

Mr. Ketelbey. We have five Acts of Parliament that we have examin'd with the Records; we did not know where they would ſhoot at us, and therefore were reſolved to be armed Cap-a-pee.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. As to my Lady Carr's Caſe, it will be hard to maintain that Opinion, becauſe the Letters they produced were not in the direct Inſtance of the Perjury.

Even the Act of Parliament, which they produce, it takes Notice, that a Paper was found in the Cloſet of Mr. Sidney, and was read, without proving it to be his own Hand-Writing: Is this Paper found without any Owning and Acknowledging it by the Priſoner? Is not this Paper delivered by Mr. Layer himſelf to Mrs. Maſon? Had not he this Paper in his Cuſtody, and it proceeded from him?

In the Caſe of my Lord Preſton, there were a great Number of Judges, My Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, Lord Chief Juſtice Pollexfen, and others; there the Indictment of my Lord Preſton was his adhering to the King's Enemies, and amongſt other Overt-Acts alledged his carrying ſeveral Papers of Inſtructions to inform the French King how to attack the Kingdom: Mr. Warer, who had been an Under-Secretary to my Lord Preſton, ſwore that he believed ſome of thoſe Papers to be like the Lord Preſton's Hand, and they were all read in that Caſe by the Opinion of the whole Court, though they were the very expreſs Overt-Acts alledg'd in the Indictment it ſelf: How doth this ſtand here, ſuppoſing no Uſe is made of the Evidence of Mr. Doyley? When this Paper is ſhewn to Mr. Layer himſelf, before the Lords of the Council, and was mentioned as a Paper of his own Writing, and he is aſked how he came to write Arms that are ſaid there to be lodg'd, his Anſwer is, I ſhould have wrote, Arms that ſhou'd be there lodg'd; Is not this ſufficient Evidence to prove a Confeſſion? Doth not this amount to an Evidence of his confeſſing it to be his own Writing? So here is, as we apprehend, the Evidence not only of the Thing it ſelf, but likewiſe the Priſoner's own Declaration, that he was the Perſon who wrote it. In Sir Henry Vane's Caſe, the Warrant given in Evidence againſt him was proved only by Witneſſes who believed it to be his Hand; but here is a particular Fact which (we apprehend) amounts to a Confeſſion, and is a proper Evidence for the Jury to conſider of, whether this be not a Confeſſion.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I apprehend that we have given very proper Evidence to intitle us to read this Paper: My Lord, I beg leave to obſerve firſt, that it hath been proved that this Paper was found among the Papers, which the Priſoner delivered to Mrs. Maſon, to be kept for him, which were ſeized in her Lodgings, as the Witneſſes have before acquainted your Lordſhip, and if that were all, this Paper muſt be read. As to that, the Lord Preſton's Caſe is direct in Point, and ſo determined by ſix or ſeven Judges, viz. that Papers found in the Poſſeſſion of the Priſoner may be read without further Proof. But we inſiſt that this Paper is legally and regularly proved to be his Writing by the Evidence of Mr. Doyley, and the Priſoner's own Confeſſion: The Counſel for the Priſoner have mentioned Lady Carr's Caſe, and the Act for the Reverſal of the Attainder of Col. Sidney, and ſay they have a great many other Caſes to the ſame Purpoſe.

I defy them to ſhew any one ſingle Caſe, wherein it has been determined, that Proof of a Perſon's Hand by a Witneſs, who ſwears he has ſeen him write, and knows his Hand, and believes the Paper produced to be of his Hand-Writing, is not a ſufficient Proof in a criminal Proſecution, that that Paper is ſuch a Perſon's Hand, before my Lady Carr's Caſe; if that Caſe does ſupport the Opinion they have laid down: In all Actions ſuch Evidence hath been conſtantly allowed; then I ſhould be glad to know what Law or what Reaſon has made a Difference as to ſuch Evidence, between civil Actions and criminal or capital Proſecutions. As to my Lady Carr's Caſe, the Book is very dark and obſcure; I believe the Priſoner's Counſel cannot make it ſupport what they now contend for.

Lady Carr was indicted for Perjury, ſuppoſed to be committed in an Anſwer ſworn by her before a Maſter in Chancery: What is there ſaid about a Letter does not appear at all to relate to the Caſe there; and if any Judge did lay down ſuch a Poſition, as has been mentioned by the other Side, the Meaning muſt be, that an Anſwer on Oath ſhall not be falſified by a Letter only under the Party's Hand; and that ſuch a Letter ſhould not be a ſufficient Evidence to convict him of Perjury.

As to the Caſe of Col. Sidney, 'tis very well known that he was a Gentleman of Quality, and in his Study a Writing was found, viz. A General Treatiſe of Doctrines and Poſitions, which were very diſtaſteful to the then Government, writ in anſwer to a Book formerly publiſhed. It was not a Scheme for raiſing a Rebellion, nor was it deſign'd, for any thing that appeared, that it ſhould go out of his own Cloſet, but his Papers being ſeized, this Paper was found there among them; and for this he was indicted of High-Treaſon. It was generally thought extremely hard to make his having by him ſuch a General Tract, writ in anſwer to a particular Book, and kept private in his Cloſet, an Overt-Act of Treaſon. However, he was found guilty, and attainted. No wonder then, when this came into Parliament, that they reſented this Proceeding, and revers'd his Attainder. And the Reaſons recited in the Act, as Inducements for this Reverſal, are accumulative; every Step taken in that Proceeding is complained of, and there is not Streſs laid only upon the Proof of this Paper, but

The Act recites, That Col. Sydney, by Means of an illegal Return of the Jury, by denying him his lawful Challenges to the Jurymen, for Want of Freehold, and without ſufficient legal Evidence of any Treaſons committed by him, there being produced a Paper found in his Cloſet, ſuppoſed to be his Hand-Writing, which was not proved by any one Witneſs to be written by him; but the Jury was directed to believe it by comparing it with other Writings of his: And beſides that Paper ſo produced, there was but one Witneſs to prove any Matter againſt him, and by a partial and unjuſt Conſtruction of the Statutes of Treaſons was moſt unjuſtly attainted. And then the Act reverſes the Attainder. Surely, if the Nature of the Evidence we have given, to prove this Paper to be the Priſoner's Hand is conſider'd, it ſtands clear of any material Objection that can be raiſed from that Act. This is not barely proved by a compariſon of Hands; here is a Witneſs, that often ſaw him write, ſwears it to be his Hand-Writing: There was a Multitude of Papers, ſome offered to be proved by ſimilitude of Hands, and every one of them was read in my Lord Preſton's Caſe.

Beſides, here is that, which I beg Leave to inſiſt upon, as a Confeſſion by Mr. Layer, that this Paper was his Writing; if the Queſtion propoſed to the Priſoner by the Lords of the Council and his Anſwer are conſider'd, it amounts to a plain Confeſſion of it; therefore we muſt inſiſt on it, that we have given a ſufficient Evidence for the Reading of this Paper; and I hope we ſhall have your Lordſhip's Direction that it ſhall be read.

[Here ſome other of the King's Counſel offered to ſpeak.]

L. C. Juſt. If there was any Occaſion, you ſhould be heard; but there is no Occaſion.

It is proved by the Witneſſes that theſe Papers were in Mr. Layer's Poſſeſſion, that he delivered them to Mrs. Maſon, that ſhe lock'd them up in her Trunk, ſealed as they were delivered to her by Mr. Layer, and afterward taken out of her Trunk by the Meſſengers, ſo that if they reſt it here, and no other Evidence had been given, the Papers ought to be read, as being his Papers, which he once had in his Poſſeſſion, if nothing elſe had been the Caſe.

Can any thing in the World be an Authority more expreſs, than that of my Lord Preſton, where all the Papers which were in his Cuſtody, and taken out of his Cuſtody, were read without any Offer of Proof that they were his Hand.

And then conſider, this goes further; it is not only a Paper found in his Cuſtody, but it is a Paper written with his own Hand! How do you prove that?

The Maſter of this Gentleman tells you he was his Clerk, lived with him two Years; afterwards he received Letters from him about Buſineſs, which Buſineſs he did according to the Direction of thoſe Letters, and was paid honourably by him for it, and that he believes it to be his Hand. If they had gone no further, nobody could have doubted, but that according to the uſual Courſe and Rule of Evidence it ought to be read. Then they make an Objection, and aſk how long it is ſince he was his Clerk? Why about fourteen or fifteen Years ago: His Hand may be altered in that Time very much; therefore how can you ſwear it, when it is ſo long ſince, that it is his Hand? Why, ſays he, becauſe I have received Letters from him five Years ago; I dealt for him as his Agent; this Gentleman, Mr. Layer, was my Client, he ſent Letters to me, and the Characters of the Letters I have compared with this Paper, and from hence it is I believe that his Character is not changed. How do you know he writ thoſe Letters? I anſwered thoſe Letters, and they were about buſineſs which I did for him, and afterwards he paid me very honourably for it; and therefore I believe they were his Writing, and therefore I believe he hath not changed his Character; and upon the whole Matter, ſays he, I very believe it to be his own Hand-Writing. Conſider, this is confirmed by his own Confeſſion; but if it had been an independent Evidence, it is an Evidence ſufficient for to have had this Paper read; becauſe if a Man ſays he verily believes it to be his Hand-Writing, it is always allowed to be read. You did aſk him, but upon what Grounds do you believe his Character is not changed? Why, ſays he, I do principally believe it from the Letters I received from him, which I ſhould have doubted on the Hand, which he writ fourteen Years ago, whether it was changed or not; and I believe it is not changed, becauſe it is agreeable with the Characters he writ, when he was my Clerk; and upon the whole, I believe it to be his Hand-Writing.

Then they tell you of an Examination of this Gentleman before the Lords of the Council, when they asked him about Arms, he knew nothing of them; then they ſhew him this Paper, and aſk him, how came you in a Scheme, all of your own Hand-Writing, to ſay, Arms that are provided? What was more natural than for him to ſay, here is a Paper that doth mention it, I deny it to be my Hand-Writing? But he was ſo far from denying it, that, as the plain Senſe and import of the Words ſpoken muſt be underſtood, he owns it to be his Hand.

It is a Miſtake, ſays he, I ſhould have writ which ſhould have been provided.

How ſhould he have writ that, if he had not writ the other?

So conſidering the whole Contexture of the Buſineſs, and Courſe of Proceeding, it is, and I believe none can doubt it, as plainly proved to be his own Hand-Writing, as if he had ſaid in ſo many Words, it is my Hand-Writing. It muſt have been read as a Paper found in his Cuſtody. The other Evidence, that is given to the Jury, will be a Matter proper for their Conſideration; but if that Evidence had not been, they muſt have been read; they offer that as of greater import, becauſe it is of the Priſoner's own Hand-Writing.

You tell us of the Lady Carr's Caſe, which was an extraordinary Caſe, when ſhe in her Anſwer in Chancery ſwore that it was not her Hand, they come to convict her of Perjury, by proving it to be her Hand by a Letter they produced.

Gentlemen, there is no Pretence to make this a Queſtion. Do you think that the Paper, which you offer, ſhall convict this Woman of Perjury? No, when ſhe had ſworn it was not her Hand, they come to prove it by a Witneſs, that ſays he believes it to be her Hand, becauſe they produce a Letter, which they ſay is her Hand. Upon this the Court determines that this Evidence ſhould not be allowed, that is, that it could could be of no Conſequence to falſify any Matter, which ſhe had declared upon Oath.

But as this Caſe is, ſure there is not the leaſt Doubt but if the Proof of his Hand had been out of the Caſe, it muſt be read as a Paper that was in his Cuſtody, and taken out of the Cuſtody of one, with whom he had depoſited it, which is proved beyond all Contradiction.

And in Caſe of my Lord Preſton, and in a thouſand Caſes, it hath been ſo, and never was denied.

True; if they come and ſay, is this his Hand? and the Witneſs ſays I don't know whether it is his Hand or no; I have ſeen ſomething of his Hand, and I don't know but it may be his Hand; it is not right; but the Witneſs muſt ground his Belief ſtronger; I have ſeen him write, and I know his Writing; therefore I believe it to be his Hand. If they had reſted it on that, that the firſt Evidence knew his Hand fourteen Years ago, that muſt be left to the Jury, whether they believe Mr. Doyley's Evidence; becauſe, ſays he, I ſaw him write fourteen Years ago. The Poſſibility of that, if there was nothing elſe in the Caſe, might be left to the Jury, whether that Evidence was ſufficient to ſatisfy them, that it was his Hand. Upon the Whole, never was any thing clearer than that this muſt be read as a Paper found in his Cuſtody, that hath in the uſual Manner and Method the Proof of being his Hand-writing.

Priſoner. If I am out of Time I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon; I will not take up your Lordſhip's Time; I only beg a Word or two; whether there is any legal Evidence as to the Publiſhing; the Indictment ſays, publicavit quoddam malitioſum ſeditioſum & proditorium ſcriptum, and that is not that, that is the Declaration.

L. C. Juſt. Whatever you ſay or offer, although it happen to be out of Time, we will diſpenſe with you, when out of Time; but what you offer now is upon a Miſtake, we are not upon the Paper you ſhould apply it to, that is, the Matter of your Declaration, but we are upon the Scheme Paper, not whether you publiſhed it, but whether you writ it.

Priſoner. I am charged in the Indictment as publiſhing a malitious, ſeditious and traiterous Writing.

L. C. Juſt. You are charged with that as an Overt-Act of the Treaſon, of Compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; that you did publiſh a malitious, ſeditious, and traiterous Paper, that is the matter of the Declaration. The Matter now is, not for Publiſhing, but whether there is a reaſonable Proof given that it is your Hand-Writing.

Mr. Juſt. Powys. This is only a Circumſtance, not an Overt-Act ſufficient to convict you.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we offer this Paper as a ſtrong Evidence corroborating and confirming every Thing which hath been ſworn by the Witneſſes, and we pray it may be read.

Mr. Hungerford. I was reading the Act of Parliament when they——

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we muſt beg leave to inſiſt upon the Courſe of Proceeding, that the Counſel ſhall not go on to argue a Point, after the Opinion of the Court has been given.

L. C. Juſt. Now you have heard the Opinion of the Court, you muſt not go on.

Mr. Hungerford. I was looking upon the Act of Parliament——

L. C. Juſt. You remember Francia's Caſe, there was a Letter taken up at his Bedſide, it was diſputed whether that ſhould be read, at laſt a Witneſs came and ſaid, I have ſeen him write ſeveral Times, and I believe it to be his Hand; and it was read.

Mr. Hungerford. Ay, haſtily read.

Clerk of the Crown reads the whole Scheme.

The SCHEME.

Au défaut de la force, il faut employer la ruſe.

1. LET the General, and only one Officer of Note in the Camp, agree upon a Day for Execution.

2. Let the Officer that Day put himſelf on the Tower-Guard.

3. And as there is eight Serjeants (viz.) three of the firſt Regiment of Foot-Guards, three of the Second, and two of the Third, all ready at an Hour's warning to obey Orders; early that Morne, let the Officer ſee a ſingle Perſon; namely George Wilſon, who manages theſe Serjeants, and give him Directions to bring them all to ſome convenient Place at four that Afternoon.

4. Then the Officer muſt give each Serjeant Money ſufficient for the Purpoſe, and direct 'em, that each Serjeant order twenty five Men (making together two hundred, which they have ready) to go ſingly out of the Camp, and meet together at Church-Yard, exactly half an Hour paſt eight in the Evening, when and where another Officer that they know, muſt meet 'em, and take the Command, give 'em Muſkets ready loaded, and march with them in a Body to the Tower-Gate at nine that Night exactly.

5. Our Friend, the Officer within, muſt preciſely at that Hour of nine be on the Guard at the Tower-Gate, and ſeeing this Body of Men appear, order the Garriſon to let 'em in, as a Recruit ſent to the Tower-Guard.

6. As ſoon as ever they have entered to ſeize the Arms at the Tower-Gate, ſhut the Gate up, and ſecure every one in the Tower; that the Officer on Guard gives them Orders to ſecure, but not to ſhed any Blood.

7. The Tower being thus ſeized, to leave only a ſmall Guard there under that Officer who lets 'em in, and then, with all thoſe that join you, march directly to the Exchange, where the great Doors muſt be ready opened, and the General there in Perſon.

8. At the exact Hour of nine, that the Tower ſhall be thus ſeized, the Perſons of ſome great Men to be arreſted at their Houſes, brought directly into the City, and delivered to the General.

9. That upon our Meeting at the Exchange, the annexed Proclamation to be ſpread about; the Gates of the City to be ſhut up, and Pieces of Canon brought down againſt 'em, but every Man that deſires to enter the Gates, before any regular Force appear, to be admitted to come in, and after the General has appointed a Guard at each Gate, and Inlets of the City, with proper Officers to command there; let him march back to Tower-Hill, for a Place of General Rendezvous under the Canon of the Tower, and order the Lord Mayor a good Guard to watch over the Bank, but firſt take Money from thence to the Tower, in order to pay the Men.

10. That on the Morne of this ſame Day, our General to have an Interview with ſome other principal Officer of the Camp, and order him to engage all Friends to attend at their reſpective Poſts, and expect a [a] Token to be ſent to each of them as that very Night, on receipt of which Token they are to draw their Men out, and march directly to the Artillery in the Camp, as a Place of General Rendezvous; and that the Captain of the Artillery may not be alarm'd, let this Principal Officer previouſly ſend a Meſſage to him, that Orders are come from the General (Cadogan) to double the Guard of the Artillery, on a Rumour that is ſpread of the Mob being up in the City.

11. The Party being come to the Artillery with the ſaid Principal Officer at the Head of 'em, let 'em immediately draw the Guns round 'em, and ſtand upon their Defence, without making any Declaration, until the ſaid principal Officer, who commands in chief there, receive certain [b] Intelligence from our General that the Tower is ſeized upon, and the City all in Arms, and then under a Pretence of ſecuring the King's Perſon from the Inſults of the Mob, let this Officer make a Detachment to take him into Cuſtody, and ſend him into the City to the General at the Tower.

12. To facilitate theſe Proceedings, let the General the ſame Day ſpeak to the Horſe-Officers in the Camp, who he knows to be our Friends, and upon the very firſt Alarm of the City's having revolted, let 'em march their Men to either Ludgate or Newgate, on pretence to ſuppreſs the Mob; and when they are at the Gate, as a Token of their being Friends, let the Watch-Word be This Morning, and upon giving us the Word there, to open the Gates and let 'em in, and as ſoon as they are entered, to march directly to Tower-Hill and join themſelves with the General there.

13. Let the General alſo the ſame Day, order four of the Half-pay Captains to take upon 'em the following Commands, (viz.)

14. Firſt Captain to go into Southwark, and exactly at the Hour of nine, to make a Bonfire in the Fields there, and give ſome Money among the Mob, and when you have got a Number together, ſend an Account to the General, take the Arms that muſt be lodg'd there, and diſtribute out amongſt 'em to your Acquaintance in the firſt Place, and to thoſe which they recommend, and then iſſue out the Declarations; and after the Receipt of a Token from the Captain next mentioned, who is to command in Palace-Yard, to ferry over thither in Lighters, with the Watch-Word This Morning, and join the Captain in Palace-Yard.

15. Second Captain exactly at the Hour of nine, to be in Privy-Garden, adjoining to White-Hall, with a few Gentlemen armed, and ſeize upon the great Guns there, and then ſpread the Declarations, and ſtay there under the Cannon till a greater Body join you from Southwark; or otherwiſe nail up the Cannon, and march directly to the next Captain in St. James's Park with the Watch-Word This Morning, and then ſend the Token, as above, to the firſt Captain in Southwark, and let the Meſſenger you ſend, conduct him and his Men to you in St. James's Park.

16. Third Captain, at the ſaid Hour of nine, to go into St. James's Park, with the Key that is given you of the Private-Door out of Arlington-Street, and appoint only ſome few Gentlemen to meet you there exactly at that Hour and ready, one to have the Watch-Word you give 'em, which muſt be This Morning. Let your firſt Rendezvous be at the little Grove under the Wall near the Gate leading to Hyde-Park; and and there you'll meet Fire-Arms ready charged. Then march down to the Parade next the Horſe-Guard, and ſeize upon the Cannon there, and Ammunition in the Store-Houſe, and the better to ſecure St. James's Park for a Place of general Rendezvous, you ſhall have an Officer out of the Camp exactly at the Hour of nine come to your Aſſiſtance with ſome Men, as he and you ſhall agree in the Morne of this Day, and as ſoon as you have ſeized the Canon here, and Ammunition aforeſaid, you are to put your ſelves in a Poſture of Defence, and publiſh the Declaration, and ſend forthwith to the General at the Tower to let him know of your Situation, and alſo ſend to the Captains in Palace-yard, Southwark, and Tuttle-Fields, that they immedialy come and join you.

17. Fourth Captain, exactly at the Hour of nine, the Evening of the ſame Day to be in Tuttle-Fields; raiſe the Weſtminſter Mob there, and with the Arms that are there lodg'd, equip 'em as you can; publiſh the Declarations, and march directly to St. James's Park and join with 'em there, who, on your giving 'em the Watch-Word, are to admit you into the Park.

18. So here being two Bodies of Men thus gotten together the firſt Night, viz. One on Tower-Hill, and the other in St. James's Park (beſides our Friends at the Artillery in Hyde-Park) The next Morning, if not ſooner, let our General order a Detachment to Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and ſome Cannon to be placed on the Terras of the Garden there, leſt the Enemy come in there between St. James's Park and the City.

19. A proper Captain muſt be appointed to head the Watermen belonging to the Thames, and previous to the Day of Execution, he muſt agree with the Duke's Bargemen, that upon the leaſt Notice to be given 'em, that they alarm all the Watermen, and bring 'em to a Rendezvous the ſame Hour of nine that Night of Execution, and this Captain's Rendezvous muſt be at Greenwich, where he muſt ſeize the Magazine of Powder, and take out ſuch part of it as each Man will carry, then blow up the reſt, march from thence to the Tower, and join his Men with the General there, to whom he muſt firſt ſend a Meſſenger with the Watch-Word, and an Account of his Numbers.

20. Some Time before Execution, the General to ſend a Meſſenger to particular Men in the Country, that they riſe in their reſpective Counties upon the firſt News of what is done here.——

21. An Officer, &c. to go to Richmond, and at the exact Hour of nine to ſeize upon Prince Pritty Man, and bring him away to Southwark to ſome particular Place appointed, where an Agent from the General muſt meet 'em with his further Orders.

[a] It may be a Note in Writing thus, Sir, I'll meet you at nine to Night, don't fail me. J. S.

[b] A verbal Meſſage by a third Perſon that muſt be by, when the General and this Chief Officer conſult together in the Morne.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We read this as an Evidence that cannot be miſtaken, which is all of his own Hand-Writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we apprehend that this confirms what both the Witneſſes have ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We ſhall now produce ſome Receipts ſubſcribed by the Name of James R. and pray that they may be read, theſe were likewiſe among thoſe Papers, as hath been proved in the Manner you have heard already.

Clerk of the Crown reads one of them.

I Acknowledge to have received from the Sum of which Sum I promiſe to repay with an Intereſt for it at the Rate of per Annum

James R.

L. C. Juſt. They are not read as if proved, the Hand is not proved, but as Papers found on him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. In my Lord Preſton's Caſe, his Lordſhip was taken in the Hold of a Ship lying upon the Ballaſt, and Aſhton there near him, and between his Lordſhip and Aſhton was found lying alſo upon the Ballaſt, a Pacquet of Papers, which Aſhton ſnatch'd up, and put into his Boſom, from whence they were preſently taken; two Seals, which appeared to be my Lord Preſton's when he was Secretary of State, were found lying near to the Papers. Upon this Proof thoſe Papers were read as Evidence againſt my Lord Preſton, without any Proof made of their being his Hand-Writing, in order to the Reading of them.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord Preſton was taken on board a Ship going to France, then in War with England, theſe Papers were found in the Boſom of Mr. Aſhton, who was going with him; my Lord endeavoured, ſo far as he could, to throw them over-board: The Offence did not turn upon the Papers being writ by my Lord Preſton, or not; in my Lord Preſton's Caſe the Papers contained a Diſcovery of the Condition of the Fleet and Garriſons of England and France, in order to enable France to invade us; it ſignify'd nothing who writ the Papers, the Crime was the having them, knowing the Contents of them, and endeavouring to carry them to France, ſo the Circumſtances of my Lord Preſton widely differ from this.

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to mention another Thing, there the Papers were found in the Cuſtody of my Lord Preſton, here they were found in the Cuſtody of a third Perſon, whoſe Evidence we ſhall controvert by a Number of Witneſſes, when it comes to our turn. I believe it will appear that ſome of the Papers were found on the Table in my Lord Preſton's Caſe, and others taken out of his Pocket.

Mr. Soll. Gen. No, they were firſt found lying on the Ballaſt.

Mr. Ketelbey. What were found on Aſhton, and taken out of his Boſom, were ſeen lying on the Ballaſt, but there were other Papers ſeized at that Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They were the ſame Papers that were afterwards taken out of Aſhton's Boſom, which were read as Evidence againſt my Lord Preſton upon the Circumſtances I have mentioned.

Mr. Ketelbey. As I remember, ſome of them were found on the Table in the Cabin.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. No, they were found on the Ballaſt in the Hold of the Ship.

L. C. Juſt. You ſay that they were found in my Lord Preſton's Poſſeſſion, and not in the Poſſeſſion of Aſhton; you ſay my Lord Preſton had no Counſel, but you know 'tis the Duty of the Court not to ſuffer any thing to be read in Evidence that ought not. You ſay you ſhall controvert this Matter, and give an anſwer to it, and that it appears they were not in his Cuſtody, they were taken out of this Witneſs's Cuſtody, and under his Seal, and therefore the Difference it makes is nothing at all. Beſides, the Proof in my Lord Preſton's Caſe is not ſo ſtrong as the Proof of the Scheme againſt the Priſoner, becauſe the Scheme is proved to be his own Hand-Writing, which was not in the Caſe of my Lord Preſton.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, will not your Lordſhip think it neceſſary that they give further Evidence that they are his Papers before they are read.

L. C. Juſt. Read them.

Cl. of the Cr. I acknowledge to have received, &c. here are ten of them, that are the ſame.

Mr. Ser. Pengelly. Mr. Stanyan, do you remember whether any Queſtions were aſk'd him with relation to thoſe Receipts?

Mr. Stanyan. What I recollect is this: Upon the Lords aſking Mr. Layer the meaning of thoſe Receipts ſigned by the Pretender, and what Uſe he made of them, he ſaid that during the Time he was at Rome, he had ſettled a Correſpondence with Sir William Ellis, and ſome time afterwards he writ to Sir William Ellis according to the Directions he gave him, and he told him, if he could ſend any Receipts ſigned by his Majeſty, or the King, as he called him, he thought Money might be rais'd upon them for carrying on the Cauſe, theſe were the Words, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Delafaye, was you by?

Mr. Ketelbey. It was for raiſing Money to carry on his Cauſe, you mean Sir William Ellis's Cauſe?

Mr. Stanyan. No, Sir.

Mr. Hungerford. He acknowledged to have received them from Sir William Ellis?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. You ſaid he own'd he had them from Sir William Ellis, having ſettled a Correſpondence with him, that Money might be raiſed by theſe to carry on his Cauſe; he told you he had Buſineſs to do for Sir William Ellis.

Mr. Stanyan. No. I know nothing of Sir William Ellis's Buſineſs, but that he had appointed to correſpond with Sir William Ellis, and Sir William Ellis gave him his Addreſs how to direct to him, and he acknowledged to have received a Letter or Letters from Sir William Ellis, in the Name of Jones, and that he writ to him in Anſwer to 'em.

Mr. Ketelbey. Are you ſure as to thoſe Words, or only to the Purport of 'em?

Mr. Stanyan. I think they are near the Words, but I am ſure they are the Purport of them?

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it reduc'd into Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. It was reduced into Writing in this Manner. It was a very long Examination, about four or five Hours.

Mr. Ketelbey.

Mr. Ketelbey. I aſk you, whether it was reduced into Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes it was; the Lords ſent to me, to aſſiſt Mr. Delafaye, upon Mr. Layer's being examined. Mr. Delafaye took the Heads of the Queſtions propounded; and I ſate near the Table, look'd over Mr. Delafaye; attended to the Queſtions and Anſwers; ſo that we could ſet one another right when we came to conſider them.

Mr. Ketelbey. This you wrote, was it read over to the Priſoner?

Mr. Stanyan. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you believe the Priſoner at the Bar ſaw you write.

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, I believe he ſaw us write.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you believe he thought any Perſon was taking his Confeſſion in Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. I think it cannot be otherwiſe.

Mr. Ketelbey. I aſk you, do you believe that Mr. Layer knew that you was taking his Confeſſion at that Time?

Mr. Stanyan. The Lords ſpoke thus; Pray take Notice, and then take down ſuch a Thing, and ſuch a Thing; and I believe Mr. Layer heard them ſay, Take down that, and take down that.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it ever known for one to take down the Queſtions, and the other the Anſwers; and then to compare them together, in Order to make a Confeſſion?

Mr. Stanyan. No. Mr. Delafaye wrote down the Queſtions and Anſwers.

Mr. Hungerford. How was the Poſition of Mr. Layer, with reſpect to you; was your Back or Face towards him?

Mr. Stanyan. It was on one Side.

Mr. Hungerford. Was you in the Room when Mr. Layer came in firſt?

Mr. Stanyan. I was, I called in Mr. Layer by the Lords Order.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it ever read to him?

Mr. Stanyan. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it drawn up in Form, ſo that you might call it an Examination?

Mr. Stanyan. I will tell you what we underſtood by it; it was the Minutes of an Examination to be drawn out in Form: But the Lords finding Mr. Layer not ſo candid and ingenuous as they thought he would have been, did not aſk him to ſign it; and we only make uſe of it to refreſh our Memories.

Mr. Ketelbey. He calls it an Examination, and it appears by what Mr. Stanyan ſaith, that he and Mr. Delafaye took it; one takes one Part, and the other takes another Part.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He did not ſay any ſuch Thing.

Mr. Ketelbey. His Confeſſion was never read over to him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Stanyan, when the Lords directed Mr. Delafaye and you to write this or that particular Thing, was the Priſoner ſo near, that in your Apprehenſion he might hear their Lordſhips give ſuch Directions?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, he was.

Mr. Hungerford. Sure they are not contending, that any Confeſſion ſhall affect a Man, unleſs it was read to him; and it ought to be ſigned by him: My Lord, the Man is no Way anſwerable for any Thing taken in Writing, without his Conſent or Privity, in a criminal Caſe. It is called Minutes of an Examination, which they might enlarge as they pleaſe; therefore we humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether it ought to be offered in Evidence at all as a Confeſſion.

Mr. Ketelbey. What will be the Conſequence, if this be allowed here? Is a Perſon to be convicted of Treaſon upon a Confeſſion taken, without its being read to him, and without his ſigning it? A Confeſſion to a Juſtice of Peace, in Caſes of Felony, unleſs read to the Party, and ſigned by him, muſt not be given in Evidence.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Ketelbey, you ſeem to miſtake what it is that is contended for by the King's Council; they are not going to offer any thing to be read in Evidence: Your Objection would prevail, if they were going to read a Confeſſion as Evidence, which was neither read to him, nor ſigned by him; but if there is no Examination reduced into Writing, and ſigned by the Party, the Conſequence of that is, that the Witneſs is at Liberty to give an Account of what was ſaid; and he may look to his Notes to refreſh his Memory: If you will ſay, it is not ſo great an Evidence, of ſo great Weight, as an Examination taken, and ſigned by the Party, there is ſome Room left, ſome Foundation to ſuppoſe the Evidence may be miſtaken.

He ſays, he was examined before the Lords of the Council; and he took Minutes of his Examination: And afterwards to refreſh himſelf, he looks upon them, and ſays, he believes that is the Subſtance of what he confeſſed at that time. You ſay, there is no Precedent for it; for God's Sake! Recollect your ſelf, it is every Day done at the Old Bailey: If a Perſon confeſſeth, and it be not in Writing, they do prove his Confeſſion, Vivâ Voce.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, Coleman's Caſe, which was during the time that Sir William Jones was Attorney General, went further than this: There his Letters were laid in the Indictment, as the very Overt-Act of the High-Treaſon charged againſt him; and yet one of thoſe Letters was proved by his Confeſſion, upon an Examination before a Committee of the Houſe of Lords; and that Confeſſion was proved, Vivâ Voce, by Sir Philip Lloyd.

Mr. Ketelbey. Whether that Caſe ſhall be a Precedent? I never heard it ſo reckon'd.

Mr. Hungerford. And I hope it never will be one.

Mr. Delafaye, ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Mr. Delafaye, pray give an Account what Mr. Layer declared before the Lords of the Council concerning theſe Receipts.

Mr. Delafaye. The Account he gave——

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Delafaye, you was preſent at the Time of taking this Examination; you ſay, you took Minutes in Writing; you have told us the Reaſon why it was not in Form, and read to Mr. Layer: If you have not already done it, you may look to your Minutes, and refreſh your Memory. That which the Court demands of you is, what Mr. Layer did confeſs at the Time of his Examination before the Lords of the Council.

Mr. Delafaye. He told the Lords, that he did write to Sir William Ellis, that he would ſend over ſome blank Receipts under the King's own Hand, that might be made uſe of, for the carrying on his Cauſe: That he did receive ſuch

Receipts, and his Intention was to have tried his Friends; and to have raiſed Money on thoſe Receipts.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Did he give any Reaſon why he went into that Method?

Mr. Delafaye. For a Precedent, he ſaid, a little before the Reſtoration of King Charles II, a Method of this Kind had been uſed.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall now proceed to read the Letters that were ſent and paſs'd between them, Sir William Ellis and Mr. Layer. But it will be proper firſt to lay before you the Cyphers which they made uſe of to explain ſeveral cant Words and Expreſſions, which they us'd in their Letters.

L. C. Juſt. Were the Cyphers found among Mr. Layer's Papers?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Pray read No. 38.

Mr. Att. Gen. I don't know whether we ſhall trouble your Lordſhip to read the whole Cypher; it is very long, but when we meet with a Word in the Letters which wants Explanation, we may have Recourſe to the Cypher.—— Read the Letter No. 38.

Cl. of the Cr. reads. This Letter is ſign'd Euſtace Jones, &c.

Dear SIR,

I Receiv'd with a great deal of Pleaſure and Satisfaction, a Letter of the 24th of November, from my worthy Friend, with an Account of his ſafe Arrival; of which I was in ſome Doubt before, and in no ſmall Pain on that Account: I eaſily conceive, he muſt needs have had a great deal of Buſineſs on his Return, as well of his Unkle's as of his own; and therefore, I don't think much that I heard no ſooner from him, believing he was much better imploy'd, and that Buſineſs is to be preferr'd before Compliment.

I was entirely of his Opinion as to the Method of carrying on the Manufactory; the procuring of good Workmen, is the firſt Step to be made, and if he can get ſuch, the reſt will be eaſy; and particularly, if he could gain ſome of the ableſt of Mrs. Barbara Smith's, I know it would be very agreeable to all concern'd, and particularly to Mr. Atkins, to whom he ſpoke of Writing; and which, I am ſatisfied, will be very acceptable: And if he thinks fit to incloſe it to me, I ſhall convey it ſafely to his Hands, who, I find, was very glad to hear of him, counts very much upon his Friendſhip, and hopes for the Continuance of it.

I made his Compliments to Mr. Timothy Watſon's Wife, who took them very kindly, and returns hers, with her moſt humble Service. She and her Charge are very well, God be prais'd, as are alſo all Friends here.

He having read over ſeveral times the Paper I ſhew'd him, and having a good Memory, I don't think it neceſſary to ſend a Copy of it.

I am, with great Eſteem and Reſpect, ever moſt entirely,

Dear SIR,

Your moſt affectionate,

moſt humble and moſt obedient Servant,

Euſtace Jones.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordſhip is pleaſed to remember, Mr. Stanyan ſaid that Sir William Ellis was to write by the Name of Jones.

Mr. Stanyan. My Lord, he did ſay, that he had received a Letter ſince he had ſettled a Correſpondence with Sir William Ellis ſubſcribed by the Name of Jones.

Mr. Att. Gen. In the Cypher Sir William Ellis is called Jones.

Cl. of the Cr. reads. This Letter is ſign'd Euſtace Jones, dated 30th January, no Year, Dear Sir, I receiv'd, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to obſerve the Expreſſions in this Letter, the procuring good Workmen: Now look in the Cypher, and Soldiers are meant by Workmen; Manufactory is not in the Cyphers, but I don't know for what Manufactory they wanted Soldiers, unleſs to raiſe a Rebellion. The Ableſt of Mrs. Barbara Smith's; look for Army in the Cyphers, and you will find, that is ſignified by Barbara: It will be very acceptable to all concern'd, and particularly to Mr. Atkins; in the Cypher that is the Pretender. Compliments to Mr. Timothy Watſon's Wife; look in the Cyphers, and Timothy ſtands for Hughes, whoſe Wife is Nurſe to the Pretender's Child. This Letter is directed for James Fountaine, Eſq; to be left at Howel's Coffee-Houſe in Great Wild-Street, and I obſerve, Mrs. Maſon ſaid the Priſoner went by the Name of Fountaine.—— No. 10. are ſix fictitious Names, and the Key to 'em: Read it.

Dear SIR, The 11th of July, 1722.

I Receiv'd with all poſſible Satisfaction your moſt affectionate Letter of 8th May with its incloſ'd, which was preſently delivered to Mr. St. John, who took it extream kindly; but could not well underſtand what relates to Mr. Burford; he hopes, your Anſwer to what I writ, in the beginning of laſt Month, may ſoon clear that: You will have ſeen, by what I then told you, that the former came ſafe to his Hands, and the Reaſon of your not having had a diſtinct Anſwer to it: He had the Stockins you ſent for him, and returns you many Thanks for them; as alſo for all other Marks of your Affection and Concern for him and his, and will be ready to ſhew his Senſe thereof on all Occaſions. I am in earneſt Expectation of hearing ſoon again from you, and am, with all poſſible Affection and Eſteem,

Dear SIR,

For James Fountaine, Eſq; to be left at Howell's Coffee-Houſe in Great Wild-Street, LONDON.

Your moſt faithful and moſt humble Servant,

N. C.

L. C. Juſt.

L. C. Just. Who is that N. C?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not know, it is directed to James Fountaine, Esq; Mr. St. John in the Cypher signifies the Pretender.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Burford appears to stand for my Lord Orrery in the little Cypher.

Mr. Hungerford. Look into the Paper, pray what do Stockins stand for?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read the Letter No. 41.

Cl. of the Cr. This is dated the 27 May, it is sign'd by no Body, nor directed to any Body; the Cover is off: I receiv'd with a great, &c.

Dear SIR, 27 May.

I Receiv'd with a great deal of Pleasure, the Favour of your most obliging Letter of 22*d* March, with an inclosed for our Friend, who was very glad to hear from you; and is very sensible of, and takes very kindly, the Care you take of his little Concern there; but says, he doth not sufficiently understand the State you sent, so as to be able to make a particular Answer, till you shall further explain it; there being some Tenants, mention'd by you, whose Names he does not find in the Rental, as Burford, Steel, Digby, the little Soldier, and Simmons; the latter, he believes should be Simmes, he is of the North, a grey hair'd ancient Man, whom he very well remembers, and has a particular Esteem and Value for, as a very good Tenant, and a very honest Man.

All Friends here are in perfect good Health, God be thanked, and remember themselves kindly to you, and I am most entirely,

Yours, &c.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you look into the Cypher, you will find Rental stands as the fictitious Name for the Cypher itself; Burford stands for the Lord Orrery, Steel for the Regent, and Digby for General Dillon.

Simmons, he believes should be Simmes, but Simmons in the large Cypher is put for Lord North and Grey, and who is meant, appears pretty plain from the Cant which follows. He is of the North, a grey hair'd ancient Man, whom he well remembers, and hath a particular Esteem and Value for, as a very good Tenant, and a very honest Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look for Simmons in the Cypher.

Mr. Hungerford. I can make one Observation, that Mr. Harcourt is very ready at it.

Cl. of the Cr. It is alphabeted, so that it is easy to look for it.

L. C. Just. What Use do you make of these Letters?

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Use we make of them is to shew, that Mr. Layer who took on him the Sham-Name of Fountaine, by which Name some of these Letters are addressed, had a Correspondence with the Friends of the PRETENDER at Rome. That this Correspondence related to a Conspiracy, which was form'd and carrying on here; and it appears, they took upon them to mention several Persons of Distinction under a kind of Jargon.

Mr. Att. Gen. The first Letter, wherein is mentioned the carrying on the Manufactory, the procuring good Workmen, and particularly, if he could gain some of the ablest of Mrs. Barbara Smith's, and that it would be very agreeable to all concern'd, and particularly to Mr. Atkins, which is the Name for the Pretender; shews, that the Agents of the Pretender at Rome; had laid Designs to procure Soldiers, and those, if possible, out of his Majesty's Troops; which falls in with the Evidence we have given of the Prisoner's Endeavours to get Soldiers and Serjeants out of the Army.

Mr. Serj. Chesshyre. It may not be improper, since we have explain'd it, to lay before you the Lists of several Persons Names that are in the Army.

Pray read No. 7. out of the large Bundle.

Cl of the Cr. Reads a List of Officers Names with Marks and Numbers to some of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. We did mention before, that there were the Names of several Persons of very great Honour and Loyalty to his Majesty in some of the Lists; but this is to shew, that the Prisoner was consulting how he might get an Account of the Number of the Forces; as, how many Colonels, how many Captains, and how many Soldiers there were in the Guards and other Troops of his Majesty.

Read No. 5. in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 5. A List of Officers of the Second, or Coldstream Regiment of Guards.

Mr. Att. Gen. We make the same Use of this to shew, that he was searching and examining to get an Account of the Guards.

L. C. Just. I suppose he is taking a Survey of the Persons that were of the Guards, that he might be capable of making a Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord; and to know their Strength: Look out No. 6. in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 6. A List of Officers in the first Troop of Horse-Grenadiers, the Names being distinguished by different Letters.

No. 7. out of the small Bundle. A List, &c. here are eleven of them put down.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 8. A List, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship will observe, that this is a List of some Persons Names, and the Numbers of Horses and Men they were to provide.

L. C. Just. You'll have this to import an Account of what Quota's several Persons were to find.

Mr. Att. Gen. The last was read for that Purpose: Read No. 15. in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 15. Containing divers Names, with Numbers set against some of them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read No. 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24, in the large Bundle.

Containing Names of Officers of the First, Second, Third and Fourth Troops of Guards. No. 24. Containing the Names of two Officers of the Horse-Guards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that List, No. 21. whether there are not some private Marks upon it.

Cl. of the Cr. Yes, here is upon one of them a Dott, and on the other Side there is a Dott; in two or three Places ſome Men mark'd and croſs'd.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. Read No. 25.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 25. Containing a Liſt of Officers, five of them marked to be not bad.

Mr. Reeve. Are the Words not bad of the ſame Hand-Writing?

Cl. of the Cr. Yes, it doth appear to me to be ſo.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read the Title of No. 22.

Cl. of the Cr. Here are a great many Peoples Names, with Marks upon ſome, and none upon others: Upon one of them is Writ William Johnſon, to be gain'd.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read No. 27.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads, A Liſt of the Third Regiment of Guards; againſt ſeveral of which Names are Dotts and Marks.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read No. 28.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads, A Liſt of the Officers of the Coldſtream Regiment of Guards; and a Liſt of the Officers of the Scotch Guards.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read No. 35.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 35. A Paper, containing an Account of the Numbers of the Officers and Soldiers in the Firſt, Second, and Third Regiment of Foot Guards.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we beg leave to aſk Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan two or three Queſtions, to ſupport the Evidence of Mr. Lynch and Mr. Plunkett, in relation to ſome particular Facts; whether at the time of the Examination of Mr. Layer before the Lords of the Council, any thing was ſaid of Mr. Layer's being at Rome?

Mr. Hungerford. With humble Submiſſion, Mr. Layer's being at Rome, and correſponding with the Pretender, (if he did ſo) is made Treaſon by another Act of Parliament, not by this Act of Parliament upon which he is Indicted: Therefore, whether he was himſelf at Rome, or correſponded with the Pretender, cannot be offered as an Evidence of High-Treaſon upon this Indictment.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. It is only to ſhew the Probability of his receiving thoſe Receipts.

Mr. Ketelbey. Since we did not know any thing of thoſe Papers, we could not properly make our Exceptions againſt them, till we heard them read; and now, if they prove any thing, 'tis the holding Correſpondence with the Pretender; but that relates to another late Act of Parliament; 'tis another Species of Treaſon; and the Evidence which they would give of his Confeſſion, Vivâ Voce; they ſay, it is only to ſupport theſe Papers that are read; Who can make any Objection to a Paper which we did know nothing of? I believe, few in the Court know what the Meaning of theſe Papers are now they are read; for my Part, I know very little of them; we apprehend that inſtead of being allowed to ſupport this Evidence, by proving a foreign Correſpondence between Mr. Layer and the Pretender, by the Name of King JAMES, which is made Treaſon by a particular Act of Parliament; they ought rather to have Indicted him upon that, than endeavour to ſupport their defective Proof by giving Evidence of an Offence, which may be matter of another Enquiry.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we apprehend a Proof, that the Priſoner was at Rome, and had Conferences with the Pretender, will be very proper to corroborate, and explain the Evidence that hath been given by the Witneſſes, and the Pretender's Notes, and Sir William Ellis's Letters to the Priſoner; and for thoſe Purpoſes we would make Uſe of it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Tho' we apprehend we have made our Caſe extremely ſtrong already, yet this which has been opened may be offered by Way of further Confirmation: Notwithſtanding the Objection which is made, that we are attempting to give Evidence of another Kind of Treaſon not alledged in the Indictment, yet we inſiſt upon it, that it is proper here, as circumſtantial Evidence of the Treaſon which is alledged. We have proved a Conſpiracy entered into between this Gentleman and others, to bring in the Pretender, and levy War for that Purpoſe; and alſo, Notes ſign'd JAMES R. which he received from Sir William Ellis, a Perſon at the Pretender's Court. Now, if we follow this by ſhewing, that the Priſoner was actually at Rome, and had Perſonal Conferences with the Pretender himſelf; that, ſurely, muſt be admitted to be a material Circumſtance to ſupport the Proof of thoſe other Facts. I beg Leave to ſay, that it has been held, even ſince the Stat. 7° Will. Tertij, That Acts of High-Treaſon not laid in the Indictment, may be given in Evidence, if they conduce to the Proof of ſome Overt-Act which is there laid.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhyre. We apprehend your Lordſhip will receive Evidence of the ſame Kind of Treaſon in a lower Degree, in order to prove the Overt-Act, whereby he conſulted and conſpired to bring in the Pretender, and place him upon the Throne.

As the Priſoner did correſpond with his Miniſters, ſo he had Acceſs to the Pretender himſelf; and he did own it. That we apprehend is going a Step higher, ſomething further than already is admitted; and if it is proper Evidence, there is no reaſon why it ſhould be rejected.

Mr. Reeve. It is true, we have not Indicted him for a treaſonable Correſpondence with the Pretender, therefore they object, we cannot give Evidence of any ſuch Correſpondence upon this Indictment.

My Lord, we humbly apprehend, every thing that is a Circumſtance that will gain Credit to the Witneſſes examined is proper Evidence. It looks indeed improbable, that a Gentleman of the Profeſſion of the Law ſhould enter into this treaſonable Deſign, which is expreſsly ſworn upon him by two Witneſſes, whoſe Credit they deſign to impeach; therefore we humbly offer this as a circumſtantial Evidence. This Gentleman having gone from his Profeſſion, hath been at Rome, was kindly receiv'd and entertain'd by the Pretender; thereupon he hath entered into an Intercourſe with his Miniſters: And, if we prove this, it is to induce Credit to the Evidence we have given by poſitive Witneſſes. We therefore think it proper, and ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. Juſt. They muſt go on, they are not going upon an Evidence of a new Overt-Act of Treaſon; the Overt-Acts are, conſulting, adviſing, and agreeing to raiſe a Rebellion.

Mr. Hungerford. I humbly beg your Lordſhip's Pardon.

L. C. Juſt.

L. C. Just. If you will not hear me, you will teach me not to hear you.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I hope we have a Right to reply.

Mr. West. Upon the first Letter of Sir William Ellis's he congratulates him, as his Friend, on his safe Arrival.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon; I am in the Service of my Client, and in endeavouring to do him Service, I am verily persuaded, I shall not offend your Lordship: Really for my part, I cannot satisfy my self, that the Evidence which they tender to the Court is a proper Evidence.

This Gentleman is indicted upon the Statute de Proditionibus, 25° Ed. 3. The Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment are, his consulting, conspiring, and agreeing to raise a Rebellion, and to levy War against the King, &c.

There is an Act of Parliament in the last Year of King William, whereby the Pretender is attainted, which makes corresponding with the Pretender, or any of his Adherents High-Treason; and when any Man commits that particular Treason, he is liable to be taken up and prosecuted for it. Now my Lord, shall they be admitted to give an Evidence of a Treason committed in breach of one Act of Parliament, when they are prosecuting him upon another, they may as well offer Evidence against him for counterfeiting the Great-Seal, or clipping and coining for the Sake of Evidence: We hope this Practice shall not be allowed; if they are so full of Proof (as by their opening they seem'd to be) which by the Rules of Law can reach this Man's Life, which I cannot yet see, let Justice take its Course: But we humbly hope they shall not be permitted to give Evidence of Facts which are intirely foreign to the present Accusation, and can be calculated for nothing but to captivate the Jury, by acquainting them that the Prisoner hath been at Rome. But if the King's Counsel will have it effectually publish'd, that the Prisoner hath been at Rome, let them consent to have him found not guilty upon this Indictment, and let him then be prosecuted upon the Act, for corresponding with the Pretender, and see what will come of it.

Mr. Ketelbey. The Act of Parliament that makes this new Treason is the 13 and 14 of King William; which not only makes that Treason which was not Treason before, but puts it on a new Method of Trial in any County of England, where it is laid. Now they would give in Evidence a Fact, which Mr. Serj. Chesshyre says, is Evidence of the same Kind of Treason, tho' in a lower Degree, and ought to be received to prove the Overt-Acts of consulting and conspiring to restore, and bring the Pretender to the Throne: As to the Evidence that hath been read we could not have objected to the Papers, because we did not know what they were, nor whether they related to a Foreign or Domestick Correspondence. Now because they are read as being found on a Person to whom he gave them; shall they, to support a Treason, of compassing and imagining the Death of the King; give Evidence of corresponding with the Pretender.

My Lord, I don't apprehend the King's Counsel have given us any manner of Answer, and therefore shall not take up any more of your Lordship's Time, by repeating in a Reply, what I offered before by way of Objection: I submit it to your Lordship.

L. C. Just. Sure as this Evidence is offer'd it is very proper; consider, in the Indictment the Overt-Acts are, meeting, consulting, advising, and agreeing to raise a Rebellion. The next is, publishing a Traiterous Libel, in which Rewards are promised to those that would assist in this Rebellion; a third Overt-Act is, the engaging and listing Men for the Service of the Pretender; a fourth is, a designing to depose the King; and another is, to set up the Pretender on the Throne: Now, consider, if they have not given an Evidence of these Overt-Acts, whether sufficient or not, that must be left to the Jury; if they have given Evidence of these Acts, a Design to set up the Pretender, and to depose the King, &c. If they are not proper to shew for this Purpose, this Gentleman corresponded with Rome, was with the Pretender, these Letters sent from Sir William Ellis to him: Letters (according to his Desire) purporting Receipts for Sums of Money to be signed by the Pretender, as a Foundation to oblige him to make Repayment: After this and these Things have been offer'd, is it not proper to go as far as they can on this Head, and shew how far he hath been engaged with the Pretender and his Accomplices? Sure it is proper, as a further Evidence of these Overt-Acts.

Don't trouble your self as to that, no Use shall be made of that, to charge you with the Treason made so by another Act of Parliament, about corresponding with the Pretender, for Evidence it is proper here; and it neither can, nor shall be made Use of to any other Purpose.

Mr. Reeve. Mr. Stanyan, pray go on and give an Account of what he confess'd, when examined before the Lords of the Council about his being at Rome.

Mr. Stanyan. Mr. Layer did acknowledge he had been at Rome, and returned from thence in July 1721. he said he had had two Conferences with the Pretender.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think Mr. Stanyan said, he had taken Minutes of his Examination; I had rather see the Minutes than trust to his Memory. My Lord, in the Trial of the two Bailiffs in this Court, the Substance of what the deceased said was reduced into Writing; and therefore the Parole-Evidence, that was offered to be given was rejected. I submit it to your Lordship, whether the Rule is not the same in greater Cases, and much stronger in this Point before your Lordship. I have not the least Disrespect for Mr. Stanyan, and could take his Word for any thing, but my Client's Life; therefore, we hope he shall produce those Notes, which he hath referr'd to once or twice, now he is going to give a further Account of his Examination.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I was Counsel in that Case; the Justice of Peace who had taken Mr. Lutterell's Examination did not appear, and that Examination could not be had; there was a Copy of it taken and produced and proved in Court to be a true Copy, but your Lordship would not let that Copy be read, or the subject Matter of it to be given in Evidence, unless the original Examination itself were produced.

L. C. Just. Mr. Attorney, you hear how the Matter is, Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan give an Account that they were commanded by the Lords of the Council to attend and take Minutes of Mr. Layer's Examination before them; that they have thoſe Minutes, and have look'd into thoſe Minutes to refreſh their Memories: If they deſire they may be produced, do you oppoſe it? Have you the Minutes here?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. There may be a great many Things that are not material to the preſent Caſe of Mr. Layer; why would they have all theſe Minutes read? It is not for the Sake of the Priſoner at the Bar, but for the Sake of ſome other People, who may be liſtening here.

In the Caſe of Lutterell, there was a compleat Examination taken by a Juſtice of the Peace: In this Caſe there is no Examination compleated and drawn up; it is nothing but an oral Confeſſion, and amounts to no more. The Minutes the Witneſſes may take in their Hands, as proper to refreſh their Memories.

Mr. Att. Gen. Their deſiring to have theſe Minutes read, is not ſo much for the Sake of their own Client, as for the Sake of other People.

Mr. Serj. Cheſſhyre. How the Matter in that Caſe was——

L. C. Juſt. It is enough, I only aſk'd Mr. Attorney-General, whether he thought fit to conſent to it; and without his Conſent, we are of Opinion, that they cannot be read.

I aſk'd Mr. Attorney the Queſtion, and was not aware of any ill Conſequence.

Mr. Attorney ſays, the Minutes refer to the whole Examination, and to a great many other People, and it would be for the Diſſervice of the King, to have theſe Things diſclos'd. Mr. Attorney might have refuſed to conſent without giving a Reaſon, but he hath given a good Reaſon, and therefore will not conſent that they be read.

Mr. Ketelbey. We do not conſent to wave them, but inſiſt upon their being read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We don't aſk your Conſent.

Mr. Ketelbey. If you don't ask it, nor give it, we are ſo far even, but I aſſure you, Sir, we are retained only for one Gentleman; the Priſoner at the Bar, and we have as little Reaſon to be ſollicitous for the Innocence of others, as ſome have for their Guilt?

L. C. Juſt. You cannot read the Minutes taken againſt the King, becauſe theſe Matters are not ripe yet, nor to be diſcover'd to the World.

Mr. Hungerford. Something drop'd, as if we did inſiſt upon Matter for the Sake of Others; they are miſtaken, we contemn ſuch an Inſinuation. We are of Counſel for this Man, and for this Man ſingly.

L. C. Juſt. You are aſſigned Counſel for him, and unleſs you had, I believe you would not have ventured to have ſaid ſo much.

Mr. Hungerford. No indeed.

L. C. Juſt. Go on.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Mr. Stanyan, pleaſe to recollect, whether when Mr. Layer was examined before the Lords of the Council, (it is to confirm the Evidence of Mr. Lynch) any thing paſs'd about the Declaration.

L. C. Juſt. But before you was intending to aſk him about his going to Rome, and having Conference with the Pretender.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, that he hath ſaid already, therefore I aſk you, what was ſaid by Mr. Layer, relating to the Declaration?

Mr. Stanyan. The Lords aſk'd Mr. Layer, if he had ſeen any Declaration; he ſaid no, he had only the Heads of one which he drew himſelf: The Lords ask'd him where that Declaration was, he ſaid, he believed one Wilſon had it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was any Queſtions aſked relating to the Perſons that had ſeen it?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, he ſaid the only Perſons that had ſeen it was, that Wilſon, one William Jeffries, a Nonjuring Parſon, and one Lynch.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Where did he mention to have ſhew'd it to Lynch?

Mr. Stanyan. On his Way to my Lord North and Gray's, at the Green Man at Epping.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any thing more ſaid by Layer, relating to that Journey to Epping, and what?

Mr. Stanyan. He ſaid that he went to my Lord North and Gray's, and dined at the Green Man as he went, then he carry'd Mr. Lynch to my Lord North and Gray's, and recommended him to my Lord North and Gray, as a proper Perſon to be employed. I think it was employed in an Inſurrection, or in any thing elſe, that his Lordſhip ſhould command him.

Mr. Ketelbey. If he is not certain, I deſire he may produce his Minutes, as he gives his Evidence vivâ voce, to refreſh his Memory.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſubmit to it.

L. C. Juſt. It is always ſo.

Mr. Stanyan. He recommended him, as a proper Perſon to be employed in an Inſurrection, and that Lynch having told Layer before that he would ſeize the Earl of Cadogan, that Layer did mention him to my Lord North and Gray, as a proper Perſon for ſuch an Attempt.

Mr. Ketelbey. The firſt time you ſaid, in an Inſurrection, as you remembred or thought; how come you now to be more certain on the ſecond Repetition of your Evidence than at the firſt? On the firſt Account you gave you ſay, it was employed in an Inſurrection, as you thought; now upon the ſecond Repetition you give a poſitive Evidence, that this was confeſt by Mr. Layer.

Mr. Stanyan. I have recollected the Words, and Mr. Layer uſed thoſe Words.

Mr. Ketelbey. From whence is it that you are now ſo poſitive, and were not ſo at firſt?

Mr. Stanyan. I did ſay the Words at firſt.

Mr. Ketelbey. But you ſaid it with an Alleviation; I deſire to know, if you are poſitive thoſe were the Words.

Mr. Stanyan. I am very poſitive.

Mr. Ketelbey. And yet you were not poſitive before.

Mr. Stanyan. I did not ſay I was not poſitive.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you give your Evidence, that you was certain he ſaid that he had recommended Lynch, as a proper Perſon to be concerned in an Inſurrection in General, or only as a proper Perſon to ſeize my Lord Cadogan, or both? how did he expreſs himſelf?

Mr. Stanyan. I will tell you how the Words were: Lynch having told him he would ſeize my Lord Cadogan, Layer recommends Lynch to my North and Gray, as a proper Perſon for ſuch an Attempt.

Mr. Hungerford. Then the Inſurrection was out of the Caſe; he was only recommended to my

my Lord North and Gray, as a proper Perſon to ſeize my Lord Cadogan.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think you have repeated it three times, and different at each Time; now pleaſe to rectify your Memory, and let us have it ſo as it may be underſtood.

I muſt deſire it in this Caſe, my Client is upon his Life, and he ſhould have right, I am ſure he will have it from the Court and the Jury.

We deſire to know whether you give ſuch an Evidence of this Part of his Confeſſion, with reſpect to his recommending Mr. Lynch to my Lord North and Gray, as you will ſtand by?

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Stanyan, pray give an Account once for all how that Matter was.

Mr. Stanyan. I can give no other Account.

Mr. Ketelbey. He hath vary'd every Time; I appeal to Mr. Attorney, I appeal to your Lordſhip.

L. C. Juſt. Wherein is the Variation?

Mr. Ketelbey. Firſt he acquaints you, that he confeſs'd, that he recommended Lynch to my Lord North and Gray, as a fit Perſon to be employed, he thinks, or believes, it was in an Inſurrection; and then he ſays, he is poſitive that he recommended him to my Lord North and Gray, as one that was fit to be employed in an Inſurrection, and at laſt he ſays, he was recommended by Mr. Layer to my Lord North and Gray, as the fit Perſon to ſeize my Lord Cadogan. I appeal to your Lordſhip's Memory, and his own Oath, whether this was not ſo, and yet he is poſitive of it, he is ſure of it.

L. C. Juſt. Is there any Difference in all this?

Mr. Ketelbey. As much as between being certain, and being uncertain.

L. C. Juſt. For what? You talk of the Variation between an Inſurrection and ſeizing my Lord Cadogan. The Inſurrection was partly to be made on the ſeizing my Lord Cadogan, at the ſame Time, as to facilitate the Inſurrection; both were to go together; if he was a proper Perſon to ſeize my Lord Cadogan, he was a proper Perſon to be employed in an Inſurrection.

Mr. Ketelbey. He is charging the Priſoner with his Confeſſion, and therefore I ſay, he hath mentioned it with two or three Variations: Firſt, that he was fit to be employed in the Inſurrection, and he explains that by ſeizing my Lord Cadogan.

L. C. Juſt. That is Part of the Inſurrection.

Mr. Ketelbey. Surely, my Lord, this ſerves to make our Objection ſo much the ſtronger againſt allowing parol Evidence of a Confeſſion, which was put in Writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. I can't imagine what they mean; here is a Gentleman, that gives an Account, that the Priſoner confeſſed that he recommended Lynch to my Lord North and Gray, as a proper Perſon to be employed in the Inſurrection, and to ſeize my Lord Cadogan; where is the Variation in this?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Stanyan, you was giving an Account of Mr. Layer's recommending Lynch to my Lord North and Gray; did Mr. Layer declare any thing further relating to that Matter?

Mr. Stanyan. He ſaid my Lord North and Gray received him civilly; he ſupp'd there and lay there that Night, and they din'd there the next Day.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he give any Account of what paſſed at Dinner?

Mr. Stanyan. I don't know whether it was juſt at Dinner, or afterwards: But he ſaid that ſeveral Healths were drunk, which were begun by my Lord North and Gray; and after Dinner there came in a Man they called a Citizen, they drank the Pretender's Health, his Wife and the young Prince.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did the Priſoner ſay any thing about the Chriſtning of his Child?

Mr. Stanyan. That was when he confeſſed before the Lords, that he was at Rome, in the Conference he had with the Pretender, he took Occaſion to ſpeak of the Diſcontents of the Nation, which had been occaſioned by the Loſſes ſuſtained in the South-Sea. The Pretender aſk'd him if he knew any Perſons of Diſtinction in that Caſe? He ſaid, that he knew a great many, that were well affected to his Intereſt; that he was not acquainted with People of Quality: But that he knew ſeveral of good Eſtates, that were very well affected to his Intereſt. Upon this the Pretender aſk'd him ſeveral Queſtions, ſays he, it muſt be very expenſive to you to come hither to Rome, it muſt coſt you 500 l. No, ſaith he, not above half ſo much. Then the Pretender praiſed his Zeal, and commended him; after that Mr. Layer aſk'd the Pretender to give him ſome Tokens or Credentials, that he might have ſomething from his Majeſty; that wou'd be a Means of his gaining Credit among his Friends here. He ſays the Pretender ſcrupled that: Then Mr. Layer propoſed afterwards that the Pretender's Wife ſhould ſtand as Godmother to his Daughter, to Mr. Layer's Daughter; that afterwards Col. Hay, to whom he was introduced at the Pretender's Court, brought him Word, that the Pretender's Wife would ſtand as Godmother to his Child: But then the Queſtion was, who ſhould repreſent her? And after ſome time it was propoſed to Mr. Layer to find out a fit Perſon to repreſent her. Mr. Layer propoſed the Dutcheſs of Ormond, which was agreed to; after that the Pretender agreed to ſtand Godfather with his Wife, and then the Point was, who ſhould repreſent him? And Col. Hay told him that he muſt take care of that, to find a proper Perſon to repreſent his Majeſty.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Account did he give of what was done in Purſuance of this, when he came into England?

Mr. Stanyan. When he came into England, he ſaid, he applied himſelf to one Mr. Thompſon, to ſpeak to my Lord Orrery to ſtand to repreſent the Pretender, with the Dutcheſs of Ormond: But he ſaid my Lord Orrery declined it; and afterwards he got my Lord North and Gray to ſtand. That Mr. Thompſon did Chriſten his Child, my Lord North and Gray and the Dutcheſs of Ormond ſtanding as Proxies for the Pretender and his Wife; my Lord North and Gray did ſtand to repreſent the Pretender, and the Dutcheſs of Ormond to repreſent the Pretender's Wife, knowing they did ſo.

And he was aſk'd by the Lords, who were in company at the Chriſtning? He ſaid, only the Dutcheſs of Ormond, my Lord North and Gray, Mr. Thompſon the Miniſter, himſelf, and his Wife, and another Woman, at whoſe Houſe the Chriſtning was performed: But he ſaid, ſhe was not preſent in the Room, tho' ſhe aſſiſted at the Chriſtning.

Mr. Weſt. Did he mention any Time when this Chriſtning was?

Mr. Stanyan. About the Spring. I can't ſay that Queſtion was aſk'd him by the Lords, and I can't aſcertain the Time.

Mr. Weſt. Did he ſay any thing relating to my Lord North and Gray?

Mr. Stanyan. He told them of my Lord North and Gray's being at the Head of theſe Deſigns.

Priſoner. What doth he concern himſelf with the Lord North and Gray for?

Mr. Weſt. Pray Sir be quiet.

Mr. Stanyan. He ſaid he told my Lord North and Gray that he had acquainted Lynch with his Lordſhip's being at the Head of this Deſign, therefore Mr. Lynch had expreſſed a great Deſire to wait upon his Lordſhip.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Delafaye, pray give an Account what Mr. Layer ſaid, when he was examined before the Lords of the Council, relating to his being at Rome.

Mr. Delafaye. Mr. Layer declared to the Lords of the Council, that he had been at Rome, that he had had two Conferences with the Pretender, that he had acquainted the Pretender with the Diſaffection of the Nation, with reſpect to the Loſſes that had been ſuſtained by the South-Sea. He ſaid, in general, the Nation was well-affected, and that he knew Perſons of Eſtate, not Quality, that were in his Intereſt: Then he propoſed to have Credentials or Tokens of the Pretender's Regard to him, which was not granted him: Then he deſired the Pretender's Spouſe ſhould ſtand Godmother to his Child; the Pretender ſaid he would conſider of it; Col. Hay afterwards brought him Word, that ſhe conſented; then there were ſome Conferences who ſhould repreſent her.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give the ſame Account, that he gave before the Lords of the Council.

Mr. Delafaye. Col. Hay brought Word to Mr. Layer, that the Pretender's Spouſe conſented to ſtand Godmother to his Child; and it was agreed the Dutcheſs of Ormond ſhould repreſent her; he deſired a Credential or Token to the Dutcheſs of Ormond. Hay told him, without that ſhe would ſtand, only, ſaith he, carry a Meſſage, that the Duke is well, and gone to Madrid, that ſhe would do it; and Layer deſired to know who ſhould ſtand as Godfather, why the King himſelf, that is, the Pretender; and Layer deſired to know who was to repreſent him; he deſired to be excuſed, but Layer would find out one upon his Return into England, that was proper for that Purpoſe; when he came into England, he was at a Loſs for a Perſon to repreſent the Pretender; he went to Mr. Thompſon to adviſe with him about it, who went to my Lord Orrery, to deſire him to ſtand as Proxy for the Pretender, my Lord Orrery declined it, then he went to my Lord North and Gray, who accepted it; the Child was chriſtned; it was at Chelſea, I take it, at a Houſe, where there was a China Shop. It was in the Spring, what Day I can't tell. That he ſaid there was his Wife, my Lord North and Gray, who ſtood for the Pretender, and Dutcheſs of Ormond, who ſtood for the Pretender's Wife, the Woman of the Houſe, but ſhe was not within the Room at the Chriſtning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing ſaid by Layer about any Declaration, that was drawn?

Mr. Delafaye. Mr. Layer own'd that he had drawn Heads of a Declaration; and that, when he was going to my Lord North and Gray's, he did ſhew it to Mr. Lynch at the Green-Man, as he was on his Way thither.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What ſaid he of his recommending Mr. Lynch in his Examination?

Mr. Delafaye. He ſpoke of his recommending Lynch twice; that Mr. Lynch having told him he would ſeize my Lord Cadogan, he did recommend him to my Lord North and Gray, as a proper Perſon for that Attempt. The ſecond time that he recommended him, he had propoſed carrying Lynch to my Lord North and Gray's, he having told him that he was a very honeſt Man, fit to be concerned in an Inſurrection; that Layer having told Lynch his Lordſhip was to be at the Head of the Deſign, Lynch was impatient to wait upon him.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall now prove there were Arms at the Priſoner's Houſe when he was ſeized. Mr. Stanyan, were you at Mr. Layer's Houſe, when he was ſeized?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Arms there?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lord and the Jury an Account what Arms?

Mr. Stanyan. Juſt after Mr. Layer was ſeized I came in, he was juſt got out of his Bed. I obſerved in the Room, where he lay, there were a Pair of Piſtols hung by his Bed-Side, and between them a Horſe-man's Sword, a riding Sword, and a pretty large Sword; on th' other Side of the Bed next the Chimney a little Caſe of Piſtols, and another Sword hung in another Part of the Room. In the Cloſet of the ſame Room we look'd, and I ſaw two Carbines or Guns, and two Muſquetoons or Blunderbluſſes; ſeeing ſo many Arms, I went to handle ſome of them, upon which he ſaid, have a Care, they are loaded, don't meddle with them; upon that I aſk'd him what he had to do with ſo many Arms? He anſwered, you muſt know my Clerk and I are great Shooters, when we are in the Country. In another Room, looking further, we obſerved ſeveral Moulds for the making of Bullets. There was alſo a Cartridge-Box, and a Number of Cartridges ready made up, as near as I can gueſs (I did not count them) there were about forty or fifty of them. There was a Gentleman of the Army, and he ſaid they were ſuch Cartridges as were uſed in the Army.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any thing relating to theſe Arms confeſſed by Mr. Layer before the Lords of the Council?

Mr. Stanyan. He did not deny it I believe.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would aſk you whether there was any thing ſaid before the Lords relating to theſe Arms.

Mr. Stanyan. The Lords did ask Mr. Layer what he did with forty or fifty Cartridges ready made up? He ſaid they were made up by Bowers the Gunſmith, and that, if there was any Diſturbance in the Nation, he ſhould have Occaſion for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Delafaye, was you by, when he was aſk'd the Queſtion about theſe Arms?

Mr. Delafaye. Yes; he was aſk'd what he did with ſo many Cartridges and Arms, and he ſaid they were proper for his Uſe, if there ſhould be any Diſturbance in the Nation.

Col.

Col. Huſke ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you by, when theſe Arms were ſeized in Mr. Layer's Houſe?

Col. Huſke. Yes; there were two Caſes of Piſtols, two Fuzees, and ſome other Arms, and a Blunderbuſs, and two or three Swords; there were above 40 Cartridges ready made up in the uſual Manner, as they are made up, when our Soldiers are to charge their Pieces for Expedition in Caſe of Action.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many were there?

Col. Huſke. About forty.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee any Moulds for Bullets?

Col. Huſke. There was a Mould for Muſket-balls.

Priſoner. You ſaid I had two Fuzees, will a Muſket-ball go into a Fuzee?

Col. Huſke. I can't tell but it may.

Priſoner. There were 40 Cartridges, which were ready made up, will thoſe Cartridges go into a Fuzee?

Col. Huſke. Theſe very Cartridges were only fit for the Army.

Mr. Ketelbey. Theſe Cartridges were not fit for the Muſket?

Col. Huſke. I did not try them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Would they go into a Fuzee?

Col. Huſke. I don't know.

Mr. Ketelbey. According to my Notions, there is a Difference in Bigneſs between a Fuzee and a Muſket, and a Cartridge fit for a Muſket will not go into a Fuzee.

Col. Huſke. A Cartridge, that is fit for a Fuzee, will go into a Muſket.

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe that, and ſo it will into a Canon; therefore I aſk, whether a Cartridge, that is fitted to a Muſket, and proper for the Uſe of a Soldier going to Battle, whether that Cartridge will fit a Fuzee?

Col. Huſke. The Bore of a Fuzee may be made as large as that of a Muſket.

L. C. Juſt. Thoſe Cartridges, that were there, would they have ſerved for the Fuzee?

Col. Huſke. I am ſatisfied that they would ſerve for the Fuzee, and the ſmalleſt Arms there, except the Piſtols.

Mr. Ketelbey. You ſay there were two Swords?

Col. Huſke. Yes, I ſaw two Swords.

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe you never are without two Swords.

Col. Huſke. I believe I have a dozen, but they belong to my Company.

Priſoner. Were they Horſe Swords, or Swords fit to walk with?

Col. Huske. I can't tell that.

Mr. Hungerford. I think you ſay, that thoſe Bullets, made into Cartridges were, by the Size of them, intended for the ſmall Arms.

Col. Huske. I do believe they would fit the two Fuzees that I ſaw.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you open any of the Cartridges?

Col. Huske. I did, and there was a Ball made up at the End of each Cartridge.

Mr. Smeybert ſworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Smeybert. Yes, I do.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Recollect whether you have ſeen him at Rome?

Mr. Smeybert. Yes, I have.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When?

Mr. Smeybert. About a Year and half ago.

Mr. Soll. Gen. For how long Time was he there?

Mr. Smeybert. I think about a Week or a Fortnight.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you or the Priſoner leave Rome firſt?

Mr. Smeybert. I left Rome firſt.

Mrs. Hay ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Did you ever ſee the Priſoner?

Mrs. Hay. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Where did you ſee him?

Mrs. Hay. I ſaw him at Rome.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. When?

Mrs. Hay. Laſt Summer was Twelve-month.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What Time of the Year was it, as near as you can remember?

Mrs. Hay. I can't tell exactly what Time, but it was laſt Summer was Twelve-month.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. You are ſure you ſaw him there?

Mrs. Hay. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall now prove the Priſoner's Eſcape out of the Meſſenger's Cuſtody as was open'd before. Call Mr. Squire.

Mr. Squire ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, do you know him?

Mr. Squire. Yes, I do know him?

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of his being taken up? Give an Account when it was that he was taken.

Mr. Squire. He was taken the Eighteenth Day of September laſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe Cuſtody was he in after he was taken?

Mr. Squire. He was in my Cuſtody?

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of him afterwards? Did he continue in your Cuſtody?

Mr. Squire. No, he made his Eſcape.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after he had been taken was it that he made his Eſcape?

Mr. Squire. It was the next Day he got out of the Window.

Mr. Att. Gen. How high was the Room he got out of.

Mr. Squire. It was two Story high, he lifted up the Saſh and ſo got out of the Window.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you purſue him?

Mr. Squire. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Account can you give of his being taken again?

Mr. Squire. He had not been gone long before I found he had made his Eſcape, and underſtanding which way he went, I immediately purſued him, and I took him in a Lane going towards St. George's Fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he ſay?

Mr. Squire. He ſaid he was very ſorry to ſee me; I aſk'd him how he could offer to go away from me; and he ſaid, every body elſe would have done the ſame in his Condition, and that nobody could blame him for it; and that he believed my Lord Carteret would not blame him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But why?

Mr. Squire. Becauſe he look'd upon himſelf in ſuch a bad Condition, and ſo much Danger, he ſaid, nobody could blame him becauſe he was in that Condition.

Priſoner. What Condition? I deſire to aſk you one Queſtion; Did not I aſk you to ſhew me your Warrant?

Mr. Squire. No, you never aſk'd me.

Priſoner. Did not I aſk you at my own Houſe?

Mr. Squire. No, you did not.

Priſoner. Did you ſhew me your Warrant?

Mr. Squire. You did not aſk me for it.

Priſoner. Did not I tell you the Reaſon that I eſcaped was, becauſe I did not know what Authority you had to detain me?

Mr. Squire. No, you did not.

James Peterſon ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Peterſon, do you know any thing of the Priſoner's Eſcape?

Peterſon. Mr. Layer was in Cuſtody at my Father's Houſe, in Mr. Squire's Houſe, in a Room up two Pair of Stairs backwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of his getting away?

Peterſon. No, I was abroad then.

John Sweete ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon the Priſoner at the Bar; do you remember you ever ſaw him before?

Sweete. Yes, I ſaw him juſt going into St. George's Fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did any body take him there?

Sweete. I was the firſt that took him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he ſay to you when you took him?

Sweete. He ſaid, for God's Sake let me go; and ſaid 'twas an Arreſt: Why then, and pleaſe you, my Lord, my Partner came up, and aſk'd him whether it was an Arreſt, and he ſaid it was; and then looking about me, I ſaw another Perſon coming after us, who was the Meſſenger: It ſeems he had broke out of the Meſſenger's Houſe. And then he clapt his Hand into his Pocket, and pull'd out I believe about forty Guineas, and ſaid we ſhould take what we would if we would let him go, but we would not.

Anthony Stephens ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did Layer ſay when he was firſt taken?

Stephens. We aſked him, is it for an Arreſt? Yes, ſays he, it is an Arreſt; and when he ſaw Mr. Squire's Son coming after us, he would give us whatever we pleaſed to let him go; and more than that, he ſaid they had no Warrant, and he did not know that they could keep him without a Warrant.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we have gone through our Evidence, and ſhall reſt it here.

Mr. Hungerford. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar; and after ſo long an Evidence as hath been given in this Cauſe, it will beſt become me to draw the Matter in debate to a ſingle Point, if I can, and thereby to give Eaſe to your Lordſhip, the Jury, and the Counſel on both ſides. My Lord, the Priſoner is indicted upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, commonly called the Statute De Proditionib', the Things made, or rather, declared Treaſon by that Act, are, Firſt, The compaſſing or imagining the Death of the King, or of the Prince of Wales. Then the Statute goes on to declare other Things Treaſon which relate only to the Perſons of ſome of the Royal Family; and then it declares likewiſe, That it is Treaſon to levy War againſt the King, &c. It is not ſaid, That to Deſign, or Contrive to levy War, but actually to levy War only ſhall be Treaſon.

This is the Text, this is the Law upon which the Gentleman at the Bar muſt be either ſaved or condemned. The Treaſon laid to his Charge is compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King: The Overt-Acts laid to his Charge are, That he did conſult and conſpire to levy War.

That he did publiſh a certain Treaſonable Libel, purporting among other Things, a Promiſe of Reward to his Majeſty's faithful Subjects, to riſe in Arms and levy War againſt the King.

That he conſulted to put the Pretender upon the Throne.

That he liſted Soldiers for him.

And the laſt Overt-Act is, That he conſulted to ſeize and impriſon the King.

My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, there is no Evidence of any of theſe Overt-Acts attempted to be given in Evidence againſt him in Eſſex, ſave only that of Publiſhing a Treaſonable Libel, which the King's Counſel, in their Evidence, would inſinuate to be the Pretender's Declaration. The Evidence of the other Overt-Acts are attempted to be proved in Middleſex. And in truth, the greateſt Part of the whole Tranſaction was by the King's own Evidence, proved to be in that County, and I wonder the Indictment was not laid there; but, Gentlemen, the Indictment being laid in Eſſex, if an Act of High Treaſon is not proved to have been committed by the Priſoner in that County, he muſt be acquitted.

I might here, my Lord, inſiſt, that an actual levying of War and not deſigning to levy a War, being made Treaſon by the Statute of Treaſons, the publiſhing a Paper which purports at the utmoſt but an Intention only to levy War or raiſe a Rebellion is not Treaſon, and conſequently not a legal Overt-Act within that Statute. This Opinion is warranted by the expreſs Words of the Act of Parliament itſelf, which is a better Authority than all the Commentators upon it; and it is likewiſe the Opinion of [a] my Lord Chief Juſtice Coke, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales; and in Truth, if this be not the true meaning of the Act, one Paragraph, viz. That which declares actual levying of War Treaſon is ſuperfluous and redundant; for what is the Uſe of making actual levy of War or a Rebellion a diſtinct Species of Treaſon, when the Intention of doing it, according to ſome modern Doctrines, was High Treaſon within the firſt Clauſe of the Act, viz. Imagining the Death of the King. This Opinion likewiſe ſeems to be confirmed by two Acts of Parliament, one in [b] Queen Elizabeth's Time, and one in King Charles the Second's, where conſulting or intending to levy a War or raiſe a Rebellion, is made High Treaſon during the Lives of them two reſpective Princes, for which Temporary Proviſion there would be no Reaſon if the Law were ſo before. I know what hath been ſaid to ſome Part of this Matter, that the levying of War meant in the Statute of 25 of Edward the Third, was not meant of ſuch a Rebellion as was levell'd againſt the King's Perſon, Crown, Title, or Government; but of ſuch publick Commotions as diſturbed the Peace of the Kingdom, as the pulling down of Incloſures, which was the Caſe in Queen Elizabeth's Time, or of pulling down Bawdy-Houſes, which was the Caſe in Charles the Second's Time: But to ſhew how unnatural a Conſtruction of the Words Lever le Guerre, it is to ſay, that it relates only to ſuch riotous Commotions as I have mention'd. Give me leave, my Lord, to make but one Obſervation. The Statute of Treaſons is penned in the French of that Age, and the Words of the Statute Lever le Guerre againſt the King, I have here within my Reach, in Court, a Book of very great Note and good Authority, it is the Hiſtory of Froiſſart, who writes the Hiſtory of England, France, and Spain, from the Year 1326, to the Year 1340, and dedicates his Book to that very King, viz. Edward the Third, in whoſe Reign the Statute of Treaſons was made, and in this whole Book, Lever le Guerre is conſtantly mentioned to denote a publick ſtated War; and in this Senſe, it is likewiſe taken by Du Freſne in his Gloſſary, Vol. II. pag. 255. ——I only hint this Matter to your Lordſhip, for I well know what Determinations, my Lords, the Judges have of late Years given upon this Objection; but I humbly hope that there will be no Occaſion for an intire Dependence upon this Objection, in this Caſe, for that I hope it will appear both to your Lordſhip, and the Jury, that no ſuch Overt-Act, as is ſaid in the Indictment, that is, publiſhing the Pretender's Declaration at the Green Man, is at all proved.

The Evidence given touching that Matter is only by Mr. Lynch, and he gives an Account that the Priſoner and he met at Aldgate, in order to go to the Houſe of my Lord North and Gray at or near Epping: In the courſe of their Journey thither finding themſelves too late to be at my Lord North's by Dinner; they called in at the Green Man, and there got a Beef-Stake: And before it was brought up the Priſoner gave Mr. Lynch a Paper, which Mr. Lynch, and not the Priſoner, calls the Pretender's Declaration; Mr. Lynch reads only one Paragraph in it, whereby, as he ſays, the Soldiers were attempted to be allured from his Majeſty's Service; this is the whole Evidence given touching any Offence committed in the County of Eſſex: For as to any treaſonable Diſcourſe between Aldgate, and the Green Man; they cannot in Juſtice, and without a particular Proof to that Purpoſe, be charged upon the Priſoner to be done in Eſſex, a great Part of the Way, viz. from Aldgate to Bow-Bridge, being in Middleſex, and not in the County of Eſſex.

In the firſt Place therefore, Gentlemen of the Jury, we hope there is no Evidence to convince you that any ſuch Declaration was publiſhed at all; and yet, Secondly, If there was a Paper read there, the Paper read was not an Act of High Treaſon. The Time that the Priſoner and Mr. Lynch ſtaid at the Green Man, ſeems to be very ſhort, their Stay was ſo ſhort that there is no Evidence that their Horſes were put up: The Beef-Stake was beſpoke before they went into a Room. Mr. Lynch came down twice out of the Room; he himſelf admits once, beſides his gaping at ſome Perſons in the Yard whom he knew, before the Beef-Stake was brought up; and yet, before the Beef-Stake was brought up, this Declaration is pretended to be publiſhed: For my part, conſidering how little Time there was for ſuch a Tranſaction as this is, I cannot think, there could be any ſuch Thing as that tranſacted at that Time, the Compaſs of Time would hardly allow it; whatever was done, is admitted on all Hands, to be done before the Beef-Stake was brought up, and the other Incidents may very well be ſuppoſed to take up all the Time betwixt the beſpeaking and diſhing up the Beef-Stake, ſo there could be no Time for ſo ſolemn an Act as publiſhing a Declaration to overturn Three Kingdoms. But in the ſecond Place, if the Priſoner, which I don't admit, did give Mr. Lynch any Paper to read, a Paragraph whereof was to the Purpoſe Mr. Lynch relates; yet ſuch Paper cannot be imputed to the Priſoner as an Act of High Treaſon, there was but a few Lines of the Paper read, and the reſt were not read at all, either by Mr. Lynch, or the Priſoner; and I never knew that Part of a Deed or Writing was ever allowed to be given in Evidence, without producing or reading the whole. In the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, where the Declaration for Rebellion was aſſigned as an Act of High Treaſon, the whole Declaration was proved to be read, and not a Part only; and yet even that Evidence was upon the Revolution in the Firſt Year of King William and Queen Mary, look'd upon ſo imperfect an Evidence of High Treaſon, that for that, and other Reaſons, my Lord Ruſſel's Attainder was revers'd; we have a Copy of the Act of Parliament for the Reverſal here atteſted, and we are ready to produce it if your Lordſhip thinks fit. ——Can it be ſaid that the Priſoner giving Mr. Lynch a Paper, of which he reads only a few Lines, and then the Priſoner takes it up again, is a publiſhing of a Treaſonable Paper, or in truth, a publiſhing of any Paper at all? Declarations for Rebellions are commonly publiſhed in publick Places, to captivate Multitudes, and not handed from one Man to another when they are expecting a Beef-Stake; there was no appointed or ſolemn Meeting at the Green Man; no Concourſe of People there, neither in truth, by Mr. Lynch's own Evidence can it be taken to be a real Declaration; for he ſays, as I remember, in that Paper it was mentioned that the Lord Cadogan was in Cuſtody; that Fact is utterly falſe, his Lordſhip neither was, nor is ſo.

I muſt ſubmit to the Conſideration of my Lords the Judges, and the Jury, of how dangerous a Conſequence, Conſtructions of this Nature may prove to be. Before the Statute of Treaſons, the People of England laboured under vaſt Miſchiefs by the great Incertainty there was of what was High Treaſon, and what was not; the Parliament thereupon, to eaſe the People of that Perplexity, in the 25th of Edward the Third, paſſed the Law of Treaſons, for which the People then paid a great Sum of Money; and for which that Parliament was called Bleſſed (Parliamentum beatum) and now if every Act a Man doth, though perhaps tending to Sedition, ſhall be interpreted to be an Overt-Act of High Treaſon, the Subject will labour under the ſame Inconvenience, and under the ſame Perplexities, as they were before the Statutes of Treaſons; this this Practice may be ſo far improved, that if a Man delivers a Seditious Ballad to another to be read, that ſhall be interpreted an Overt-Act of High Treaſon, much more if People in their Cups ſhould drink ſuch Healths, as were ſaid to be drunk at my Lord North and Gray's Houſe; for no Man can deny but that Bibere eſt agere, whatever Scribere is: This, my Lord, is all that occurs to me at preſent concerning the Charge of High Treaſon upon the Priſoner within the County of Eſſex; and if there be no Charge made out againſt him there, the Evidence given againſt him, of what he did or ſaid elſewhere muſt go for nothing.

Mr. Ketelbey. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I likewiſe appear here as Counſel for the Priſoner, who having pleaded Not Guilty to this Indictment, I muſt ſuppoſe him ſo 'till he be found otherwiſe; and 'tis my Duty (being aſſigned for him by the Court) to lay the Circumſtances of his Caſe before you in as true and clear a Light as I can, and to offer to your Conſideration what may occur proper for his Defence, and legally conduce to the clearing his Innocence.

The Charge laid to him is of the higheſt Nature that the Laws of England know; Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis; no leſs than the conſpiring and compaſſing the Death of the King; and as it is an Offence, not capable of any Aggravation, not to be alleviated by any thing that we can offer, we humbly hope your Lordſhip, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, will expect the ſtrongeſt Evidence the Nature of the Caſe admits, ſuch as the Law requires, and is in ſome meaſure proportionable to the Greatneſs of the Offence.

The Act of Parliament upon which the Priſoner ſtands indicted, is the 25th of Edward III. It is there ſaid, to make him attainted there muſt be an Overt-Act, and that Overt-Act muſt be fully and clearly proved: Et de ceo provablement ſoit attaint de Overt Fait.

My Lord Coke, in his Third Inſtitutes, Fol. 12. in his Comment upon that Act, explains the Word (Provablement) by ſaying, it muſt be upon direct and manifeſt Proof, not upon conjectural Preſumption, or Inference, or Strains of Wit; It muſt not be commune Argumentum.

Since that Time, ſeveral other Statutes have been made in Favour of the Subject, and for regulating Trials in Caſes of High Treaſon: Particularly the late Statute 7mo Gulielmi 3tii, which enacts, that there muſt be two lawful Witneſſes to the ſame Overt-Act; or one of them to one, and the other of them to another Overt-Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon: And that no Evidence ſhall be admitted or given of any Overt-Act that is not expreſly laid in the Indictment.

I think we need not, at preſent, enter into the whole of the Caſe, or trouble the Court with a long Detail of Circumſtances and many Witneſſes; but rather chuſe to leave that on the Foot Mr. Hungerford hath put it for your Lordſhip's Conſideration.

It muſt be admitted to us, that if the Priſoner is not Guilty of an Overt-Act, legally proved to be committed in the County of Eſſex, where the Species of Treaſon and all the Overt-Acts in the Indictment are laid; though all the other Facts in Middleſex, or at Rome, or any where elſe, ſhould be never ſo clearly made out, yet they do fail upon this Indictment, and the Priſoner muſt be acquitted.

What have they to charge him with ſuch an Overt-Act? Nothing, but the ſingle Evidence of Lynch! He is the only Perſon that ſpeaks to this Point.—— He ſays, that they ſet out from Aldgate in Order to ride to my Lord North and Gray's, and alighted at the Green Man; that what Diſcourſe paſſed between them there was before Dinner: He owns he went down Stairs twice before Dinner, and ſpent ſome time in looking out of the Window, to ſee ſome Perſons with whom he was acquainted, and when the Dinner (which was ſoon got ready) was brought up, Mr. Layer's Servant came and waited, and no Diſcourſe paſs'd there during that time; he tells you, that Mr. Layer pull'd a Paper out of his Pocket, and ſhew'd it to the Witneſs, who read Part of it, and that it contain'd treaſonable Matter, as laid in the Indictment: This is the Subſtance of what Lynch ſwears, I took it, as well as I could, in Writing from his Mouth.

Now my Lord, Is this ſufficient to convict this Gentleman of committing an Overt-Act of High-Treaſon in Eſſex? A bare pulling a Paper out of his Pocket, and giving it him to read, where ſuch and ſuch a thing is ſet forth, as by him is call'd a treaſonable Declaration!

My Lord, if he had pull'd out of his Pocket the moſt treaſonable Paper that ever was invented, is it any more than publiſhing a Libel? Is that an Overt-Act of Treaſon? I will ſuppoſe it a Copy of the Pretender's Declaration, or an Original, ſuch a one as was burnt by the Sheriffs of London two Days ago: If a Man had that, and pull'd it out of his Pocket, and gave it to another to read, is this High-Treaſon? I dare ſay, if any ſuch Perſon falls into Mr. Attorney's Hands, he, that always does his Duty to the Crown as he ought, will go no higher than an Information for publiſhing a Libel; and all this, my Lord, is upon a Suppoſition that the Facts are true which have been ſworn by Lynch: But on the other Hand, there are ſo many unaccountable Circumſtances in the Relation, that an Affair of that Conſequence ſhould be tranſacted in ſuch a Place; in ſo ſhort a time; upon ſuch an accidental Bait; when one of the Conſpirators was either gazing at the Window, or running up or down Stairs the greateſt Part of the while, and other Perſons were continually going backwards and forwards into the Room, or within hearing of every Word that paſs'd there, we think it carries with it ſuch an Air of Improbability, that no reaſonable Man can give Credit to it, much leſs, convict a Perſon of ſo great a Crime, upon ſuch Evidence.

But ſuppoſe what paſs'd at the Green Man (which I am very far from admitting) ſhou'd be adjudged an Overt-Act of High Treaſon: How is it prov'd? Only by one Witneſs; one ſingle Witneſs to the Fact in this County! The Law requires two Witneſſes to convict a Man of High Treaſon, and that the Jury ſhou'd be return'd out of that County where the Facts are laid; De Vicineto; Becauſe the Law ſuppoſes them more connuſant of the Circumſtances of a Caſe which ariſes in their Neighbourhood: But if the Proof of one Over-Act in the County where 'tis laid, by one Witneſs, ſhou'd be ſufficient to let them in to prove other Overt-Acts, in diſtant Countries, or in foreign Kingdoms, theſe fundamental Rules of Law would be totally ſubverted: How is it poſſible for a Man to provide or defend himſelf againſt ſuch an Attack? 'Tis ſpringing a Mine upon him! Sudden and unexpected Ruin!

Mr. Attorney won't ſhew any Precedent, where it ever was allowed to be good, that one Witneſs might prove the Overt-Act in the County where it is laid, and that then they might give Evidence of Overt-Acts committed in any other County: If your Lordſhip is of Opinion againſt us in this Particular, then we muſt beg leave to go farther, and obſerve upon the reſt of the Witneſſes they have called; not only to take off their Credit, but to contradict them in a great meaſure.

There hath been a great deal of other Evidence given by them, but we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether it is material his eſcaping from the Meſſenger's Houſe, and his being taken in St. George's Fields; and the Evidence begins to run thin, or elſe, I believe they would not have troubled the Court, to call thoſe Perſons to that which is no ways conducive to the Point now in Judgment; if your Lordſhip is of opinion with us, that this is not an Overt-Act in Eſſex, and legally proved, being there is but one Witneſs, and attended with ſuch Circumſtances, then the Matter is at an End; but if your Lordſhip is of another Opinion, then we muſt beg leave to go on, and likewiſe to offer what we have from the Mouth of our Witneſſes.

L. C. Juſt. You muſt go on, you have mix'd your Diſcourſe ſo that no body knows what to make of it; ſometimes tho' the Facts are clear as to the Overt-Act, you have ſaid as much againſt, as for, the Improbability and Nature of the Thing, in Point of Law, as for the other. I don't ſee how we ſhall come at it, unleſs you go thro' the Cauſe.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, in the Obſervations they have hitherto made, they have mix'd Objections as to the Fact, together with ſome Matters of Law, that ſeem to be aimed at, and fixed upon no Point; to which we cannot give any particular Anſwer; therefore we deſire they may go thro' their whole Caſe, before we reply to any Part of it.

Mr. Hungerford. Since it is your Lordſhip's Pleaſure that we ſhould now go on, I ſhall proceed to make ſome Obſervations upon the reſt of the Evidence given againſt the Priſoner at the Bar out of the County of Eſſex. The Obſervations which I ſhall make will be in the general only, for I cannot deſcend to all the particular Inſtances of the Evidence given, having not taken proper Notes for that Purpoſe; for I depended upon the Inſufficiency of the Evidence given touching any Act of High-Treaſon, being committed in Eſſex; and I hoped that from that very Circumſtance the Priſoner would have been acquitted; but however I know the learned Gentleman who is joined with me, hath taken very exact Notes of the whole Evidence, and therefore what I omit, I am aſſured he will abundantly ſupply.

The ſecond Witneſs produced againſt the Priſoner, is Mr. Plunkett, whoſe Evidence I think ought to weigh but very little with any Judicature whatſoever; the Priſoner's meeting with this Man was very accidental in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, when they did not know each other, and yet they immediately entered into a Diſcourſe of raiſing a Rebellion, and overturning two Kingdoms, and that great Secret of knowing who was to be the General; tho' Mr. Lynch, after long Acquaintance with the Priſoner, could not get it out of him; yet it was communicated to the eminent Witneſs Mr. Plunkett at the firſt Interview, with an Addition of mentioning the Names of two very great Men more, the Earl of Strafford, and General Webb, as well affected to the Undertaking: But that noble Earl's and Great General's Services to their Country are too well known to be blemiſhed by ſuch an Incredible Evidence. After ſome Diſcourſe betwixt the Priſoner and Plunkett about the Undertaking, in which there was an Incident of a Diſcourſe of another Nature, whether the Lutheran Religion were not preferable to the Popiſh; and after (as Plunkett ſays) the Priſoner had communicated to him an Intention of invading the Kingdom by ſome Perſons from abroad, the Priſoner, in a very great Fit of Bounty, preſents Mr. Plunkett with the Sum of half a Crown. This Relation ſeems to be ſo improbable, and in Truth, is delivered (or rather ſtammered out) in ſo wretched and incoherent a Manner, that I believe that no one that heard it, believes a Word of it.

The Truth is, the Scheme itſelf ſeems rather to be a chimerical Plan of ſome crazy-pated Politicians, than a ſolid Project of any Men of Senſe, or in their Wits. What Undertaking can there be ſo improbable, as that laid down by this Scheme, viz. Seizing the General of the Army, ſeizing the Tower, ſeizing the Exchange, and ſeizing the Bank of England; and all this with a Force which do not appear to conſiſt of above three or four Men? And for Money, the Sinews of War, there ſeems to be no great Stock of that; Plunkett hath about half a Crown at one Time, and half a Guinea at another; for as to the Guinea Jeffreys gave him, it doth not affect the Priſoner. Mr. Lynch, indeed, who ſeems to be a Man of greater Weight, upon his frequent repeating himſelf to be very uneaſy, got about ſeven or eight Guineas. I mention theſe Things, Gentlemen of the Jury, to ſhew how improbable this part of the Evidence is of it ſelf, and we hope to make it appear to you to be the more ſo, by the Evidence we ſhall produce to the Reputation of the Witneſſes.

As to the Papers of all Kinds produced as Evidence againſt the Priſoner, we hope he cannot be affected by them, none of them being proved to be of his Hand-Writing; as to the Arms found in the Priſoner's Houſe, they are no more than what Gentlemen uſually have for the Defence of their Family, or their Recreations; and as for his being at Rome, it is admitted that that Evidence is not given as a Fact of High-Treaſon; ſo ought not to be conſidered as any Ingredient in the Priſoner's Guilt: As to the Priſoner's endeavouring to eſcape, it is no Evidence of the Priſoner's Guilt; I do not enter into the Conſideration, whether the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger is a legal Priſon, or no; but there is hardly a Man that is under any Confinement at all, but would willingly eſcape into Liberty: Beſides, the Priſoner hath ſuffered already for that Offence, if it be one; he hath been put into Irons, and his attempting to eſcape is the only Reaſon that is aſſigned for it.

There was ſomething ſpoke in the Introduction to this Accuſation which was very remarkable, viz. That it was a Deſign, if it had took Effect, that would have engaged the whole Nation in Blood, and would have deſtroyed our civil and religious Rights: We who are of Counſel for the Priſoner, have as great an Abhorrence of a thing of that Nature as any Men can have: But yet we hope, that Mankind is not to be led away with Shew and Colour, but to be guided by Reaſon and Matters of Fact. Is it poſſible that People could have been raiſed into a Rebellion by a Proclamation which was never publiſhed, but by Mr. Lynch's reading two or three Lines of it? And which, by Mr. Lynch's own Evidence (which I forgot to remark before) was imperfect; for he ſays, that the Priſoner told him, he intended to put it in the Pretender's Name, which it ſeems was not then done; and therefore what was produced, was at the utmoſt an imperfect Piece only——— Or that the Priſoner at the Bar, a Man of a Gentleman-like Family indeed, but of no great Figure or Eſtate in the World, and having no Dependants or numerous Acquaintance, having no Proviſion of Men, Arms, or Ammunition, ſhould, with the Aſſiſtance only of a Bundle of Papers, and of Mr. Lynch and Plunkett, overturn and enſlave this whole Kingdom. God be thanked, the Proteſtant Britiſh Government is not ſo eaſily to be brought to Deſtruction: They might much ſooner (and yet I think that very difficult too) have borrowed 100,000 l. of the Bank of England, upon the blind Notes which they have produced, ſent by Sir William Ellis, than have brought about a Revolution, in this Kingdom, with ſuch materials as they ſeem to be poſſeſſed of.

Theſe things therefore, my Lord, I urge are Circumſtances which render all, or the greateſt Part of the Evidence given, very improbable.

I ſhall cloſe the whole with two Paragraphs of a * Speech made by one of your Lordſhip's Predeceſſors, my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, ſitting in the ſame ſacred Seat of Juſtice, where your Lordſhip now ſits; the Words are theſe:

If once our Courts of Juſtice come to be aw'd or ſway'd by vulgar Noiſe, and if Judges and Juries ſhould manage themſelves ſo as would beſt comply with the Humour of the Times, 'tis falſly ſaid that Men are tried for their Lives or Fortunes; they live by Chance, and enjoy what they have as the Wind blows, and with the ſame Certainty.

Let us purſue the Plot a God's Name, and not baulk any thing where there is Danger or Suſpicion upon reaſonable Grounds; but not ſo overdo it, as to ſhew our Zeal, we will pretend to find what is not; nor ſtretch one thing beyond what it will bear, to reach another.

Mr. Ketelbey. I muſt beg leave to go on where I left off with Lynch's Evidence.

All Plunkett ſaith was in Middleſex, but whether he is a credible Witneſs, you will hear by and by. I cannot but take Notice of one thing which is unaccountable in his Evidence, and renders it impoſſible to be true: He gives you an Account of a Letter which he received about ten Weeks ago; he's very poſitive as to the Words of the Letter, I aſked him over and over again to it, he repeats it as ſuch; when we examined him farther, it appears that he could neither write nor read; and how he came to remember ſo perfectly, when he could not write nor read himſelf, is very ſtrange. Why, ſaith he, it was read over to me twice, and we have heard him repeat it three Times; and I appeal to the Jury, if any one of them can take upon him to repeat it again with that Exactneſs the Witneſs pretends to do.

Is it not equally ſtrange, my Lord, that Jeffreys, a Man of Letters, the firſt Time he ſaw him, an ignorant common Serjeant in the Army, ſhould immediately fall into a Diſcourſe with him about a Plot, and raiſing a Rebellion, as if he had before been intimate with him? So likewiſe he ſaith of James Plunkett, the ſame Day, the firſt Day he came to him, he came to his own Houſe, and there talked to him about this Affair; as if they had nothing elſe to talk of but Rebellion againſt the Government. And I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury, whether it is likely or poſſible, that any Man of common Senſe ſhould ſubject himſelf in ſo dangerous an Affair to another that was an utter Stranger to him: But here he gives you an Account of two ſeveral Perſons under the ſame Imprudence, the ſame Infatuation, James Plunkett, and the Nonjuring Parſon. Beſides, there is a manifeſt Contradiction in his Evidence; for, at firſt he ſaid, that the Nonjuring Parſon told him his Name was Jeffreys the firſt Time he ſaw him; and afterwards being croſs examined, he ſaid, the firſt time he knew his Name to be ſo was upon the Receipt of his Letter, and finding the Name ſo ſubſcrib'd.

The next Witneſſes gave an Account of the ſeizing the Papers, and then Mrs. Maſon. We aſked her if thoſe Papers had been ſeen by any body ſince ſhe had them, and whether ſhe had ſhewn them, or any other Papers, to Sir John Meers, or any of his Servants? She poſitively denies it, and ſaith they were not.

I don't know whether theſe Papers were ſeen by any body, for we have not one Word of 'em in our Briefs, and the very producing them is a Surprize to us; but we ſhall prove, that this Woman ſhew'd ſome Papers to Sir John Meers, or his Man, and that thereupon Notice was given, and the Papers ſoon after ſeized. But whether theſe are they or not, I cannot tell. I obſerved before upon the Evidence of Mr. Delafaye, Mr. Stanyan and Mr. Doyley; and tho' your Lordſhip was of Opinion, that it was ſufficient to have the Paper called the Scheme read, yet we hope 'tis far from being a concluſive Evidence againſt the Priſoner, it not being found in his Cuſtody; and we ſhall produce ſeveral who now are, and for many Years have been well acquainted with his Hand-Writing, who will give your Lordſhip their Thoughts of it. I believe Mr. Attorney would not have endeavoured to call Witneſſes that it was ſigned by him, and was his own Hand-Writing, if he had not thought it material; yet we hope that when our Witneſſes are heard, no Credit will be given by the Jury to it, as a Fact to charge the Priſoner. We ſhall give you an Account, if my Inſtructions are true, that Plunkett, Lynch, and Mrs. Maſon, who are the Perſons chiefly concern'd in the Courſe of this Evidence, are of ſo ſcandalous and vile a Character, that no Regard at all is to be had to their Teſtimony. The moſt honeſt Men may miſtake in their Evidence, as Mr. Stanyan is pleaſed to ſay; if he made any Miſtakes, I am ſatisfied they proceeded from a Defect of Memory, and no

* Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs his Speech the firſt Day of Michaelmas Term, 1679. Printed that Year.

Deſign, and he is certainly excuſable; but as for the other three, Lynch, Plunkett, and Maſon, when you ſhall have heard half what we have againſt them, I dare ſay they will not have the leaſt Credit, tho' they had given a much more probable Evidence than they have done. But ſurely, as it is, their Evidence cannot have ſufficient Weight with you, to prevail againſt the Life, Eſtate, and Family of the Gentleman here before you, and to fix a perpetual Stain upon him and his Poſterity.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and begin with my Lord North and Gray.

Mr. Att. Gen. We deſire to know what it is you call my Lord North and Gray to prove.

Mr. Hungerford. He is to give an Account of what paſſed at his Houſe, what Mr. Lynch ſaid when he was there.

L. C. Juſt. Then you do admit that he was at the Green Man, and he went to my Lord North and Gray's afterwards.

Mr. Ketelbey. There is their Sheet-Anchor.

Mr. Hungerford. We admit we were at the Green Man, but committed no High-Treaſon there; your Lordſhip hath ſet us right in the Point of timing our Evidence in the Nature of this Tranſaction; it is proper to begin with the Maſter of the Green Man.

Mr. Mackreth, ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Mackreth, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account, whether Mr. Layer, or Mr. Lynch, were at your Houſe laſt Summer, or how long they were there.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think you are Maſter of the Green Man.

Mackreth. Yes, Sir, upon the Oath I have taken, I don't know that Mr. Layer was ever at my Houſe.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember any thing of the Saturday the 25th of Auguſt?

Mackreth. No, I can't.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember whether you were at Home that Day?

Mackreth. I can't tell: If it was on a Saturday; on Saturday I often attend the Juſtices at Ilford.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know whether you was at Home that Day?

Mackreth. I cannot tell.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Mr. Layer?

Mackreth. I never ſaw him before in my Life, as I know of.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was there never any Enquiry after him at your Houſe?

Mackreth. No: There was the Duke of Grafton and my Lord Hallifax came to my Houſe ſome time ſince. The Duke of Grafton intimated ſomething of this Affair; the Duke of Grafton ſaid to me, you are to be hang'd: Hang'd for what, ſaid I. You and your Friend Layer are to be hang'd. Said I, I never ſaw him in my Life. They walk'd to and fro in the Hall. What, ſaid they, do you know nothing of this Layer? No, I don't, as I hope to be ſav'd, directly nor indirectly.

Mrs. Mackreth, ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray do you remember any Travellers at your Houſe upon the 25th of Auguſt laſt?

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember when Mr. Layer was at your Houſe?

Mrs. Mackreth. I never ſaw the Gentleman in my Life, as I know of.

Mr. Ketelbey. Are you conſtantly at Home?

Mrs. Mackreth. Yes, I have hardly time to go to Church.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you ever hear any thing of a Declaration read?

Mrs. Mackreth. I never heard any thing of it in my Days, my Lord.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray this; do you know the Room one Pair of Stairs forward in your Houſe?

Mrs. Mackreth. They are all forward, my Lord.

Mr. Hungerford. How far is the Bar from the Room?

Mrs. Mackreth. My Bar is below Stairs even with the Stair-Caſe.

Mr. Hungerford. If any thing is read there aloud, in any of thoſe Rooms one Pair of Stairs, could you have heard it?

Mrs. Mackreth. To be ſure, my Lord.

John Paulfreeman, ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember any thing of this Gentleman being at your Maſter's Houſe on the 25th of Auguſt laſt?

Paulfreeman. I remember nothing at all of it.

Mr. Hungerford. You remember nothing of it?

Paulfreeman. No; to my Knowledge I never ſee him before in my Life.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember any thing of ſome People dining there on a Beef-Stake?

Paulfreeman. No; I don't remember any thing of it.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember this Gentleman's Face again?

Paulfreeman. No; I don't remember that ever I ſaw him before.

Mr. Hungerford. Is my Lord North and Gray there?

Mr. Hungerford. We ſhall examine my Lord North and Gray only as to ſome Paſſages at his Lordſhip's Houſe, and chiefly as to the Character of this Lynch, and what a Character he gave of himſelf; generally, a Man will give a good Character of himſelf, but he did otherwiſe.

Lord North and Gray, ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to give my Lord and the Jury what Account you have of one Lynch.

Lord North and Gray. My Lord, that Gentleman that goes by the Name of Lynch, I ſaw twice; he came twice to my Houſe in Eſſex: I little thought that my having ſeen him twice at my Houſe, ſhould be the Occaſion of my coming here in ſuch a manner. The Gentleman was wholly a Stranger to me, and I have never ſeen him ſince. As to my ſelf, I cannot ſay I know any thing of him perſonally. The only thing I can ſay, is what he ſaid of himſelf. It is a little hard for a Man of Honour to betray Converſation, what paſs'd over a Bottle of Wine in Diſcourſe; but ſince your Lordſhip requires it, I muſt ſubmit.

The chief of our Diſcourſe was— He was repreſented to me as a Stranger newly come to England, and had a Mind to ſee my Houſe and Gardens. He was introduced, and brought there accordingly by Mr. Layer, and I receiv'd him civilly. In proceſs of time he told me the Hiſtory of his Life, thus; that he was not a Spaniſh, but an Iriſhman, and, my Lord, I think, educated in the Camp under an Uncle of his.

He told, that when he was a young Man, he had taken a great many Liberties.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we humbly apprehend, this Evidence is not proper to be given: If they have any particular Queſtions to aſk of my Lord, let the Counſel propoſe them, or aſk my Lord North and Gray to the Character of Mr. Lynch in general: But thus to give an Account (by way of Repetition of a Diſcourſe between Lord North and Gray and Mr. Lynch) where he was born, and where he was bred up, and to give a Hiſtory of particular Facts, is what they ought not to do.

Lord North and Gray. I am glad to be interrupted by that worthy Gentleman. I only deſire to know to what Points you would be pleas'd to aſk me.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Hungerford, you know what the Rule of Practice and Evidence is, when objections are made to the Credit and Reputation of the Witneſs; you can't charge him with particular Offences: For if that were to be allow'd, it would be impoſſible for a Man to defend himſelf. You are not to examine to the particular Facts to charge the Reputation of any Witneſs; but only in general you are to aſk what his Character and Reputation is.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord North and Gray is an entire Stranger to him; but he was only going to tell you what Account Lynch gave of himſelf.

L. C. Juſt. That is very well. Conſider, if that is not the ſame as if you were to charge him with particular Facts. You ſay, he himſelf, when he was with that noble Lord at his Houſe gave a Character of himſelf much to his Diſadvantage. It is impoſſible for him in ſuch a Caſe to give an Anſwer to it; therefore by the Rule of Evidence you cannot do it.

Mr. Ketelbey. If that noble Lord was going to give any Character of him which he heard from other Perſons it might alter the Caſe. But ſurely when the Character he gives of him is grounded upon what he ſaid of himſelf, is not that much ſtronger than the Hearſay of others, the Talk of Strangers? The Character he had of this Perſon is from himſelf; therefore we hope he ſhall give it in Evidence.

Mr. Hungerford. If they won't let this noble Lord enter into a Relation of what Character this Lynch gave of himſelf, we cannot help it.

L. C. Juſt. You know, if there be any Objections to him, to his general Character, he can anſwer them: But if Objections are grounded on particular Charges of his being a baſe, an infamous and an ill Man, not having any Notice of this, it is impoſſible for him to defend himſelf.

If you will aſk my Lord North and Gray what general Character he gave of himſelf, you may.

Mr. Hungerford. If my Brief be true, the whole ten Commandments broken by him.

L. C. Juſt. Very well; and ſo you charge him with the Breach of the ten Commandments, and he muſt let it go for Fact, becauſe he cannot have an Opportunity of defending himſelf.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character in general did he give of himſelf to your Lordſhip?

Lord North and Gray. I don't know how to anſwer it, as to his giving a general Character of himſelf. Thus much I muſt ſay, I ſaw him twice. The firſt time he was brought down by the Gentleman at the Bar; the ſecond time he came, he was ill receiv'd; and I order'd it ſhould be told him, that in caſe he deſign'd to ſtay there, that I had no Room or any Lodging for him. As to particular things, I don't care to ſpeak of them. I ſhould be very ſorry to ſay it when it was ſaid in my Company, and under my Roof.

Mr. Hungerford. We will not preſs it any farther.

Lord North and Gray. I muſt beg your Lordſhip's leave, if the Gentlemen have no further to ſay to me, and your Lordſhip have no further Commands, that I may return to my Priſon.

Mr. Hungerford. I hope they will make way for my Lord North and Gray thro' the Crowd: And, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, we will go on with our Evidence.

George Talbot, ſworn,

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of Mr. Lynch.—— Mr. Stephen Lynch, what Character hath he?

Talbot. Why Sir, the Character I know of him is this, that he is a Man that hath been ſo extravagant, that he hath brought himſelf to Neceſſity by it; kept very infamous Company.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath he? Hath he the Character of an honeſt Man?

Talbot. He hath a very indifferent Sort of a Character.

Mr. Hungerford. Hath he got a good or a bad Character?

Talbot. The Character I can hear of him is a very bad Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. We don't aſk you as to the Particulars of his Life and Converſation, but only the General Character he hath, and the Opinion the World hath of him; whether he hath the Character of an honeſt Man, and is a Perſon fit to be believ'd?

Talbot. The Character I have had of him, is, That he is not to be believ'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him?

Talbot. I have not ſeen him theſe ſix Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is your Employment?

Talbot. I am not able to follow any thing now.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſays he hath not ſeen him theſe ſix Years. How long ago was your Acquaintance with him?

Talbot. I met him at the Canaries, when I was coming from thence, which is about ſix Years ago; I know nothing of him ſince, but what I have heard of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ever had any Dealings with him?

Talbot. I never had much Dealings with him, what I have had have been very little to my Advantage.

Mr. Ketelbey. If Mr. Attorney deſires the Particulars——

Mr. Hungerford. We conform our ſelves to your Lordſhip's Rule, to aſk only to the General Character of the Man. But if Mr. Attorney will enter into Particulars, we will join Iſſue with him, and go into that Method too.

Mr. Att. Gen. I aſk'd him how long he had known him, he ſays he had not ſeen him theſe ſix Years.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you had a Character of him?

Talbot. The worſt I could ever hear of any Perſon; I know nothing of my ſelf, but what I have heard from others.

Mr. Winchman,

Mr. Winchman ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of this Stephen Lynch?

Winchman. I knew this Gentleman fourteen Years ago, in the Iſland of the Canaries, there he kept an Iriſh Gentleman Company, one Wilſon; he was then well-belov'd by every Body: The Gentleman took him into his Company, and afterwards he grew extravagant, and the Gentleman turn'd him out of his Company.

Mr. Hungerford. Is he accounted an honeſt Man or a Knave?

Winchman. I will not truſt him for any Thing.

Mr. Hungerford. You ſay you won't truſt him for any Thing?

Winchman. No.

Mr. Hungerford. The wiſer you.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he a Man to be credited, can you believe what he ſays?

Winchman. I think I would not believe him.

Mr. Ketelbey. You are right.

James Darcy ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you known Mr. Stephen Lynch?

Darcy. About a Twelve-month.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't aſk you as to his particular Life and Converſation, but in general what is his Character, is he a Man to be believed or credited?

Darcy. I don't take it that he is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you know him?

Darcy. I firſt knew him laſt Winter in London?

Mr. Hungerford. Is Mr. George Fitzgerald there? My Lord, here is a Complaint made that the Witneſſes can't be let in.

L. C. Juſt. They muſt be let in.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who made the Complaint?

Mr. Hungerford. A Gentleman here in Court?

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is the Buſineſs of your Sollicitors to take care that way be made for your Witneſſes.

Mr. Hungerford. It is not the Buſineſs of your Witneſſes to ſtop the Paſſage.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They don't ſtop the Paſſage.

Mr. Hungerford. No; what is your buſy Colonel there [pointing to Col. Huske] a doing?

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. We muſt ſtay here half an Hour for every Witneſs.

Mr. Fitzgerald did not appear, then Mr. John Blake was ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Blake, do you know Stephen Lynch?

Blake. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of him whether he is a Perſon to be believ'd or not.

Blake. I heard a very ill Character of him about ſix Years ago. I have heard that he married two Wives.

Mr. Hungerford. Is he to be believed or no?

Blake. I know nothing but by hearſay, I believe he is not to be believ'd, becauſe I have heard ſuch a baſe Character of him.

Collins ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of Stephen Lynch?

Collins. Sir I never exchanged a Word with him.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath he?

Collins. A very infamous Character. I know him by Eye-ſight only, I have ſeen him upon the Exchange of London.

Priſoner. Is he a Perſon to be credited or not?

Collins. No, I believe not.

Mr. French ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know Stephen Lynch?

French. I know him by Eye-ſight.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath he, is he a Perſon to be believ'd upon his Oath?

French. I don't think he is.

Mr. Hungerford. How long have you known him?

French. Six or eight Months.

Mr. Kelley and Mr. Blake ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Kelley how long have you known Stephen Lynch?

Kelley. I believe I have known him ſince the beginning or middle of April laſt.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his Character, is it an honourable Character?

Kelley. I never heard any give him a Character that was not very vile.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Blake, how long have you known Stephen Lynch?

Blake. Sir, I never had any Acquaintance with him, but I have heard he hath a vile Character.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you had any Diſcourſe about this Trial, have you heard any thing ſaid by Lynch himſelf, about the Matter that is now in Judgment before this Court?

Blake. There was one Mr. French, a particular Acquaintance with Lynch; I met Mr. French, hearing he was of the ſame Inn with me, (I belong to the Middle Temple) and he told me he wanted Money.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You know what he told you is not Evidence.

Blake. Saith he, there is one Mr. Lynch owes me a good deal of Money, and I want to go and ſee him, and I have no mind to go there by myſelf. Next Day I conſented to go along with him, as thinking there could be no Danger in that: When we came to him, I ſuſpect, ſays Mr. Lynch, that you come for ſome Money that I owe you. Upon that he deſir'd him to ſit down, and told the Gentleman he was ſorry he had diſappointed him. Then he begun to talk of my Lord North and Gray, and my Lord Orrery, and Mr. Layer I believe I ſhall hang him; but as to my Lord North and Gray, and my Lord Orrery, I know nothing of them: I know nothing more of Mr. Layer, but what I had from him himſelf. Some Words paſs'd between him and me, and talking of my Lord Townſhend, he ſaid my Lord Townſhend was of a moroſe Temper, but my Lord Carteret was of a better Temper.

Mr. Ketelbey. Speak to the Purpoſe; I deſire to know what you can ſay of Mr. Lynch's Character?

Blake. I don't know any thing of Lynch, but that he is of an infamous Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. What did he ſay of Mr. Layer?

Blake. He ſaid he would hang him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did he ſay any thing about the vileneſs of the Plot or why or how far he thought it his Duty to diſcover ſuch Villany?

Blake. No, I don't know of any ſuch thing. I heard him ſay, my Circumſtances are very poor; poor; and the Motive that induced him to do this, was to ſave the Lives of a thouſand People.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he ſpeak any thing of getting Money?

Blake. No, I can't ſay any ſuch thing.

L. C. Juſt. That is not a fair Queſtion.

Blake. I can inform your Lordſhip more: Saith he, I was forced to do this; but if I had got off from this Affair; I would fight any dozen People in London to come off from it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where do you live, Sir? Do you live in the Middle Temple?

Blake. No; I live at Mrs. Ireland's in Portugal Street.

Mr. Hungerford. In the Converſation you had with Lynch, was there talk of any Money he was to have?

Mr. Soll. Gen. You aſk'd him that Queſtion before, and was told it was not a fair Queſtion.

Mr Hungerford. I think I did not. Mr. Darcy, what do you know more of Mr. Lynch?

Darcy. Sir, I went to ſee Mr. Lynch on Account of ſome Money which I lent him, and when he was taken up in Manchester-Court I went to ſee him; there he received me civilly, I took him aſide and aſk'd him for my Money. I told him ſo freely, and aſked him how he got Money and ſeveral fine Clothes which he had; he told me a Lady us'd to come twice or thrice a Week to viſit him, and this Lady was the Miſtreſs or Daughter of one of the Chief Miniſters of England; he ſaid this Woman———

L. C. Juſt. You muſt not put him in this way.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr Blake, have you given an Account of the Character of this Lynch? I only aſk you the general Character.

Blake. I have told you already.

Priſoner. I have two or three more to the ſame Purpoſe.

Terry ſworn.

Priſoner. How long have you known Lynch?

Terry. Seven Years.

Priſoner. Hath he the Character of an honeſt Man?

Terry. He hath the Character of being a looſe young Fellow; that is all I know of him.

Priſoner. Is his Character good or bad?

Terry. His Character is looſe.

Mr. Hamilton ſworn.

Priſoner. Do you know this Stephen Lynch?

Hamilton. Yes.

Priſoner. What Character is he of; is he to be believed?

Hamilton. No, I believe not; I was cautious of keeping him Company; I believe him to be of a vile infamous Character, that will do or ſwear any thing.

Mr. Hungerford. We leave the Character of this Lynch here, with the Weight of the Blemiſhes charg'd upon him by our Witneſſes, to the Conſideration of the Jury.

There is another of the Witneſſes, Mr. Plunkett, to whoſe Character we ſhall likewiſe examine. We ſhall call a Witneſs or two to that matter, and then we ſhall cloſe.

Mr. Thomas Brown ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Plunkett?

Brown. Yes, I have known him theſe ten Years.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his general Character?

Brown. He hath but an indifferent Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he a Man to be believ'd?

Brown. No, my Lord, I don't believe he is.

Mr. Keating ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you known Mr. Plunkett, and how long?

Keating. I never had any knowledge of him before the beginning of July laſt.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character and Reputation hath he? Hath he a good or an ill Character?

Keating. I will tell you: About the Beginning of July laſt a Man that owed me ſome Money on a Note of his Hand———

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we muſt oppoſe the going into Particulars; they know they are confined to examine as to his general Chracter only.

Mr. Hungerford. But if the Gentleman will follow ſome of your Examples, and introduce himſelf by Prefaces, we can't help it.

L. C. Juſt. To a general Queſtion you muſt give a general Anſwer.

Keating. The Knowledge I have had of him, I never knew any thing tolerable in his favour; I never heard a good Character of him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you ever hear a bad one?

Keating. Yes, a very bad one, that he was a drunken idle Fellow, always kept company with other Women.

Mr. Ketelbey. And from the Character you have had of him, do you think there is any credit to be given to him?

Keating. No, I don't think there is.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, here we produce a Man of Quality, Sir Daniel O Carroll.

Sir Daniel O Carroll ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know Plunkett?

Sir Daniel. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray what is his general Character?

Sir Daniel. I can give no good one of him; for it is a mighty bad Character he hath; he caus'd his Colonel to be brought to Town to be examin'd———

Mr. Ketelbey. I only aſk you in general; don't enter into the Particulars: I only aſk in general, from the Character he hath in the World, do you look upon him as a competent Witneſs to be believ'd againſt another Man?

Sir Daniel. I would not take his Evidence to hang a Dog.

Mr. Hungerford. And here he attempts to hang a Proteſtant!

Mr. Thomas Spelman ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know this Plunkett, and how long have you known him?

Spelman. I have known him ſeven or eight Years.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his general Character in his Life and Converſation?

Spelman. I never knew any ill done by him.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his Character?

Spelman. I can't give any Character of a Man I don't know. All I know of him, is about a Diſpute between him and Sir Daniel Carol about a Horſe, and his deſiring the Lawyer to ſue Sir Daniel.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he not ſay ſomething before that?

Spelman. He ſaid, the Lawyer he employ'd would do him Juſtice.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay you don't know any ill Character of him.

Spelman. No, I don't.

Edward Barnwell ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know this Plunkett, what is his Character?

Barnwell. Pray let me tell you, I have been examin'd twice upon this Account. The firſt time that I brought Plunkett to be acquainted with Mr. Layer, Mr. Layer's Man brought me word and ſaid, Mr. Layer had his Goods ſeiz'd wrongfully; upon that I ſent Plunkett to the Savoy, to have two Soldiers from thence; and I ſaid, go to Mr. Layer's Houſe, there are ſome Bailiffs that have wrongfully ſeiz'd his Goods, you muſt go and turn them out. He did go with the Soldiers, and turn'd the Bailiffs out of the Houſe; upon which Mr. Layer gave him half a Crown: After this Mr. Plunkett had no Friend but me; and he came and preſs'd me, and deſir'd me to apply to Sir Daniel Carol, for ſome Money he ſaid he owed him for a Horſe. I told him I thought it was wrong to preſs Sir Daniel upon that Account.

Then about eight Months ago he came to me, and ſaid he had met Mr. Layer in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and that Mr. Layer did not know him; I told him, ſays he, I am one of thoſe that ſerv'd him at ſuch a time, and that he had given me half a Crown, and that then Mr. Layer remember'd him. This is all I know; I'm ſworn, and will tell the Truth.

Mr. Hungerford. Is he a Man as may be believ'd, even upon his Oath, or not?

Barnwell. I muſt tell you, that I found him in ſo many Miſtakes about his own Wife, that, by God, I would not take his Word for a Halfpeny.

Mr. Hungerford. This contradicts what Mr. Plunkett ſays paſs'd between him and Mr. Layer in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, with reſpect to the giving him Half a Crown, it ſeems to be for former Service.

L. C. Juſt. How doth it? I'm to learn again. Plunkett ſwore, that he came with him under a Gate-way, and there, after he had talk'd with him, he gave him Half a Crown. This Gentleman owns he gave it to him for the Service he had done at ſome diſtance of Time before.

Mr. Hungerford. Go on, but don't ſwear by God any more.

Barnwell. I am a Soldier, a Man of Honour, of eighty Years of Age, and would not do an ill thing for the World.

Gentlemen, as I have been ſent for by the Miniſtry, and examin'd in the Council, it hath been ſaid, Mr. Plunkett hath made me write a Letter to his own Captain; and theſe Men were obliged to give in Bail, and he would pay for the Charges.

Mr. Ketelbey. What did Mr. Plunkett ſay to you, in relation to what paſs'd between you and Mr. Layer?

Barnwell. He told me Mr. Layer gave him Half a Crown, in kindneſs for the Service he had formerly done him, in turning the Officers out of his Houſe.

Mr. Matthew Phylips ſworn.

Priſoner. Do you know Plunkett?

Phylips. Yes.

Priſoner. What Character hath he?

Phylips. I think, by what I have known by him, he is not to be believed.

Priſoner. Is that his general Character?

Phylips. It is, that every body gives him that knows him.

Alexander Phylips ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Plunkett?

Al. Phylips. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you known him?

Al. Phylips. I have known him about eleven Weeks.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character hath he?

L. C. Juſt. I never heard the like; when you give the Character of a Man, you give that Character by Men that have not known him above eleven or twelve Weeks.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you ever had any Dealings with him?

Phylips. No, not I, but my Uncle hath.

L. C. Juſt. Moſt of your Witneſſes have known him but a little time, ſeven Weeks, eight Weeks, eleven Weeks, &c. It would almoſt make a Man ſuſpect, that ſome People have been ſet up on purpoſe to give an ill Character of theſe People on this Occaſion. To talk of ſeven or eight Weeks Acquaintance?

Mr. Hungerford. That Man is crowded in I don't know how, but Sir Daniel Carol is tumbled about and cannot get out; Sir Daniel is a Gentleman of Merit, and as ſuch hath been diſtinguiſh'd by the Government, and ought to be treated a little better.

Patrick Mahone ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character hath Mr. Plunkett?

Mahone. I have known Mr. Plunkett ſeveral Years, and that he was an idle broken Man, and a great Liar, and not to be believ'd.

Mr. Hungerford. He would lye before and behind, I think you ſay?

Mahone. Yes, he did.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you think he is to be credited, if he comes to give Teſtimony againſt a Perſon?

Mahone. Upon my Word I think he is not, by what he told me; becauſe I have found him to lye backwards and forwards.

Mrs. Child ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mrs. Child, pray have you had any Diſcourſe lately with Mr. Plunkett the Serjeant?

Mrs. Child. I never had any Diſcourſe with him but that Day my Husband was confin'd, when I run to look for Mr. Plunkett's Wife, and Plunkett's Wife was not at home, but was gone to ſee her Husband at the Meſſenger's; I went thither; Mr. Plunkett hearing I was at the Door, he deſir'd that I ſhould come in. Saith he, Mrs. Child, how comes it that your Huſband doth not come to ſee me? You know, ſays I, upon what Account my Husband abſents himſelf. Why, he is not taken up yet? Yes, ſays I, he is, and confin'd upon your Account. He takes me by the Hand, he takes me into the Coal-Hole, and take notice what I ſay to you, and get to your Husband and tell him quickly. And he told me, that he took my Husband to a Lawyer that was going to pay off the 18 l. that Sir Daniel Carol owed him, and the Lawyer would not ſee him, and ſo they came away together.

Mr. Att.

Mr. Att. Gen. She ſpeaks much to the Purpoſe: For ſhe confirms what Mr. Plunkett ſwore.

Mr. Ketelbey. What did Plunket ſay?

Mrs. Child. He ſaid, he was going to get a Settlement for Life?

Mr. Ketelbey. What was he to get a Settlement for?

Mrs. Child. For what he ſaid of Mr. Layer; a Story he had told me of my Husband.

L. C. Juſt. You have call'd a great many Witneſſes to the Diſreputation of Lynch and Plunkett, to ſay they have generally ill Characters, and are vile infamous Fellows, and not to be believ'd; and there is the Subſtance of all your Evidence if you ſtay here till to morrow morning.

Alice Dunn ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know what Character Plunkett hath?

Alice Dunn. His Character I had from himſelf, that he liv'd with another Man's Wife.

Mr. Ketelbey. Hath he a good or bad Character?

Alice Dunn. He hath a bad Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he to be believ'd?

Alice Dunn. No, he is not to be believ'd.

John Richmond ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Here, Richmond, have you ſeen Plunkett lately?

Richmond. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is it ago ſince you ſaw him?

Richmond. About three Weeks ago and more.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Diſcourſe had you with Plunkett at that time when you ſaw him?

Richmond. Plunkett aſk'd me if I was a Servant of Mr. Layer's? I ſaid, I was; and in diſcourſe I aſk'd him if he had ever receiv'd any Money of Mr. Layer for the uſe of the Pretender? He kneeled down upon his Knees, and ſtruck himſelf upon his Breaſt, and ſaid, he never had receiv'd any Money of Mr. Layer for the Uſe of the Pretender in his Life-time.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is this? Is it three Weeks?

Richmond. I believe 'tis about ſix Weeks ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who was preſent beſides you?

Richmond. There was no body elſe in the Room.

L. C. Juſt. I would be glad to know, that he never receiv'd any Money for the Uſe of the Pretender, What do you mean by that?

Richmond. He kneeled down upon his Knees, and ſaid he wiſh'd he might be damn'd if ever he received any Money for the uſe of the Pretender.

Mr. Hungerford. Your Lordſhip may remember Plunkett ſwore, that Layer gave him Half a Crown at one time, and other Money at ſeveral other times; and now he ſolemnly ſwears upon his bended Knees that he never received any Money for the Uſe of the Pretender, that is, upon his Account.

L. C. Juſt. When you are drawing Conſequences from the Expreſſions, conſider what thoſe Expreſſions are: He ſolemnly proteſted that he never received any Money for the Uſe of the Pretender. It doth not appear that he did; nor did he ſay that he did. Well, go on.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we will leave it here as to Plunkett: We will beg leave to call ſome Witneſſes as to Mrs. Maſon's Character.

Mr. Clayton ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Mrs. Maſon, or Mrs. Buda, or Mrs. Herbert, or what do you call her?

Mrs. Clayton. I know her by all thoſe Names: Buda is the Name ſhe always uſed to go by; ſhe hath gone by the Name of Maſon, and Bevan, and Herbert.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is her Character and Reputation?

Mrs. Clayton. Very indifferent.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is it bad or good?

Mrs. Clayton. Very bad.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you had any talk with her at any time about Sir John Meers and his Man Thomas?

Mrs. Clayton. I have heard her ſay that——

Mr. Soll. Gen. They are aſking what the Witneſs hath heard Mrs. Maſon ſay at any time about Sir John Meers or his Man, which being to a particular Fact, ſurely is not a proper Queſtion.

Mr. Hungerford. What have you heard her ſay about any Papers?

Mrs. Clayton. I ſee her have a printed Book; I us'd to go often where Mrs. Maſon lodged; and going one Day there, I ſaw a Gentleman ſitting which was Mr. Layer: He had ſent a Porter for Mrs. Maſon. When ſhe came, ſays he, the Parliament Man I was ſpeaking of is not provided of the 300*l.* I have a good mind to lend it him.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray how does Mrs. Maſon get her living?

Mrs. Clayton. By deluding young Women, and carrying them about for Money.

Mr. Hungerford. That is to ſay a Bawd; is it not?

Mrs. Clayton. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you hear of any Rewards ſhe was to have by coming here?

Mrs. Clayton. She ſaid ſhe was to be paid, or elſe ſhe wou'd not do it.

L. C. Juſt. What do you mean? You have been ſo often admoniſh'd by the Court; but it ſignifies nothing. You are charging Mrs. Maſon with being a Bawd, when you ought only to enquire as to her general Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. I aſk'd you generally the Queſtion, whether ſhe had a good or a bad Character?

Mrs. Clayton. I did anſwer that Queſtion.

L. C. Juſt. At this rate the moſt innocent Perſons may be branded as the moſt infamous Villains; and it is impoſſible for them to defend themſelves.

Mrs. Peirce ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of this Mrs. Maſon?

Mrs. Peirce. I know I lodg'd in the Houſe where ſhe did lodge.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath ſhe? a good one or a bad one?

Mrs. Peirce. A very indifferent one.

Priſoner. Is ſhe to be believed or credited?

Mrs. Peirce. No, ſhe is not to be credited.

Mr. Hungerford. Had ſhe a good Reputation or an infamous one?

Mrs. Peirce. She hath a bad Reputation.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. You have ſeen Mr. Layer there?

Mrs. Peirce. Yes.

Mrs. Wilkinſon ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know this Mrs. Maſon?

Mrs. Wilkinſon. I don't know Mrs. Maſon; but I know Mrs. Bevan.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character hath ſhe?

Mrs. Wilkinſon. I know her to be a vile Woman, and doth not care what ſhe ſays, or what ſhe doth.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is that her general Character?

Mrs. Wilkinſon. Always ſince I have known her.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is that?

Mrs. Wilkinſon. About two Years.

Mr. Dyer ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Dyer, do you know Mrs. Maſon?

Dyer. I know one Bevan.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you known her?

Dyer. She liv'd with me thirteen or fourteen Years ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. What was her Character then?

Dyer. She robb'd my Shop, and I ſent her to Bridewell.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is her Character and Reputation now?

L. C. Juſt. I deſire you to forbear this irregular Practice.

Mr. Hungerford. Is this Woman to be credited or not?

Dyer. I know nothing of that.

Mrs. Baſkett ſworn.

Priſoner. Had you any Diſcourſe with Mrs. Maſon?

Mrs. Baſkett. No, Sir, I don't know her.

Priſoner. Had you any Diſcourſe with her?

Mrs. Baſkett. I don't know her.

Priſoner. Nor Mrs. Buda?

Mrs. Baſkett. No, I don't know her.

Priſoner. Nor Mrs. Bevan?

Mrs. Baſkett. I don't know her at all.

Priſoner. Do you know Mr. Lynch? Have you ſeen him lately?

Mrs. Baſkett. I ſaw him laſt Night.

Priſoner. Did you hear him ſay what Reward he was to have for ſwearing againſt me?

L. C. Juſt. That muſt not be.

Priſoner. Did you not hear him ſay he was to have 500 l. for ſwearing againſt me?

L. C. Juſt. We have a Compaſſion for you, and therefore bear this from you, which we would not from any body elſe.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, this is not to be endured. The Priſoner turns about to the Jury, and tells them that Lynch ſaid he was to have 500 l. a Year.

Mr. Hungerford. I believe the Gentleman that ſat next to him did not hear him.

Mr. Wearg. My Lord, I did hear him ſay to the Jury that Lynch ſaid he was to have 500 l. a Year.

L. C. Juſt. I muſt tell you, if you did but conſider of what little Conſequence it would be to you, you would not do it. When you thought fit to make him your Confident, carry him to the Green Man with you, and to my Lord North and Gray's; and there he was entertain'd courteouſly by him; and do you come now to brand him with being an ill Man?

Priſoner. Lynch ſays himſelf that he did not know me till June laſt; and how could I have ſo much Friendſhip for him on ſo ſhort an Acquaintance?

L. C. Juſt. Then for this Woman, if you would do ſervice to your ſelf, prove the Packets are not under your Seal, and that you did not deliver them to her with your own Hand; prove ſomething of that, and theſe Proofs will be of more ſervice to you than ten thouſand of theſe Witneſſes.

Priſoner. My Lord, if I was admitted to prove, I can make it appear it is all a Sham and a Forgery.

Mr. Hungerford. It was never proved to be his Seal.

L. C. Juſt. You are miſtaken. The Woman ſwore it was his Seal, and the Officers ſwore they were under the Seals when they ſeized them; and it is proved now to be his Seal, for the Seal is viſible.

Priſoner. How do they prove it to be my Seal? My Lord, it is not my Seal. I deſire Major Barnwell may be aſk'd as to this Woman's Character.

Maj. Barnwell. I know her. She is a vile Woman: She had like to have cheated me of 1500 l.

Priſoner. You are only aſk'd as to her Character in general. Is ſhe a Woman to be credited, or not?

Maj. Barnwell. No, ſhe is not.

Mr. Ketelbey. I hope you are ſatisfied with this general Anſwer.

Mr. Hungerford. They won't let us go into Particulars; that the Courſe of Practice won't allow.

Mr. Ketelbey. It is impoſſible for us to direct the Anſwers to the Queſtions.

Mr. Lebatt ſworn.

Priſoner. Mr. Lebatt, pray give my Lord and the Jury a general Account of this Mrs. Buda, or Mrs. Maſon, whether ſhe ought to be credited or not, or gain Credit.

Lebatt. No. She would take any Body's Life away for the value of a Farthing.

Mr. Hungerford. Now, my Lord, we will cloſe our Evidence as to the Character of theſe Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner at the Bar. We hope we have proved their Characters to be ſo infamous, as no Jury upon Earth will believe them. Here is this to be obſerved——

Priſoner. I beg pardon; here is a mighty talk of my Arms. I am ſo fortunate as to have a Perſon here that will give you an Account of them, and how they came to be brought thither.

Mr. Bowers ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Trade are you of?

Bowers. A Gunſmith.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you make any Fuzees?

Priſoner. No; pray let me aſk him. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of a Blunderbuſs, a Fuzee, a Carbine, and Piſtols; what what you know of them. Did not you owe me ſix Pound on a Note under your Hand?

Bowers. My Lord, about five or ſix Months ago, Mr. Layer had a Law Suit for me: I ſold him a Pair of Piſtols, and a little after I ſold him another Pair. Mr. Layer had them for a Debt. He had in his Houſe two Guns. I promiſed Mr. Bennet a Gun when the Cauſe was over, inſtead of Money. I gave him one of thoſe Guns: There is another Gun, and a Muſket which Mr. Layer had of me.

Mr. Layer had a Note of mine for ſix Pound, which I owed him. I importun'd him to take a Carbine for a Man to ride with, and a Blunderbuſs for his Houſe, in order to ſet off this Debt; and I brought him them when he was going into the Country. I brought him ſome Powder, and I brought him three Dozen and a half of Cartridges.

Priſoner. Did I order you to bring them, or did you bring them of your own Head?

Bowers. You bid me bring a Dozen and a half, or two Dozen; and I brought three Dozen and a half: The Reaſon was, that I might ſhorten my own Debt.

Mr. Raynham, ſworn.

Priſoner. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of the Piece of Arms I had of you, and for what Reaſon?

Raynham. I went with him to one Mr. Prichard's in Friday-Street, there was a Muſket in his Compting-Houſe; he ſaid he would diſpoſe of it: Mr. Layer aſk'd him his Price; he ſaid he would have fifty Shillings for it. Mr. Layer ſaid that was too much; ſays he, you ſhall have a trial of it, and if your Siſter carries her Cauſe againſt Mr. Watſon, you ſhall give me fifty Shillings for it.

Priſoner. Did he put it on me, or did I deſire it?

Raynham. You aſk'd him what it was worth, and whether he would diſpoſe of it?

Priſoner. Did not he ſay ſeveral times that he wanted to diſpoſe of it, and deſired me to take it on thoſe Terms?

Raynham. Yes. He ſaid on that Condition that your Siſter got her Cauſe you ſhould have it, and gave him fifty Shillings for it.

Mr. Samuel Steward, ſworn.

Priſoner. Mr. Steward, only give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether or no I was not intruſted with things of great Value, and what Occaſion I might have for a few Arms; whether you don't know of Money put out on Mortgages?

Steward. Yes, to the Value of thirty or forty thouſand Pounds within theſe two Years.

Priſoner. Don't you think it reaſonable as to theſe Arms, that I ſhould have them in my Houſe to guard my Houſe?

Steward. I thought it very reaſonable.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we have done with examining of Witneſſes, to the Credit of the Witneſſes produced againſt the Priſoner; and leave that Matter to the Conſideration of the Jury.

Mr. Ketelbey. Pray Mr. Steward, do you look upon that Paper they call a Scheme, with a French Motto upon it. Before you look upon that Paper, I aſk you if you are acquainted with the Hand-Writing of Mr. Layer?

Steward. Yes very well.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you been acquainted with his Hand-Writing?

Steward. Two Years and an half.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you at any time ſeen him write?

Steward. Yes, a thouſand times.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you believe that to be his Hand?

Steward. I do not believe it to be his Hand.

Priſoner. Is it like the Character I write?

Steward. Not at all. You write a ſhorter Character; this is a long one.

Mr. Bennet, ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you been acquainted with the Hand-Writing of Mr. Layer?

Bennet. I have been very well acquainted with the Hand-Writing of Mr. Layer.

Mr. Ketelbey. You have ſeen him write?

Bennet. Very often, a thouſand and a thouſand times.

Mr. Ketelbey. Look upon that Paper. See if you believe that to be his Hand-Writing?

Bennet. No, my Lord, I do not believe that to be his Hand-Writing. I never ſaw him write a Hand like it in my Life. I don't think it to be his own Hand-Writing at all; I never ſaw him write ſuch a Hand as this.

Mr. Att. Gen. Shew him that Paper: [which was a Paper ſeized among the Priſoner's Papers in the great Bundle.] Look on that Paper, and give my Lord and the Jury an Account if you know whoſe Hand-Writing it is.

Bennet. I believe 'tis my own Hand-Writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whoſe Direction did you write it?

Bennet. By Mr. Layer's Direction.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpoſe was it writ?

Bennet. I can't remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you write this for Mr. Layer?

Bennet. I believe I did; but I can't tell what particular Reaſon I writ it for.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, here is one of the Papers that were found in the Bundle, in which the Liſts were found, prov'd to be writ by Mr. Layer's Clerk by his Direction.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. He is poſitive as to its not being his Maſter's Hand-Writing; yet as to his own, he owns it.

Cl. of the Cr. It is a Liſt of Names.

Mr. Ketelbey. Before you read it, what did he ſay?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he ſaid it was his Hand.

Cl. of the Cr. It is part of a Jury between Layer and one Watſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. This was found amongſt his Papers that were ſealed up. It was taken in that Bundle where the Liſts were.

Mr. Ketelbey. We ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury. We apprehend we have prov'd this Scheme not to belong to Mr. Layer; We have called two Witneſſes that have known him many Years, and have ſeen him write a great great many times; and that they verily believe it not to be his Hand-Writing. We don't know how it is possible to leave it on a better Foot. Therefore, my Lord, we shall leave it to your Lordship's Direction, and the Consideration of the Jury.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, all that I would now observe is, that this Gentleman is indicted for High-Treason. The main of the Charge against him is, that he was concerned in designing to raise an Insurrection. How that appears to be prov'd, I have spoke to already; but this must be allow'd, that whatsoever Desolation and ill Consequences might now have ensu'd, there hath been no Blood shed, no Armies rais'd, or Invasions attempted: And I think upon such an Evidence that comes not up to the Charge in the Indictment, the Blood of this Gentleman ought not to be reach'd: At least we humbly hope it shall not.

Prisoner. My Lord, as to Lynch, it appears our going down into Essex was merely accidental: When we came to the Green Man, we did not stay there three Quarters of an Hour; and he says he went down twice in the time. All this mighty Business, this publishing a Declaration, talking of an Insurrection, which is the Treason, and laid as an Overt-Act in Essex; all this was done before Dinner by his own owning. It was not three Quarters of an Hour from the Time we went in, till the Time we came out. We went on to my Lord North and Gray's; and when he was there, he is ask'd, if there was any Discourse there about any such Design? He says there was nothing said of it there. Is it possible when such a Design was on foot, he and I alone should go together to the Green Man, and thoroughly recapitulate the Affair; which when we came to my Lord North and Gray's nothing should be said of it?

When we come to Plunkett, he saith that he became acquainted with me first of all, by reason of some Goods that were seiz'd in a House in Queen-Street; that he never saw me till five Years after this in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. Plunkett did not at first know me: We looking upon one another, then he renew'd his Acquaintance with me, and told me of the former Service he had done me; and thereupon I gave him half a Crown, which he said was given him by me to list Men into the Pretender's Service. He confess'd, as I proved by Major Barnewell, that I gave it him for former Service. As to the thirteen Shillings, he was ask'd whether he did not come to borrow such a Sum of Money of me; he said he did; it was in order to release Major Barnewell out of the Marshalsea. Being ask'd whether he was not acquainted with Sir Daniel Carroll, and whether there was not some Difference about a Horse in Spain between them, he said there was, and that he came to advise with me whether he could recover the Money of Sir Daniel Carroll. Is it not natural that the Guinea he talks of might be another Man's Money, that was told him by one Jeffreys was sent to him by me: He talks to him as to that Guinea, when he comes to be ask'd whether it was not purely out of Kindness and Charity that I did lend him that Guinea, he doth not deny it, and now would insinuate that it was given him to list Men for the Pretender. From the Improbability of the thing, from his own owning, no Person could believe him. I believe there are ninety nine out of a hundred that cannot believe one Word that either Lynch or Plunkett swore.

Then the next Matter they talk of, they produce a Scheme: How hard and difficult was it to give any Evidence that so it should be read; and I humbly apprehend it did not strictly amount to legal Evidence. Mr. Doyley he said he knew my Hand fourteen or fifteen Years ago, and that he hath received Letters from me about five Years ago, and hath compared this Scheme with those Letters; and therefore he believes it to be my Hand. When he comes to be ask'd whether he hath those Letters here with which he compared this Scheme? No, I have them not here: Yet chiefly his Belief was that it was my Hand-Writing, by comparing these Letters and this Scheme together. This amounts to nothing more, when it comes strictly to be consider'd, than only a Similitude of Hands, and surely similitude of Hands, with submission, is not proof in criminal Cases: And when it amounts to no more, it ought not to be receiv'd.

Here is, say they, a Circumstance that what Lynch and Plunkett swore must be true, because here was a Scheme for an Insurrection. In this very Scheme or Paper, as I took notice of, not one Man is mentioned by Name in it; only Soldiers to be had here, the Tower to be seiz'd, the Bank and the Exchange to be seiz'd, and the World to be turn'd upside down; but by whom? There is no Time mentioned, there is no Date to it. This thing if it be such a Scheme, if it had been written by me, which I absolutely deny that it was writ by me, it doth not appear but that it was written several Years ago. When they come to ask those Gentlemen the Under-Secretaries, if this be so remarkable that they lay the whole stress upon this Paper, whether I acknowledg'd it to be mine, they cou'd not say I own'd it to be mine. One of the Lords lays his Finger on a Paper, and saith, Don't you say this about Arms? Which I deny to be so. How comes it that none of those Lords directly offer'd the Paper to me, and asked me, Is this your Hand-Writing? There was my Lord Chancellor, my Lord Harcourt, and several other Lords present, that very likely would have ask'd that Question; but either they did not think it material, or they had not the Paper there, or they did not think it of that Consequence, or they knew I would deny it.

When we come to call Witnesses to this Woman, this vile, this infamous Woman, I cou'd shew you she hath been privy to Forgeries. If it was not to take up your Lordship's time, I cou'd shew that this is a Contrivance between a Gentleman and her; I am very loth to name him, to carry on such a Paper as this to get Money of the Government.

Here have been five or six Witnesses, whose Credit stands unimpeach'd, who tell you her Word is not to be taken for a Groat. Another says, he would not hang a Dog on her Evidence. This Scheme must come from her: She says, she had two Bundles of Papers that were deliver'd by me to her seal'd up; and she says this Scheme was amongst them; and she can the better swear it, because she hath set her Mark upon it. One of the Meſſengers doth not know whether ſhe was in the Room or no. If this Woman is not to be believed, then all the other Evidence relating to this Paper falls to the Ground. It is a Maxim in Reaſon as well as Law; take away the Foundation, and the Work muſt fall.

Gentlemen of the Jury, I would have you to take Notice of this Evidence, and not go away with a miſtaken Notion, becauſe here is a vaſt deal of Talk about the Pretender, going to Rome, liſting of Soldiers for the Pretender's Service, &c. Your Lordſhip will tell them all that is nothing, unleſs they believe an Overt-Act to be done in Eſſex: That is the true State of the Caſe with humble Submiſſion. Therefore I hope ſuch Evidence as this Evidence of Lynch and Plunkett (but only to confine it to that of Mr. Lynch) hath prov'd nothing at all againſt me; and if what he hath ſworn doth not affect me, then all the other ſtands for nothing; that's the true State of the Caſe. I would not have the Jury think a Man is to be hunted out of his Life by fine Speeches, far-fetch'd Innuendoes, and the like. You will conſider the Character of this Man, that he is not to be believ'd. I'll leave it to you, and I hope God Almighty will direct you: I aſk you no more than Juſtice. If a Man's Life is to be taken away by ſuch ſcandalous Evidence as hath appear'd againſt me, there is an End of all your Liberties, your Wives may be taken from you, your Children made Slaves, and all that is valuable to you, your Lives and Eſtates will be but very precarious.

Mr. Soll. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard a very long Evidence, and it is my Part, as exactly and faithfully as I can, to ſum up to you the Subſtance of it, and to reply to the Objections which have been made on the Behalf of the Priſoner; as well to ſuch Objections as have been made by the Priſoner himſelf, and by his Counſel for him, as to thoſe which ariſe from the Evidence that has come out of the Mouths of his Witneſſes: And after I have done this, I doubt not but it will appear to your Satisfaction that the Evidence which has been given for the King ſtands unanſwer'd, and is a ſtrong Proof of High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner at the Bar.

Gentlemen, the Treaſon with which the Priſoner ſtands charged is compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. This high Crime conſiſts in the Imagination of the Heart; but it muſt be proved and made out againſt the Offender by Acts which he hath done. The Overt-Acts of this Treaſon alledg'd to be done by the Priſoner, are, in the firſt place, conſulting and conſpiring to levy War againſt his Majeſty: In the next place, publiſhing a treaſonable Declaration, containing Exhortations, Encouragements, and Promiſes of Rewards, to ſtir up the King's Subjects to take Arms, and riſe in Rebellion againſt his Majeſty; conſulting and conſpiring to exalt the Pretender to the Crown of this Realm, and put him in poſſeſſion of the Government by armed Force, and Troops to be levied for that Purpoſe; the actual liliſting and retaining of Men to ſerve in this Rebellion; and, finally, a Conſpiracy to ſeize and impriſon the ſacred Perſon of the King himſelf.

Gentlemen, the heinous Nature and deſtructive Tendency of theſe Facts were fully explain'd to you in the Opening of the Cauſe. If they had met with Succeſs, the Event could undoubtedly have been no leſs than the entire Subverſion of our preſent happy Eſtabliſhment; and, in conſequence of that, the loſs of every thing that is dear and valuable to us. For this Reaſon it was rightly admitted by one of the Counſel for the Priſoner, that the Crime, if proved, is incapable of Aggravation; and being ſo, altho' it is impoſſible to ſay too much concerning it, yet to ſay a great deal to you muſt be unneceſſary, becauſe it is equally impoſſible for the Hearts of Engliſhmen and Proteſtants to ſuggeſt too little to themſelves on ſo important, ſo moving an Occaſion.

The Evidence which has been given conſiſts of ſeveral parts and different Kinds, every one of which conduces to ſupport and corroborate the other, and taken together they make up the fulleſt and moſt convincing Teſtimony that can be expected in any Caſe. In the firſt Place, living Witneſſes were produced to you who were privy to the treaſonable Acts and Conſultations; in the next place, ſeveral Papers have been read to you, ſome of them written with the Priſoner's own Hand, but all of them belonging to him; and laſt of all, you have the Confeſſion of the Priſoner himſelf prov'd by two Witneſſes.

The firſt Witneſs was Mr. Stephen Lynch, who gives you an Account in what Manner he was firſt introduc'd to the Priſoner at the Bar. He tells you he came into England about April laſt, and had ſeveral Meetings with one Dr. Murphey, who was his old Acquaintance. At theſe Meetings they had a Diſcourſe relating to the Pretender, and an Attempt to be made for a general Riſing in his Favour; and Dr. Murphey having thus diſclos'd the Secret, told Lynch that if he would be of the Party, he would recommend him to a Gentleman who had a conſiderable ſhare in the Management of the Affair. Lynch took time to deliberate upon it, and in two or three Days after told Murphey he was reſolved to be of the Party.

Afterwards, in June laſt, Dr. Murphey carries Lynch to the Priſoner's Houſe, who propos'd to them to go to the Griffin-Tavern in Holborne. Thither they went, and the Priſoner ſoon came to 'em; and you have heard in what Manner Murphey preſented Lynch to the Priſoner, as being the Gentleman he had before ſpoke to him of, and what Propoſals were made at that Meeting by the Priſoner to Lynch. That there was to be an Inſurrection in the Kingdom in favour of the Pretender, in which they ſhou'd be ſupported by a great many of the Army and the Guards, as well as by ſeveral of the Nobility and Gentry; and that he wanted a fit Perſon to take one of the firſt Steps in it by ſeizing the Perſon of ſome General, or other great Man.

It may be proper here to take Notice of an Objection which was made to this, which is the very beginning of our Evidence: That Lynch being an abſolute Stranger to the Priſoner, it is very extraordinary that the Priſoner ſhould make a Propoſal of ſo dangerous a Nature to him at firſt Sight. But this is plainly accounted for by the Witneſs, who tells you he was intimately acquainted with Dr. Murphey, and Murphey was very intimate with and introduced him to the Priſoner, as a Friend who might be confided in. Agreeably to this you obſerve that the firſt thing the Priſoner accoſted Lynch with, was that he had had ſuch ſtrong Recommendations of Lynch, that he was fully ſatisfy'd in him.

This Witneſs goes on to give you an Account that in a Day or two after, in Purſuance of the Directions he had receiv'd from the Priſoner, he went to the ſame Tavern, and ſent for the Priſoner. They had ſome further Converſation about a Riſing, and the Inclination which appear'd in the Nation for a Revolution. And now it was that the Priſoner inform'd Lynch that there was a great Man at the Head of this Affair, who neither wanted Wit, Courage, or Reſolution, and would at a proper time give Lynch Orders to effect ſomething conſiderable. At this Meeting the Priſoner particularly engaged Lynch to ſeize the Earl of Cadogan. The Reaſon of this Attempt the Witneſs gives you, that it was in order to diſcourage the King's Party, and animate the Pretender's. And, Gentlemen, the meaning of this is plain and obvious; for if an Inſurrection was begun, what could be more likely to create a Confuſion in the Army, and diſpoſe the Soldiers to revolt, which appears to have been a main Part of this Deſign, than the ſeizing of their General?

There were ſeveral other Meetings both before and after the Priſoner's going into the Country, where the Witneſs told you he had ſtaid ſixteen or ſeventeen Days. At thoſe Meetings they diſcours'd concerning the Conſpiracy; and at one of them it is remarkable the Priſoner told Lynch, that if they once made a Beginning here, they ſhou'd want no Aſſiſtance from abroad. And at laſt Lynch tells you, that he being under Neceſſities, expreſſing great Uneaſineſs at the Delay of the Project, and, as I remember, talking of going beyond Sea, the Priſoner actually advanc'd to him a Sum of Money, no leſs than eight or ten Guineas at different Times, in order to engage him to ſtay in England, and to aſſiſt in the intended Deſign of a Revolution. This is one Proof of the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment of liſting Men.

As they had conſider'd how to diſpoſe of the General, ſo it appears they did not neglect the Army; for Lynch acquaints you, that upon Diſcourſe about that, he ask'd what Encouragement they had from the Army; upon which the Priſoner anſwer'd, that they had great Encouragement from thence, and ſeveral Serjeants and common Soldiers had given them Reaſon to believe they wou'd join them. Lynch being aſk'd as to the Time when this Deſign was to be put in Execution, he told you there was no certain Time fix'd, but the Priſoner inform'd him it was to be at the breaking up of the Camp; and at the ſame time gave a Reaſon for it, which is by no Means to be paſs'd over, That they could not have ſo good Opportunities to talk with the Soldiers (that is, to ſeduce them from their Duty and Allegiance) whilſt they were encamped, as in their Quarters. Purſuant to theſe Conſultations, Mr. Layer afterwards told him 'twould be neceſſary to take a proper time to view my Lord Cadogan's Houſe. The Pretence for going thither was that Layer had a Particular of an Eſtate which was to be ſold to lay before his Lordſhip. He tells you that in Fact they went to the Houſe, ſurvey'd it, talk'd of the Feaſibleneſs of the Attempt, and at that time they alſo diſcours'd of ſeizing the Tower; and the Priſoner told the Witneſs that the Tower would be immediately ſurrender'd to the Party on the Day the Plot ſhould be put in Execution; for a certain Officer would take upon him to mount the Guard there that Day, who wou'd facilitate the Delivery of it to them. And the People of the Mint were at the ſame time to have Arms put into their Hands.

This is a very remarkable Paſſage, and falls in with the Scheme which was afterwards produced to you in the Priſoner's Hand-Writing.

The next Meeting where any thing paſs'd worth repeating to you, was at the Queen's-Head-Tavern in Great Queen's-Street; and when the Witneſs came to the Priſoner there, he found one Wilſon in Company with him, and another Man, who ſeem'd by his Cloaths to be a Serjeant of the Guards. The Uſe to be made of that Fact is, that it is a Circumſtance which falls in with the written Scheme; for you obſerv'd that one George Wilſon is there mention'd as the Perſon who was to manage the Serjeants, and receive Orders from the principal Officer.

At this Meeting Lynch tells you they talk'd over the Buſineſs, and drank good Succeſs to the Enterprize. When they parted, he complain'd to the Priſoner of the long Delay. Upon which Mr. Layer told him there was a Nobleman at the Head of the Deſign, who had full Power and Authority from the Pretender (whom he called King) who would loſe no fit Opportunity to put it in Execution. He did not name this Nobleman, but told Lynch that he ſhould be preſented to him in due time, and alſo receive Orders from him to ſeize my Lord Cadogan.

Gentlemen, it will be very material for you to fix this Circumſtance in your Memories, and to connect it with the Evidence which comes afterwards, and what was done in conſequence of this Meeting.

For after Layer had thus declared that there was a Nobleman at the Head of the Conſpiracy, and Lynch ſhould be preſented to him in due Time, then it follows that upon the twenty fourth of Auguſt, the Day the Biſhop of Rocheſter was committed to the Tower, which appears by the Evidence to be the Time of their next Meeting, Mr. Layer propoſed to Lynch to ride out to take the Air, which was agreed upon for the next Day.

In that Journey the Priſoner perſuaded Lynch to carry Arms, becauſe as he then declared he had that about him which he wou'd not loſe for all the World. Upon the Road Layer told Lynch they were to go to my Lord North and Gray's, and when they were got pretty near the Green Man at Layton Stone in Eſſex, it was thought to be too late to go on to dine at Lord North and Gray's; and therefore the Priſoner propoſed to ſtop at the Green Man to take a Dinner.

At this Place the Overt-Acts of High Treaſon committed in Eſſex, which we were ſo much call'd upon to make out, do ariſe. During their ſtay here the Witneſs gives you an Account that they diſcourſed courſed of the whole Project of the Inſurrection, the Means of effecting it, the Uneaſineſs that was in the Nation, and in General all the ſeveral matters they had conſulted of before; and after they had done this he tells you Mr. Layer the Priſoner propoſed to him that deteſtable and ſhocking Deſign of ſeizing the ſacred Perſon of the King, which he ſometimes call'd ſending a ſtrong Guard to take care of——at other times to ſecure, the King's Perſon.

He tells you farther, that Mr. Layer pull'd out of his Pocket a Manuſcript Paper, and deliver'd it to the Witneſs in part folded down, and he read that Part of it which was left open. That this Paper contain'd a Declaration, with a Recital, that my Lord Cadogan was then actually in their Cuſtody: That there were in it Invitations to the People to Riſe in Arms and repair to their Party: Encouragements to the Soldiers to Revolt, with an Offer of Three Guineas to every Horſeman and Serjeant, Two Guineas to every Corporal, and One Guinea to every Common Soldier, to be paid immediately on their joining the Party; and a Promiſe of further Rewards. Lynch acquaints you that the Priſoner talk'd of this Declaration being of his own Compoſing, and that from the Diſcourſe which paſs'd between them, and the Appearance of the Paper, he apprehended it to be of the Priſoner's Hand-Writing.

My Lord, after this Declaration had been thus produced, the Priſoner took it back again, put it into his Pocket, and kept it; and therefore the Paper itſelf being in his Cuſtody, we were properly admitted to prove the Contents of it by Parol Evidence; and I apprehend if we had no further Proof of theſe Overt-Acts which were done in Eſſex, this alone is fully ſufficient to maintain the Indictment to be regularly and properly found in that County.

From the Green Man they went on to Epping, to my Lord North and Gray's, with whom it is admitted the Witneſs was not at all acquainted, and conſequently could not of himſelf have any particular Reaſon for going thither, but it appears to have been upon the Motion of the Priſoner. When they came to the Lord North and Gray's Houſe, Lynch tells you that the Priſoner introduced him to his Lordſhip; and this brings back to one's Memory, and makes it impoſſible not to recollect what the Priſoner had told Lynch at their laſt Meeting, in time next preceding this Journey, that there was a great Man at the Head of this Deſign, to whom he ſhould be preſented in due time.

Gentlemen, after this Lynch went a ſecond time to my Lord North and Gray's at Epping, and there he found the Priſoner at the Bar; indeed he does not own to you that any thing paſs'd between them relating to this Conſpiracy in the Preſence of my Lord North; but at that Place Lynch, in Converſation with Mr. Layer, expreſs'd an Uneaſineſs that the Affair was delay'd, but Layer bid him be eaſy, for it might be done ſooner than he expected.

Gentlemen, this is the Subſtance of the Evidence of what paſs'd in Eſſex. But the Witneſs tells you he had afterwards ſeveral Converſations with Mr. Layer, and when he expreſs'd his Concernment at the Delay of putting the Deſign in Execution, Layer told him he was ſo bent upon the Succeſs of it, that rather than it ſhould fail, he would be a ſecond Maſſinello: This was repreſented as a ridiculous Expreſſion by one of the Council for the Priſoner: But we have all heard what Confuſions were rais'd by that profligate Fellow in the Kingdom of Naples; and it is plain, that was the Example the Priſoner referr'd to by this Expreſſion.

Mr. Lynch was croſs-examin'd by the Counſel for the Priſoner, with as much liberty as they thought fit to uſe; but I did not obſerve that his Evidence was at all weaken'd, I think I may ſay, it was rather confirm'd by it, ſince it was upon their own Queſtions he gave his Reaſons how Layer came to deal ſo openly and unguardedly with him at firſt ſight. And thoſe Reaſons were ſtrong, for it is not improbable, if Murphey and Layer were engag'd in a Treaſonable Deſign, that one of them ſhould have confidence in a third Perſon on ſo ſtrong a Recommendation from the other.

The next Witneſs is Matthew Plunkett, and I apprehend, notwithſtanding every thing that hath been ſaid againſt his Teſtimony, that it is rather ſtrengthened, as to the Facts ſworn by him, than weakened by the Evidence for the Priſoner. He tells you, his firſt acquaintance with Mr. Layer was about five Years ſince, and had its Riſe upon this Occaſion: The Goods in the Houſe where the Priſoner then lodg'd, being taken in Execution, (whether his own Goods or not, is not at all material) one Major Barnwell, who has been examined for the Priſoner, was employed to procure Perſons to reſcue thoſe Goods; Barnwell applied to this Witneſs, who got two Grenadiers, that were let in at a private Door by Mr. Layer's Clerk. They did their Work, drove out the Officers, and reſcued the Goods; and for this Service Mr. Layer rewards them with a Crown and ſome Brandy. Since that, it appears he has been employed on other Meſſages between Major Barnwell and the Priſoner; and in what manner Plunkett is ſupported in theſe Circumſtances, and by Conſequence in the reſt of his Teſtimony, by Major Barnwell himſelf, who has been produced to diſcredit him, I ſhall obſerve when I come to conſider the Evidence for the Priſoner.

But the Witneſs having given you this Account of the Introduction to the Correſpondence, tells you, that in July laſt, James Plunkett came to him from the Priſoner, enquir'd privately what Acquaintance he had amongſt the Soldiers, and deſir'd him to meet the Priſoner at the Italian Coffee-houſe in Ruſſel-Court; but he did not meet him there, not having Money nor Inclination to go to a Coffee-houſe. He gives you an Account, that on the Sunday following, returning from St. Andrew's Church, as he was going over Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Mr. Layer met him. Plunkett had forgotten Layer's Face, but Layer remembred him, and aſk'd him if he knew him; to which Plunkett anſwering that he did not, the Priſoner told him his Name, which made him recollect. Layer then enquir'd if James Plunkett had not been with the Witneſs, to deſire him to come to the Italian Coffee-Houſe, a few Nights before; and having made himſelf known by theſe Circumſtances, took Plunkett into a private Place. There they had a long Converſation, in which Layer began with declaring how well aſſur'd he was of Plunkett's good Affections to the Pretender, and ſaid, he wanted ſome old Soldiers, ſuch as Plunkett was, that would head and diſcipline a Mob, for they had other Men enough. Plunkett ſaid he did know ſeveral old Soldiers, but he heſitated a little about the Pretender's being a Papiſt. The Priſoner to take off the Force of that Scruple, anſwered, We had as good have a Papiſt for our King as a Lutheran, I don't know what Difference there is between them (that is) between a Popiſh King and a Proteſtant one.—— An important Difference! Which I wiſh with all my Soul, were not too much forgotten, or perhaps, too little valued, by many amongſt us, who are not ſo frank in declaring as the Priſoner.

Mr. Layer proceeded to excite the Witneſs to join in his Treaſon, by a falſe Repreſentation of the State of the Nation, and particularly of the Injuſtice, as he call'd it, which was done to old Soldiers who had ſerved abroad; a Topic moſt likely to captivate an old Serjeant. After this Preface, he inform'd the Witneſs there was to be an Inſurrection, and Plunkett aſking who was the Promoter of the Deſign, told him it was my Lord North and Gray, whom he commended as a fine General; and then he went through a Sort of Liſt of ſeveral other Perſons of Conſideration. The Witneſs having declared that he knew ſeveral Soldiers, ſaid, he could procure five and twenty, whereupon Mr. Layer deſired he would make a Liſt of their Names, and the Places of their Lodgings, that they might be in Readineſs upon Call; and at parting, gave him half a Crown.

After they had thus talk'd of the Conſpiracy, there followed a very obſervable Paſſage; for the Priſoner declared that the Deſign had been put in Execution ſome time ago, if ſome Perſon had not diſcovered it to the French Ambaſſador, who writ of it to the Regent, and ſo it was notified to the King. However, even this Apprehenſion of a Diſcovery did not terrify them, for the Project was to go on. The late Duke of Ormond was to come in a ſingle Ship, and General Dillon in another, and they were to bring others with them; which you take notice falls in with the Evidence of Lynch, that Layer declared to him that they ſhould not want Encouragement or Aſſiſtance from abroad, when once they had made a Beginning here.

The next Intercourſe between the Priſoner and Plunkett was not perſonal, but by the means of one Jeffreys, a Nonjuring Clergyman.

Gentlemen, you obſerved that the Priſoner told Plunkett at parting, that he would ſend a Meſſenger to him with Money; and afterwards, at his own Houſe, on the Morning he went out of Town for Norfolk, that he had left a Guinea with a Nonjuring Clergyman to give him to do Service with;—— And, ſays Layer, whilſt I am abroad, you may be ſure I ſhall not be idle. Accordingly Mr. Jeffreys came within a few Days after, and appears to be that Clergyman, for he ſaid he came from Mr. Layer. He tells you, they diſcourſed on the old Subject, and Jeffreys deſired he would get Men in readineſs, and ſaid he had ſeveral other Places to go to on the ſame Errand. Jeffreys gave the Witneſs no Money at that time, but came a ſecond time, and gave him only half a Guinea, which he ſaid Layer had ſent him for his Encouragement. Beſides this, he tells you Layer gave him a Crown at the Caſtle-Tavern in Drury-Lane, expreſsly to encourage him to liſt Men for the Pretender. Upon the Priſoner's Return to Town, a Letter was ſent by Jeffreys to the Witneſs, to deſire him to go to the Priſoner's Houſe; and when he came there, the Priſoner gave him a Guinea with his own Hand. There were ſeveral other Converſations, ſeveral things ſaid to keep Plunkett firm to the Deſign, and many groundleſs and malicious Slanders caſt by the Priſoner upon his Majeſty's Government; and in all thoſe Converſations Plunkett tells you, the Priſoner always ſtil'd the Pretender King. 'Twould be tedious particularly to repeat all theſe things to you; but there is one thing I can't help obſerving before I go off from this Part of our Evidence, I mean, that Plunkett told you more than once, that he was to procure five and twenty old Soldiers for the Service. Now that happens to be exactly the Number, which is aſſign'd to each of the eight Serjeants in the Priſoner's own Scheme, which was produc'd to you, and is a ſtrong Circumſtance in ſupport of this Witneſs's Teſtimony.

Gentlemen, I have gone through the Evidence of theſe Witneſſes, and I beg leave to ſay they are, within the Meaning and Intention of the Law, two Witneſſes to prove the High-Treaſon charg'd upon the Priſoner; and it happens in this Caſe, that they make out all the particular Overt-Acts alledg'd in the Indictment. Both Lynch and Plunkett prove repeated Conſultations to levy War, to bring in the Pretender, and the actual liking of Men; and Lynch alone proves the publiſhing the treaſonable Declaration, and that Part of the Deſign, which no Body can hear without the utmoſt Indignation, the ſeizing his Majeſty's Perſon. From henceforth I apprehend I may take it, that the Charge is proved; though in Truth we have gone a great deal farther in order to put the Teſtimony of theſe Witneſſes beyond all doubt, to deliver them from all poſſible Objections, and to demonſtrate to you the Nature and Extenſiveneſs of this black Conſpiracy.

The next Head of Evidence, is that of the Papers; and notwithſtanding the little Cavils which have been urged againſt them, thoſe Papers are fully proved to be the Priſoner's, and by him deliver'd to Mrs. Maſon. It ſtands thus; Mrs. Maſon ſwears, That the Priſoner deliver'd theſe Papers to her in two Pacquets, as things of great Conſequence, ſeal'd up with his own Seal, which Seal is now remaining, and appears on the Covers. That ſhe lock'd them up ſafe in her Trunk till they were ſeiz'd by the Meſſengers, and out of that Trunk the Meſſengers took them. That ſhe ſet her Mark upon each particular Paper, which appears to be the ſame Mark which by way of Experiment they would have her to make in Court; and ſhe ſwears, that theſe are the very ſame Papers which the Priſoner deliver'd to her with his own Hands. The two Meſſengers give you an Account, That they ſeized theſe Papers at Mrs. Maſon's Lodgings, on the twenty ninth Day of September laſt; that they took the two Pacquets out of the Trunk, the ſame Seal being then upon the Covers, and that Mrs. Maſon was by, and mark'd them in their Preſence; that they likewiſe put their Marks upon, and never deliver'd them out of their Cuſtody till they had ſo done. Indeed, Turner ſays he left them in the Hands of his Fellow-Meſſenger, Spear, during the little time he went for Mr. Stanyan, but Spear ſwears they received no Manner of Alteration during that Space, and, upon the whole, they ſwear them to be the ſame Papers which they took out of the Trunk.

Upon this Evidence, we apprehend we were intitled to have read the Papers, without giving any farther Account of them.

I did mention to your Lordſhip the Caſe of my Lord Preſton, which was not ſo ſtrong; for he lying together with Aſhton in the Hold of the Ship, upon the Ballaſt, a Bundle of Papers lay between them; Aſhton took them up and put them in his Boſom, and there they were ſeiz'd; but being found together with my Lord Preſton, thoſe Papers, though the very Overt-Acts of the Treaſon laid in the Indictment, were read againſt him upon that Proof only. Indeed, after they had been read, the King's Counſel, in order to give a farther Strength to one or two particular Papers, entered into a Proof of their being my Lord Preſton's own Hand-Writing.

The firſt Paper we call'd for was the Scheme, a regular Plan of this Conſpiracy; and, Gentlemen, in order to prevent any Pretence of Hardſhip, before we read it, we call'd a Witneſs to prove this Scheme to be the Priſoner's Hand-Writing: It was Mr. Doyley, who ſwears he verily believes it to be his Hand. He gives you the Reaſons of his Belief: That the Priſoner liv'd with him as a Clerk two or three Years, not whilſt he was a Boy, but after he had ſerv'd ſome Time with another Maſter, had been us'd to Buſineſs, and gain'd a ſettl'd Hand; and during that Time he frequently ſaw him write. To ſupport this farther, he tells you, that he had tranſacted Buſineſs for Mr. Layer, as his Agent, until about four or five Years ago, and had received ſeveral Letters from him, which he was ſure were his, becauſe he (Mr. Doyley) had done the Buſineſs requir'd to be done by thoſe Letters, and Mr. Layer had paid him for it; that he had compar'd his Paper call'd The Scheme, with thoſe Letters; that the Character of the Letters agreed with what the Priſoner wrote when he was Clerk to him; and the Character of the Scheme with that of the Letters.

But, Gentlemen, this Scheme is an Evidence ſo conſiderable in it ſelf, and of that general Conſequence to this whole Cauſe, that we went farther yet, and, not out of any Neceſſity, but in order to give you abundant Satisfaction, we proved it to be written by the Priſoner from his own Confeſſion. Mr. Stanyan told you, That the Priſoner upon his Examination before the Lords of the Committee of Council, where he was preſent, and took Notes, confeſs'd this Scheme to be of his Hand-Writing. The Counſel for the Priſoner objected, This Queſtion was not directly aſk'd him (Is this your Hand?) and conſequently he did not ſay, It is my Hand. 'Tis true, that does not appear; can there be no other Evidence of a Confeſſion, but ſuch direct Queſtions and Anſwers. Upon the Examination, the Priſoner was aſk'd whether he knew of any Arms lodg'd in Weſtminſter? He told the Lords he knew of no Arms being lodg'd. Thereupon this Paper was ſhew'd him, and he was aſk'd, How came you to write in this Scheme of your own Hand-Writing, that there were Arms lodg'd? To this he made Anſwer it was a Miſtake, I ſhould have writ Arms that ſhould be lodg'd. Can any thing be more plain than this? It was ſo evident that the Paper was written by him, that it was taken for granted, and call'd his Hand-Writing in the very Terms of the Queſtion; probably he had confeſs'd it before the Clerks were call'd in. If it had not been his Hand, would not the natural Anſwer have been, why do you aſk me about what is written in that Paper? I know nothing of it, it is not my Hand-Writing; but inſtead of that he admits it without the leaſt Difficulty, and takes upon him to tell the Lords what he intended to have written.

The Gentlemen on the other Side, endeavour'd to avoid the Force of this Evidence, by this ingenious Turn—— I ſhould have written Arms that ſhould be lodg'd (that is) If I had writ it, I ſhould have written Arms that ſhould be lodg'd. But I deſire to be inform'd, if he did not write it, how came he to know any thing about it? How could he take upon him to ſay it was a Miſtake? Whoſe Miſtake? He admits it to be his own. So that this Obſervation comes to nothing, and this Scheme, after all their Objections, ſtands confeſs'd, as well as prov'd, to be Mr. Layer's Hand-Writing.

Upon the Foundation of all this Proof, which I beg leave to obſerve does ſupport all the other Papers found in the two Pacquets, the Scheme was read, and when it was read, it required your ſtricteſt Attention; for in that Paper appears a regular Deſign, form'd for the total Deſtruction of this Government, to be executed in the City of London, the Capital of the Kingdom. This, if there was no more, ſhews a juſt Foundation for what was lately declared to us in a ſolemn Manner, That if this Conſpiracy had not been happily detected, we ſhould before now have ſeen that City involv'd in Blood and Confuſion, ſuch appears to be the plain Intent of it. The moſt profligate of the People were to have Arms put into their Hands, in order to ſubdue and pillage the better Sort.

In the firſt Place, the Tower was to be ſeiz'd, and a certain Officer expected to be upon the Guard that Day, who ſhould be their Friend, and let in the Party who were to make themſelves of that Garriſon. The Royal-Exchange, being in the Heart of the City, was to be the Head-Quarters of the General; and another Party was to plunder the Bank. So that to give us a Taſte of the Views of theſe Conſpirators, Spoil and Rapine were not, in the Execution of their Deſign, to have been accidental, proceeding from the Fury of Action, the common Excuſe for ſuch Outrages, but a premeditated avowed Part of the Meaſures concerted before-hand.

The Artillery was next to have been ſeiz'd, and a Stratagem is contrived to effect it: And

And to crown all, his Majeſty himſelf was to be made their Priſoner: Horrid Reſolution! Colour'd indeed with the Name of Securing his Royal Perſon from the Inſults of the Mob; but how thin a Pretence this is, I need not ſpend Time to explain to you, ſince the Writer of the Scheme himſelf has called it but a Pretence.

The Scheme goes on, and the Conſpirators being ſenſible how much our future Hopes, as well as our preſent Happineſs, depend on the Proteſtant Succeſſion in his Majeſty's Family, the next Step to be taken, is to get his Royal Highneſs the Prince into their Power——— A Prince at Richmond, deſcribed under a Cant Name, but the meaning of it is plain. When all this appears, how can the Counſel for the Priſoner object, that there is not ſufficient Foundation to accuſe their Client directly of compaſſing the Death of the King? Could this have ended in any thing elſe? Or can any one dream, that either of thoſe precious Lives, I have now mentioned, could have been preſerved in the Hands of ſuch Miſcreants?

Gentlemen, having obſerved thus much, in ſhort, upon the Nature of the Scheme, it will be proper to take notice to you, that as this Paper, thus fully proved, is of it ſelf a ſtrong Evidence, ſo it greatly corroborates and ſupports the Teſtimony of the two Witneſſes, as to every one of the Overt-Acts charged in the Indictment, and tallies with it throughout.

This is true, as to the general Deſign, but appears moſt remarkably in ſome of the particular Facts. The Project laid down in the Scheme for ſeizing the Tower is exactly the ſame with what Lynch told you the Priſoner communicated to him whilſt they were viewing my Lord Cadogan's Houſe: That the Officer who ſhould be upon Duty there that Day might be their Friend, and favour the Deſign. In like Manner, the Circumſtance of eight Serjeants being to have in Readineſs twenty five Men a-piece, falls in with what Plunkett the Serjeant ſwore, that he was to procure that Number of old Soldiers to engage in the Enterprize.

But there is one Obſervation ariſing from a Circumſtance of time, which is extremely ſtrong, in Confirmation of the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes, and ſhews manifeſtly, that the Account they give, muſt ariſe only from their Knowledge of the Truth of the Fact, and could not poſſibly be fram'd and modell'd to anſwer theſe Papers; it is this, that Mr. Layer, who was taken up on the Information of Lynch and Plunkett, was actually in the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger, and made his Eſcape on the 19th Day of September laſt; but theſe Papers, which thus fall in with and ſupport the Facts they ſwear, were not ſeiz'd, as the two Meſſengers acquaint you, till the 29th of that Month; which is near ten Days after.

Gentlemen, one would have thought there had been no Occaſion to go any farther———

My Lord, I deſire that the Priſoner may not talk to the Jury, whilſt I am obſerving upon the Evidence.

L. C. Juſt. Sir, you muſt not do it.

Priſoner. My Lord, I did not ſpeak to the Jury.

Mr. Hungerford offers to ſpeak.

L. C. Juſt. I tell you, Mr. Hungerford, it is not right; Mr. Layer hath made his Obſervations to the Jury, and made his Nods, and ſometimes I have ſeen his Lips move.

Priſoner. You can't tell what I ſaid.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I ſaw you turn about to the Jury, and ſaw your Lips move at the ſame time.

My Lord, I deſire he may ſtand up, and look towards the Court, which is his proper Poſture.

Gentlemen, I was ſaying, that after this Scheme had been produced, one would have thought the King's Counſel might ſafely have reſted it here. Can any Body doubt of this Treaſon, and of the Priſoner's Part in it, when he himſelf hath thought fit to record the Conſpiracy with his own Hand. However, we did not leave it here: But in order to give you entire Satisfaction how deeply this Gentleman was engaged, what a large Share he had taken upon him, and how dangerous and extenſive this Conſpiracy was, we read ſeveral other Papers. They conſiſt of Liſts of the Names of ſeveral Perſons, many of them Officers of the Guards, and of the Army; ſome of them general Liſts, others particular: For what Purpoſe theſe muſt have been made up or procured, by a Perſon engaged in ſuch a Deſign, is extremely plain.

My Lord, it hath been ſaid with great Juſtice, That this is not to be ſo underſtood, as to bring any Imputation on the Gentlemen named in theſe Liſts. I dare ſay, that by far the greater Number, if not all of them, are Perſons of the utmoſt Fidelity to his Majeſty, and Zeal for his Service. But Men engaged in ſuch Deſigns, who are plotting to overturn a Government, muſt weigh and calculate the Strength of that Government, as well as their own. They muſt know who is to be relied upon, on one Side as well as the other, and conſider who are fit to be applied to, and who not; therefore they muſt take an Account of Perſons, concerning whom they have no Hopes, as well as thoſe of whom they have Hopes. Thus it was in my Lord Preſton's Caſe; he had got Liſts of Ships, and of the King's Officers and Troops; The meaning of it was well underſtood upon his Trial; the Court underſtood it, and the Jury underſtood it, that he had procured them, in order to the better Information of himſelf and his Accomplices in the Conduct of that Plot.

Gentlemen, in the next Place, ſeveral Letters were read to you, which were alſo found amongſt the Papers depoſited by the Priſoner with Mrs. Maſon. You will remember on this Occaſion, what Mrs. Maſon ſwore, that the Priſoner hath ſome time gone by the Name of Fountaine, and gave Directions to her, that if any Letters came directed to Mr. Fountaine, ſhe ſhould take them in, and deliver them to him. She tells you, a Letter did come directed to Mr. Fountaine; that ſhe delivered it to the Priſoner, who opened it, read it, and kept it as a Letter for him; which was an expreſs owning of that Name, and ſeveral of the Letters now produced are directed by the Name of Fountaine.

There

There was found together with the Letters, a Cypher, that is, a Liſt of feigned Names for Perſons and Things, which has been in Part read; and in this Cypher the Cant Expreſſions made uſe of in the Letters are contained, and the Perſons and Things ſignified by them decypher'd in plain Words. Sir William Ellis (a Follower of the Pretender, with whom it appears the Priſoner had ſettled a Correſpondence) is there deſcribed by the Name of Euſtace, and the firſt Letter that was read, is ſubſcribed with that Name and directed to James Fountaine, Eſq; In that Letter Sir William Ellis tells him he is entirely of his Opinion as to the Method of carrying on the Manufactory, and the procuring of good Workmen is the firſt Step to be made. Manufactory wanted ſome Explanation, but it is fully cleared up by the Word——— Workmen, which follows. For look into the Cypher, and Workmen ſtands for Soldiers; ſo that the Manufactory muſt be ſuch as it was fit for Soldiers to work in. He goes on and adviſes him particularly to get ſome of the ableſt of Mrs. Barbara Smith's. Barbara in the Cypher means the Army; ſo the Advice amounts to this, That in order to raiſe a Rebellion, he ſhould ſeduce ſome of the ableſt Soldiers of the King's Army. A Counſel, which is now made very plain the Priſoner has endeavour'd punctually to follow. To encourage him in this, he tells him, that it will be very agreeable to all concerned——— particularly to Mr. Atkins. Now according to the Priſoner's own Explanation in this Cypher, Atkins is one of the feigned Names for the Pretender.

The next Letter is dated the 11th of July laſt, ſubſcribed N. C. and acknowledges the Receipt of a Letter dated the 8th of May, with another Letter incloſed, which the Writer ſays was preſently deliver'd to Mr. St. John, who took it extreme kindly: Look into the Cypher, and it appears, that Mr. St. John is one of the fictitious Names for the Pretender; ſo that this Letter ſhews, that the Perſon to whom it was written, correſponded immediately with the Pretender himſelf. But it ſeems Mr. St. John did not well underſtand what related to Mr. Burford, which the Letter-Writer hopes may be ſoon cleared by an Anſwer. What this was which wanted Explanation, is in the Dark; but ſo much we know, that in the Priſoner's Cypher, Burford ſtands for the Earl of Orrery.

There is another Letter dated the 27th of May, in which the Writer tells Mr. Layer, that their Friend had his Letter of the 22d of March, and took very kindly the Care he had taken of his little Concerns. Who is meant by that Friend, whoſe Concerns were the Priſoner's Care, does not certainly appear; but it is very natural to think, it is the ſame Perſon before called Atkins and St. John. However, it ſeems their Friend was again at a Loſs about certain Names ——Burford, ——Steel, ——Digby, ———the little Soldier, and Simons, which were not in his Rental.

The Word Rental in Mr. Layer's Cypher, is the Cant Term for a Cypher; and in that likewiſe are to be found the other Words, which his Friend did not then underſtand; particularly Simons, which is put there for the Lord North and Gray. But if that did not appear by the Cypher, yet the Deſcription which follows, would be enough to convice every Man in his private Judgment who was meant by it—— He is of the North, a Grey haired ancient Man, Cant Expreſſions plainly, which take in both the Titles of that Noble Lord. The Letter-writer adds, that their Friend (the ſame whoſe Concerns were taken care of) very well remembers this Perſon, and hath a very particular Eſteem and Value for him, and that he is (in their Phraſe) a very good Tenant, and a very honeſt Man.

Gentlemen, Some other Papers were read to you of a more extraordinary Nature than even theſe Letters; I mean the Notes ſigned James R. with the Pretender's own Hand. Theſe are not only one Evidence of the Plot, but a Part of the means by which it was to be effected; for they appear to be Receipts framed with Blanks, to be filled up with Sums of Money as Occaſion offered, with a Promiſe of Repayment with Intereſt. Theſe were ſome of the Ways and Means for raiſing Supplies out of the Pockets of ſuch People, as ſhould be found weak and ſilly, as well as wicked enough, to advance Money on ſuch a Shadow of a Security, for ſo flagitious a Purpoſe. But they aſk us who proves the Subſcription to be the Pretender's Hand? I Anſwer, It is certain that is not material; but if it were, we have it ſufficiently from the Priſoner himſelf. The Account he hath thought fit to give of them, you have heard from Mr. Delafaye; that he had written to his Correſpondent Sir William Ellis, that if Sir William could ſend him over ſome Blank Receipts under the King's own Hand (ſo he called the Pretender) he believed they might be made uſe of for the carrying on his Cauſe: That his Intention was to have tried his Friends, and to have raiſed Money on theſe Receipts. This ſhews the Priſoner received them as being ſigned with the Pretender's own Hand; and ſhews likewiſe the Uſe intended to be made of them; and it appears he had the Confidence to juſtify himſelf in this Practice, by the like Method having been taken by King Charles the Second, juſt before his Reſtoration.

My Lord, this is the Subſtance of our Proof as to the Papers and the Obſervations which have occurred to me upon them; and I will preſume to ſay, with great Submiſſion to your Lordſhip's better Judgment and Obſervation, that upon this Evidence, taken together with the Teſtimony of the two Witneſſes, we might ſafely have truſted our Cauſe to your Lordſhip's Direction, and the Conſciences of the Jury. But we went farther ſtill, not becauſe we wanted it to convict the Priſoner, for we had already done ſufficient for that Purpoſe, but in order to give abundant Satisfaction, not only to the Gentlemen of the Jury, but to the whole World, of the Reality of this Conſpiracy in general, as well as of this Man's Part in it; that they may ſee and be convinced of the juſt Grounds there were for this Proſecution, and for the Treatment the Priſoner has met with. For this Reaſon it was, we called Mr. Stanyan, and Mr. Delafaye to give an Account of his Confeſſion, upon his Examination before the Lords of the Committee of Council; and I apprehend, we were properly and agreeably to the Rules of Law, let into that Evidence. We have had the Judgment of the Court upon that Point, therefore I won't won't trouble your Lordſhip with any Authorities for it, but rely upon that as the beſt Authority.

Gentlemen, the Relation Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan gave, was, that the Priſoner declared to the Lords of the Council, that he had been at Rome in the Year 1721, and ſtay'd there ſome Time, and had ſeveral Conferences with the Pretender in Perſon: That in one of thoſe Conferences, he aſked for ſome Token or Credential, in order to give him a Credit with the Party when he returned to England; that it was not at firſt granted, but afterwards he put his Requeſt into this Shape, that the Pretender's Wife (the Queen he called her) would be pleaſed to ſtand Godmother to the Priſoner's Child. Some time was taken to conſider of this Propoſition, and then Word was brought by Colonel Hay to the Priſoner, that ſhe would ſtand Godmother to the Child; and it was agreed, that the late Dutcheſs of Ormond ſhould repreſent her. Afterwards the Pretender conſented to be the Godfather, but Layer was to procure ſome Perſon to be his Proxy.

What was then agreed upon, was follow'd by the Fact. When the Priſoner return'd Home, and the Child was to be Chriſten'd, he applied to my Lord Orrery to repreſent the Pretender, and to the late Dutcheſs of Ormond, to repreſent the Princeſs Sobieſki. The latter complied, but my Lord Orrery declined the Service; and thereupon the Priſoner made Application to my Lord North and Gray, who was pleaſed to accept it. The Child was chriſten'd at Chelſea, and my Lord North and Gray ſtood as Proxy for the Pretender, and the late Dutcheſs of Ormond for the Princeſs Sobieſki; and the Priſoner ſaid, they both were privy that they repreſented thoſe Perſons.

The Priſoner's Confeſſion likewiſe verifies every material Circumſtance of Lynch's Evidence, as to what paſſed in the County of Eſſex. That he was at the Green Man with one Lynch, and there ſhew'd him the Heads of a Declaration which he had drawn: That they went from thence to my Lord North and Gray's, and there the Priſoner preſented the Witneſs to his Lordſhip as a very honeſt Man, and a Perſon fit to be employed in ſeizing my Lord Cadogan; and afterwards he ſaid, as a Perſon fit to be employ'd in an Inſurrection. That the Priſoner and Lynch lay at my Lord's Houſe that Night, dined with him at his own Table the next Day; and that the Healths of the Pretender, his Wife, and Child, were drank by them after Dinner, and the ſame Healths were drank, and (if I underſtood it right) begun by that noble Lord himſelf.

There was a farther Circumſtance ſworn by Mr. Stanyan, in which he is confirmed by Colonel Huſke, that at the Time Mr. Layer was apprehended a conſiderable Quantity of Arms, and about fifty Cartridges, made up with Ball, and fitted for the Uſe of Soldiers, were found in his Houſe: And the Priſoner being aſk'd, upon his Examination, what he did with them? He ſaid, they were for his Uſe, in caſe there ſhould happen any Diſturbance in the Nation.

The Priſoner enter'd into an Examination of the Gunſmith, how he came by theſe Arms; but that is not at all material: In his Houſe they were found, and he has confeſſed they were intended for his Uſe in Caſe of a Diſturbance in the Nation. What Diſturbance was there likely to happen, but from himſelf and his Accomplices?

Gentlemen, The Priſoner's Eſcape out of the Meſſenger's Cuſtody, is another ſtrong Circumſtance. In order to fly from Juſtice, he ventured to get out of a Window two Stories high, and had the Fortune to meet with a Sculler, which carried him croſs the Water into Southwark. When the Witneſs firſt endeavour'd to ſtop him, it appears he was in the utmoſt Concern; begg'd of him for God's Sake to let him go, pretending it was an Arreſt; and then he pull'd out of his Pocket a great many Guineas, and bid the Witneſs take what he pleaſed, ſo he would but let him go: But the Meſſenger purſued him pretty cloſe, and he was retaken.

Gentlemen, this is a very material piece of Evidence to ſhew the Guilt of the Priſoner. The Law of England ſuppoſeth Guilt from Flight, and though it was ſaid, that any Man in Mr. Layer's Condition would have done the ſame thing, if he could; that can be true only in this Senſe, that any Man in his Condition, as to the Conſciouſneſs of his own Guilt, would have done it; but an innocent Perſon would never have brought that Imputation upon himſelf, by endeavouring to eſcape.

This is the Subſtance of the whole Evidence which has been given for the King againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, as well as I can recollect it; and, Gentlemen, I perſuade my ſelf, when you have conſider'd it ſeriouſly, you will be ſatisfied that it makes good every Part of the Indictment. But be that never ſo ſtrong, the Priſoner ought to be heard againſt it, and have a full Opportunity of making his Defence: For if he hath a good Defence, either in point of Law or Fact, to take off the Force of this Evidence, God forbid that he ſhould ſuffer by it.

The Priſoner enter'd upon his Defence, and his Counſel were pleaſed to ſet out with making ſome Obſervations upon the Caſe, as we had left it.

My Lord, they firſt made an Objection in Point of Law, that the Treaſon, for which the Priſoner is indicted, is compaſſing the Death of the King, and one of the Overt-Acts laid is only a Conſultation to levy War, which they inſiſt is not an Overt-Act of that Species of Treaſon, nor indeed any Treaſon at all, becauſe the Words of the Statute, 25 Ed. III. import a War actually levy'd; and for the Senſe of thoſe Words, which no body ever doubted of, ſome ancient French Writers were quoted.

My Lord, I apprehend this Objection, if it be one, is rather to the Indictment than to the Evidence, of which they know they may properly take Advantage in Arreſt of Judgment. But with great Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, there is no Weight in it either way. One can't help being a little ſurprized to hear it mention'd, after that Point has been eſtabliſh'd by ſo many Reſolutions, which at the ſame time they tell us they are aware of; and in the very laſt Caſe of High-Treaſon, which was in this Court, I mean that of Ker, Dorrell, and Gordon, it was ſolemnly determn'd by the unanimous Opinion of all the Judges, that a Conſultation to levy War, in order to deſtroy or depoſe the King, is an Overt-

Act of High-Treaſon, in compaſſing his Death. This was the receiv'd Doctrine before the Revolution, and it has been adhered to ever ſince; and tho' the Act of Reverſal of my Lord Ruſſel's Attainder has been mention'd, yet if that were looked into, I dare ſay, no Declaration will be found in it, contrary to this Determination. But they go farther and object, that here is no Overt-Act at all proved to be done in the County of Eſſex; and if ſo, then whatſoever Proof there may be of Facts done in Middleſex, that will go for nothing, and the Priſoner muſt be acquitted upon this Indictment. And, my Lord, ſo far I agree with them, that unleſs we have proved one Overt-Act at leaſt to be done in Eſſex, we cannot maintain this Indictment.

In ſupport of this Objection they would have it, that the only Tranſaction in Eſſex, is what paſſed at the Green Man, and the Whole of that is reduced ſingly to the Publiſhing the Declaration; and that, ſay they, is not legally proved, and if well proved, yet it is no Overt-Act of Treaſon. As to the Proof, they object that the Paper itſelf is not produced, and Parole Evidence of the Contents of a Writing is not to be admitted.

But, my Lord, I have given this an Anſwer already, by obſerving that the Priſoner took back the Paper, and kept it; ſo that the Writing itſelf being proved to be in the Cuſtody of the Party, we were entitled within the ordinary Rule, to give Parole Evidence of the Contents. But, my Lord, this Declaration was a Part of the treaſonable Conſultation then had; and ſure I am, it would be the fineſt Invention to ſecure certain Impunity to Plotters that ever was thought of, if, inſtead of diſcourſing, the Conſultation ſhall be carry'd on by Papers handed from one to another, and no body can be convicted, becauſe the Paper is not to be found. As to that Part of their Objection, that it is no Overt-Act of Treaſon, one of the Gentlemen thought fit to treat it in a ludicrous Manner. 'Twas only reading a Piece of Paper, ſuppoſe they had ſung a Ballad. That Gentleman will pardon me, if I ſay, thoſe Expreſſions did not become this Occaſion. An Accuſation of High-Treaſon, which highly concerns the King and his Government, is an Affair of a ſerious Nature; and if he does but reflect upon the Contents of that Declaration, which the Witneſs related, he cannot think it a Matter to be ſported with.

Mr. Ketelbey was pleaſed to ſay, that this could be no Overt-Act of Treaſon, becauſe it was but publiſhing a Libel. But ſurely, that is very extraordinary. Publiſhing of a Paper may amount to one Crime or another, according to the Subject-Matter of that Paper; and can it be a Queſtion at this Time of Day, whether the publiſhing a Declaration or a Book containing Arguments, or offering Rewards directly to ſtir up the King's Subjects to riſe in Rebellion againſt him, be High-Treaſon? The treaſonable Intent in this Caſe cannot be doubted, and 'tis as certain that the Publication is an Act; what is there then wanting to make it Treaſon? But, my Lord, this has alſo been adjudged, and therefore I won't argue it.

My Lord, I have ſaid thus much about the Declaration for the ſake of following the Gentlemen, who are Counſel for the Priſoner, in their Arguments; but after all, their Foundation, which is a Suppoſition that there are no other Overt-Acts proved in Eſſex, beſides this of the Declaration, entirely fails them; for your Lordſhip will inform the Jury, that Lynch depoſed that whilſt they ſtaid at the Green Man they did more than talk a little Politicks, they conſulted about the Project of an Inſurrection, and the Priſoner there actually propoſed to him (beſides what was contained in the Paper) the Deſign of ſeizing the King's Perſon, which are two other Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment.

Upon this, another Objection was raiſed by Mr. Ketelbey, which, if it holds, will go to the Whole; and that is, that we have but one Witneſs, Lynch alone, to the Facts in Eſſex; and this Indictment muſt fail, unleſs there are two Witneſſes to ſome or other of the Overt-Acts in the County where the Indictment is laid.

But, my Lord, that is not now to be diſputed. The Law is clearly ſettled, that on an Indictment for High-Treaſon, in compaſſing the King's Death, if ſeveral Overt-Acts are laid, and ſome of thoſe Overt-Acts are proved by one Witneſs to be done in the County where the Party is indicted, and others of them are proved by another Witneſs to have been committed in a different County, that Evidence is ſufficient to maintain the Indictment; they are two Witneſſes of the ſame Species of Treaſon within the Meaning of the Law. So it was expreſly reſolved by all the Judges of the King's-Bench, in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane, which is reported in Kelyng 15, and that has been ſince followed by a Current of Authorities; the Caſe of the five Jeſuites, the Opinion of the Judges delivered to the Lords, upon the Trial of my Lord Stafford, 32 Car. II. and other Caſes.

My Lord, as this is eſtabliſh'd by Authorities, ſo the Reaſon and Neceſſity of the Thing is ſtrong, becauſe otherwiſe treaſonable Conſultations might eaſily be carry'd on in ſuch a manner, that no body could be convicted of them. It would be but to lay the Scene upon the Confines of ſeveral Counties, and take Care not to conſult with any two Perſons in the ſame County; then there could not be two Witneſſes, and all would be ſafe.

I have done with their Objections in Point of Law, and ſhall now endeavour to give ſome Anſwer to their Obſervations upon the Fact. And, Gentlemen, I think the Whole of thoſe Obſervations may be reduced to one Head, which is, that it is highly improbable, that what the Witneſſes have ſworn ſhould be true. But upon that, before I give particular Anſwers to what they have offered, I beg leave to ſay in general, that though in a doubtful Caſe, where there is any Balancing in the Proof, the Improbability of the Thing is a Conſideration of great Weight, yet where there is plain and poſitive Evidence on one Side, not weaken'd by any Counter-Evidence on the other Side, the Objection of Improbability can be of little Force.

But to conſider this Improbability. They ſay 'tis very ſtrange, that Mr. Layer ſhould be engaged gaged in ſo dangerous an Undertaking, with ſuch Perſons as have ſworn themſelves to be his Accomplices. To this, I ſay, 'tis always ſtrange, that Men ſhould venture to truſt one another with ſuch dangerous Secrets; but certain it is, they often do; and as to the Witneſſes in this Caſe, they are proved by the Priſoner's own Evidence, to be Perſons with whom he thought fit to hold a Correſpondence. How this great Confidence was at laſt created between them, has been accounted for by the Witneſſes themſelves, in a very natural and probable Way, of which I have already taken Notice.

Mr. Ketelbey inſiſted much upon the Improbability of Plunkett's Evidence, in thoſe Parts of it which concern James Plunkett and Jeffreys the Nonjuring-Parſon. That it is not credible, that thoſe two Men, whom Plunkett admits to be abſolute Strangers to him, ſhould at firſt Sight open themſelves with ſo great Freedom, to a Fellow of his Degree on a ſubject of Treaſon. But that will receive this Anſwer. James Plunkett and Jeffreys were, as appears clearly from the Circumſtances, in the Confidence of Layer. Layer had a Confidence in Matthew Plunkett the Witneſs, on the Recommendation of Major Barnwell, and by means of Layer, both James Plunkett and Jeffreys might be induced to truſt him. And thus the Chain of the Correſpondence is made compleat.

Another Objection was made to Plunkett, that he had been guilty of a flat Contradiction in his Evidence. That he firſt ſwore, Jeffreys told him his Name upon his firſt Coming to him, and afterwards that he did not know his Name till he received the Letter from him about the Priſoner's being come to Town. But that Obſervation was grounded upon a Miſtake; for what Plunkett ſaid, was, that Jeffreys did tell him his Surname at firſt, but that he did not know his Chriſtian Name till he receiv'd the Letter, which is very conſiſtent.

But the Counſel for the Priſoner were well aware, that their Obſervations upon the Witneſſes could be of little Effect, if the Paper called the Scheme found Credit; and therefore in the next Place they attack'd that as being incredible; they repreſent it as ridiculous and fooliſh——— The Scheme of a Madman, which could never have taken Place.

Gentlemen, as to this Obſervation, the Scheme is indeed ſuch an one, as I hope in God could never take Place any where, but in the Heads of thoſe that framed it. But with great Submiſſion, that is no Objection to the Credibility of it, provided it be proved. For the Conſideration is not, how it now appears to you or to me, who look upon it in a different Light, and on contrary Principles from theirs; but the proper Conſideration is, what the Conſpirators themſelves, with regard to the Views and Principles they went upon, might think of it. And, Gentlemen, in that Light examine it, go through the ſeveral Articles of it, compare them together, and you will find them conſiſtent and coincident; all the Parts anſwering to one another. Every Quarter of the Town is provided for Diſpoſitions made of certain Numbers of Men, and Care taken to preſerve the Communication between them by Watch-Words agreed upon for that Purpoſe. Theſe Things make it plain, that it was fully conſidered by thoſe who drew it, and framed not at random, but upon Computation of a Force, of which they thought themſelves aſſured. And what, tho' it ſhould be admitted to be extravagant, and not likely to ſucceed? If that ſhould be given way to, as a certain Objection againſt a Plot's finding Credit after it is detected, I am afraid it would be a ſure Method to make ſuch Plots ſucceed, or at leaſt to ſecure the Authors of them from Puniſhment. Do but intermix ſome abſurd extravagant Parts in the Plan of the Conſpiracy, and then according to this Reaſoning it is below Notice, and muſt be ſuffered to go on, or if a Stop be put to its Progreſs, yet it is incredible, and no body muſt be believed to be guilty of it.

But, Gentlemen, whatever Difficulties may be raiſed againſt particular Parts of the written Scheme, yet upon the Grounds and Suppoſitions which the Priſoner and his Accomplices proceeded on, their general Deſign might appear very feaſible to themſelves. For it is plain they had a Dependence, however ill-founded, upon Diſcontents raiſed in the Minds of the People, and on corrupting great Numbers of the Army, which would have diminiſhed the Strength of the Government, and added to their own; and after they had made a Beginning here, it is proved that they expected Aſſiſtance from Abroad.

The next Thing to be conſidered, is the Teſtimony of the Priſoner's Witneſſes: And, Gentlemen, you obſerve that they have ſcarce called any Witneſs to contradict the Facts contained in our Evidence, for the People of the Houſe at the Green Man ſay nothing to the Purpoſe; but all their Evidence is applied to the Character and Credit of the Witneſſes produced for the King.

As to that, I muſt obſerve to you, that it is not to be expected that Conſpiracies and traiterous Machinations of this Kind ſhould be proved by Perſons of the beſt Characters. 'Tis neceſſary from the Nature of the Thing, that they ſhould be proved by thoſe who have been privy to them, and ſuch Perſons cannot poſſibly be of Characters abſolutely unblemiſhed. Therefore, to ſay that ſuch Witneſſes are not to be believed, is in effect to ſay that no Evidence of a Plot is ever to be believed, which ſurely is an Argument that proves too much.

The firſt Witneſs they called on this Head, was my Lord North and Gray. I am heartily ſorry to ſee his Lordſhip here in his preſent Condition upon this Occaſion; the rather, becauſe it obliges me to obſerve, that here are Circumſtances proved, which affect him; I will carry it no farther, but ſome Circumſtances are proved in this Cauſe which do affect him. But what is his Evidence? His Lordſhip was called to impeach the Character of Lynch; and however he may impeach his Character, I am ſure he ſupports his Credit as to the Facts ſworn by him. The Account his Lordſhip gave, was, that the Priſoner brought Lynch to his Houſe at Epping, introduced Lynch to him, that he was never acquainted with him before; but upon Mr. Layer's Introduction, received him civilly; and that Lynch came thither a ſecond Time.

Now, theſe are the very Facts Lynch ſwore to, and conſequently ſo far my Lord ſupports him. But then, as to his Character, his Lordſhip is pleaſed to ſay, that the firſt Time Lynch was there, he gave him a Hiſtory of his Life; and in that gave ſo vile an Account of himſelf, that when he came a ſecond Time, his Lordſhip would not give him a Lodging in his Houſe. This, I think, was the whole of my Lord's Teſtimony; and I can't help remarking upon it, that his Lordſhip gives no Account at all of any Buſineſs, which either the Priſoner or Lynch had with him, nor of any particular Occaſion upon which the former introduced the latter to him. That was a Matter within his Lordſhip's own Knowledge.

There is another Thing which is a little ſurprizing; and that is, that Mr. Lynch being an abſolute Stranger, as is confeſſed, to this noble Lord, having the Honour to be introduced by a Friend to a Perſon of his great Quality, ſhould have ſo little Regard to his Friend, or to the Opinion that Noble Lord was to conceive of him, as at the firſt Interview to take ſo odd a Way of being recommended, and give a moſt vile, infamous Character of himſelf. This is ſomewhat out of the ordinary Courſe; but you are told, that ſo it was.

As to the other Witneſſes to Lynch's Credit, notwithſtanding their Number, I apprehend their Evidence, when duly conſidered, will have little Weight. They were moſt of them going to enter into particular Facts; but the Court agreeably to the conſtant Courſe of Evidence over-ruled them in it; and that you, Gentlemen of the Jury, may be ſatisfied no Hardſhip was done by this to the Priſoner, I will mention the Reaſon of it. The Reaſon why particular Facts are not to be given in Evidence to impeach the Character of a Witneſs, is, that if it were permitted, it would be impoſſible for that Witneſs, having no Notice of what will be ſworn againſt him, to come prepared to give an Anſwer to it; and thus the Characters of Witneſſes might be vilified, without having any Opportunity of being vindicated.

As to the Witneſſes themſelves, ſome of them ſay, they know no Ill of Lynch; many of them have known him but a little while; ſome of them give an Account of Declarations made ſince this Proſecution began, and how fairly they were drawn from him don't appear; and for ſome others of them, I ſubmit it to the View and Conſideration of the Jury, from their Habit, and the Appearance they made, whether they ought not themſelves to have bro ght Witneſſes to ſupport their own Credit.

One appears plainly to be miſtaken, and that is, Darcy; he was aſk'd how long he had known Lynch? and, I think, he ſaid he knew him in London laſt Winter; now it appears that Lynch came into England but in April laſt.

Gentlemen, in the next place they called Witneſſes to Plunkett's Credit, and there the ſame thing befell them as in the Caſe of Lynch; for Major Barnwell their firſt Witneſs on that Head, though he is willing enough to give him an ill Character, yet he confirms ſeveral of the Facts which the other ſwore, and gives exactly the ſame Account of the Reſcuing the Goods, and the Circumſtances of Plunkett's becoming acquainted with Layer, which he gave.

Mrs. Child likewiſe ſupports Plunkett as to the Circumſtance of his carrying her Huſband to the Priſoner's Houſe, and the Priſoner's refuſing to ſee him.

As to Mrs. Maſon, they have taken a great deal of Pains to prove her a very ill Woman. What ſhe is, or what thoſe Perſons are, whom they have called to her Credit, we can't tell; but ſo much appears even from their own Witneſſes, that ſhe is one with whom Mr. Layer thought fit to converſe, and therefore 'tis not improbable that ſhe might be intruſted by him; and it is from ſuch only as he thought fit to converſe with and intruſt, that we can have any Diſcovery. The Priſoner has, indeed brought two or three Women, who talk very faſt, and ſeem very angry with her; and one of them tells the Jury in a Scolding Way, that ſhe don't care what ſhe ſays or does; another, that ſhe would take away any Man's Life for the Value of a Farthing; and ſuch Kind of vehement Expreſſions. It is ſufficient to ſay to this, that People who talk thus looſely and paſſionately upon their Oaths, rather bring a Suſpicion upon their own Credit, than upon the Credit of thoſe againſt whom they ſwear.

But, Gentlemen, if they had brought a much ſtronger Evidence againſt the Characters of the King's Witneſſes than they have done, what would it have availed them? Does this Caſe depend upon the Characters of theſe three Witneſſes? It cannot be pretended that it does. Let their Characters be what they will, their Credit in this Cauſe is undeniably ſupported; ſupported as to ſeveral material Facts, by the Evidence for the Priſoner, but moſt ſtrongly by the Papers; againſt which, I apprehend nothing has been ſaid to take off their Force. If thoſe Papers are not genuine, how ſhould the Notes ſigned with the Pretender's Hand, which the Priſoner received from Sir William Ellis, come to be amongſt them? How ſhould this Scheme, proved to be of Mr. Layer's own Hand-Writing, have been there? The Priſoner, I muſt own, did call one Witneſs, Bennet, who was his Clerk, and is now his Sollicitor, to ſwear he believed the Scheme not to be the Priſoner's Hand. But it happen'd with Bennet, as it did with ſeveral others of their Witneſſes, that though he is willing to carry his Belief as far as he can, that this is not his Maſter's Hand; yet he is forced to acknowledge another Matter, which ſtill verifies the Papers contained in theſe Pacquets to be his Maſter's Papers: For being aſk'd of whoſe Hand-Writing one of them was, he ſwears it was written by himſelf for the Priſoner, and by his Direction. This comes out of the Mouth of his own Witneſs, and confirms Mrs. Maſon's Teſtimony, that theſe Papers came from Mr. Layer.

But over and above all this, you have the Priſoner's own Confeſſion, proved by two Gentlemen whoſe Credit is beyond all Diſpute; and certainly the Priſoner muſt be allow'd to be a good Witneſs againſt himſelf.

However, we ſhall not leave the Credit of our Witneſſes ſingly upon theſe Obſervations, though I think we might ſafely do it; but ſhall endeavour to take off any ill Impreſſions their Evidence dence may have left upon you, and vindicate their Characters; and that, not by ſuch Witneſſes as ſome of thoſe produced for the Priſoner were, who, I obſerv'd before, might ſtand in need of Witneſſes to ſupport their own Credit, but by Perſons of undoubted Reputation, who will ſatisfy you that their General Character is ſuch, that they very well deſerve to be believed by you.

I have now done with repeating and obſerving upon the Evidence on both Sides; and I beg leave to inſiſt upon it, that we have fully made good what was open'd to you in the Beginning of this Cauſe, that in general there has been a horrid Conſpiracy carried on, in order to overthrow our happy Conſtitution, and to deprive us of all the Bleſſings we enjoy and promiſe ourſelves, under this Eſtabliſhment, in his Majeſty and his Proteſtant Royal Family. The Part the Priſoner hath acted in this fully appears to you, and it appears to be a very conſiderable one.

It has been ſaid, indeed, that he is but an inconſiderable Man, of no Rank or Fortune fit to ſuſtain ſuch an Undertaking. That Obſervation may be true; but ſince it's plain he did undertake it, that, join'd with the other Circumſtances proved in this Cauſe, ſerves only to demonſtrate, that he was ſet on work, and ſupported, by Perſons of greater Abilities for ſuch an Enterprize. And, Gentlemen, this is the moſt affecting Conſideration of all. —— But I would not, even in this Cauſe of your King and of your Country, ſay any thing to excite your Paſſions; I chooſe rather to appeal to your Judgments; and to thoſe I ſubmit the Strength and Conſequence of the Evidence you have heard.

My Lord, I beg Pardon for having taken up ſo much of your Time; I have but one Thing to add, and that is, humbly to beg of your Lordſhip, for the Sake of the King, for the Sake of Myſelf, and for the Sake of the Priſoner at the Bar, that if I, through Miſtake or Inadvertency, have omitted or miſrepeated any thing, or laid a greater Weight upon any Part of the Evidence, than it will properly bear, your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to take Notice of it, and ſet it right, that this whole Caſe may come before the Jury in its true and juſt Light.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. It is ſo late, that it will be inexcuſable in me to trouble your Lordſhip with any thing by way of Reply, eſpecially ſince Mr. Sollicitor General hath done it ſo fully. We ſhall only beg leave to call a few Witneſſes to the Credit of the King's Witneſſes.

Mr. Ketelbey. I ſhall not take up much of your Lordſhip's Time, eſpecially ſince your Lordſhip and the Court have been entertained ſo well and ſo long by Mr. Sollicitor General, at leaſt two Hours, as I have obſerved by my Watch; but 'twas impoſſible for me to think him tedious, though ſo late at Night, and eſpecially ſince his Concluſion is exactly agreeable to the Concluſion of a late celebrated Sollicitor General on a like Occaſion.

Mr. Att. Gen. We muſt beg leave to call ſome Witneſſes we have, who will ſupport the Credit of Mr. Lynch and Matthew Plunkett.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. How long have you known him?

Arnold. 'Tis fourteen Years ago.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. You have been acquainted with him ſince. What Account do you give of his Character? Do you think he would forſwear himſelf?

Arnold. No.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Do you take him to be a Man of Credit?

Arnold. I never had any Dealings with him.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Would you have truſted him with five hundred Pounds?

Mr. Ketelbey. Would you truſt him with five Shillings?

Arnold. Five Shillings is a ſmall Sum.

Col. Manning ſworn.

Col. Manning. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. How long have you known him?

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Do you think he would forſwear himſelf?

Col. Manning. No, I believe not.

Priſoner. Have you and I had any Diſcourſe about this very Plunkett? And did not you tell me he was a Scoundrel?

Col. Manning. No, I did not.

Mr. Hungerford. Did not you give him a bad Character to Mr. Layer?

Col. Manning. No, I did not.

Priſoner. Do you mean thus, that he behaved himſelf very well, as a Soldier? What is that as to his Character in general?

Col. Manning. I know no ill Character of him while he was with me.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you never hear any thing in relation to Sir Daniel Carroll, that he made a wrong Demand upon him?

L. C. Juſt. If he made an unjuſt Demand, will he therefore be perjur'd?

Mr. Ketelbey. What have you heard about that Affair between Mr. Plunkett and Sir Daniel Carroll?

Col. Manning. I have heard Mr. Layer ſay—

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you never hear any Body elſe ſpeak of him? I aſk you about making this Demand upon Sir Daniel Carroll, what you know of it?

L. C. Juſt. I never heard any thing like it.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we apprehend we may croſs examine, as to Particulars, a Perſon whom the other Side produces as a Witneſs to Character.

Priſoner. Did not you afterwards, in Diſcourſe with Mr. White, mention it again with relation to this of Sir Daniel Carroll?

Col. Manning. I deny it.

Priſoner. Did you deſire me not to examine you?

Col. Manning. No, I told you I had nothing to ſay in relation to Plunkett's Character.

Mr. Hungerford. Let him alone, I would not aſk him any more Queſtions.

Col. Manning. Why, let him alone?

Mr. Hungerford. I would not have him examine you any further.

Col. Manning. You are very civil.

Mr. Hungerford. So I am, to give you no further Trouble.

Major Hamel ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Do you know Matthew Plunkett?

Maj. Hamel. I have known him theſe ſeventeen Years.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What Character hath he?

Maj. Hamel. He was then a Drummer in the Regiment, and always did his Duty well; I never heard him complained of; he always had a good Character; he went from Ireland to Spain.

Mr. Hungerford. You ſpeak to his military Conduct.

Maj. Hamel. I know of no other.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. You ſay he always had a good Character.

Maj. Hamel. Yes, he always had.

Captain Crosby ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Do you know Serjeant Plunkett?

Cap. Crosby. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. How long have you known him?

Cap. Crosby. Three Years.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What Character had he for that Time?

Cap. Crosby. Whilſt I knew him, he bore a good Character.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Did you hear any Ill of him?

Cap. Crosby. Not during the Time that I knew him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Where was the Regiment at that Time?

Cap. Crosby. It was in Town, about half a Year ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. Were you not of the ſame Regiment?

Cap. Crosby. We were.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. We won't give your Lordſhip any further Trouble.

Mr. Ketelbey. And we apprehend we have no Occaſion to give your Lordſhip any further Trouble, by way of Reply.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to my Lord North and Gray, we can prove he attempted to get away, and was endeavouring to go to France, and was taken in the Iſle of Wight; and that when the Priſoner was ſeized, he ſent a Meſſenger to give my Lord North notice of it. This laſt was confeſſed on his Examination, and we can prove it.

Mr. Ketelbey. I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether his Examination can be admitted as Teſtimony, ſo as to affect a third Perſon.

L. C. Juſt. It is not worth diſputing.

Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment againſt Mr. Layer, the Priſoner at the Bar, for High-Treaſon. The Treaſon with which he ſtands charged, is the compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King: The Overt-Acts that are laid in this Indictment, as Evidence of this Treaſon, are ſeveral; firſt of all, that he did meet and conſult, adviſe and agree, to levy War againſt the King; the ſecond is, that he did publiſh a ſeditious and traiterous Writing, exciting and encouraging the People to an Inſurrection, and offering Rewards for that Purpoſe; the third is, that he did engage in a Deſign to ſet the Pretender on the Throne; the fourth, that he liſted Soldiers againſt the King; and the laſt, that he did conſult and agree, to take, ſeize and impriſon the King: Theſe are the ſeveral Overt-Acts that are laid in the Indictment of the Treaſon, that is, the compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, before I go on to lay before you, and obſerve on the Evidence, what the Law is; and I muſt tell you, that the Law is undoubtedly ſo, if a Man is charged with Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, there muſt be an Overt-Act of that Treaſon proved in the County where he is indicted; and in the next Place, if there be ſuch Overt-Act in that County, he may be charged with any Overt-Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon in any other County whatſoever. This hath been frequently reſolved and agreed, and was hardly ever made a Queſtion. I obſerved in the Hands of one of the Counſel, and he took notice of it, that he had the Trial of Sir William Perkins; he could not but obſerve there laid down by my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, if Evidence be given of Treaſon in one County where the Indictment is laid, he may be charged with any Overt-Acts of the ſame Species of Treaſon in any other County whatſoever. The Law being ſo, I will, in the beſt manner I can, ſet out the Matters that have been given in Evidence, on this long Evidence, in the cleareſt Light that I can ſtate the Examination, the Objections that have been made, and the Obſervations that are proper to be made upon it.

To maintain this Indictment, the King's Counſel have produced ſeveral Witneſſes. The firſt Witneſs is Mr. Lynch; the ſecond Witneſs is Mr. Plunkett; all the other Evidence hath been offered to confirm the Evidence given by theſe two Witneſſes. As to Mr. Lynch, he tells you how he came to the Acquaintance of Mr. Layer; that he was an intimate Acquaintance of Dr. Murphey, and Dr. Murphey recommended him to Mr. Layer; being ſo recommended, he had ſeveral Meetings with Mr. Layer in Middleſex, at the Griffin-Tavern, and in Holborn, at the Caſtle-Tavern, and I think, at Southampton-Buildings.

He tells you, at theſe ſeveral Meetings it was declared, that there was to be a Riſing, and it was thought neceſſary, to make this Riſing the more effectual, that my Lord Cadogan, the Commander in chief of the King's Forces ſhould be ſeiz'd.

Mr. Layer ſaid to Mr. Lynch, he was looked upon as a Perſon proper for the Undertaking, and he declared that he was willing, and ſaid, if that was the Opinion of thoſe concerned in the Affair, he would undertake to do it: After this, they went to my Lord Cadogan's Houſe, to view the Houſe, and the ſeveral Avenues about the Houſe; and after they had taken this View, Lynch declares his Opinion, that it was feaſible, and he would undertake to do it.

After he had given you an Account of what happened at the ſeveral Meetings in Middleſex, then he comes to what was done in the County of Eſſex: He tells you Mr. Layer came to him, and aſked him whether he would ride out with him to take the Air; he agreed to it; they both went out of Town together; he ſaid, that as they were going along, Mr. Layer told him his Intention was to go to my Lord North and Gray's; he ſays, they went forward with that Intention, but before they came to the Green-Man at Layton-Stone, they thought it would be too late before they got to my Lord North and Gray's for Dinner, therefore they thought proper to halt at the Green-Man, and take a Refreſhment there. He tells you, they did ſtop there at the Green-Man, and at that Time Mr. Layer did repeat the Diſcourſe of the Riſing that was intended to be; he ſaid, my Lord Townſhend, and my Lord Carteret and Mr. Walpole were to be ſeiz'd, a Party were to be ſent to ſeize the King; and that a Scheme was laid for ſeizing my Lord Cadogan, and that it was propoſed as a proper time to put this in Execution at the Breaking up of the Camp. He ſaid, when that was mentioned, at firſt he made ſome little doubt, whether that was a proper Opportunity; with that Mr. Layer told him, pray conſider with your ſelf, if you do not think this practicable, will you propoſe ſomething elſe, and we will alter our Scheme?

He ſaith, at this ſame Time Mr. Layer pulled out of his Pocket a Declaration, purporting an Exhortation and Excitation for People to riſe, and take up Arms againſt the King, and Rewards offered for that Purpoſe.

Afterwards they went to my Lord North and Gray's, and that Mr. Layer introduced him to his Lordſhip, as his Friend; that they were civilly and kindly receiv'd, ſupped there, lay there that Night, and dined there the Day after. This is the Evidence given with Relation to what was done in the County of Eſſex; and if this Relation be true, no doubt there is a good Overt-Act proved upon him in the County of Eſſex, and conſequently the Indictment is well laid in Eſſex, and then the Evidence in the County of Middleſex will be a proper Evidence againſt the Priſoner. But as to this Evidence of Mr. Lynch, they ſay for the Priſoner, Mr. Lynch is not to be believed, that he is a vile profligate Wretch, and no Credit is to be given to him, though upon his Oath; and it muſt be admitted the Evidence that hath been given for that Purpoſe, by a great Number of Witneſſes, will be proper for your Conſideration: But you will will conſider, in a Caſe of this Nature, if you are to expect Witneſſes without Exception, it is impoſſible to have any Evidence to convict a Man of High-Treaſon; no body will engage in ſuch an Affair, that is of a nice Credit and Reputation, and therefore it is not to be expected; for if it be, it is and will be impoſſible to convict any Perſon of Treaſon.

But then you will conſider, although Credit is not entirely to be given to a Man of ill Repute, yet if he is ſupported in his Evidence that he gives, by other Evidences, you will conſider whether that will not remove all ſort of Objections as to his Character.

As to the Overt-Act of publiſhing the Declaration, that is ſupported beyond Contradiction; for it appears in his Examination before the Lords of the Council, when he is aſked, whether he ever ſaw the Declaration? He ſays, he never ſaw any but one, and that was drawn by himſelf.

Priſoner. My Lord, what Mr. Stanyan ſays, I believe, he did not ſay that I confeſs'd that it was drawn by me.

L. C. Juſt. You muſt not interrupt me while I am directing the Jury. You have behaved your ſelf intemperately hitherto, but you muſt not interrupt me, I can't bear it. The Subſtance of what Mr. Stanyan ſaid is, that when it was demanded of you, whether you had ſeen the Declaration, you ſaid, you had ſeen none but a rough Draught that was drawn by your ſelf.

Priſoner. I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon, Mr. Stanyan is here in Court.

L. C. Juſt. Is he in Court? Let him be aſked the Queſtion again.

Mr. Stanyan. My Lord, I believe I did ſay, that Mr. Layer did confeſs, that it was the Heads of a Declaration which he had drawn himſelf.

L. C. Juſt. Now, Sir, after this, I expect not to be interrupted by you any more.

This being the Matter, he doth at the ſame time confeſs, that That was the Declaration which he had ſhewn to Mr. Lynch at the Green Man, on the Way as they were going to my Lord North and Gray's. So that part of this Evidence is ſupported by Mr. Layer's own Confeſſion. As to the other Part, that he did conſult and agree to levy War, conſider, that he confeſſed before the Council, that he did go to the Green Man, and there ſhewed the Declaration to Mr. Lynch; whether that doth not give Credit to what the other ſaith, That he went to the Green Man, and that there they talked of the Inſurrection, and the levying of War; and then went to my Lord North and Gray's, with this, that he recommended Mr. Lynch to my Lord North and Gray, as a fit Perſon to ſeize my Lord Cadogan, and to be concerned in the Inſurrection.

Gentlemen, This is not the only Matter by which he is ſupported in this Evidence, that the Priſoner deſigned an Inſurrection, and to levy War againſt the King; but he confeſſed before the Council, that he went to Rome, had two ſeveral Conferences with the Pretender, and was very kindly received by him: He ſaid he aſked the Pretender, if he would give him any Credentials that might recommend him to his Friends in England; that was objected to, and not complied with; but then he aſked a particular Favour, that the Pretender's Spouſe would ſtand Godmother to his Child; that is granted; and the Pretender himſelf is willing to ſtand Godfather.

Afterwards, when he returns into England, he conſidered of proper Proxies to repreſent the Pretender and his Spouſe; and aſking my Lord Orrery, he refuſed him; then he aſked my Lord North and Gray, who conſented: My Lord North and Gray ſtood as Proxy for the Pretender, and the Dutcheſs of Ormond as Proxy for the Pretender's Wife.

He tells you, at this Time when he was at Rome, he had told Sir William Ellis, it would be of great Service if he could have a Fund of Credit to raiſe Money with. How muſt that be? Why, ſaith he, let me have blank Receipts ſigned by the Pretender himſelf; and accordingly he had.

This, he tells you, is what happened at that time. Now the Evidence given by Mr. Lynch, being of an Inſurrection in Favour, and for the Service of the Pretender, when Mr. Layer owns he had two Conferences with the Pretender, and was received ſo kindly by him, and had ſuch particular Marks of his Favour; conſider whether this doth not ſupport the Evidence which is given by Mr. Lynch.

The next Evidence is Mr. Plunkett; he tells you how he came recommended to Mr. Layer by one Major Barnwell, on this Occaſion. He tells you, Mr. Layer's Goods were in Execution, and he was employed by Major Barnwell to reſcue them; accordingly he went and fetched a couple of Soldiers, got into the Houſe, drove out the Officers, and reſcued the Goods. By this it appears, that Mr. Plunkett was a bold daring Man, fit to be employed on ſuch an Occaſion; and they aſſign that as a Reaſon, which anſwers the Objection made. Saith Mr. Layer, how came it to paſs, that when I had never ſeen this Man, that I of a ſudden ſhould have ſuch a Confidence as to truſt him in an Affair of this Nature? In Anſwer to that, it is ſaid, he had done him a ſingular Service before, he had done a bold Act, he had got ſome Grenadiers and reſcued his Goods when they were taken in Execution; and likewiſe James Plunkett had given a Character of him, that he looked upon him as an honeſt Man, and therefore recommended him to Mr. Layer.

Then he tells you, that Mr. Layer ſaid they wanted a Man to ſerve on this Occaſion; that James Plunkett talked of Officers, but we don't want Officers ſo much as we do brave Serjeants, old Soldiers, ſuch as will be ready and qualified to ſupport the Mob, and to diſcipline and head them; theſe are the Men we want, can you get ſuch as theſe? Such as you are, that will be able to diſcipline the Mob and put them in Order. I told him (ſays the Witneſs Plunkett) I would do my Endeavours, and accordingly I adviſed him; that I had procured twenty five ready for the Service; he deſired to have Liſts of their Names, and the Places of their Abode, that ſo he might know where to ſend to them upon Occaſion.

Now the Objection to this Evidence being only, how comes it to paſs that a Man ſhould be truſted with ſuch a Secret, and this on the firſt Sight or Acquaintance? Why, faith he, I had been employed before, and had ſhewn my ſelf faithful on another Occaſion, and did ſerve him in reſcuing his Goods, when they were ſeized upon in Execution, and James Plunkett recommended me. This is the Evidence of Matthew Plunkett, and if Plunkett ſwears true, if he was deſired by Mr. Layer to procure and liſt Men for the Service of the Pretender, and he ſays and declares he did do it, then, if this Evidence is to be credited, the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of the Treaſon wherewith he ſtands charged: But ſtill they rely upon it, and hope you will not give Credit to the Witneſſes. You hear what hath been anſwered by the Counſel for the King, and I obſerve to you now, that though here was ſuch a Charge againſt the Witneſſes, the King's Counſel have produced ſeveral Perſons that had good Aſpects, and ſeemed to be Men of Reputation, who ſay, they know them, and believe them to be Men of Reputation.

Then, Gentlemen, the next thing inſiſted on is, that the Evidence given by Lynch and Plunkett is ſupported by the Papers that were ſeized in Mrs. Maſon's Cuſtody. Conſider how that Matter ſtands; Mrs. Maſon tells you, that Mr. Layer brought two Pacquets of Papers ſealed up to her, and told her, they were Love-Letters; ſhe ſays, ſhe was deſired to keep them by the Priſoner; and accordingly ſhe did keep them for him; and you have it afterwards from the Witneſſes, who have been produced, and againſt whoſe Credit there is no Exception, that having a Warrant againſt Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Maſon, they came to Mrs. Cook's Houſe to ſearch for Papers, and in Mrs. Maſon's Room there was a Trunk which was lock'd; they order'd it to be opened, which Mrs. Maſon did, and they took out of the Trunk two Bundles of Papers ſealed up as you have heard; they tell you the Bundles of Papers were opened, that they ſet their Marks upon each Paper; and one of them did not immediately ſet his Mark, but afterwards 'tis proved that he kept them from the Time they were delivered to him till the other came back again, and then upon his Return he delivered them back again to him; then he ſet his Mark upon them, both ſet their Marks upon them, and therefore they can ſwear that they are the ſame Papers that were taken out of Mrs. Maſon's Trunk: Then, if Mrs. Maſon ſwears true, they are the Papers of Mr. Layer, which were delivered to her by him; and ſo tracing it from Hand to Hand, theſe are the ſame Papers that were found in Mrs. Maſon's Cuſtody. Mrs. Maſon ſwears the ſame, and ſhe alſo ſet her Mark upon them.

But, ſaith Mr. Layer, there is no Credit to be given to Mrs. Maſon, ſhe is an ill Woman, an infamous Woman, therefore her Evidence is not to be regarded.

Gentlemen, conſider how this Matter ſtands; in one of theſe Pacquets of Papers were found the Pretender's Receipts, which Mr. Layer before the Council ſaid, he had deſired Sir William Ellis to procure for him from the Pretender, and which he had accordingly procured, and that he had received them; and theſe Receipts being in the Pacquet found upon Mrs. Maſon, how came they there, if they had not been delivered to her by Mr. Layer? Therefore theſe Receipts being in this Pacquet, plainly demonſtrate that theſe Papers are the Papers of Mr. Layer, and were by him delivered to Mrs. Maſon: And if they were his Papers, theſe Papers, and what is contained in them, will be a ſtrong Evidence againſt Mr. Layer. Notwithſtanding all this, ſays Mr. Layer, theſe were never my Papers; it is Forgery or Perjury. Whether or no you will believe theſe Papers to be Mr. Layer's, when it appears thoſe Receipts were found amongſt them; beſides that, here is a Paper amongſt them, that the Witneſs that is produced by Mr. Layer, one that was his Clerk, ſwears that it is his own Hand-Writing; how came that there, if this be not the Bundle and Pacquet of Mr. Layer? And on this they turn the Strength of their Caſe.

If this be ſo, conſider, firſt here is a Scheme; whoſe Hand-Writing it is, here hath been Variety of Evidence as to that. It is inſiſted on by the King's Counſel, that the Scheme is of Mr. Layer's Hand-Writing; and if ſo, this is a ſtronger Evidence againſt Mr. Layer, than if the Papers had been only found in his Cuſtody. How ſtands that? Here is one that was Mr. Layer's Maſter formerly, who ſaith, he verily believes this to be the Hand-Writing of Mr. Layer; if that be ſo, then all is well, and it ought to be read, not only as a Paper that was in his Poſſeſſion, but as a Paper that was writ by him: But they diſpute, and ſay, 'tis not his Hand-Writing; they aſk this Witneſs how long it is ſince the Priſoner lived with him as his Clerk? about fourteen or fifteen Years ago, ſays the Witneſs: A Man's Hand, ſay they, may be changed in that Time: But, ſaith the Witneſs, I verily believe it to be his Hand-Writing, for I have within theſe five Years received ſeveral Letters from him about Buſineſs, there being a Correſpondence between him and me, I being his Agent in Town, and theſe Letters are of the ſame Character he uſed fourteen or fifteen Years ago, therefore I believe it to be his Hand-Writing.

But, ſay the Counſel for the King, we won't only prove this by theſe Gentlemen, but the Priſoner himſelf hath confeſt it. Well, how ſtands that: He confeſt, when he was aſkt at the Council-Table, what he knew of Arms that were provided; he ſaid, he knew of none. To which when it was ſaid, how came you to mention it in this Scheme of your own Hand-Writing, there you take Notice of Arms that were provided? Doth Mr. Layer diſown it? No, ſaith he, 'tis a Miſtake, I ſhould have writ, which ſhould be provided.

Gentlemen, take this together, conſider with your ſelves what the Import of it is. He ſaith, when he is aſked about theſe Arms, I ſhould have writ, which ſhould be provided. Whether this doth not amount to a Confeſſion of this Matter, muſt be left to your Conſideration, as a confirming Evidence of what the other Witneſſes ſwear. But, ſaith Mr. Layer, let me call a Witneſs to prove that it is not my Hand-Writing: He calls a Gentleman, and he ſays it is not his Hand-Writing; he calls his Clerk, and his Clerk ſaith it is not his Maſter's Hand. Here are two Witneſſes: Then there is an additional Witneſs on the other Side, and that is, his own Confeſſion. Whether it amounts to a Confeſſion muſt be left to your Conſideration; but if this Scheme be not of his own Hand-Writing, it was a Scheme which he had in his Cuſtody, and that alone had been a conſiderable Evidence againſt him. How came he by this Scheme? What had he to do with it?

The Scheme hath been read to you, which tells you the ſeveral Methods to be proceeded in. In the firſt Place, the Tower is to be ſeized, an Officer is to mount the Guard that would be in their Intereſt, and at nine a-Clock at Night they are to ſeize the Tower: Then they are to go to the Bank, and ſet a Guard there, after they have taken out Money from thence: After this he tells you of ſeveral other Guards that are to be ſet in other Places, and then a Party is to be ſent to ſeize the King; then he tells you, another Party is to be ſent over the Water to ſeize his Royal Highneſs the Prince; he calls him by a Cant Name, but 'tis plain he is meant.

If this be all his own Hand-Writing, it is a ſtrong Evidence that he was in this Conſpiracy; but if he had only a Scheme of this Nature in his Cuſtody, that will be an Evidence againſt him, tho' he did not write it.

Now whether every Body is not ſatisfied that theſe Bundles were his, when in theſe Bundles theſe Receipts ſigned by the Pretender himſelf, and the Paper that was of his Clerk's own Hand-Writing, were found; it goes a great Way to confirm the Evidence of Mrs. Maſon, who ſwears the Bundles to be his Papers.

Theſe are matters of Evidence, and muſt be left to your Conſideration.

Then they go on and examine the treaſonable Papers, the Notes, the Liſts, &c.

To raiſe an Inſurrection Money would be wanting; ſaith Mr. Layer, I told Sir William Ellis this. Upon that there are Receipts ſigned by the Pretender, by which the Priſoner ſaid they might take up Money on that Occaſion. Sir William Ellis agrees with me, ſaith Mr. Layer, and accordingly ſends me Receipts, and I had them, and they were found in this Bundle of Papers; and how came they there, if they were not Mr. Layer's Papers?

Conſider the other Papers; the Deſign being for an Inſurrection, they are to engage the Guards in their Service; you ſee that ſeveral Papers are found in theſe Bundles that contain an Account of the Number of Men that were in ſuch a Troop of Guards, the Number in ſuch a Troop of Grenadiers, and tells you what the Numbers were; what was the meaning of all this? How came this Gentleman to be ſo ſollicitous in examining into the Number of Guards and Officers, but only to get a true State of this Matter, that he might know who were the Perſons that were moſt likely to be corrupted, and what a Number of Enemies he might meet with on this Occaſion?

Theſe are very ſtrong Circumſtances againſt Mr. Layer, unleſs Mr. Layer can give any Account why he kept theſe Papers ſo carefully.

To go a little back, as to the Buſineſs of Mr. Lynch; it appears he did not know Mr. Lynch before this Affair was ſet on Foot; he rode out with him, goes to the Green Man with him, there they talked over this Affair, there he publiſhes that traiterous Declaration, and afterwards preſented Lynch to my Lord North and Gray. How came they ſo intimately acquainted unleſs on this Occaſion?

Then, Gentlemen, they go on and tell you, when this Gentleman was committed into the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger he made his Eſcape, and this we look upon as an Evidence of Guilt, not a concluſive Evidence; a Man may eſcape tho' he is innocent, yet 'tis an Evidence that is material to be left to the Jury, and is proper for their Conſideration; he is purſued and retaken; when he is retaken he is under great Conſternation; he begs for the Lord's Sake they would let him go, and ſaid it was an Arreſt; he took out of his Pocket a great Number of Guineas, and ſaid they ſhould have what Number they pleaſed, if they would let him go; this is a material Circumſtance, and doth ſhew that this Gentleman was more than ordinary concerned in this Affair.

You will lay theſe Things together, and conſider how far they ſatisfy you, that this Gentleman is guilty of the Treaſon.

Then they give you an Account how he did confeſs before the Lords of the Council every thing that hath been ſworn by the Witneſſes: That he went to the Green Man in your County, and there conſulted and agreed to carry on this Affair; that he did take out and read the Declaration; this is a ſtrong Evidence, eſpecially if compared with what he confeſſed, that he had Two Conferences with the Pretender at Rome, was kindly received by him, and had particular Marks of his Favour; He is deſired to ſtand Godfather, and his Wife to ſtand Godmother to his Child; and accordingly they ſtood; he deſires my Lord North and Gray to ſtand as Proxy for the Pretender, and the Dutcheſs of Ormond to be Proxy for the Pretender's Spouſe; and they were Proxies at the Chriſtening of his Child. Theſe are the Circumſtances that have been laid before you on Behalf of the King againſt the Priſoner at the Bar. But 'tis ſaid on the Behalf of the Priſoner, that he ſtands at the Bar upon his Life and Death, which will depend upon your Verdict.

I think you ought to conſider of that, and that I hope will induce you to conſider and weigh well the Evidence, and not to find the Priſoner Guilty, unleſs you are ſatisfied he is ſo.

It is true, here is the Life of a Man in the Caſe, but then you muſt conſider likewiſe the Miſery and Deſolation, the Blood and Confuſion, that muſt have happened if this had taken Effect, and put one againſt the other; and I believe that Conſideration, which is on the Behalf of the King, will be much the ſtrongeſt.

Theſe things are proper to be conſidered, in Order to prepare you to be careful in examining and weighing the Evidence well; but in giving your Verdict I hope you will lay them all aſide; you will conſider the Weight of the Evidence on either Side, and the Credit of the two Witneſſes, and how far they are ſupported by a Writing under his own Hand, a Confeſſion at the Council-Table; conſider how far that will ſupport their Evidence, tho' not Men of the cleareſt Reputation.

A Cypher hath been taken Notice of, by which were explained ſeveral Names that ſuch and ſuch Perſons and Things were to be called by; there was the Name of Atkins, which was to ſignify the Pretender; there was another Name for the Pretender, and that was St. John; and conformable to theſe Names they have read ſeveral Letters, by which it appears that a treaſonable Correſpondence was carried on by Mr.

Layer. This is the Circumſtance of the Evidence that hath been laid before you. Conſider this Evidence, and the Objections that have been made to it, and how far thoſe Objections have been anſwered.

Diſcharge the Part of Honeſt Men, conſider and weigh well the Evidence.

Upon the whole Matter, if you do believe that there was an Overt-Act of Treaſon in the County of Eſſex, and that it was proved by Mr. Lynch, and confirmed by the Confeſſion of Mr. Layer; and if there be any Overt-Act in another County, as his liſting or employing any to liſt or engage Men in the Service of the Pretender, then you will find the Priſoner guilty.

If you are not ſatisfied theſe Things are true, then you'll acquit him.

The Jury withdrew for about half an Hour, to conſider of their Verdict, and when they returned into Court, were called over by the Clerk of the Crown and anſwered to their Names.

Cl. of the Cr. Gentlemen of the Jury, are you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of the Cr. Chriſtopher Layer, hold up your Hand. (Which he did.)

You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner.

How ſay you? Is Chriſtopher Layer guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty;

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. What Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements had he at the time of the ſaid High-Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince, to your Knowledge?

Jury. None.

Cl. of the Cr. Hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Chriſtopher Layer is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted; and you ſay he had no Goods nor Chattels, Lands nor Tenements at the time of the ſaid High-Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray a Rule may be made to bring up the Priſoner to receive Sentence.

Mr. Juſt. Eyre. He muſt have four Days to move in Arreſt of Judgment. Let there be a Rule to bring him again upon Thurſday next.

Then the Priſoner was remanded back to the Tower.

Die Martis 27 die Novembris, 1722.

Chriſtopher Layer, Eſq; was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's Bench, in order to receive Sentence.

Mr. Att. Gen. MY Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands convicted of High-Treaſon; I pray your Lordſhip's Judgment againſt him for the King.

Cl. of the Cr. Chriſtopher Layer, hold up thy Hand, (which he did) Thou haſt been indicted for High-Treaſon, for compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and thereupon been arraigned; and thereunto haſt pleaded not Guilty, and for thy Trial put thy ſelf upon God and thy Country, which Country hath found thee Guilty; what canſt thou now ſay for thy ſelf why the Court ſhould not give Judgment of Death againſt thee according to Law?

Mr. Hungerford. Is it your Lordſhip's Pleaſure to give any Directions touching the Matter of the Priſoner's being in Irons? I hope your Lordſhip will order them to be taken off, at leaſt during his Attendance here.

L. C. Juſt. I don't know, there is none of the Caſes that have been, which go further than during the Time of his Trial; his Trial is over, if he hath any thing to offer to the Court, and thinks he may not be able to do it ſo well while he is under theſe Irons, I would recommend it to Mr. Attorney, not to make a Precedent of it, that his Irons may be taken off.

Priſoner. Yes my Lord, I have a great deal to ſay, which I ſhall offer in Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr. Hungerford. He hath complain'd ſince he hath been here, that he is in great Pain, in the Poſition he ſtands with his Irons.

L. C. Juſt. Come, Brother Pengelly, have you any thing to object againſt his Irons being taken off, or do you conſent to it?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we don't oppoſe it.

Then the Irons were taken off.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Layer, after a long and a fair Trial, hath been found guilty of High-Treaſon; and on Behalf of the King, we pray the Judgment of the Court againſt the Priſoner.

Mr. Hungerford. By your Lordſhip's Indulgence, I am Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar, I have, and I hope ſhall continue to do him what Service I can: The Priſoner's Life is at Stake, and I hope, I ſhall not be ſuppoſed to be troubleſome, if I deſire a Record to be read, which hath not been yet read in Court; it is the Venire, and that being part of the Record we think we are proper to have it read.
